EDITOR'S NOTE.

THIS edition of Mr. Browning's poems and plays makes no pretence to be critical. One of the most useful of the Shakespearian commentators, Mr. Theobald, has observed that the science of criticism, so far as it affects an editor, is reduced to three classes: "The emendation of corrupt passages, the explanation of obscure and difficult ones, and an inquiry into the beauties and defects of composition." Happily there are no corrupt passages in Browning, but undoubtedly there are some obscure and difficult ones, although the reader will often be surprised to find how frequently obscurity and difficulty will be dissipated and removed by a careful study of the context. So, too, Browning has his beauties and defects of composition; but neither his beauties or defects of composition, nor the obscurities and difficulties of particular passages, are here discussed or explained. All that has been done is to prefix (within square brackets) to some of the plays and poems a few lines explanatory of the characters and events depicted and described, and to explain in the margin of the volumes the meaning of such words as might, if left unexplained, momentarily arrest the understanding of the reader. That some easy words have been explained and some hard ones left alone is more than likely, since, on such a subject, no standard exists either of information or of ignorance. Mr. F. G. Kenyon has been kind enough to make the notes for "The Ring and the Book," but for the rest the Editor alone is responsible.

The edition is a complete one, containing all Mr. Browning's regularly published plays and poems, from Pauline (1833) to Asolando (1889). In the arrangement of the contents a chronological order has as far as possible been observed; but as Mr. Browning himself rearranged some of his smaller poems regardless of their dates of publication, his publishers have not felt themselves at liberty in these cases to adhere to chronology. In all the poems the poet's latest readings have been followed.

EDITOR'S NOTE

One of the most important poems and plays in the history of literature is the Book of Job. It is a story of a man who is tested by God, and who, in the end, finds that his faith was justified. The story is told in a way that is both simple and profound, and it is a story that has inspired many people for centuries.

The story of Job is a story of a man who is tested by God. He is a man who is rich and powerful, and who is loved by his people. But one day, he is struck by a series of disasters, and he is left in a state of despair. He questions God, and he wonders why he is being punished. But in the end, he finds that his faith was justified, and that God was testing him to see if he was truly faithful.

I DEDICATE THESE VOLUMES TO MY OLD FRIEND JOHN FORSTER, GLAD AND GRATEFUL THAT HE WHO, FROM THE FIRST PUBLICATION OF THE VARIOUS POEMS THEY INCLUDE, HAS BEEN THEIR PROMPTTEST AND STAUCHEST HELPER, SHOULD SEEM EVEN NEARER TO ME NOW THAN ALMOST THIRTY YEARS AGO.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE TO EDITION OF 1868.

THE poems that follow are printed in the order of their publication. The first piece in the series I acknowledge and retain with extreme repugnance, indeed purely of necessity; for not long ago I inspected one, and am certified of the existence of other transcripts, intended sooner or later to be published abroad: by forestalling these, I can at least correct some misprints (no syllable is changed) and introduce a boyish work by an exculpatory word. The thing was my earliest attempt at "poetry always dramatic in principle, and so many utterances of so many imaginary persons, not mine," which I have since written according to a scheme less extravagant and scale less impracticable than were ventured upon in this crude preliminary sketch—a sketch that, on reviewal, appears not altogether wide of some hint of the characteristic features of that particular dramatis persona it would fain have reproduced: good draughtsmanship, however, and right handling were far beyond the artist at that time.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE TO EDITION OF 1888.

I PRESERVE, in order to supplement it, the foregoing preface. I had thought, when compelled to include in my collected works the poem to which it refers, that the honest course would be to reprint, and leave mere literary errors unaltered. Twenty years' endurance of an eyesore seems more than sufficient: my faults remain duly recorded against me, and I claim permission to somewhat diminish these, so far as style is concerned, in the present and final edition where "Pauline" must needs, first of my performances, confront the reader. I have simply removed solecisms, mended the metre a little, and endeavoured to strengthen the phraseology — experience helping, in some degree, the helplessness of juvenile haste and heat in their untried adventure long ago.

The poems that follow are again, as before, printed in chronological order; but only so far as proves compatible with the prescribed size of each volume, which necessitates an occasional change in the distribution of its contents. Every date is subjoined as before.

PAULINE.

1833.

[Browning was twenty years old when this Fragment was first published. Amongst the early works of great poets it must always occupy a distinguished place on account of the splendour and extreme beauty of many of its passages. As a rule, such early work is disappointing, or at all events insignificant and uninteresting, but "Pauline" is far from insignificant, and is always interesting. One sees a mind at work and a rich promise of a harvest to come. The story of the young Rossetti transcribing the whole poem from the copy in the British Museum is a literary anecdote always worth recording. Mr. Browning himself seems to have thought lightly of the poem, and in giving one of his own copies to Mr. Frederick Locker spoke of it as a literary curiosity only. In his later days he became a very severe critic of the life and conduct of Shelley, and did not care to be too frequently reminded of his boyish raptures for that strange and unaccountable being. It would be difficult and unprofitable to attempt to analyse "Pauline," the charm of which now consists in detached passages. It is the sole survivor of a great deal of Browning's youthful verse. In a copy recently sold, and formerly belonging to Mr. Crampon, is an autograph note from the Author, recording "that the poem was written in pursuance of a foolish plan I forget or have no wish to remember, involving the assumption of several distinct characters;" whilst in a copy of his own he wrote, "Only this crab remains of the shapely Tree of Life in my fool's paradise."]

PAULINE.

Plus ne suis ce que j'ai été,

NON dubito, quin titulus libri nostri raritate sua quamplurimos alliciat ad legendum: inter quos nonnulli obliquæ opinionis, mente languidi, multi etiam maligni, et in ingenium nostrum ingrati accedent, qui temeraria sua ignorantia, vix conspecto titulo clamabunt. Nos vetita docere, hæresium semina jacere: piis auribus offendiculo, præclaris ingeniiis scandalo esse: . . . adeo conscientiæ suæ consulentes, ut nec Apollo, nec Musæ omnes, neque Angelus de cælo me ab illorum execratione vindicare queant: quibus et ego nunc consulo, ne scripta nostra legant, nec intelligant, nec meminerint: nam noxia sunt, venenosa sunt: Acherontis ostium est in hoc libro, lapides loquitur, caveant, ne cerebrum illis excutiat. Vos autem, qui æqua mente ad legendum venitis, si tantam prudentiæ discretionem adhibueritis, quantum in melle legendo apes, jam securi legite. Puto namque vos et utilitatis haud parum et voluptatis plurimum accepturos. Quod si qua repperitis, quæ vobis non placeant, mittite illa, nec utimini. NAM ET EGO VOBIS ILLA NON PROBO, SED NARRO. Cætera tamen propterea non respuite. 30 Ideo, si quid liberius dictum sit, ignoscite adolescentiæ nostræ, qui minor quam adolescens hoc opus composui.— Hen. Corn. Agrippa, De Occult. Philosoph. in Præfat.

[This introduction would appear less absurdly pretentious did it apply, as was intended, to a completed structure of which the poem was meant for only a beginning and remains a fragment.] 40

PAULINE, mine own, bend o'er me — thy soft breast
Shall pant to mine — bend o'er me — thy sweet eyes,
And loosened hair and breathing lips, and arms
Drawing me to thee — these build up a screen,
To shut me in with thee, and from all fear;
So that I might unlock the sleepless brood

Of fancies from my soul, their lurking-

Nor doubt that each would pass, ne'er to return

To one so watched, so loved and so secured.
But what can guard thee but thy naked

love?
Ah dearest, whoso sucks a poisoned wound Envenoms his own veins! Thou art so

good,
— if thou shouldst wear a brow
less light

For some wild thought which, but for me, were kept

From out thy soul as from a sacred star!

Yet till I have unlocked them it were vain
To hope to sing; some woe would light on Nature would point at one whose quivering

lip

Was bathed in her enchantments, whose brow burned

Beneath the crown to which her secrets
kneft,

Who learned the spell which can call up
the dead.

And then departed smiling like a fiend
Who has deceived God, — if such one should seek Again her altars and stand robed and crowned

Amid the faithful! Sad confession first,

Remorse and pardon and old claims renewed,

Ere I can be — as I shall be no more.

I had been spared this shame if I had sat

By thee for ever from the first, in place
Of my wild dreams of beauty and of good,

Or with them, as an earnest of their truth:
No thought nor hope having been shut

from thee,
No vague wish unexplained, no wandering aim Sent back to bind on fancy's wings and seek

Some strange fair world where it might be a law;

But, doubting nothing, had been led by

thee,
Thro' youth, and saved, as one at length

awaked
Who has slept through a peril. Ah vain,

vain!

Thou lovest me; the past is in its grave
Tho' its ghost haunts us; still this much is

ours,
To cast away restraint, lest a worse thing

Wait for us in the dark. Thou lovest me;
And thou art to receive not love but faith,

For which thou wilt be mine, and smile and take

And answer and shame, and tell without a fear

That form which music follows like a slave: 40

And I look to thee and I trust in thee,
As in a Northern night one looks alway

Unto the East for morn and spring and joy.
Thou seest then my aimless, hopeless state,

And, resting on some few old feelings won Back by thy beauty, wouldst that I essay

The task which was to me what now thou art:

And why should I conceal one weakness
more?

Thou wilt remember one warm morn
when winter

Crept aged from the earth, and spring's 50 first breath

Blew soft from the moist hills; the blackthorn bowers,

So dark in the bare wood, when glistening
In the sunshine were white with coming buds,

Like the bright side of a sorrow, and the banks

Had violets opening from sleep like eyes.

I walked with thee who knewst not a deep shame

Lurked beneath smiles and careless words which sought

To hide it till they wandered and were mute,

As we stood listening on a sunny mound
To the wind murmuring in the damp copse,

Like heavy breathings of some hidden
thing 60

Betrayed by sleep; until the feeling rushed
That I was low indeed, yet not so low

As to endure the calmness of thine eyes.
And so I told thee all, while the cool breast

I leaned on altered not its quiet beating:
And long ere words like a hurt bird's complaint

Bade me look up and be what I had been,

I felt despair could never live by thee:
Thou wilt remember. Thou art not more

dear 70

Than song was once to me; and I ne'er sung

But as one entering bright halls where all Will rise and shout for him: sure I must

own
That I am fallen, having chosen gifts

Distinct from theirs — that I am sad and fain

Would give up all to be but where I was,
Not high as I had been if faithful found,

But low and weak yet full of hope, and
sure

Of goodness as of life — that I would lose
All this gay mastery of mind, to sit 80

Once more with them, trusting in truth and
love

And with an aim — not being what I am.

Oh Pauline, I am ruined who believed That though my soul had floated from its sphere
Of wild dominion into the dim orb
Of self — that it was strong and free as ever!
It has conformed itself to that dim orb, Reflecting all its shades and shapes, and
now
Must stay where it alone can be adored.
I have felt this in dreams — in dreams in which
I seemed the fate from which I fled; I felt 10 A strange delight in causing my decay.
I was a fiend in darkness chained for ever Within some ocean cave; and ages rolled Till through the cleft rock, like a moon-beam, came
A white swan to remain with me; and ages
Rolled, yet I tired not of my first free joy
In gazing on the peace of its pure wings:
And then I said "It is most fair to me,
Yet its soft wings must sure have suffered change
From the thick darkness, sure its eyes are dim, 20 "Its silver pinions must be cramped and numbed
"With sleeping ages here; it cannot leave
me,
"For it would seem, in light beside its kind,
"Withered, tho' here to me most beautiful."
And then I was a young witch whose blue
eyes,
As she stood naked by the river springs,
Drew down a god: I watched his radiant form
Growing less radiant, and it gladdened me;
Till one morn, as he sat in the sunshine
Upon my knees, singing to me of heaven,
30 He turned to look at me ere I could lose
The grin with which I viewed his perishing:
And he shrieked and departed and sat long
By his deserted throne, but sunk at last Murmuring, as I kissed his lips and curled Around him, "I am still a god — to thee."
Still I can lay my soul bare in its fall;
Since all the wandering and all the weakness
Will be a saddest comment on the song:
And if, that done, I can be young again,
40 I will give up all gained, as willingly
As one gives up a charm which shuts him
out
From hope or part or care in human kind.
As life wanes, all its care and strife and toil Seem strangely valueless, while the old trees
Which grew by our youth's home, the waving mass
Of climbing plants heavy with bloom and dew,

The morning swallows with their songs like
words,
All these seem clear and only worth our
thoughts:
So, aught connected with my early life,
My rude songs or my wild imaginings, 50
How I look on them — most distinct amid
The fever and the stir of after years!
I ne'er had ventured e'en to hope for this,
Had not the glow I felt at His award,
Assured me all was not extinct within:
His whom all honour, whose renown springs up
Like sunlight which will visit all the world,
So that e'en they who sneered at him at first,
Come out to it, as some dark spider crawls
From his foul nets which some lit torch 60 invades,
Yet spinning still new films for his retreat.
Thou didst smile, poet, but can we forgive?
Sun-treader,¹ life and light be thine for ever!
Thou art gone from us; years go by and spring
Gladdens and the young earth is beautiful,
Yet thy songs come not, other bards arise,
But none like thee: they stand, thy majesties,
Like mighty works which tell some spirit
there
Hath sat regardless of neglect and scorn,
Till, its long task completed, it hath risen 70
And left us, never to return, and all Rush in to peer and praise when all in vain.
The air seems bright with thy past presence
yet,
But thou art still for me as thou hast been
When I have stood with thee as on a throne
With all thy dim creations gathered round Like mountains, and I felt of mould like
them,
And with them creatures of my own were mixed,
Like things half-lived, catching and giving
life.
But thou art still for me who have adored 80
Tho' single, panting but to hear thy name
Which I believed a spell to me alone,
Scarce deeming thou wast as a star to men!
As one should worship long a sacred spring Scarce worth a moth's flitting, which long grasses cross,
And one small tree embowers droopingly —
Joying to see some wandering insect won
To live in its few rushes, or some locust
To pasture on its boughs, or some wild bird Stoop for its freshness from the trackless 90
air:
And then should find it but the fountain-
head,

- Long lost, of some great river washing towns
And towers, and seeing old woods which will live
But by its banks untrod of human foot,
Which, when the great sun sinks, lie quivering
In light as some thing lieth half of life Before God's foot, waiting a wondrous
change;
Then fight with rocks which seek to turn or stay
Its course in vain, for it does ever spread Like a sea's arm as it goes rolling on,
10 Being the pulse of some great country — so Wast thou to me, and art thou to the world!
And I, perchance, half feel a strange regret
That I am not what I have been to thee:
Like a girl one has silently loved long
In her first loneliness in some retreat, When, late emerged, all gaze and glow to view
Her fresh eyes and soft hair and lips which bloom
Like a mountain berry: doubtless it is sweet
To see her thus adored, but there have been 20 Moments when all the world was in our
praise,
Sweeter than any pride of after hours.
Yet, sun-treader, all hail! From my heart's heart
I bid thee hail! E'en in my wildest
dreams,
I proudly feel I would have thrown to dust
The wreaths of fame which seemed o'er-hanging me,
To see thee for a moment as thou art.
- And if thou livest, if thou lovest, spirit!
Remember me who set this final seal
To wandering thought — that one so pure as thou 30 Could never die. Remember me who flung
All honour from my soul, yet paused and
said
"There is one spark of love remaining yet,
"For I have nought in common with him,
shapes
"Which followed him avoid me, and foul forms
"Seek me, which ne'er could fasten on his
mind;
"And though I feel how low I am to him,
"Yet I aim not even to catch a tone
"Of harmonies he called profusely up;
"So, one gleam still remains, although the last,"
40 Remember me who praise thee e'en with tears,
For never more shall I walk calm with thee;
Thy sweet imaginings are as an air,
- A melody some wondrous singer sings,
Which, though it haunt men oft in the still
eve,
They dream not to essay; yet it no less But more is honoured. I was thine in
shame,
And now when all thy proud renown is out,
I am a watcher whose eyes have grown dim
With looking for some star which breaks
on him
Altered and worn and weak and full of tears.
- Autumn has come like spring returned to us,
Won from her girlishness; like one returned
A friend that was a lover, nor forgets
The first warm love, but full of sober
thoughts
Of fading years; whose soft mouth quivers
yet
With the old smile, but yet so changed and
still!
And here am I the scoffer, who have probed
Life's vanity, won by a word again
Into my own life — by one little word
Of this sweet friend who lives in loving me, 60
Lives strangely on my thoughts and looks and words,
As fathoms down some nameless ocean
thing
Its silent course of quietness and joy.
O dearest, if indeed I tell the past,
May'st thou forget it as a sad sick dream!
Or if it linger — my lost soul too soon
Sinks to itself and whispers we shall be But closer linked, two creatures whom the
earth
Bears singly, with strange feelings unre-vealed
Save to each other; or two lonely things 70
Created by some power whose reign is done,
Having no part in God or his bright world.
I am to sing whilst ebbing day dies soft,
As a lean scholar dies worn o'er his book,
And in the heaven stars steal out one by one
As hunted men steal to their mountain
watch.
I must not think, lest this new impulse die
In which I trust; I have no confidence:
So, I will sing on fast as fancies come;
Rudely, the verse being as the mood it so paints.
- I strip my mind bare, whose first elements
I shall unveil — not as they struggled forth
In infancy, nor as they now exist,
When I am grown above them and can rule —
But in that middle stage when they were full Yet ere I had disposed them to my will;

And then I shall show how these elements
Produced my present state, and what it is.

I am made up of an intensest life,
Of a most clear idea of consciousness
Of self, distinct from all its qualities,
From all affections, passions, feelings,
powers;

And thus far it exists, if tracked, in all:
But linked, in me, to self-supremacy,
Existing as a centre to all things,
10 Most potent to create and rule and call Upon all things to minister to it;
And to a principle of restlessness
Which would be all, have, see, know, taste, feel, all —

This is myself; and I should thus have been

Though gifted lower than the meanest soul.

And of my powers, one springs up to save
From utter death a soul with such desire Confined to clay — of powers the only one Which marks me — an imagination which 20 Has been a very angel, coming not
In fitful visions but beside me ever
And never failing me; so, though my mind
Forgets not, not a shred of life forgets,
Yet I can take a secret pride in calling
The dark past up to quell it regally.

A mind like this must dissipate itself,
But I have always had one lode-star; now,
As I look back, I see that I have halted Or hastened as I looked towards that star —

30 A need, a trust, a yearning after God:
A feeling I have analysed but late,
But it existed, and was reconciled
With a neglect of all I deemed his laws,
Which yet, when seen in others, I abhorred.
I felt as one beloved, and so shut in From fear: and thence I date my trust in signs

And omens, for I saw God everywhere;
And I can only lay it to the fruit
Of a sad after-time that I could doubt 40 Even his being — e'en the while I felt
His presence, never acted from myself,
Still trusted in a hand to lead me through
All danger; and this feeling ever fought Against my weakest reason and resolve.

And I can love nothing — and this dull
truth

Has come the last: but sense supplies a
love

Encircling me and mingling with my life.
These make myself: I have long sought in vain

To trace how they were formed by circumstance,

50 Yet ever found them mould my wildest
youth

Where they alone displayed themselves, converted

All objects to their use: now see their course!

They came to me in my first dawn of life
Which passed alone with wisest ancient books

All halo-girt with fancies of my own;
And I myself went with the tale — a god
Wandering after beauty, or a giant Standing vast in the sunset — an old hunter
Talking with gods, or a high-crested chief Sailing with troops of friends to Tenedos. 60
I tell you, nought has ever been so clear
As the place, the time, the fashion of those lives:

I had not seen a work of lofty art,
Nor woman's beauty nor sweet nature's
face,

Yet, I say, never morn broke clear as those On the dim clustered isles in the blue
sea,

The deep groves and white temples and wet caves:

And nothing ever will surprise me now —
Who stood beside the naked Swift-footed, Who bound my forehead with Proserpine's 70
hair.

And strange it is that I who could so dream Should e'er have stooped to aim at aught
beneath —

Aught low or painful; but I never doubted:
So, as I grew, I rudely shaped my life
To my immediate wants; yet strong beneath

Was a vague sense of power though folded
up —

A sense that, though those shades and times were past,

Their spirit dwelt in me, with them should
rule.

Then came a pause, and long restraint chained down

My soul till it was changed. I lost myself, 80
And were it not that I so loathe that loss,
I could recall how first I learned to turn
My mind against itself; and the effects

In deeds for which remorse were vain as for

The wanderings of delirious dream; yet thence

Came cunning, envy, falsehood, all world's wrong

That spotted me: at length I cleansed my soul.

Yet long world's influence remained; and
nought

But the still life I led, apart once more,
Which left me free to seek soul's old 90 delights,

Could e'er have brought me thus far back to peace.

As peace returned, I sought out some pursuit;
And song rose, no new impulse but the one
With which all others best could be combined.
My life has not been that of those whose
heaven
Was lampless save where poesy shone out;
But as a clime where glittering mountaintops
And glancing sea and forests steeped in light
Give back reflected the far-flashing sun;
For music (which is earnest of a heaven,
10 Seeing we know emotions strange by it,
Not else to be revealed,) is like a voice,
A low voice calling fancy, as a friend,
To the green woods in the gay summer
time:
And she fills all the way with dancing
shapes
Which have made painters pale, and they go on Till stars look at them and winds call to
them
As they leave life's path for the twilight
world Where the dead gather. This was not at first,
For I scarce knew what I would do. I had 20 An impulse but no yearning — only sang.

And first I sang as I in dream have seen
Music wait on a lyrist for some thought,
Yet singing to herself until it came.
I turned to those old times and scenes where all That's beautiful had birth for me, and
made Rude verses on them all; and then I paused —
I had done nothing, so I sought to know What other minds achieved. No fear outbroke
As on the works of mighty bards I gazed,
30 In the first joy at finding my own thoughts
Recorded, my own fancies justified,
And their aspirings but my very own.
With them I first explored passion and
mind, —
All to begin afresh! I rather sought
To rival what I wondered at than form Creations of my own; if much was light
Lent by the others, much was yet my own.

I paused again: a change was coming —
came:
I was no more a boy, the past was breaking 40 Before the future and like fever worked.
I thought on my new self, and all my powers Burst out. I dreamed not of restraint, but gazed

On all things: schemes and systems went and came,
And I was proud (being vainest of the weak)
In wandering o'er thought's world to seek some one
To be my prize, as if you wandered o'er
The White Way for a star.

And my choice fell
Not so much on a system as a man —
On one, whom praise of mine shall not offend,
Who was as calm as beauty, being such 50
Unto mankind as thou to me, Pauline, — Believing in them and devoting all His soul's strength to their winning back to peace;
Who sent forth hopes and longings for their sake,
Clothed in all passion's melodies: such
first Caught me and set me, slave of a sweet task,
To disentangle, gather sense from song:
Since, song-inwoven, lurked there words which seemed
A key to a new world, the muttering
Of angels, something yet unguessed by 60
man.
How my heart leapt as still I sought and
found Much there, I felt my own soul had conceived,
But there living and burning! Soon the orb
Of his conceptions dawned on me; its
praise
Lives in the tongues of men, men's brows are high
When his name means a triumph and a
pride,
So, my weak voice may well forbear to
shame
What seemed decreed my fate: I threw
myself
To meet it, I was vowed to liberty, Men were to be as gods and earth as 70
heaven,
And I — ah, what a life was mine to prove!
My whole soul rose to meet it. Now,
Pauline,
I shall go mad, if I recall that time!

Oh let me look back ere I leave for ever
The time which was an hour one fondly waits
For a fair girl that comes a withered hag!
And I was lonely, far from woods and fields,
And amid dullest sights, who should be loose
As a stag; yet I was full of bliss, who lived
With Plato and who had the key to life; 80

And I had dimly shaped my first attempt,
And many a thought did I build up on
thought,
As the wild bee hangs cell to cell; in vain,
For I must still advance, no rest for mind.

'Twas in my plan to look on real life,
The life all new to me; my theories Were firm, so them I left, to look and learn Mankind, its cares, hopes, fears, its woes and joys;
And, as I pondered on their ways, I sought How best life's end might be attained — an end
Comprising every joy. I deeply mused.

And suddenly without heart-wreck I awoke
As from a dream: I said "'Twas beautiful,
'Yet but a dream, and so adieu to it!"
As some world-wanderer sees in a far meadow Strange towers and high-walled gardens
thick with trees,
Where song takes shelter and delicious mirth
From laughing fairy creatures peeping
over,
And on the morrow when he comes to lie
For ever 'neath those garden-trees fruit-flushed
Sung round by fairies, all his search is vain.
First went my hopes of perfecting mankind,
Next — faith in them, and then in freedom's self
And virtue's self, then my own motives, ends
And aims and loves, and human love went
last.

I felt this no decay, because new powers
Rose as old feelings left — wit, mockery,
Light-heartedness; for I had oft been sad,
Mistrusting my resolves, but now I cast
Hope joyously away: I laughed and said
"No more of this!" I must not think: at length
I looked again to see if all went well.

My powers were greater: as some temple seemed
My soul, where nought is changed and incense rolls
Around the altar, only God is gone
And some dark spirit sitteth in his seat.
So, I passed through the temple and to me Knelt troops of shadows, and they cried
"Hail, king!"
"We serve thee now and thou shalt serve no more!"
"Call on us, prove us, let us worship
thee!"

And I said "Are ye strong? Let fancy bear me
"Far from the past!" And I was borne
away,
As Arab birds float sleeping in the wind, O'er deserts, towers and forests, I being calm.
And I said "I have nursed up energies,
"They will prey on me." And a band knelt low
And cried "Lord, we are here and we will make
"Safe way for thee in thine appointed life!
"But look on us!" And I said "Ye will worship

"Me; should my heart not worship too?" 5d
They shouted
"Thyself, thou art our king!" So, I stood there
Smiling — oh, vanity of vanities!
For buoyant and rejoicing was the spirit
With which I looked out how to end my
course;
I felt once more myself, my powers — all
mine;
I knew while youth and health so lifted me
That, spite of all life's nothingness, no grief Came nigh me, I must ever be light-hearted;
And that this knowledge was the only veil
Betwixt joy and despair: so, if age came, 6a
I should be left — a wreck linked to a soul
Yet fluttering, or mind-broken and aware
Of my decay. So a long summer morn Found me; and ere noon came, I had resolved
No age should come on me ere youth was spent,
For I would wear myself out, like that morn
Which wasted not a sunbeam; every hour
I would make mine, and die.

And thus I sought
To chain my spirit down which erst I freed
For flights to fame: I said "The troubled 7a
life
"Of genius, seen so gay when working
forth
"Some trusted end, grows sad when all proves vain —
"How sad when men have parted with truth's peace
"For falsest fancy's sake, which waited
first
"As an obedient spirit when delight
"Came without fancy's call: but alters
soon,
"Comes darkened, seldom, hastens to depart,
"Leaving a heavy darkness and warm
tears.
"But I shall never lose her; she will live
"Dearer for such seclusion. I but catch 8a

"A hue, a glance of what I sing: so, pain
 "Is linked with pleasure, for I ne'er may tell
 "Half the bright sights which dazzle me;
 but now
 "Mine shall be all the radiance: let them fade
 "Untold — others shall rise as fair, as fast!
 And when all's done, the few dim gleams transferred," — (For a new thought sprang up how well it were,
 Discarding shadowy hope, to weave such lays
 As straight encircle men with praise and
 love,
 10 So, I should not die utterly, — should bring
 One branch from the gold forest, like the knight
 Of old tales, witnessing I had been there) —
 "And when all's done, how vain seems e'en success —
 "The vaunted influence poets have o'er
 men!
 "Tis a fine thing that one weak as myself
 "Should sit in his lone room, knowing the
 words
 "He utters in his solitude shall move
 "Men like a swift wind — that tho' dead and gone,
 "New eyes shall glisten when his beauteous
 dreams
 20 "Of love come true in happier frames than his.
 "Ay, the still night brings thoughts like these, but morn
 "Comes and the mockery again laughs out
 "At hollow praises, smiles allied to sneers;
 "And my soul's idol ever whispers me
 "To dwell with him and his unhonoured
 song:
 "And I foreknow my spirit, that would press
 "First in the struggle, fail again to make
 "All bowenslaved, and I again should sink.
 "And then know that this curse will come on us,
 30 "To see our idols perish; we may wither,
 "No marvel, we are clay, but our low fate
 "Should not extend to those whom trustingly
 "We sent before into time's yawning gulf
 "To face what dread may lurk in darkness
 there.
 "To find the painter's glory pass, and feel
 "Music can move us not as once, or, worst,
 "To weep decaying wits ere the frail body
 "Decays! Nought makes me trust some love is true,
 "But the delight of the contented lowness 40 "With which I gaze on him I keep for ever "Above me: I to rise and rival him?

"Feed his fame rather from my heart's best blood,
 "Wither unseen that he may flourish still."
 Pauline, my soul's friend, thou dost pity yet How this mood swayed me when that soul found thine,
 When I had set myself to live this life,
 Defying all past glory. Ere thou camest
 I seemed defiant, sweet, for old delights Had flocked like birds again; music, my
 life,
 Nourished me more than ever; then the lore
 Loved for itself and all it showd — that king
 Treading the purple calmly to his death,¹ While round him, like the clouds of eve, all dusk,
 The giant shades of fate, silently flitting,
 Pile the dim outline of the coming doom;
 And him sitting alone in blood while friends Are hunting far in the sunshine; and the boy
 With his white breast and brow and clustering curls
 Streaked with his mother's blood, but striving hard
 To tell his story ere his reason goes. 6
 And when I loved thee as love seemed so oft,
 Thou lovedst me indeed: I wondering searched
 My heart to find some feeling like such
 love,
 Believing I was still much I had been.
 Too soon I found all faith had gone from
 me,
 And the late glow of life, like change on clouds,
 Proved not the morn-blush widening into
 day,
 But eve faint-coloured by the dying sun While darkness hastens quickly. I will tell
 My state as though 'twere none of mine — 7 despair
 Cannot come near us — this it is, my state.
 Souls alter not, and mine must still advance;
 Strange that I knew not, when I flung away
 My youth's chief aims, their loss might lead to loss
 Of what few I retained, and no resource Be left me: for behold how changed is
 all!
 I cannot chain my soul: it will not rest
 In its clay prison, this most narrow sphere:
 It has strange impulse, tendency, desire,
 Which nowise I account for nor explain, 8
 But cannot stifle, being bound to trust

¹ Agamemnon.

All feelings equally, to hear all sides:
How can my life indulge them? yet they live,
Referring to some state of life unknown.

My selfishness is satiated not,
It wears me like a flame; my hunger for
All pleasure, howsoe'er minute, grows pain;
I envy — how I envy him whose soul
Turns its whole energies to some one end,
To elevate an aim, pursue success
However mean! So, my still baffled hope Seeks out abstractions; I would have one
joy,

But one in life, so it were wholly mine,
One rapture all my soul could fill: and this Wild feeling places me in dream afar
In some vast country where the eye can see
No end to the far hills and dales bestrewn
With shining towers and towns, till I grow mad

Well-nigh, to know not one abode but holds Some pleasure, while my soul could grasp
the world,

But must remain this vile form's slave. I look

With hope to age at last, which quenching
much,

May let me concentrate what sparks it spares.

This restlessness of passion meets in me
A craving after knowledge: the sole proof
Of yet commanding will is in that power
Repressed; for I beheld it in its dawn,
The sleepless harpy with just-budding
wings,

And I considered whether to forego
All happy ignorant hopes and fears, to live,
Finding a recompense in its wild eyes.

And when I found that I should perish so,
I bade its wild eyes close from me for ever,
And I am left alone with old delights; Seel it lies in me a chained thing, still prompt

To serve me if I loose its slightest bond:
I cannot but be proud of my bright slave.

How should this earth's life prove my only
sphere?

Can I so narrow sense but that in life
Soul still exceeds it? In their elements
My love outsoars my reason; but since love
Perforce receives its object from this earth While reason wanders chainless, the few truths

Caught from its wanderings have sufficed to quell

Love chained below; then what were love, set free,

Which, with the object it demands, would pass

Reason companioning the seraphim?
No, what I feel may pass all human love

Yet fall far short of what my love should be.
And yet I seem more warped in this than aught,

Myself stands out more hideously: of old
I could forget myself in friendship, fame,
Liberty, nay, in love of mightier souls;
But I begin to know what thing hate is —
To sicken and to quiver and grow white —
And I myself have furnished its first prey.
Hate of the weak and ever-wavering will,
The selfishness, the still-decaying frame, . .
But I must never grieve whom wing can waft

Far from such thoughts — as now. Andromeda! ¹

And she is with me: years roll, I shall 60
change,

But change can touch her not — so beautiful

With her fixed eyes, earnest and still, and
hair

Lifted and spread by the salt-sweeping breeze,

And one red beam, all the storm leaves in
heaven,

Resting upon her eyes and hair, such hair,
As she awaits the snake on the wet beach
By the dark rock and the white wave just breaking

At her feet; quite naked and alone; a
thing

I doubt not, nor fear for, secure some god
To save will come in thunder from the 70 stars.

Let it pass! Soul requires another change.
I will be gifted with a wondrous mind,

Yet sunk by error to men's sympathy,
And in the wane of life, yet only so

As to call up their fears; and there shall come

A time requiring youth's best energies;
And lo, I fling age, sorrow, sickness off,
And rise triumphant, triumph through decay.

And thus it is that I supply the chasm
'Twixt what I am and all I fain would be: 80
But then to know nothing, to hope for nothing,

To seize on life's dull joys from a strange
fear

Lest, losing them, all's lost and nought remains!

There's some vile juggle with my reason
here;

I feel I but explain to my own loss
These impulses: they live no less the same.

Liberty! what though I despair? my blood

Rose never at a slave's name proud as now.
Oh sympathies, obscured by sophistries! —

Why else have I sought refuge in myself, 90

But from the woes I saw and could not stay?
 Love! is not this to love thee, my Pauline?
 I cherish prejudice, lest I be left Utterly loveless? witness my belief
 In poets, though sad change has come there too;
 No more I leave myself to follow them —
 Unconsciously I measure me by them —
 Let me forget it: and I cherish most My love of England — how her name, a
 word
 10 Of hers in a strange tongue makes my heart beat!

Pauline, could I but break the spell! Not
 now —
 All's fever — but when calm shall come
 again,
 I am prepared: I have made life my own.
 I would not be content with all the change
 One frame should feel, but I have gone in
 thought
 Thro' all conjuncture, I have lived all life
 When it is most alive, where strangest fate
 New-shapes it past surmise — the throes of men
 Bit by some curse or in the grasps of doom
 20 Half-visible and still-increasing round,
 Or crowning their wide being's general aim.

These are wild fancies, but I feel, sweet
 friend,
 As one breathing his weakness to the ear
 Of pitying angel — dear as a winter flower,
 A slight flower growing alone, and offering Its frail cup of three leaves to the cold
 sun,
 Yet joyous and confiding like the triumph
 Of a child: and why am I not worthy thee?
 I can live all the life of plants, and gaze
 30 Drowsily on the bees that flit and play, Or bare my breast for sunbeams which will kill,
 Or open in the night of sounds, to look For the dim stars; I can mount with the bird
 Leaping airily his pyramid of leaves
 And twisted boughs of some tall mountain tree,
 Or rise cheerfully springing to the heavens;
 Or like a fish breathe deep the morning air
 In the misty sun-warm water; or with flower
 And tree can smile in light at the sinking sun
 40 Just as the storm comes, as a girl would
 look
 On a departing lover — most serene.

Pauline, come with me, see how I could build
 A home for us, out of the world, in thought!
 I am uplifted: fly with me, Pauline!

Night, and one single ridge of narrow path
 Between the sullen river and the woods Waving and muttering, for the moonless
 night
 Has shaped them into images of life,
 Like the uprising of the giant-ghosts,
 Looking on earth to know how their sons fare:
 Thou art so close by me, the roughest swell
 Of wind in the tree-tops hides not the pant-
 ing
 Of thy soft breasts. No, we will pass to morning —
 Morning, the rocks and valleys and old woods.
 How the sun brightens in the mist, and here,
 Half in the air, like creatures of the place,
 Trusting the element, living on high boughs
 That swing in the wind — look at the silver spray
 Flung from the foam-sheet of the cataract Amid the broken rocks! Shall we stay
 here
 With the wild hawks? No, ere the hot noon come,
 Dive we down — safe! See this our new retreat
 Walled in with a sloped mound of matted shrubs,
 Dark, tangled, old and green, still sloping
 down
 To a small pool whose waters lie asleep
 Amid the trailing boughs turned waterplants:
 And tall trees overarch to keep us in,
 Breaking the sunbeams into emerald shafts,
 And in the dreamy water one small group
 Of two or three strange trees are got together
 Wondering at all around, as strange beasts herd Together far from their own land: all wildness,
 No turf nor moss, for boughs and plants
 pave all,
 And tongues of bank go shelving in the lymph,
 Where the pale-throated snake reclines his
 head,
 And old grey stones lie making eddies there,
 The wild-mice cross them dry-shod,
 Deeper in!
 Shut thy soft eyes — now look — still deeper in!
 This is the very heart of the woods all
 round
 Mountain-like heaped above us; yet even
 here
 One pond of water gleams; far off the river
 Sweeps like a sea, barred out from land;
 but one —
 One thin clear sheet has overleaped and wound

Into this silent depth, which gained, it lies Still, as but let by sufferance; the trees bend
O'er it as wild men watch a sleeping girl,
And through their roots long creeping plants out-stretch
Their twined hair, steeped and sparkling;
 farther on,
Tall rushes and thick flag-knots have combined
To narrow it; so, at length, a silver thread,
It winds, all noiselessly through the deep wood Till thro' a cleft-way, thro' the moss and
 stone,
It joins its parent-river with a shout.

Up for the glowing day, leave the old woods!
See, they part like a ruined arch: the sky!
Nothing but sky appears, so close the roots
And grass of the hill-top level with the air—
Blue sunny air, where a great cloud floats laden
With light, like a dead whale that white birds pick,
Floating away in the sun in some north sea.
Air, air, fresh life-blood, thin and searching
 air,
The clear, dear breath of God that loveth
 us,

Where small birds reel and winds take their delight!
Water is beautiful, but not like air:
See, where the solid azure waters lie
Made as of thickened air, and down below,
The fern-ranks like a forest spread themselves
As though each pore could feel the element;
Where the quick glancing serpent winds his
 way,
Float with me there, Pauline! — but not like air.

Down the hill! Stop — a clump of trees, see, set
On a heap of rock, which look o'er the far
 plain:
So, envious climbing shrubs would mount to rest
And peer from their spread boughs; wide they wave, looking
At the muleteers who whistle on their way,
To the merry chime of morning bells, past
 all
The little smoking cots, mid fields and banks
And corpses bright in the sun. My spirit wanders:
Hedgerows for me — those living hedge-rows where
The bushes close and clasp above and keep Thought in — I am concentrated — I feel;
But my soul saddens when it looks beyond:
I cannot be immortal, taste all joy.

O God, where do they tend — these struggling aims?¹
What would I have? What is this "sleep" which seems

To bound all? can there be a "waking"
 point

Of crowning life? The soul would never
 rule;

It would be first in all things, it would have Its utmost pleasure filled, but, that complete,

Commanding, for commanding, sickens it.
The last point I can trace is — rest beneath
Some better essence than itself, in weak-
 ness;

This is "myself," not what I think should
 be:

And what is that I hunger for but God?

My God, my God, let me for once look on
 thee

As though nought else existed, we alone!
And as creation crumbles, my soul's spark Expands till I can say, — Even from myself

I need thee and I feel thee and I love thee.

I do not plead my rapture in thy works

For love of thee, nor that I feel as one

Who cannot die: but there is that in me

Which turns to thee, which loves or which should love.

Why have I girt myself with this hell-dress?

Why have I laboured to put out my life?

Is it not in my nature to adore,

And e'en for all my reason do I not Feel him, and thank him, and pray to him

 — now?

Can I forego the trust that he loves me?

Do I not feel a love which only ONE . . .

O thou pale form, so dimly seen, deep-eyed!

I have denied thee calmly — do I not

Pant when I read of thy consummate
 power,

And burn to see thy calm pure truths out-flash

The brightest gleams of earth's philosophy?

Do I not shake to hear aught question thee?

If I am erring save me, madden me,

Take from me powers and pleasures, let me
 die

Ages, so I see thee! I am knit round

As with a charm by sin and lust and pride,

Yet though my wandering dreams have seen all shapes

Of strange delight, oft have I stood by thee —

Have I been keeping lonely watch with thee
 8a

In the damp night by weeping Olivet,

Or leaning on thy bosom, proudly less,

Or dying with thee on the lonely cross,

Or witnessing thine outburst from the tomb.

A mortal, sin's familiar friend, doth here
Avow that he will give all earth's reward,
But to believe and humbly teach the faith,
In suffering and poverty and shame,
Only believing he is not unloved.

And now, my Pauline, I am thine for ever!
I feel the spirit which has buoyed me up Desert me, and old shades are gathering
fast;

Yet while the last light waits, I would say
much,

10 This chiefly, it is gain that I have said
Somewhat of love I ever felt for thee
But seldom told; our hearts so beat together

That speech seemed mockery; but when dark hours come,
And joy departs, and thou, sweet, deem'st
it strange

A sorrow moves me, thou canst not remove,
Look on this lay I dedicate to thee,
Which through thee I began, which thus I
end,

Collecting the last gleams to strive to tell
How I am thine, and more than ever now
That I sink fast: yet though I deeper sink,

No less song proves one word has brought me bliss,

Another still may win bliss surely back.
Thou knowest, dear, I could not think all
calm,

For fancies followed thought and bore me
off,

And left all indistinct; ere one was caught Another glanced; so, dazzled by my wealth,

I knew not which to leave nor which to choose,

For all so floated, nought was fixed and firm.

And then thou said'st a perfect bard was one

30 Who chronicled the stages of all life,
And so thou bad'st me shadow this first stage.

'Tis done, and even now I recognise The shift, the change from last to past — discern

Faintly how life is truth and truth is
good.

And why thou must be mine is, that e'en
now

In the dim hush of night, that I have done, Despite the sad forebodings, love looks
through —

Whispers — E'en at the last I have her
still,

With her delicious eyes as clear as heaven

40 When rain in a quick shower has beat down mist,

And clouds float white above like broods of How the blood lies upon her cheek, out-spread

As thinned by kisses! only in her lips
It wells and pulses like a living thing,
And her neck looks like marble misted o'er
With love-breath, — a Pauline from heights
above,

Stooping beneath me, looking up — one
look

As I might kill her and be loved the more So, love me — me, Pauline, and nought but
me,

Never leave loving! Words are wild and
weak,

Believe them not, Pauline! I stained myself

But to behold thee purer by my side,
To show thou art my breath, my life, a last Resource, an extreme want: never believe Aught better could so look on thee; nor seek

Again the world of good thoughts left for
mine!

There were bright troops of undiscovered
suns,

Each equal in their radiant course; there were

Clusters of far fair isles which ocean kept For his own joy, and his waves broke on
them

Without a choice; and there was a dim
crowd

Of visions, each a part of some grand
whole:

And one star left his peers and came with peace

Upon a storm, and all eyes pined for him;
And one isle harboured a sea-beaten ship

And the crew wandered in its bowers and plucked

Its fruits and gave up all their hopes of
home;

And one dream came to a pale poet's sleep,
And he said, "I am singled out by God,

"No sin must touch me." Words are wild and weak,

But what they would express is, — Leave me not,

Still sit by me with beating breast and hair
Loosened, be watching earnest by my side,

Turning my books or kissing me when I Look up — like summer wind! Be still to me

A help to music's mystery which mind fails
To fathom, its solution, no mere clue!

O reason's pedantry, life's rule prescribed!
I hopeless, I the loveless, hope and love.

Wiser and better, know me now, not when You loved me as I was. Smile not! I have Much yet to dawn on you, to gladden you.

No more of the past! I'll look within no
more.

I have too trusted my own lawless wants,
Too trusted my vain self, vague intuition —

Draining soul's wine alone in the still night,
And seeing how, as gathering films arose,
As by an inspiration life seemed bare
And grinning in its vanity, while ends Foul to be dreamed of, smiled at me as fixed

And fair, while others changed from fair to foul

As a young witch turns an old hag at night.
No more of this! We will go hand in
hand,

I with thee, even as a child — love's slave, Looking no farther than his liege commands.

And thou hast chosen where this life shall
be:

The land which gave me thee shall be our
home,

Where nature lies all wild amid her lakes
And snow-swathed mountains and vast pines begirt

With ropes of snow — where nature lies all bare.

Suffering none to view her but a race
Or stunted or deformed, like the mute dwarfs

Which wait upon a naked Indian queen.
And there (the time being when the heavens are thick

With storm) I'll sit with thee while thou dost sing

Thy native songs, gay as a desert bird
Which crieth as it flies for perfect joy,
Or telling me old stories of dead knights;
Or I will read great lays to thee — how
she,

The fair pale sister, went to her chill grave¹
With power to love and to be loved and live:
Or we will go together, like twin gods
Of the infernal world, with scented lamp
Over the dead, to call and to awake,
Over the unshaped images which lie
Within my mind's cave: only leaving all, That tells of the past doubt. So, when spring comes

With sunshine back again like an old smile,
And the fresh waters and awakened birds
And budding woods await us, I shall be Prepared, and we will question life once
more,

Till its old sense shall come renewed by
change,

Like some clear thought which harsh words
veiled before;

Feeling God loves us, and that all which errs

Is but a dream which death will dissipate.
And then what need of longer exile? Seek My England, and, again there, calm approach

All I once fled from, calmly look on those

The works of my past weakness, as one views

Some scene where danger met him long before.

Ah that such pleasant life should be but dreamed!

But whate'er come of it, and though it fade,
And though ere the cold morning all be
gone,

As it may be; — tho' music wait to wile,
And strange eyes and bright wine lure, 50 laugh like sin

Which steals back softly on a soul half saved,

And I the first deny, decry, despise,
With this avowal, these intents so fair, —
Still be it all my own, this moment's
pride!

No less I make an end in perfect joy.
E'en in my brightest time, a lurking fear Possessed me: I well knew my weak resolves,

I felt the witchery that makes mind sleep
Over its treasure, as one half afraid
To make his riches definite: but now 60

These feelings shall not utterly be lost,
I shall not know again that nameless care Lest, leaving all undone in youth, some new

And undreamed end reveal itself too late:
For this song shall remain to tell for ever
That when I lost all hope of such a change,
Suddenly beauty rose on me again.

No less I make an end in perfect joy,
For I, who thus again was visited,
Shall doubt not many another bliss awaits 70

And, though this weak soul sink and darkness whelm,

Some little word shall light it, raise aloft,
To where I clearer see and better love,
As I again go o'er the tracts of thought
Like one who has a right, and I shall live
With poets, calmer, purer still each time,
And beauteous shapes will come for me to seize,

And unknown secrets will be trusted me
Which were denied the waverer once; but
now

I shall be priest and prophet as of old. 80

Sun-treader, I believe in God and truth
And love; and as one just escaped from death

Would bind himself in bands of friends to feel

He lives indeed, so, I would lean on thee!
Thou must be ever with me, most in gloom
If such must come, but chiefly when I die,
For I seem, dying, as one going in the dark
To fight a giant: but live thou for ever,
And be to all what thou hast been to me!
All in whom this wakes pleasant thoughts 90
of me

¹ Antigone.

Know my last state is happy, free from
doubt Or touch of fear. Love me and wish me well.

NOTE.

Je crains bien que mon pauvre ami ne soit pas toujours parfaitement compris dans ce qui reste à lire de cet étrange fragment, mais il est moins propre que tout autre à éclaircir ce qui de sa nature ne peut jamais être que songe et confusion. D'ailleurs je ne sais trop si en cherchant à mieux co-ordonner certaines parties l'on ne courrait pas le risque de nuire au seul mérite auquel une production si singulière peut prétendre, celui de donner une idée assez précise du genre qu'elle n'a fait qu'ébaucher. Ce début sans prétention, ce remuement des passions qui va d'abord en accroissant et puis s'apaise par degrés, ces élans de l'âme, ce retour soudain sur soi-même, et par-dessus tout, la tournure d'esprit tout particulière de mon ami, rendent les changemens presque impossibles.

Les raisons qu'il fait valoir ailleurs, et d'autres encore plus puissantes, ont fait trouver grâce à mes yeux pour cet écrit qu'autrement je lui eusse conseillé de jeter au feu. Je n'en crois pas moins au grand principe de toute composition -- à ce prin-cipe de Shakespeare, de Raphaëlle, de Beethoven, d'où il suit que la concentration des idées est due bien plus à leur conception qu'à leur mise en exécution: j'ai tout lieu de craindre que la première de ces qualités ne soit encore étrangère à mon ami, et je doute fort qu'un redoublement de travail lui fasse acquérir la seconde. Le mieux serait de brûler ceci; mais que faire?

Je crois que dans ce qui suit il fait allusion à un certain examen qu'il fit autrefois de l'âme, ou plutôt de son âme, pour découvrir la suite des objets auxquels il lui serait possible d'atteindre, et dont chacun une fois obtenu devait former une espèce de plateau d'où l'on pouvait apercevoir d'autres buts, d'autres projets, d'autres jouissances qui, à leur tour, devaient être surmontés. Il en résultait que l'oubli et le sommeil devaient tout terminer. Cette idée, que je ne saisis pas parfaitement, lui est peut-être aussi inintelligible qu'à moi.

PAULINE.

1835.

[In his choice of Paracelsus, Browning exhibits that fondness for learned subjects and out-of-the-way reading which always characterised him. A Life of Paracelsus, did it only exist, would be a fascinating record of times and ideas now well-nigh inconceivable by us. Paracelsus (a name invented by himself to indicate that he was greater than Celsus) was the son of a doctor, and was born about 1490 in Einsiedeln, in the Swiss canton of Schwyz. He studied at Basel University, and was taught alchemy and chemistry by the renowned Trithemius. He also acquired in the mines in the Tyrol belonging to the Fugger family a practical acquaintance with minerals. His merit became that of an observer and an acquirer of facts. He wandered all over Europe, and even reached Samarcand. In 1526 he returned to Basel, and was appointed town physician, and lectured before the University. His behaviour was eccentric, and his conceit boundless. In 1528 he left Basel and resumed his wandering life. He died in Salzburg in 1541—some say he was murdered, and others that he drank himself to death. He has been credited with an enormous number of works explanatory of his system, which was a mixture of mysticism, charlatanism, and useful empiricism. He lectured both in Latin and German. Erasmus consulted him for the stone, and he is said to have cured the famous printer, Froben, of the gout. It is asserted on his behalf that he discovered zinc, hydrogen gas, and the tincture of opium. His azoth is sometimes supposed to have been electricity (see Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. xviii.). The poem sufficiently explains itself, and presents no difficulty to an intelligent reader.]

PERSONS.

AUREOLUS PARACELSUS, a student.
FESTUS and MICHAL, his friends.
APRILE, an Italian poet.

I. — PARACELSUS ASPIRES.

SCENE. — Würzburg; a garden in the environs. 1512.

FESTUS, PARACELSUS, MICHAL.

Paracelsus. Come close to me, dear friends; still closer; thus!
Close to the heart which, though long time roll by Ere it again beat quicker, pressed to yours,
As now it beats — perchance a long, long time —

At least henceforth your memories shall make

Quiet and fragrant as befits their home.

Nor shall my memory want a home in yours —

Alas, that it requires too well such free Forgiving love as shall embalm it there!

For if you would remember me aright,

As I was born to be, you must forget

All fitful strange and moody waywardness

Which e'er confused my better spirit to dwell

Only on moments such as these, dear friends!

— My heart no truer, but my words and ways

More true to it: as Michal, some months hence,

Will say, "this autumn was a pleasant time,"

For some few sunny days; and overlook

Its bleak wind, hankering after pining
leaves.

Autumn would fain be sunny; I would
look

Liker my nature's truth: and both are frail,
And both beloved, for all our frailty.

Michal. Aureole!

Paracelsus. Drop by drop! she is weeping like a child!

Not so! I am content — more than content;

Nay, autumn wins you best by this its mute
Appeal to sympathy for its decay:

Look up, sweet Michal, nor esteem the less 10 Your stained and drooping vines their grapes bow down,

Not blame those creaking trees bent with their fruit,

That apple-tree with a rare after-birth
Of peeping blooms sprinkled its wealth among!

Then for the winds — what wind that ever raved

Shall vex that ash which overlooks you
both,

So proud it wears its berries? Ah, at
length,

The old smile meet for her, the lady of this

Sequestered nest! — this kingdom, limited
Alone by one old populous green wall

20 Tenanted by the ever-busy flies, Grey crickets and shy lizards and quick spiders,

Each family of the silver-threaded moss —
Which, look through near, this way, and it appears

A stubble-field or a cane-brake, a marsh
Of bulrush whitening in the sun: laugh
now!

Fancy the crickets, each one in his house, Looking out, wondering at the world — or
best,

Yon painted snail with his gay shell of dew,
Travelling to see the glossy balls high up

30 Hung by the caterpillar, like gold lamps.
Michal. In truth we have lived carelessly and well.

Paracelsus. And shall, my perfect pair!
— each, trust me, born

For the other; nay, your very hair, when mixed,

Is of one hue. For where save in this nook
Shall you two walk, when I am far away,
And wish me prosperous fortune? Stay:

that plant
Shall never wave its tangles lightly and softly,

As a queen's languid and imperial arm
Which scatters crowns among her lovers,
but you

40 Shall be reminded to predict to me
Some great success! Ah see, the sun sinks broad

Behind Saint Saviour's: wholly gone, at
last!

Festus. Now, Aureole, stay those wandering eyes awhile!

You are ours to-night, at least; and while you spoke

Of Michal and her tears, I thought that none

Could willing leave what he so seemed to
love:

But that last look destroys my dream — that look

As if, where'er you gazed, there stood a star!

How far was Würzburg with its church and spire

And garden-walls and all things they contain,

From that look's far alighting?
Paracelsus. I but spoke

And looked alike from simple joy to see
The beings I love best, shut in so well

From all rude chances like to be my lot,
That, when afar, my weary spirit, — disposed

To lose awhile its care in soothing thoughts
Of them, their pleasant features, looks and
words, —

Needs never hesitate, nor apprehend Encroaching trouble may have reached them too,

Nor have recourse to fancy's busy aid
And fashion even a wish in their behalf

Beyond what they possess already here;
But, unobstructed, may at once forget

Itself in them, assured how well they fare.
Beside, this Festus knows he holds me one

Whom quiet and its charms arrest in vain,
One scarce aware of all the joys I quit,

Too filled with airy hopes to make account
Of soft delights his own heart garners up

Whereas behold how much our sense of all That's beauteous proves alike! When Festus learns

That every common pleasure of the world
Affects me as himself; that I have just

As varied appetite for joy derived From common things; a stake in life, in short,

Like his; a stake which rash pursuit o aims

That life affords not, would as soon de stroy; —

He may convince himself that, this in view

I shall act well advised. And last, because,

Though heaven and earth and all thing
were at stake,

Sweet Michal must not weep, our parting
eve.

Festus. True: and the eve is deepening and we sit

As little anxious to begin our talk
As though to-morrow I could hint of it

As we paced arm-in-arm the cheerful town
At sun-dawn; or could whisper it by fits (Trithemius busied with his class the while)

In that dim chamber where the noon-streaks peer

Half-frightened by the awful tomes
around;

Or in some grassy lane unbosom all From even-blush to midnight: but, tomorrow!

Have I full leave to tell my inmost mind?
We have been brothers, and henceforth the
world

to Will rise between us:—all my freest
mind?

'Tis the last night, dear Aureole!

Paracelsus. Oh, say on!

Devise some test of love, some arduous feat
To be performed for you: say on! If night Be spent the while, the better! Recall how oft

My wondrous plans and dreams and hopes and fears

Have — never wearied you, oh no! — as I Recall, and never vividly as now,

Your true affection, born when Einsiedeln
And its green hills were all the world to us;

70 And still increasing to this night which ends

My further stay at Würzburg. Oh, one
day

You shall be very proud! Say on, dear
friends!

Festus. In truth? 'Tis for my proper peace, indeed,

Rather than yours; for vain all projects seem

To stay your course: I said my latest hope Is fading even now. A story tells

Of some far embassy despatched to win
The favour of an eastern king, and how

The gifts they offered proved but dazzling dust

30 Shed from the ore-beds native to his clime.
Just so, the value of repose and love,

I meant should tempt you, better far than I
You seem to comprehend; and yet desist

No whit from projects where repose nor love

Has part.

Paracelsus. Once more? Alas! As I foretold.

Festus. A solitary brier the bank puts
forth

To save our swan's nest floating out to sea.
Paracelsus. Dear Festus, hear me.

What is it you wish?

That I should lay aside my heart's pursuit,
40 Abandon the sole ends for which I live,

Reject God's great commission, and so die!
You bid me listen for your true love's sake:

Yet how has grown that love? Even in a long

And patient cherishing of the self-same spirit

It now would quell; as though a mother hoped

To stay the lusty manhood of the child Once weak upon her knees. I was not

born

Informed and fearless from the first, but shrank

From aught which marked me out apart from men:

I would have lived their life, and died their 50
death,

Lost in their ranks, eluding destiny:
But you first guided me through doubt and fear,

Taught me to know mankind and know
myself;

And now that I am strong and full of hope,
That, from my soul, I can reject all aims

Save those your earnest words made plain
to me,

Now that I touch the brink of my design,
When I would have a triumph in their eyes,

A glad cheer in their voices — Michal
weeps,

And Festus ponders gravely! 60
Festus. When you deign

To hear my purpose . . .
Paracelsus. Hear it? I can say

Beforehand all this evening's conference!
'Tis this way, Michal, that he uses: first,

Or he declares, or I, the leading points
Of our best scheme of life, what is man's

end

And what God's will; no two faiths e'er agreed

As his with mine. Next, each of us allows Faith should be acted on as best we may;

Accordingly, I venture to submit
My plan, in lack of better, for pursuing 70

The path which God's will seems to authorise.

Well, he discerns much good in it, avows
This motive worthy, that hope plausible,

A danger here to be avoided, there
An oversight to be repaired: in fine

Our two minds go together — all the good Approved by him, I gladly recognise,

All he counts bad, I thankfully discard,
And nought forbids my looking up at last

For some stray comfort in his cautious 80
brow.

When, lo! I learn that, spite of all, there lurks

Some innate and inexplicable germ
Of failure in my scheme; so that at last

It all amounts to this — the sovereign proof

That we devote ourselves to God, is seen
In living just as though no God there were;

A life which, prompted by the sad and blind

Folly of man, Festus abhors the most;

But which these tenets sanctify at once, Though to less subtle wits it seems the
same,

Consider it how they may.

Michal. Is it so, Festus?
He speaks so calmly and kindly: is it so?

Paracelsus. Reject those glorious visions of God's love

And man's design; laugh loud that God should send

Vast longings to direct us; say how soon

Power satiates these, or lust, or gold; I
know

The world's cry well, and how to answer it.

10 But this ambiguous warfare . . .
Festus. . . . Wearies so

That you will grant no last leave to your
friend

To urge it? — for his sake, not yours? I wish

To send my soul in good hopes after
you;

Never to sorrow that uncertain words

Erringly apprehended, a new creed

Ill understood, begot rash trust in you,

Had share in your undoing.

Paracelsus. Choose your side, Hold or renounce: but meanwhile blame
me not

Because I dare to act on your own views,

20 Nor shrink when they point onward, nor esp

A peril where they most ensure success.

Festus. Prove that to me — but that I Prove you abide

Within their warrant, nor presumptuous boast

God's labour laid on you; prove, all you covet

A mortal may expect; and, most of all,

Prove the strange course you now affect,
will lead

To its attainment — and I bid you speed, Nay, count the minutes till you venture
forth!

You smile; but I had gathered from slow
thought —

30 Much musing on the fortunes of my friend — Matter I deemed could not be urged in
vain;

But it all leaves me at my need: in shreds
And fragments I must venture what remains.

Michal. Ask at once, Festus, wherefore
he should scorn . . .

Festus. Stay, Michal: Aureole, I speak guardedly

And gravely, knowing well, whate'er your error,

This is no ill-considered choice of yours,
No sudden fancy of an ardent boy.

Not from your own confiding words alone

40 Am I aware your passionate heart long since

Gave birth to, nourished and at length matures

This scheme. I will not speak of Einsiedeln,

Where I was born your elder by some years
Only to watch you fully from the first:

In all beside, our mutual tasks were fixed Even then — 'twas mine to have you in my view

As you had your own soul and those intents
Which filled it when, to crown your dearest
wish,

With a tumultuous heart, you left with me
Our childhood's home to join the favoured 50

few

Whom, here, Trithemius condescends to teach

A portion of his lore: and not one youth
Of those so favoured, whom you now despise,

Came earnest as you came, resolved, like
you,

To grasp all, and retain all, and deserve
By patient toil a wide renown like his.

Now, this new ardour which supplants the old

I watched, too; 'twas significant and
strange,

In one matched to his soul's content at length

With rivals in the search for wisdom's 60
prize,

To see the sudden pause, the total change;
From contest, the transition to repose —

From pressing onward as his fellows pressed,

To a blank idleness, yet most unlike
The dull stagnation of a soul, content,

Once foiled, to leave betimes a thriveless quest.

That careless bearing, free from all pretence

Even of contempt for what it ceased to seek —

Smiling humility, praising much, yet waiv-
ing

What it professed to praise — though not 70
so well

Maintained but that rare outbreaks, fierce and brief,

Revealed the hidden scorn, as quickly curbed.

That ostentatious show of past defeat,
That ready acquiescence in contempt,

I deemed no other than the letting go
His shivered sword, of one about to spring

Upon his foe's throat; but it was not
thus:

Not that way looked your brooding purpose then.

For after-signs disclosed, what you confirmed,

That you prepared to task to the utter- 80
most

Your strength, in furtherance of a certain aim Which — while it bore the name your rivals gave Their own most puny efforts — was so vast
In scope that it included their best flights,
Combined them, and desired to gain one prize
In place of many, — the secret of the world,
Of man, and man's true purpose, path and fate.
— That you, not nursing as a mere vague dream
This purpose, with the sages of the past, 10 Have struck upon a way to this, if all
You trust be true, which following, heart and soul,
You, if a man may, dare aspire to KNOW:
And that this aim shall differ from a host
Of aims alike in character and kind,
Mostly in this, — that in itself alone
Shall its reward be, not an alien end
Blending therewith; no hope nor fear nor joy
Nor woe, to elsewhere move you, but this pure Devotion to sustain you or betray:
20 Thus you aspire.
Paracelsus. You shall not state it thus:
I should not differ from the dreamy crew
You speak of. I profess no other share
In the selection of my lot, than this
My ready answer to the will of God
Who summons me to be his organ. All Whose innate strength supports them shall succeed
No better than the sages.
Festus. Such the aim, then,
God sets before you; and 'tis doubtless need
That he appoint no less the way of praise
30 Than the desire to praise; for, though I hold With you, the setting forth such praise to be
The natural end and service of a man,
And hold such praise is best attained when man
Attains the general welfare of his kind —
Yet this, the end, is not the instrument.
Presume not to serve God apart from such Appointed channel as he wills shall gather Imperfect tributes, for that sole obedience Valued perchance! He seeks not that his altars 40 Blaze, careless how, so that they do but blaze.
Suppose this, then; that God selected you
To know (heed well your answers, for my faith Shall meet implicitly what they affirm)
I cannot think you dare annex to such Selection aught beyond a steadfast will,

An intense hope; nor let your gifts create Scorn or neglect of ordinary means Conducive to success, make destiny Dispense with man's endeavour. Now, dare you search
Your inmost heart, and candidly avow
50 Whether you have not rather wild desire
For this distinction than security
Of its existence? whether you discern
The path to the fulfilment of your purpose
Clear as that purpose — and again, that purpose
Clear as your yearning to be singled out
For its pursuer. Dare you answer this?
Paracelsus [after a pause]. No, I have nought to fear! Who will may know The secret'st workings of my soul. What though
It be so? — if indeed the strong desire 60 Eclipse the aim in me? — if splendour
break
Upon the outset of my path alone,
And duskest shade succeed? What fairer seal
Shall I require to my authentic mission
Than this fierce energy? — this instinct striving Because its nature is to strive? — enticed
By the security of no broad course,
Without success for ever in its eyes!
How know I else such glorious fate my
own,
But in the restless irresistible force 70 That works within me? Is it for human will
To institute such impulses? — still less,
To disregard their promptings! What should I Do, kept among you all; your loves, your
cares,
Your life — all to be mine? Be sure that
God
Ne'er dooms to waste the strength he deigns impart!
Ask the geier-eagle why she stoops at once
Into the vast and unexplored abyss, What full-grown power informs her from the first,
Why she not marvels, strenuously beating 80
The silent boundless regions of the sky!
Be sure they sleep not whom God needs!
Nor fear
Their holding light his charge, when every hour
That finds that charge delayed, is a new
death.
This for the faith in which I trust; and
hence
I can abjure so well the idle arts
These pedants strive to learn and teach:
Black Arts, Great Works, the Secret and Sublime, forsooth —
Let others prize: too intimate a tie

- Connects me with our God! A sullen fiend
 To do my bidding, fallen and hateful sprites
 To help me — what are these, at best, beside God helping, God directing everywhere,
 So that the earth shall yield her secrets up,
 And every object there be charged to strike,
 Teach, gratify her master God appoints?
 And I am young, my Festus, happy and free!
 I can devote myself; I have a life
 10 To give; I, singled out for this, the One!
 Think, think! the wide East, where all Wisdom sprung;
 The bright South, where she dwelt; the hopeful North,
 All are passed o'er — it lights on me! 'Tis time
 New hopes should animate the world, new light
 Should dawn from new revealings to a race Weighed down so long, forgotten so long; thus shall
 The heaven reserved for us at last receive Creatures whom no unwonted splendours blind,
 But ardent to confront the unclouded blaze
 20 Whose beams not seldom blessed their pilgrimage,
 Not seldom glorified their life below.
Festus. My words have their old fate and make faint stand Against your glowing periods. Call this, truth —
 Why not pursue it in a fast retreat,
 Some one of Learning's many palaces,
 After approved example? — seeking there
 Calm converse with the great dead, soul to soul,
 Who laid up treasure with the like intent
 — So lift yourself into their airy place, 30 And fill out full their unfulfilled careers.
 Unravelling the knots their baffled skill
 Pronounced inextricable, true! — but left Far less confused. A fresh eye, a fresh hand, Might do much at their vigour's waning-point;
 Succeeding with new-breathed new-hearted force,
 As at old games the runner snatched the torch
 From runner still: this way success might be.
 But you have coupled with your enterprise,
 An arbitrary self-repugnant scheme
 40 Of seeking it in strange and untried paths.
 What books are in the desert? Writes the sea
 The secret of her yearning in vast caves
- Where yours will fall the first of human feet?
 Has wisdom sat there and recorded aught
 You press to read? Why turn aside from her
 To visit, where her vesture never glanced,
 Now — solitudes consigned to barrenness
 By God's decree, which who shall dare impugn?
 Now — ruins where she paused but would not stay,
 Old ravaged cities that, renouncing her, 50
 She called an endless curse on, so it came:
 Or worst of all, now — men you visit, men,
 Ignoblest troops who never heard her voice
 Or hate it, men without one gift from Rome
 Or Athens, — these shall Aureole's teachers be!
 Rejecting past example, practice, precept,
 Aidless 'mid these he thinks to stand alone:
 Thick like a glory round the Stagirite
 Your rivals throng, the sages: here stand you!
 Whatever you may protest, knowledge is 60
 not
 Paramount in your love; or for her sake
 You would collect all help from every source — Rival, assistant, friend, foe, all would merge
 In the broad class of those who showed her haunts,
 And those who showed them not.
Paracelsus. What shall I say?
 Festus, from childhood I have been possessed
 By a fire — by a true fire, or faint or fierce,
 As from without some master, so it seemed,
 Repressed or urged its current: this but ill
 Expresses what would I convey: but rather 70
 I will believe an angel ruled me thus,
 Than that my soul's own workings, own high nature,
 So became manifest. I knew not then
 What whispered in the evening, and spoke out
 At midnight. If some mortal, born too soon,
 Were laid away in some great trance — the ages
 Coming and going all the while — till dawned
 His true time's advent; and could then record
 The words they spoke who kept watch by his bed, —
 Then I might tell more of the breath so 80
 light
 Upon my eyelids, and the fingers light
 Among my hair. Youth is confused; yet never
 So dull was I but, when that spirit passed,
 I turned to him, scarce consciously, as turns

A water-snake when fairies cross his sleep.
And having this within me and about me While Einsiedeln, its mountains, lakes and woods

Confined me — what oppressive joy was
mine

When life grew plain, and I first viewed the thronged,

The everlasting concourse of mankind!

Believe that ere I joined them, ere I knew

The purpose of the pageant, or the place

Consigned me in its ranks — while, just awake,

10 Wonder was freshest and delight most pure —

'Twas then that least supportable appeared

A station with the brightest of the crowd,

A portion with the proudest of them all.

And from the tumult in my breast, this only

Could I collect, that I must thenceforth
die

Or elevate myself far, far above

The gorgeous spectacle. I seemed to long

At once to trample on, yet save mankind,

To make some unexampled sacrifice

20 In their behalf, to wring some wondrous
good

From heaven or earth for them, to perish, winning

Eternal weal in the act: as who should dare

Pluck out the angry thunder from its cloud,

That, all its gathered flame discharged on
him,

No storm might threaten summer's azure
sleep:

Yet never to be mixed with men so much

As to have part even in my own work, share

In my own largess. Once the feat achieved,

I would withdraw from their officious
praise,

30 Would gently put aside their profuse
thanks.

Like some knight traversing a wilderness,
Who, on his way, may chance to free a tribe

Of desert-people from their dragon-foe;
When all the swarthy race press round to kiss

His feet, and choose him for their king, and yield

Their poor tents, pitched among the sand-hills, for

His realm: and he points, smiling, to his scarf

Heavy with riveled gold, his burgonet

Gay set with twinkling stones — and to the East,

o Where these must be displayed!

Festus. Good: let us hear
No more about your nature, "which first shrank

"From all that marked you out apart from
men!"

Paracelsus. I touch on that; these words but analyse

The first mad impulse: 'twas as brief as fond,

For as I gazed again upon the show,
I soon distinguished here and there a shape

Palm-wreathed and radiant, forehead and full eye.

Well pleased was I their state should thus at once

Interpret my own thoughts: — "Behold
the clue

"To all," I rashly said, "and what I pine 50

"To do, these have accomplished: we are peers.

"They know and therefore rule: I, too, will know!"

You were beside me, Festus, as you say;
You saw me plunge in their pursuits whom fame

Is lavish to attest the lords of mind,
Not pausing to make sure the prize in view

Would satiate my cravings when obtained,
But since they strove I strove. Then came a slow

And strangling failure. We aspired alike, Yet not the meanest plodder, Tritheim 60 counts

A marvel, but was all-sufficient, strong,
Or staggered only at his own vast wits;

While I was restless, nothing satisfied, Distrustful, most perplexed. I would slur
over

That struggle; suffice it, that I loathed
myself

As weak compared with them, yet felt somehow

A mighty power was brooding, taking shape
Within me; and this lasted till one night

When, as I sat revolving it and more,
A still voice from without said — "Seest 70

thou not,

"Desponding child, whence spring defeat and loss?

"Even from thy strength. Consider: hast thou gazed

"Presumptuously on wisdom's countenance,

"No veil between; and can thy faltering
hands,

"Unguided by the brain the sight absorbs,
"Pursue their task as earnest blinkers do

"Whom radiance ne'er distracted? Live their life

"If thou wouldst share their fortune, choose their eyes

"Unfed by splendour. Let each task present

"Its petty good to thee. Waste not thy 80
gifts

"In profitless waiting for the gods' descent,
"But have some idol of thine own to dress

"With their array. Know, not for know-ing's sake,
 "But to become a star to men for ever;
 "Know, for the gain it gets, the praise it brings,
 "The wonder it inspires, the love it breeds:
 "Look one step onward, and secure that step!"
 And I smiled as one never smiles but once,
 Then first discovering my own aim's extent,
 Which sought to comprehend the works of
 God,
 And God himself, and all God's intercourse o With the human mind; I understood, no
 less,
 My fellows' studies, whose true worth I
 saw,
 But smiled not, well aware who stood by
 me.
 And softer came the voice — "There is a
 way:
 "'Tis hard for flesh to tread therein, imbued
 "With frailty — hopeless, if indulgence
 first
 "Have ripened inborn germs of sin to
 strength:
 "Wilt thou adventure for my sake and man's,
 "Apart from all reward?" And last it breathed —
 "Be happy, my good soldier; I am by thee, 20 "Be sure, even to the end!" — I answered
 not,
 Knowing him. As he spoke, I was en-dued
 With comprehension and a steadfast will;
 And when he ceased, my brow was sealed
 his own.
 If there took place no special change in me,
 How comes it all things wore a different hue Thenceforward? — pregnant with vast consequence,
 Teeming with grand result, loaded with fate?
 So that when, quailing at the mighty range
 Of secret truths which yearn for birth, I haste
 30 To contemplate undazzled some one truth,
 Its bearings and effects alone — at once
 What was a speck expands into a star,
 Asking a life to pass exploring thus,
 Till I near craze. I go to prove my soul!
 I see my way as birds their trackless way.
 I shall arrive! what time, what circuit first,
 I ask not: but unless God send his hail
 Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow,
 In some time, his good time, I shall arrive: 40 He guides me and the bird. In his good
 time!
Michal. Vex him no further, Festus; it is so!

Festus. Just thus you help me ever.
 This would hold
 Were it the trackless air, and not a path
 Inviting you, distinct with footprints yet
 Of many a mighty marcher gone that way.
 You may have purer views than theirs, perhaps,
 But they were famous in their day — the proofs
 Remain. At least accept the light they lend.
Paracelsus. Their light! the sum of all is briefly this:
 They laboured and grew famous, and the 54
 fruits
 Are best seen in a dark and groaning earth
 Given over to a blind and endless strife
 With evils, what of all their lore abates?
 No; I reject and spurn them utterly
 And all they teach. Shall I still sit beside Their dry wells, with a white lip and filmed
 eye,
 While in the distance heaven is blue above Mountains where sleep the unsunned tarns?
Festus. And yet
 As strong delusions have prevailed ere now.
 Men have set out as gallantly to seek 60
 Their ruin. I have heard of such: yourself
 Avow all hitherto have failed and fallen.
Michal. Nay, Festus, when but as the pilgrims faint
 Through the drear way, do you expect to see
 Their city dawn amid the clouds afar?
Paracelsus. Ay, sounds it not like some old well-known tale?
 For me, I estimate their works and them
 So rightly, that at times I almost dream
 I too have spent a life the sages' way,
 And tread once more familiar paths. Per- 70
 chance
 I perished in an arrogant self-reliance
 Ages ago; and in that act, a prayer
 For one more chance went up so earnest, so Instinct with better light let in by death,
 That life was blotted out — not so completely
 But scattered wrecks enough of it remain, Dim memories, as now, when once more seems
 The goal in sight again. All which, indeed, Is foolish, and only means — the flesh I wear,
 The earth I tread, are not more clear to me 80
 Than my belief, explained to you or no.
Festus. And who am I, to challenge and dispute
 That clear belief? I will divest all fear.
Michal. Then Aureole is God's commissary! he shall
 Be great and grand — and all for us!
Paracelsus. No, sweet!

Not great and grand. If I can serve mankind
 'Tis well; but there our intercourse must end:
 I never will be served by those I serve.
Festus. Look well to this; here is a plague-spot, here, Disguise it how you may! 'Tis true, you utter
 This scorn while by our side and loving us:
 'Tis but a spot as yet: but it will break
 Into a hideous blotch if overlooked.
 How can that course be safe which from the first Produces carelessness to human love?
 It seems you have abjured the helps which men
 Who overpass their kind, as you would do,
 Have humbly sought; I dare not thoroughly probe
 This matter, lest I learn too much. Let be
 That popular praise would little instigate
 Your efforts, nor particular approval
 Reward you; put reward aside; alone
 You shall go forth upon your arduous task,
 None shall assist you, none partake your toil,
 None share your triumph: still you must retain
 Some one to cast your glory on, to share
 Your rapture with. Were I elect like you,
 I would encircle me with love, and raise
 A rampart of my fellows; it should seem Impossible for me to fail, so watched
 By gentle friends who made my cause their own.
 They should ward off fate's envy — the great gift,
 Extravagant when claimed by me alone,
 Being so a gift to them as well as me.
 If danger daunted me or ease seduced,
 How calmly their sad eyes should gaze reproach!
Michal. O Aureole, can I sing when all alone,
 Without first calling, in my fancy, both
 To listen by my side — even I! And you?
 Do you not feel this? Say that you feel this!
Paracelsus. I feel 'tis pleasant that my aims, at length Allowed their weight, should be supposed to need
 A further strengthening in these goodly helps!
 My course allures for its own sake, its sole Intrinsic worth; and ne'er shall boast of mine
 Adventure forth for gold and apes at once.
 Your sages say, "if human, therefore weak."
 If weak, more need to give myself entire
 To my pursuit; and by its side, all else . .
 No matter! I deny myself but little

In waiving all assistance save its own.
 Would there were some real sacrifice to make!
 Your friends the sages threw their joys away,
 While I must be content with keeping mine.
Festus. But do not cut yourself from 50 human weal!
 You cannot thrive — a man that dares affect
 To spend his life in service to his kind
 For no reward of theirs, unbound to them
 By any tie; nor do so, Aureole! No —
 There are strange punishments for such.
 Give up
 (Although no visible good flow thence) some part Of the glory to another; hiding thus,
 Even from yourself, that all is for yourself.
 Say, say almost to God — "I have done all "For her, not for myself!" 60
Paracelsus. And who but lately
 Was to rejoice in my success like you?
 Whom should I love but both of you?
Festus. I know not:
 But know this, you, that 'tis no will of mine
 You should abjure the lofty claims you make;
 And this the cause — I can no longer seek To overlook the truth, that there would be
 A monstrous spectacle upon the earth,
 Beneath the pleasant sun, among the trees:
 A being knowing not what love is.
 Hear me!
 You are endowed with faculties which 70
 bear
 Annexed to them as 'twere a dispensation
 To summon meaner spirits to do their will
 And gather round them at their need; inspiring
 Such with a love themselves can never feel,
 Passionless 'mid their passionate votaries.
 I know not if you joy in this or no,
 Or ever dream that common men can live
 On objects you prize lightly, but which make Their heart's sole treasure: the affections seem Beauteous at most to you, which we must 80 taste
 Or die: and this strange quality accords,
 I know not how, with you; sits well upon
 That luminous brow, though in another it scowls
 An eating brand, a shame. I dare not judge you.
 The rules of right and wrong thus set aside,
 There's no alternative — I own you one
 Of higher order, under other laws
 Than bind us; therefore, curb not one bold glance!

'Tis best aspire. Once mingled with us
all . . .

¶ Michal. Stay with us, Aureole! cast
those hopes away,

And stay with us! An angel warns me, too, Man should be humble; you are very proud:

And God, dethroned, has doleful plagues for such!

— Warns me to have in dread no quick repulse,

No slow defeat, but a complete success:

You will find all you seek, and perish so!

Paracelsus [after a pause]. Are these the barren firstfruits of my quest?

16 Is love like this the natural lot of all?

How many years of pain might one such
hour

¶ O'erbalance? Dearest Michal, dearest
Festus,

¶ What shall I say, if not that I desire

To justify your love; and will, dear friends,
In swerving nothing from my first resolves.

See, the great moon! and ere the mottled owls

Were wide awake, I was to go. It seems
You acquiesce at last in all save this —

If I am like to compass what I seek

20 By the untried career I choose; and then,
If that career, making but small account

Of much of life's delight, will yet retain Sufficient to sustain my soul: for thus

I understand these fond fears just expressed.
And first; the lore you praise and I neglect,

The labours and the precepts of old time,
I have not lightly disesteemed. But,

friends,

Truth is within ourselves; it takes no rise
From outward things, whate'er you may believe.

30 There is an inmost centre in us all,
Where truth abides in fulness; and around

Wall upon wall, the gross flesh hems it
in,

This perfect, clear perception — which is
truth.

A baffling and perverting carnal mesh Binds it, and makes all error: and to

KNOW

Rather consists in opening out a way Whence the imprisoned splendour may escape,

Than in effecting entry for a light
Supposed to be without. Watch narrowly

30 The demonstration of a truth, its birth,
And you trace back the effluence to its

spring

And source within us; where broods radiance vast,

To be elicited ray by ray, as chance Shall favour: chance — for hitherto your sage,

Even as he knows not how those beams are

born.

As little knows he what unlocks their fount:

And men have oft grown old among their books

To die case-hardened in their ignorance, Whose careless youth had promised what long years

Of unremitted labour ne'er performed: 54
While, contrary, it has chanced some idle

day,
To autumn loiterers just as fancy-free

As the midges in the sun, gives birth at last
To truth — produced mysteriously as cape

Of cloud grown out of the invisible air.
Hence, may not truth be lodged alike in all,

The lowest as the highest? some slight film

The interposing bar which binds a soul
And makes the idiot, just as makes the

sage

Some film removed, the happy outlet 60 whence

Truth issues proudly? See this soul of ours!

How it strives weakly in the child, is loosed
In manhood, clogged by sickness, back compelled.

By age and waste, set free at last by death:
Why is it, flesh enthralled it or enthrones?

What is this flesh we have to penetrate?
Oh, not alone when life flows still, do truth

And power emerge, but also when strange
chance

Ruffles its current; in unused conjuncture,
When sickness breaks the body — hunger, 70

watching,
Excess or languor — oftenest death's approach,

Peril, deep joy or woe. One man shall crawl

Through life surrounded with all stirring
things,

Unmoved; and he goes mad: and from the wreck

Of what he was, by his wild talk alone,
You first collect how great a spirit he hid.

Therefore, set free the soul alike in all,
Discovering the true laws by which the flesh

Accloys the spirit! We may not be doomed

To cope with seraphs, but at least the rest 84
Shall cope with us. Make no more giants,

God,
But elevate the race at once! We ask

To put forth just our strength, our human
strength,

All starting fairly, all equipped alike,
Gifted alike all eagle-eyed, true-hearted —

See if we cannot beat thine angels yet!
Such is my task. I go to gather this

The sacred knowledge, here and there dispersea

About the world, long lost or never found.

And why should I be sad or lorn of hope?
Why ever make man's good distinct from God's,
Or, finding they are one, why dare mistrust?
Who shall succeed if not one pledged like
me?
Mine is no mad attempt to build a world
Apart from his, like those who set themselves
To find the nature of the spirit they bore,
And, taught betimes that all their gorgeous
dreams
Were only born to vanish in this life,
Refused to fit them to its narrow sphere,
But chose to figure forth another world
And other frames meet for their vast desires, —
And all a dream! Thus was life scorned;
but life
Shall yet be crowned: twine amaranth!
I am priest!
And all for yielding with a lively spirit
A poor existence, parting with a youth
Like those who squander every energy
Convertible to good, on painted toys, Breath-bubbles, gilded dust! And though
I spurn
All adventitious aims, from empty praise
To love's award, yet whoso deems such helps
Important, and concerns himself for me,
May know even these will follow with the
rest —
As in the steady rolling Mayne, asleep
Yonder, is mixed its mass of schistous ore.
My own affections laid to rest awhile,
Will waken purified, subdued alone
By all I have achieved. Till then — till
then . . .
Ah, the time-wiling loitering of a page
Through bower and over lawn, till eve shall bring
The stately lady's presence whom he loves —
The broken sleep of the fisher whose rough coat
Enwraps the queenly pearl — these are faint types!
See, see, they look on me: I triumph now!
But one thing, Festus, Michal! I have told
All I shall e'er disclose to mortal: say —
Do you believe I shall accomplish this?
Festus. I do believe!
Michal. I ever did believe!
Paracelsus. Those words shall never fade from out my brain!
This earnest of the end shall never fade!
Are there not, Festus, are there not, dear
Michal,
Two points in the adventure of the diver,
One — when, a beggar, he prepares to plunge,

One — when, a prince, he rises with his pearl?
Festus, I plunge!
Festus. We wait you when you rise!

II. — PARACELSUS ATTAINS.

SCENE. — Constantinople; the house of a Greek Conjuror. 1521.

PARACELSUS.

Over the waters in the vaporous West
The sun goes down as in a sphere of gold
Behind the arm of the city, which between,
With all that length of domes and minarets, Athwart the splendour, black and crooked 50 runs
Like a Turk verse along a scimitar.
There lie, sullen memorial, and no more Possess my aching sight! 'Tis done at
last.
Strange — and the juggles of a sallow cheat
Have won me to this act! 'Tis as yon
cloud
Should voyage unwrecked o'er many a mountain-top
And break upon a molehill. I have dared Come to a pause with knowledge; scan for once
The heights already reached, without regard
To the extent above; fairly compute 60
All I have clearly gained; for once exclud-
ing
A brilliant future to supply and perfect
All half-gains and conjectures and crude hopes:
And all because a fortune-teller wills
His credulous seekers should inscribe thus
much
Their previous life's attainment, in his roll,
Before his promised secret, as he vaunts, Make up the sum: and here amid the scrawled
Uncouth recordings of the dupes of this Old arch-genethliac,¹ lie my life's results! 70
A few blurred characters suffice to note
A stranger wandered long through many lands
And reaped the fruit he coveted in a few Discoveries, as appended here and there,
The fragmentary produce of much toil,
In a dim heap, fact and surmise together Confusedly massed as when acquired; he was
Intent on gain to come too much to stay
And scrutinise the little gained: the whole

¹ Birthday-book maker, γενεθλιακόν.

- Slipt in the blank space 'twixt an idiot's gibber
 ♣ And a mad lover's ditty — there it lies.
 ♣ And yet those blottings chronicle a life —
 A whole life, and my life! Nothing to do,
 No problem for the fancy, but a life
 Spent and decided, wasted past retrieve Or worthy beyond peer. Stay, what does
 this Remembrancer set down concerning
 "life"?
 ♣ "Time fleets, youth fades, life is an empty
 dream," ♣ "It is the echo of time; and he whose heart
 "Beat first beneath a human heart, whose
 speech
 "Was copied from a human tongue, can never
 "Recall when he was living yet knew not
 this.
 "Nevertheless long seasons pass o'er him
 "Till some one hour's experience shows what nothing,
 "It seemed, could clearer show; and ever after,
 "An altered brow and eye and gait and
 speech
 ♣ "Attest that now he knows the adage true,
 ♣ "Time fleets, youth fades, life is an empty
 dream."
 20 Ay, my brave chronicler, and this same
 hour
 As well as any: now, let my time be!
 Now! I can go no farther; well or ill,
 'Tis done. I must desist and take my
 chance.
 I cannot keep on the stretch: 'tis no back-shrinking —
 For let but some assurance beam, some close
 To my toil grow visible, and I proceed
 At any price, though closing it, I die.
 Else, here I pause. The old Greek's prophecy
 Is like to turn out true: "I shall not quit
 30 "His chamber till I know what I desire!"
 Was it the light wind sang it o'er the sea?
 An end, a rest! strange how the notion,
 once
 Encountered, gathers strength by moments!
 Rest!
 Where has it kept so long? this throbbing
 brow
 To cease, this beating heart to cease, all cruel
 And gnawing thoughts to cease! To dare let down
 My strung, so high-strung brain, to dare unnerve
 My harassed o'ertasked frame, to know my place,
 My portion, my reward, even my failure, Assigned, made sure for ever! To lose 41
 myself
 Among the common creatures of the world,
 To draw some gain from having been a
 man,
 Neither to hope nor fear, to live at length!
 Even in failure, rest! But rest in truth And power and recompense . . . I hoped that once!
 What, sunk insensibly so deep? Has all Been undergone for this? This the request
 My labour qualified me to present
 With no fear of refusal? Had I gone Slightly through my task, and so judged 50 fit
 To moderate my hopes; nay, were it now
 My sole concern to exculpate myself, End things or mend them, — why, I could not choose
 A humbler mood to wait for the event!
 No, no, there needs not this; no, after all,
 At worst I have performed my share of the task:
 ♣ The rest is God's concern; mine, merely
 this,
 ♣ To know that I have obstinately held ♣ By my own work. The mortal whose brave foot ♣ Has trod, unscathed, the temple-court 50 60
 far
 That he descries at length the shrine of shrines,
 Must let no sneering of the demons' eyes,
 Whom he could pass unquailing, fasten
 now
 Upon him, fairly past their power; no,
 no —
 ♣ He must not stagger, faint, fall down at
 last,
 Having a charm to baffle them; behold,
 He bares his front: a mortal ventures thus Screne amid the echoes, beams and glooms!
 If he be priest henceforth, if he wake up
 The god of the place to ban and blast him 70
 there,
 Both well! What's failure or success to
 me?
 I have subdued my life to the one purpose
 Whereto I ordained it; there alone I spy,
 No doubt, that way I may be satisfied.
 ♣ Yes, well have I subdued my life! beyond
 The obligation of my strictest vow,
 The contemplation of my wildest bond,
 Which gave my nature freely up, in truth,
 But in its actual state, consenting fully
 All passionate impulses its soil was formed 80
 To rear, should wither; but foreseeing not

- The tract, doomed to perpetual barrenness,
Would seem one day, remembered as it
was,
Beside the parched sand-waste which now
it is,
Already strewn with faint blooms, viewless
then.
- I ne'er engaged to root up loves so frail
I felt them not; yet now, 'tis very plain Some soft spots had their birth in me at
first,
- If not love, say, like love: there was a time
When yet this wolfish hunger after knowledge
- Set not remorselessly love's claims aside.
This heart was human once, or why recall Einsiedeln, now, and Würzburg which the Mayne
Forsakes her course to fold as with an arm?
- And Festus — my poor Festus, with his
praise
And counsel and grave fears — where is he now
With the sweet maiden, long ago his bride?
I surely loved them — that last night, at least,
When we . . . gone! gone! the better.
I am saved
The sad review of an ambitious youth
- Choked by vile lusts, unnoticed in their birth,
But let grow up and wind around a will Till action was destroyed. No, I have
gone
Purging my path successively of aught
Wearing the distant likeness of such lusts.
I have made life consist of one idea:
Ere that was master, up till that was born,
I bear a memory of a pleasant life
Whose small events I treasure; till one morn
- I ran o'er the seven little grassy fields,
Startling the flocks of nameless birds, to tell Poor Festus, leaping all the while for joy,
To leave all trouble for my future plans,
Since I had just determined to become
The greatest and most glorious man on
earth.
- And since that morn all life has been forgotten:
All is one day, one only step between
The outset and the end: one tyrant all-
Absorbing aim fills up the interspace,
One vast unbroken chain of thought, kept
up
- Through a career apparently adverse
To its existence: life, death, light and shadow,
The shows of the world, were bare receptacles
Or indices of truth to be wrung thence,
Not ministers of sorrow or delight:
A wondrous natural robe in which she went.
- For some one truth would dimly beacon me
From mountains rough with pines, and flit and wink
O'er dazzling wastes of frozen snow, and tremble
Into assured light in some branching mine Where ripens, swathed in fire, the liquid gold —
And all the beauty, all the wonder fell
On either side the truth, as its mere robe;
I see the robe now — then I saw the form.
So far, then, I have voyaged with success,
So much is good, then, in this working sea
Which parts me from that happy strip of land:
But o'er that happy strip a sun shone, too!
And fainter gleams it as the waves grow rough,
And still more faint as the sea widens; last
I sicken on a dead gulf streaked with light
From its own putrefying depths alone.
Then, God was pledged to take me by the
hand;
Now, any miserable juggle can bid
My pride depart. All is alike at length:
God may take pleasure in confounding
pride
By hiding secrets with the scorned and base —
I am here, in short: so little have I paused Throughout! I never glanced behind to
know
If I had kept my primal light from wane,
And thus insensibly am — what I am!
- Oh, bitter; very bitter!
And more bitter,
To fear a deeper curse, an inner ruin, Plague beneath plague, the last turning the
first
To light beside its darkness. Let me weep My youth and its brave hopes, all dead and
gone,
In tears which burn! Would I were sure to win
Some startling secret in their stead, a tincture
Of force to flush old age with youth, or breed
Gold, or imprison moonbeams till they
change
To opal shafts! — only that, hurling it
Indignant back, I might convince myself
My aims remained supreme and pure as ever!
Even now, why not desire, for mankind's
sake,
That if I fail, some fault may be the cause,
That, though I sink, another may succeed?
O God, the despicable heart of us!
Shut out this hideous mockery from my
heart!
'Twas politic in you, Aureole, to reject
Single rewards, and ask them in the lump;

At all events, once launched, to hold straight on:

For now 'tis all or nothing. Mighty profit Your gains will bring if they stop short of such

Full consummation! As a man, you had A certain share of strength; and that is
gone

Already in the getting these you boast.
Do not they seem to laugh, as who should
say —

"Great master, we are here indeed, dragged forth

"To light; this hast thou done: be glad!
Now, seek

10 "The strength to use which thou hast spent in getting!"

And yet 'tis much, surely 'tis very much,
Thus to have emptied youth of all its gifts,
To feed a fire meant to hold out till morn
Arrived with inexhaustible light; and lo,
I have heaped up my last, and day dawns
not!

And I am left with grey hair, faded hands,
And furrowed brow. Ha, have I, after all,
Mistaken the wild nursing of my breast?
Knowledge it seemed, and power, and recompense!

20 Was she who glided through my room of nights,

Who laid my head on her soft knees and smoothed

The damp locks, — whose sly soothings just began

When my sick spirit craved repose awhile —
God! was I fighting sleep off for death's
sake?

God! Thou art mind! Unto the master-
mind

Mind should be precious. Spare my mind
alone!

All else I will endure; if, as I stand Here, with my gains, thy thunder smite me
down,

I bow me; 'tis thy will, thy righteous will;

30 I o'erpass life's restrictions, and I die;
And if no trace of my career remain

Save a thin corpse at pleasure of the wind
In these bright chambers level with the air,
See thou to it! But if my spirit fail,

My once proud spirit forsake me at the
last,

Hast thou done well by me? So do not thou!

* Crush not my mind, dear God, though I be crushed!

Hold me before the frequency of thy seraphs

And say — "I crushed him, lest he should disturb

40 "My law. Men must not know their strength: behold

"Weak and alone, how he had raised himself!"

But if delusions trouble me, and thou,
Not seldom felt with rapture in thy help
Throughout my toils and wanderings, dost intend

To work man's welfare through my weak
endeavour,

To crown my mortal forehead with a beam
From thine own blinding crown, to smile, and guide

This puny hand and let the work so wrought

Be styled my work, — hear me! I covet
not

An influx of new power, an angel's soul: 50
It were no marvel then — but I have reached

Thus far, a man; let me conclude, a man!

Give but one hour of my first energy,
Of that invincible faith, but only one!

That I may cover with an eagle-glance
The truths I have, and spy some certain
way

To mould them, and completing them, possess!

Yet God is good: I started sure of that,
And why dispute it now? I'll not believe
But some undoubted warning long ere this 60
Had reached me: a fire-labrum¹ was not deemed

Too much for the old founder of these walls.

Then, if my life has not been natural,
It has been monstrous: yet, till late, my
course

So ardently engrossed me, that delight,
A pausing and reflecting joy, 'tis plain,
Could find no place in it. True, I am

worn;

But who clothes summer, who is life itself?
God, that created all things, can renew!

And then, though after-life to please me 70
now

Must have no likeness to the past, what hinders

Reward from springing out of toil, as changed

As bursts the flower from earth and root and stalk?

What use were punishment, unless some sin
Be first detected? let me know that first!

No man could ever offend as I have
done . . .

[A voice from within.]

I hear a voice, perchance I heard

Long ago, but all too low,

So that scarce a care it stirred

¹ The sacred standard used by Constantine after his conversion.

If the voice were real or no:
 I heard it in my youth when first
 The waters of my life outburst:
 But, now their stream ebbs faint, I hear
 That voice, still low, but fatal-clear —
 As if all poets, God ever meant
 Should save the world, and therefore lent
 Great gifts to, but who, proud, refused
 To do his work, or lightly used Those gifts, or failed through weak
 endeavour,
 So, mourn cast off by him for ever, —
 As if these leaned in airy ring
 To take me; this the song they sing.

"Lost, lost! yet come,
 With our wan troop make thy home.
 Come, come! for we Will not breathe, so much as breathe
 Reproach to thee,
 Knowing what thou sink'st beneath.

sank in those old years,
 who bid thee, come! thou last
 Who, living yet, hast life o'erpast.
 And altogether we, thy peers,
 Will pardon crave for thee, the last
 Whose trial is done, whose lot is cast
 With those who watch but work no more,
 Who gaze on life but live no more.
 Yet we trusted thou shouldst speak
 The message which our lips, too weak,
 Refused to utter, — shouldst redeem
 Our fault: such trust, and all a dream!
 Yet we chose thee a birthplace
 Where the richness ran to flowers:
 Couldst not sing one song for grace?
 Not make one blossom man's and ours?
 Must one more recreant to his race
 Die with unexerted powers,
 And join us, leaving as he found
 The world, he was to loosen, bound?
 Anguish! ever and for ever;
 Still beginning, ending never.
 Yet, lost and last one, come!
 How couldst understand, alas,
 What our pale ghosts strove to say,
 As their shades did glance and pass
 Before thee night and day?

Thou wast blind as we were dumb:
 Once more, therefore, come, O come!
 How should we clothe, how arm the spirit Shall next thy post of life inherit —
 How guard him from thy speedy ruin?
 Tell us of thy sad undoing
 Here, where we sit, ever pursuing
 Our weary task, ever renewing
 Sharp sorrow, far from God who gave Our powers, and man they could not save!"

APRILE enters.

Ha, ha! our king that wouldst be, here at
 last?

Art thou the poet who shall save the
 world?

Thy hand to mine! Stay, fix thine eyes on
 mine!

Thou wouldst be king? Still fix thine eyes on mine!

Paracelsus. Ha, ha! why crouchest not? Am I not king?

So torture is not wholly unavailing!

Have my fierce spasms compelled thee from thy lair?

Art thou the sage I only seemed to be,
 Myself of after-time, my very self
 With sight a little clearer, strength more
 firm,

Who robes him in my robe and grasps my crown

For just a fault, a weakness, a neglect?

I scarcely trusted God with the surmise

That such might come, and thou didst hear the while!

Aprile. Thine eyes are lustreless to mine; my hair

Is soft, nay silken soft: to talk with thee
 Flushes my cheek, and thou art ashy-pale.

Truly, thou hast laboured, hast withstood
 her lips,

The siren's! Yes, 'tis like thou hast attained!

Tell me, dear master, wherefore now thou comest?

I thought thy solemn songs would have their meed

In after-time; that I should hear the earth
 Exult in thee and echo with thy praise,

While I was laid forgotten in my grave. 84

Paracelsus. Ah fiend, I know thee, I am not thy dupe!

Thou art ordained to follow in my track,
 Reaping my sowing, as I scorned to reap

The harvest sown by sages passed away.
 Thou art the sober searcher, cautious

striver,

As if, except through me, thou hast searched or striven!

Ay, tell the world! Degrade me after all,
 To an aspirant after fame, not truth —

To all but envy of thy fate, be sure!

Aprile. Nay, sing them to me; I shall envy not:

Thou shalt be king! Sing thou, and I will sit

Beside, and call deep silence for thy songs,
 And worship thee, as I had ne'er been

meant
 To fill thy throne: but none shall ever
 know!

Sing to me; for already thy wild eyes
 Unlock my heart-strings, as some crystal-shaft Reveals by some chance blaze its parent

 fount

After long time: so thou reveal'st my soul.
 All will flash forth at last, with thee to hear!

Paracelsus. (His secret! I shall get his secret — fool!)

I am he that aspired to KNOW: and thou?

Aprile. I would LOVE infinitely, and be loved!

Paracelsus. Poor slave! I am thy king indeed.

Aprile. Thou deem'st

That — born a spirit, dowered even as thou,

Born for thy fate — because I could not curb

My yearnings to possess at once the full

Enjoyment, but neglected all the means

Of realising even the frailest joy,

Gathering no fragments to appease my want,

Yet nursing up that want till thus I die —

Thou deem'st I cannot trace thy safe sure march

O'er perils that o'erwhelm me, triumphing,

Neglecting nought below for aught above,

Despising nothing and ensuring all —

Nor that I could (my time to come again)

Lead thus my spirit securely as thine own.

Listen, and thou shalt see I know thee well

I would love infinitely . . . Ah, lost! lost!

Oh ye who armed me at such cost,

How shall I look on all of ye

With your gifts even yet on me?

Paracelsus. (Ah, 'tis some moonstruck creature after all!

Such fond fools as are like to haunt this den:

They spread contagion, doubtless: yet he seemed

To echo one foreboding of my heart

So truly, that . . . no matter! How he stands

With eve's last sunbeam staying on his hair

Which turns to it as if they were akin:

And those clear smiling eyes of saddest blue

Nearly set free, so far they rise above

The painful fruitless striving of the brow

And enforced knowledge of the lips, firm-set

In slow despondency's eternal sigh!

Has he, too, missed life's end, and learned the cause?)

I charge thee, by thy fealty, be calm!

Tell me what thou wouldst be, and what I am.

Aprile. I would love infinitely, and be loved.

First: I would carve in stone, or cast in brass,

The forms of earth. No ancient hunter lifted

Up to the gods by his renown, no nymph

Supposed the sweet soul of a woodland tree

Or sapphirine spirit of a twilight star,

Should be too hard for me; no shepherd-king

Regal for his white locks; no youth who stands

Silent and very calm amid the throng,

His right hand ever hid beneath his robe

Until the tyrant pass; no lawgiver,

No swan-soft woman rubbed with lucid oils

Given by a god for love of her — too hard! 50

Every passion sprung from man, conceived by man,

Would I express and clothe it in its right form,

Or blend with others struggling in one form,

Or show repressed by an ungainly form.

Oh, if you marvelled at some mighty spirit

With a fit frame to execute its will —

Even unconsciously to work its will —

You should be moved no less beside some strong

Rare spirit, fettered to a stubborn body,

Endeavouring to subdue it and inform it 60

With its own splendour! — All this I would do:

And I would say, this done, "His sprites created,

"God grants to each a sphere to be its world,

"Appointed with the various objects needed

"To satisfy its own peculiar want;

"So, I create a world for these my shapes

"Fit to sustain their beauty and their strength!"

And, at the word, I would contrive and paint

Woods, valleys, rocks and plains, dells, sands and wastes,

Lakes which, when morn breaks on their 70 quivering bed,

Blaze like a wyvern¹ flying round the sun,

And ocean isles so small, the dog-fish tracking

A dead whale, who should find them, would swim thrice

Around them, and fare onward — all to hold

The offspring of my brain. Nor these alone:

Bronze labyrinth, palace, pyramid and crypt,

Baths, galleries, courts, temples and terraces,

Marts, theatres and wharfs — all filled with men,

Men everywhere! And this performed in turn,

When those who looked on, pined to hear 80 the hopes

And fears and hates and loves which moved the crowd,

I would throw down the pencil as the chisel.

And I would speak; no thought which ever stirred

A human breast should be untold; all passions,
All soft emotions, from the turbulent stir
Within a heart fed with desires like mine,
To the last comfort shutting the tired lids
Of him who sleeps the sultry noon away
Beneath the tent-tree by the wayside well:
And this in language as the need should be,
Now poured at once forth in a burning flow,
Now piled up in a grand array of words.
10 This done, to perfect and consummate all,
Even as a luminous haze links star to star,
I would supply all chasms with music,
breathing
Mysterious motions of the soul, no way
To be defined save in strange melodies.
Last, having thus revealed all I could love,
Having received all love bestowed on it,
I would die: preserving so throughout my
course
God full on me, as I was full on men:
He would approve my prayer, "I have gone
through 20 "The loveliness of life; create for me
"If not for men, or take me to thyself,
"Eternal, infinite love!"
If thou hast ne'er
Conceived this mighty aim, this full desire Thou hast not passed my trial, and thou art
No king of mine.
Paracelsus. Ah me!
Aprile. But thou art here!
Thou didst not gaze like me upon that end Till thine own powers for compassing the bliss
Were blind with glory; now grow mad to grasp
At once the prize long patient toil should claim,
30 Nor spurn all granted short of that. And I Would do as thou, a second time: nay, listen!
Knowing ourselves, our world, our task so great,
Our time so brief, 'tis clear if we refuse
The means so limited, the tools so rude
To execute our purpose, life will fleet,
And we shall fade, and leave our task undone.
We will be wise in time: what though our
work
Be fashioned in despite of their ill-service,
Be crippled every way? 'Twere little
praise
40 Did full resources wait on our goodwill
At every turn. Let all be as it is.
Some say the earth is even so contrived
That tree and flower, a vesture gay, conceal A bare and skeleton framework. Had we means Answering to our mind! But now I seem Wrecked on a savage isle: how rear thereon

My palace? Branching palms the props shall be,
Fruit glossy mingling; gems are for the East;
Who heeds them? I can pass them.
Serpents' scales,
And painted birds' down, furs and fishes, 50 skins
Must help me; and a little here and there
Is all I can aspire to: still my art
Shall show its birth was in a gentler clime.
"Had I green jars of malachite, this way
"I'd range them: where those sea-shells
glisten above,
"Cressets¹ should hang, by right: this way we set
"The purple carpets, as these mats are laid,
"Woven of fern and rush and blossoming flag."
Or if, by fortune, some completer grace
Be spared to me, some fragment, some 60 slight sample
Of the prouder workmanship my own home boasts,
Some trifle little heeded there, but here
The place's one perfection — with what
joy
Would I enshrine the relic, cheerfully
Foregoing all the marvels out of reach!
Could I retain one strain of all the psalm
Of the angels, one word of the fiat of
God,
To let my followers know what such things
are!
I would adventure nobly for their sakes:
When nights were still, and still the moan- 70
ing sea,
And far away I could descry the land
Whence I departed, whither I return,
I would dispart the waves, and stand once
more
At home, and load my bark, and hasten
back,
And fling my gains to them, worthless or true.
"Friends," I would say, "I went far, far for them,
"Past the high rocks the haunt of doves,
the mounds
"Of red earth from whose sides strange trees grow out,
"Past tracks of milk-white minute blinding sand,
"Till, by a mighty moon, I tremblingly 80
"Gathered these magic herbs, berry and bud,
"In haste, not pausing to reject the weeds,
"But happy plucking them at any price.
"To me, who have seen them bloom in their own soil,
"They are scarce lovely: plait and wear them, you!

¹ Lanterns.

- "And guess, from what they are, the springs that fed them,
 "The stars that sparkled o'er them, night
 by night,
 "The snakes that travelled far to sip their dew!"
 Thus for my higher loves; and thus even weakness
 Would win me honour. But not these
 alone
 Should claim my care; for common life, its wants
 And ways, would I set forth in beauteous
 hues:
 The loveliest hind should not possess a hope,
 A fear, but I'd be by him, saying better Than he his own heart's language. I would live
 For ever in the thoughts I thus explored,
 As a discoverer's memory is attached
 To all he finds; they should be mine
 henceforth,
 Imbued with me, though free to all before:
 For clay, once cast into my soul's rich mine,
 Should come up crusted o'er with gems.
 Nor this Would need a meaner spirit, than the first;
 Nay, 'twould be but the selfsame spirit, clothed
 In humbler guise, but still the selfsame
 spirit:
 20 As one spring wind unbinds the mountain snow
 And comforts violets in their hermitage.
 But, master, poet, who hast done all this,
 How didst thou 'scape the ruin whelming
 me?
 Didst thou, when nerving thee to this attempt,
 Ne'er range thy mind's extent, as some wide
 hall,
 Dazzled by shapes that filled its length with light,
 Shapes clustered there to rule thee, not obey,
 That will not wait thy summons, will not rise Singly, nor when thy practised eye and
 hand 30 Can well transfer their loveliness, but crowd
 By thee for ever, bright to thy despair?
 Didst thou ne'er gaze on each by turns,
 and ne'er
 Resolve to single out one, though the rest
 Should vanish, and to give that one, entire
 In beauty, to the world; forgetting, so,
 Its peers, whose number baffles mortal
 power?
 And, this determined, wast thou ne'er seduced
 By memories and regrets and passionate
 love,
 To glance once more farewell? and did their eyes
 Fasten thee, brighter and more bright, 40 until Thou couldst but stagger back unto their feet,
 And laugh that man's applause or welfare
 ever Could tempt thee to forsake them? Or when years
 Had passed and still their love possessed thee wholly,
 When from without some murmur startled
 thee
 Of darkling mortals famished for one ray
 Of thy so-hoarded luxury of light, Didst thou ne'er strive even yet to break
 those spells
 And prove thou couldst recover and fulfil Thy early mission, long ago renounced, 50
 And to that end, select some shape once
 more?
 And did not mist-like influences, thick films,
 Faint memories of the rest that charmed so
 long Thine eyes, float fast, confuse thee, bear thee off,
 As whirling snow-drifts blind a man who treads
 A mountain ridge, with guiding spear, through storm?
 Say, though I fell, I had excuse to fall;
 Say, I was tempted sorely: say but this,
 Dear lord, Aprile's lord!
Paracelsus. Clasp me not thus, Aprile! That the truth should reach me 60
 thus!
 We are weak dust. Nay, clasp not, or I faint!
Aprile. My king! and envious thoughts could outrage thee?
 Lo, I forget my ruin, and rejoice In thy success, as thou! Let our God's
 praise
 Go bravely through the world at last!
 What care
 Through me or thee? I feel thy breath:
 Why, tears?
 Tears in the darkness, and from thee to
 me?
Paracelsus. Love me henceforth, Aprile while I learn
 To love; and, merciful God, forgive us
 both!
 We wake at length from weary dreams; 70
 but both
 Have slept in fairy-land: though dark and drear
 Appears the world before us, we no less Wake with our wrists and ankles jewelled
 still.
 I too have sought to know as thou to
 LOVE —

Excluding love as thou refusedst knowledge.
 Still thou hast beauty and I, power. We wake:
 What penance canst devise for both of us?
Aprile. I hear thee faintly. The thick darkness! Even Thine eyes are hid. 'Tis as I knew: I speak,
 And now I die. But I have seen thy face!
 O poet, think of me, and sing of me!
 But to have seen thee and to die so soon!
Paracelsus. Die not, Aprile! We must never part.
 Are we not halves of one dissevered world,
 Whom this strange chance unites once more? Part? never!
 Till thou the lover, know; and I, the knower,
 Love — until both are saved. Aprile, hear!
 We will accept our gains, and use them — now!
 God, he will die upon my breast! Aprile!
Aprile. To speak but once, and die! yet by his side.
 Hush! hush!
 Ha! go you ever girt about
 With phantoms, powers? I have created such,
 But these seem real as I.
Paracelsus. Whom can you see
 Through the accursed darkness?
Aprile. Stay; I know,
 I know them: who should know them well as I?
 White brows, lit up with glory; poets all!
Paracelsus. Let him but live, and I have my reward!
Aprile. Yes; I see now. God is the perfect poet,
 Who in his person acts his own creations.
 Had you but told me this at first! Hush! hush!
Paracelsus. Live! for my sake, because of my great sin,
 To help my brain, oppressed by these wild words
 And their deep import. Live! 'tis not too late.
 I have a quiet home for us, and friends.
 Michal shall smile on you. Hear you? Lean thus,
 And breathe my breath. I shall not lose one word
 Of all your speech, one little word, Aprile!
Aprile. No, no. Crown me? I am not one of you!
 'Tis he, the king, you seek. I am not one.
Paracelsus. Thy spirit, at least, Aprile! Let me love!
 I have attained, and now I may depart.

III. — PARACELSUS.

SCENE. — Basil; a chamber in the house of
PARACELSUS. 1526.

PARACELSUS, FESTUS.

Paracelsus. Heap logs and let the blaze laugh out!
Festus. True, true!
 'Tis very fit all, time and chance and change
 Have wrought since last we sat thus, face to face
 And soul to soul — all cares, far-looking fears, Vague apprehensions, all vain fancies bred
 By your long absence, should be cast away
 Forgotten in this glad un hoped renewal
 Of our affections.
Paracelsus. Oh, omit not aught
 Which witnesses your own and Michal's own Affection: spare not that! Only forget
 The honours and the glories and what not,
 It pleases you to tell profusely out.
Festus. Nay, even your honours, in a 50 sense, I waive:
 The wondrous Paracelsus, life's dispenser,
 Fate's commissary, idol of the schools
 And courts, shall be no more than Aureole still,
 Still Aureole and my friend as when we parted
 Some twenty years ago, and I restrained
 As best I could the promptings of my spirit
 Which secretly advanced you, from the first,
 To the pre-eminent rank which, since, your own Adventurous ardour, nobly triumphing,
 Has won for you.
Paracelsus. Yes, yes. And Michal's face
 Still wears that quiet and peculiar light
 Like the dim circlet floating round a pearl?
Festus. Just so.
Paracelsus. And yet her calm sweet countenance,
 Though saintly, was not sad; for she would sing Alone. Does she still sing alone, bird-like,
 Not dreaming you are near? Her carols dropt
 In flakes through that old leafy bower built under
 The sunny wall at Würzburg, from her lattice
 Among the trees above, while I, unseen, Sat conning some rare scroll from Tri- 70
 them's shelves
 Much wondering notes so simple could divert

My mind from study. Those were happy days.

Respect all such as sing when all alone!

Festus. Scarcely alone: her children, you may guess,
Are wild beside her.

Paracelsus. Ah, those children quite Unsettle the pure picture in my mind:

A girl, she was so perfect, so distinct:
No change, no change! Not but this added grace

May blend and harmonize with its com-
peers,

And Michal may become her motherhood;
But 'tis a change, and I detest all change,
And most a change in aught I loved long
since.

So, Michal — you have said she thinks of
me?

Festus. O very proud will Michal be of
you!

Imagine how we sat, long winter-nights, Scheming and wondering, shaping your presumed

Adventure, or devising its reward;
Shutting out fear with all the strength of hope.

For it was strange how, even when most secure

In our domestic peace, a certain dim
And flitting shade could sadden all; it seemed

A restlessness of heart, a silent yearning,
A sense of something wanting, incomplete —

Not to be put in words, perhaps avoided
By mute consent — but, said or unsaid, felt

To point to one so loved and so long lost.
And then the hopes rose and shut out the fears —

How you would laugh should I recount them now!

I still predicted your return at last

With gifts beyond the greatest of them all,

All Trithem's wondrous troop; did one of which

Attain renown by any chance, I smiled,
As well aware of who would prove his peer.

Michal was sure some woman, long ere
this,

As beautiful as you were sage, had loved . . .

Paracelsus. Far-seeing, truly, to discern so much

In the fantastic projects and day-dreams
Of a raw restless boy!

Festus. Oh, no: the sunrise
Well warranted our faith in this full noon!

Can I forget the anxious voice which said

"Festus, have thoughts like these ere shaped themselves

"In other brains than mine? have their possessors

"Existed in like circumstance? were they weak

"As I, or ever constant from the first,
Despising youth's allurements and rejecting

"As spider-films the shackles I endure?
"Is there hope for me?" — and I answered gravely

As an acknowledged elder, calmer, wiser,
More gifted mortal. O you must remember,

For all your glorious . . .

Paracelsus. Glorious? ay, this hair,
These hands — nay, touch them, they are 50 mine! Recall

With all the said recallings, times when
thus

To lay them by your own ne'er turned you pale

As now. Most glorious, are they not?

Festus. Why — why — Something must be subtracted from success
So wide, no doubt. He would be scrupulous, truly,

Who should object such drawbacks.
Still, still, Aureole,

You are changed, very changed! 'Twere losing nothing

To look well to it: you must not be stolen
From the enjoyment of your well-won meed.

Paracelsus. My friend! you seek my 60 pleasure, past a doubt:

You will best gain your point, by talking,
not

Of me, but of yourself.

Festus. Have I not said
All touching Michal and my children?
Sure

You know, by this, full well how Aennchen looks

Gravely, while one disparts her thick
brown hair;

And Aureole's glee when some stray gannet builds

Amid the birch-trees by the lake. Small
hope

Have I that he will honour (the wild imp)
His namesake. Sigh not! 'tis too much to ask

That all we love should reach the same 70
proud fate.

But you are very kind to humour me
By showing interest in my quiet life;
You, who of old could never tame yourself
To tranquil pleasures, must at heart despise . . .

Paracelsus. Festus, strange secrets are let out by death

Who blabs so oft the follies of this world:
And I am death's familiar, as you know.
I helped a man to die, some few weeks
since,

Warped even from his go-cart to one end —

The living on princes' smiles, reflected from A mighty herd of favourites. No mean trick
He left untried, and truly well-nigh
wormed
All traces of God's finger out of him:
Then died, grown old. And just an hour
before,
Having lain long with blank and soulless
eyes,
He sat up suddenly, and with natural voice
Said that in spite of thick air and closed doors
God told him it was June; and he knew
well,
Without such telling, harebells grew in June;
And all that kings could ever give or take Would not be precious as those blooms to
him.
Just so, allowing I am passing sage,
It seems to me much worthier argument
Why pansies,¹ eyes that laugh, bear beauty's
prize
From violets, eyes that dream — (your Michal's choice) —
Than all fools find to wonder at in me
Or in my fortunes. And be very sure
I say this from no prurient restlessness,
No self-complacency, itching to turn,
Vary and view its pleasure from all points,
And, in this instance, willing other men
May be at pains, demonstrate to itself
The realness of the very joy it tastes.
What should delight me like the news of
friends
Whose memories were a solace to me oft,
As mountain-baths to wild fowls in their flight?
Ofter than you had wasted thought on me
Had you been wise, and rightly valued bliss.
But there's no taming nor repressing hearts:
God knows I need such! — So, you heard me speak?
Festus. Speak? when?
Paracelsus. When but this morning at my class?
There was noise and crowd enough. I saw you not.
Surely you know I am engaged to fill The chair here? — that 'tis part of my proud fate
To lecture to as many thick-skulled youths
As please, each day, to throng the theatre,
To my great reputation, and no small Danger of Basil's benches long unused
To crack beneath such honour?
Festus. I was there;
I mingled with the throng: shall I avow Small care was mine to listen? — too intent

On gathering from the murmurs of the crowd
A full corroboration of my hopes!
What can I learn about your powers? but they Know, care for nought beyond your actual state,
Your actual value; yet they worship you,
Those various natures whom you sway as
one!
But ere I go, be sure I shall attend . . .
Paracelsus. Stop, o' God's name: the thing 's by no means yet Past remedy! Shall I read this morning's labour
— At least in substance? Nought so worth the gaining
As an apt scholar! Thus then, with all due Precision and emphasis — you, beside, are clearly
Guiltless of understanding more, a whit,
The subject than your stool — allowed to
be
A notable advantage.
Festus. Surely, Aureole,
You laugh at me!
Paracelsus. I laugh? Ha, ha! thank
heaven,
I charge you, if't be so! for I forget
Much, and what laughter should be like. 6c
No less,
However, I forego that luxury
Since it alarms the friend who brings it
back.
True, laughter like my own must echo
strangely
To thinking men; a smile were better
far;
So, make me smile! If the exulting look
You wore but now be smiling, 'tis so long Since I have smiled! Alas, such smiles are
born Alone of hearts like yours, or herdsmen's souls
Of ancient time, whose eyes, calm as their flocks,
Saw in the stars mere garnishry of heaven, 7c
And in the earth a stage for altars only.
Never change, Festus: I say, never
change!
Festus. My God, if he be wretched after all!
Paracelsus. When last we parted, Fes-
tus, you declared,
— Or Michal, yes, her soft lips whispered
words
I have preserved. She told me she believed
I should succeed (meaning, that in the search
I then engaged in, I should meet success)
And yet be wretched: now, she augured
false.

¹ Citrinula (flammula) herba Paracelso multum familiaris. — DORN.

Festus. Thank heaven! but you spoke strangely: could I venture
To think bare apprehension lest your friend, Dazzled by your resplendent course, might find Henceforth less sweetness in his own, could move
Such earnest mood in you? Fear not,
dear friend,
That I shall leave you, inwardly repining
Your lot was not my own!

Paracelsus. And this for ever!
For ever! gull who may, they will be gulled!
They will not look nor think; 'tis nothing
new
10 In them: but surely he is not of them!
My Festus, do you know, I reckoned,
you —
Though all beside were sand-blind — you,
my friend,
Would look at me, once close, with piercing eye
Untroubled by the false glare that con-founds
A weaker vision: would remain serene,
Though singular amid a gaping throng.
I feared you, or I had come, sure, long ere
this,

To Einsiedeln. Well, error has no end,
And Rhasis is a sage, and Basil boasts 30 A tribe of wits, and I am wise and blest
Past all dispute! 'Tis vain to fret at it.
I have vowed long ago my worshippers
Shall owe to their own deep sagacity
All further information, good or bad.
Small risk indeed my reputation runs,
Unless perchance the glance now searching
me
Be fixed much longer; for it seems to spell
Dimly the characters a simpler man Might read distinct enough. Old Eastern books

30 Say, the fallen prince of morning some short space
Remained unchanged in semblance: nay, his brow
Was hued with triumph: every spirit then Praising, his heart on flame the while: — a tale!

Well, Festus, what discover you, I pray?
Festus. Some foul deed sullies then a life which else

Were raised supreme?

Paracelsus. Good: I do well, most well!
Why strive to make men hear, feel, fret themselves

With what is past their power to comprehend?

I should not strive now: only, having nursed

40 The faint surmise that one yet walked the
earth,

One, at least, not the utter fool of show,

Not absolutely formed to be the dupe
Of shallow plausibilities alone:
One who, in youth, found wise enough to choose

The happiness his riper years approve,
Was yet so anxious for another's sake,
That, ere his friend could rush upon a mad
And ruinous course, the converse of his own,
His gentle spirit essayed, prejudged for
him

The perilous path, foresaw its destiny, 50
And warned the weak one in such tender
words,

Such accents — his whole heart in every tone —

That oft their memory comforted that
friend

When it by right should have increased
despair:

— Having believed, I say, that this one
man

Could never lose the light thus from the first

His portion — how should I refuse to grieve
At even my gain if it disturb our old Relation, if it make me out more wise?

Therefore, once more reminding him how 60
well

He prophesied, I note the single flaw
That spoils his prophet's title. In plain
words,

You were deceived, and thus were you deceived —

I have not been successful, and yet am
Most miserable; 'tis said at last; nor you Give credit, lest you force me to concede That common sense yet lives upon the
world!

Festus. You surely do not mean to banter me?

Paracelsus. You know, or — if you have been wise enough

To cleanse your memory of such matters — 70
knew,

As far as words of mine could make it clear,
That 'twas my purpose to find joy or grief
Solely in the fulfilment of my plan
Or plot or whatsoe'er it was; rejoicing
Alone as it proceeded prosperously, Sorrowing then only when mischance retarded

Its progress. That was in those Würzburg days!

Not to prolong a theme I thoroughly hate, 41 have pursued this plan with all my
strength;

And having failed therein most signally, 80
Cannot object to ruin utter and drear

As all-excelling would have been the prize Had fortune favoured me. I scarce have right

To vex your frank good spirit late so glad
In my supposed prosperity, I know,
And, were I lucky in a glut of friends,

Would well agree to let your error live,
Nay, strengthen it with fables of success.
But mine is no condition to refuse
The transient solace of so rare a godsend,
My solitary luxury, my one friend:
Accordingly I venture to put off
The wearisome vest of falsehood galling
me,
Secure when he is by. I lay me bare,
Prone at his mercy — but he is my friend!
10 Not that he needs retain his aspect grave;
That answers not my purpose; for 'tis like,
Some sunny morning — Basil being drained
Of its wise population, every corner
Of the amphitheatre crammed with learned clerks,

Here (Ecclampadius, looking worlds of wit,
Here Castellanus, as profound as he,
Munsterus here, Frobenius there, all squeezed

And staring, — that the zany of the show,
Even Paracelsus, shall put off before them 20 His trappings with a grace but seldom judged

Expedient in such cases: — the grim smile
That will go round! Is it not therefore
best

To venture a rehearsal like the present
In a small way? Where are the signs I
seek,

The first-fruits and fair sample of the scorn Due to all quacks? Why, this will never do!

Festus. These are foul vapours, Aure-ole; nought beside!

The effect of watching, study, weariness.
Were there a spark of truth in the confuser 30 Of these wild words, you would not outrage thus

Your youth's companion. I shall ne'er regard

These wanderings, bred of faintness and much study.

'Tis not thus you would trust a trouble to
me,

To Michal's friend.

Paracelsus. I have said it, dearest
Festus!

For the manner, 'tis ungracious probably;
You may have it told in broken sobs, one
day,

And scalding tears, ere long: but I thought
best

To keep that off as long as possible.

Do you wonder still?

Festus. No; it must oft fall out 40 That one whose labour perfects any work, Shall rise from it with eye so worn that he
Of all men least can measure the extent
Of what he has accomplished. He alone
Who, nothing tasked, is nothing weary too,
May clearly scan the little he effects:
But we, the bystanders, untouched by toil,
Estimate each aright.

Paracelsus. This worthy Festus
Is one of them, at last! 'Tis so with all!
First, they set down all progress as a
dream;
And next, when he whose quick discom- 50
fiture

Was counted on, accomplishes some few
And doubtful steps in his career, — behold,

They look for every inch of ground to vanish

Beneath his tread, so sure they spy success!

Festus. Few doubtful steps? when death retires before

Your presence — when the noblest of mankind,

Broken in body or subdued in soul,
May through your skill renew their vigour,

raise
The shattered frame to pristine stateliness?
When men in racking pain may purchase 60
dreams

Of what delights them most, swooning at
once

Into a sea of bliss or raft along
As in a flying sphere of turbulent light?

When we may look to you as one ordained
To free the flesh from fell disease, as frees
Our Luther's burning tongue the fettered
soul?

When . . .

Paracelsus. When and where, the devil, did you get

This notable news?

Festus. Even from the common voice;
From those whose envy, daring not dispute
The wonders it decries, attributes them 70
To magic and such folly.

Paracelsus. Folly? Why not To magic, pray? You find a comfort doubtless

In holding, God ne'er troubles him about Us or our doings: once we were judged
worth

The devil's tempting . . . I offend: forgive me,

And rest content. Your prophecy on the whole

Was fair enough as prophesyings go;
At fault a little in detail, but quite Precise enough in the main; and hereupon
I pay due homage: you guessed long ago 80
(The prophet!) I should fail — and I have failed.

Festus. You mean to tell me, then, the hopes which fed

Your youth have not been realized as yet?
Some obstacle has barred them hitherto?
Or that their innate . . .

Paracelsus. As I said but now,
You have a very decent prophet's fame,
So you but shun details here. Little matter

Whether those hopes were mad, — the aims they sought,
Safe and secure from all ambitious fools;
Or whether my weak wits are overcome
By what a better spirit would scorn: I fail.

And now methinks 'twere best to change a theme

I am a sad fool to have stumbled on.
I say confusedly what comes uppermost;
But there are times when patience proves
at fault,

As now: this morning's strange encounter
— you

10 Beside me once again! you, whom I guessed

Alive, since hitherto (with Luther's leave)
No friend have I among the saints at peace,
To judge by any good their prayers effect.
I knew you would have helped me — why not he,

My strange competitor in enterprise,
Bound for the same end by another path,
Arrived, or ill or well, before the time,
At our disastrous journey's doubtful close?
How goes it with April? Ah, they miss

20 Your lone sad sunny idleness of heaven,
Our martyrs for the world's sake; heaven
shuts fast:

The poor mad poet is howling by this time!
Since you are my sole friend then, here or
there,

I could not quite repress the varied feelings
This meeting wakens; they have had their vent,

And now forget them. Do the rear-mice
still

Hang like a fretwork on the gate (or what
In my time was a gate) fronting the road
From Einsiedeln to Lachen?

Festus.

Trifle not:

30 Answer me, for my sake alone! You smiled

Just now, when I supposed some deed, unworthy

Yourself, might blot the else so bright result;

* Yet if your motives have continued pure,
Your will unflinching, and in spite of this,

* You have experienced a defeat, why then
I say not you would cheerfully withdraw From contest — mortal hearts are not so fashioned —

But surely you would ne'ertheless withdraw.

You sought not fame nor gain nor even
love,

40 No end distinct from knowledge, — I repeat Your very words: once satisfied that knowledge

Is a mere dream, you would announce as
much,

* Yourself the first. But how is the event?

* You are defeated — and I find you here!

Paracelsus. As though "here" did not signify defeat!

I spoke not of my little labours here,
But of the break-down of my general aims:
For you, aware of their extent and scope,
To look on these sage lecturings, approved
By beardless boys, and bearded dotards 5
worse,

As a fit consummation of such aims,
Is worthy notice. A professorship
At Basle! Since you see so much in it,
And think my life was reasonably drained

Of life's delights to render me a match
For duties arduous as such post demands, —
Be it far from me to deny my power

To fill the petty circle allotted out
Of infinite space, or justify the host

Of honours thence accruing. So, take 60 notice,

This jewel dangling from my neck preserves

The features of a prince, my skill restored
To plague his people some few years to
come:

And all through a pure whim. He had eased the earth

For me, but that the droll despair which seized

The vermin of his household, tickled me.
I came to see. Here, drivelled the physician,

Whose most infallible nostrum was at fault;

There quaked the astrologer, whose horoscope

Had promised him interminable years; 70
Here a monk fumbled at the sick man's mouth

With some undoubted relic — a sudary¹
Of the Virgin; while another piebald

knave

Of the same brotherhood (he loved them
ever)

Was actively preparing 'neath his nose
Such a suffumigation as, once fired,

Had stunk the patient dead ere he could groan.

I cursed the doctor and upset the brother, Brushed past the conjurer, vowed that the first gust

Of stench from the ingredients just alight 80
Would raise a cross-grained devil in my sword,

Not easily laid: and ere an hour the prince Slept as he never slept since prince he was.

A day — and I was posting for my life, Placarded through the town as one whose spite

Had near availed to stop the blessed effects

Of the doctor's nostrum which, well seconded

¹ Napkin.

By the sudary, and most by the costly
 smoke —
 Not leaving out the strenuous prayers sent
 up
 Hard by in the abbey — raised the prince
 to life:
 To the great reputation of the seer
 Who, confident, expected all along The glad event—the doctor's recompense —
 Much largess from his highness to the monks —
 And the vast solace of his loving people,
 Whose general satisfaction to increase,
 10 The prince was pleased no longer to defer
 The burning of some dozen heretics Remanded till God's mercy should be shown Touching his sickness: last of all were joined Ample directions to all loyal folk
 To swell the complement by seizing me Who — doubtless some rank sorcerer — endeavoured
 To thwart these pious offices, obstruct The prince's cure, and frustrate heaven by help
 Of certain devils 'dwelling in his sword.
 20 By luck, the prince in his first fit of thanks Had forced this bauble on me as an earnest
 Of further favours. This one case may serve
 To give sufficient taste of many such,
 So, let them pass. Those shelves support a pile
 Of patents, licences, diplomas, titles
 From Germany, France, Spain, and Italy;
 They authorize some honour; ne'ertheless,
 I set more store by this Erasmus sent;
 He trusts me; our Frobenius is his friend, 30 And him "I raised" (nay, read it) "from the dead."
 I weary you, I see. I merely sought To show, there's no great wonder after
 all
 That, while I fill the class-room and attract
 A crowd to Basil, I get leave to stay,
 And therefore need not scruple to accept
 The utmost they can offer, if I please:
 For 'tis but right the world should be prepared
 To treat with favour e'en fantastic wants
 Of one like me, used up in serving her.
 40 Just as the mortal, whom the gods in part Devoured, received in place of his lost limb
 Some virtue or other — cured disease, I
 think;
 You mind the fables we have read together.
Festus. You do not think I comprehend a word.
 The time was, Aureole, you were apt
 enough

To clothe the airiest thoughts in specious
 breath;
 But surely you must feel how vague and
 strange
 These speeches sound.
Paracelsus. Well, then: you know my hopes;
 I am assured, at length, those hopes were
 vain;
 That truth is just as far from me as ever; 54
 That I have thrown my life away; that sorrow
 On that account is idle, and further effort
 To mend and patch what's marred beyond repairing,
 As useless: and all this was taught your
 friend
 By the convincing good old-fashioned method
 Of force — by sheer compulsion. Is that plain?
Festus. Dear Aureole, can it be my fears were just?
 God wills not . . .
Paracelsus. Now, 'tis this I most admire —
 The constant talk men of your stamp keep
 up
 Of God's will, as they style it; one would 64
 swear
 Man had but merely to uplift his eye,
 And see the will in question characterized On the heaven's vault. 'Tis hardly wise to moot
 Such topics: doubts are many and faith is weak.
 I know as much of any will of God
 As knows some dumb and tortured brute
 what Man,
 His stern lord, wills from the perplexing
 blows
 That plague him every way; but there, of
 course,
 Where least he suffers, longest he remains —
 My case; and for such reasons I plod on, 74 Subdued but not convinced. I know as little
 Why I deserve to fail, as why I hoped Better things in my youth. I simply know
 I am no master here, but trained and beaten
 Into the path I tread; and here I stay,
 Until some further intimation reach me,
 Like an obedient drudge. Though I prefer
 To view the whole thing as a task imposed Which, whether dull or pleasant, must be
 done —
 Yet, I deny not, there is made provision 84
 Of joys which tastes less jaded might affect;
 Nay, some which please me too, for all my pride —
 Pleasures that once were pains: the iron ring

- Festering about a slave's neck grows at length
 Into the flesh it eats. I hate no longer
 A host of petty vile delights, undreamed of Or spurned before; such now supply the place
 Of my dead aims: as in the autumn woods
 Where tall trees used to flourish, from their roots
 Springs up a fungous brood sickly and pale,
 Chill mushrooms coloured like a corpse's cheek.
Festus. If I interpret well your words, I own
- 10 It troubles me but little that your aims.
 Vast in their dawning and most likely grown Extravagantly since, have baffled you.
 Perchance I am glad; you merit greater praise;
 Because they are too glorious to be gained,
 You do not blindly cling to them and die;
 You fell, but have not sullenly refused
 To rise, because an angel worsted you
 In wrestling, though the world holds not your peer,
 And though too harsh and sudden is the change
- 20 To yield content as yet, still you pursue
 The ungracious path as though 'twere rosy-strewn.
 'Tis well: and your reward, or soon or late,
 Will come from him whom no man serves in vain.
Paracelsus. Ah, very fine! For my part, I conceive
 The very pausing from all further toil,
 Which you find heinous, would become a seal
 To the sincerity of all my deeds.
 To be consistent I should die at once;
 I calculated on no after-life;
- 30 Yet (how crept in, how fostered, I know not) Here am I with as passionate regret
 For youth and health and love so vainly lavished,
 As if their preservation had been first
 And foremost in my thoughts; and this strange fact Humbled me wondrously, and had due force
 In rendering me the less averse to follow
 A certain counsel, a mysterious warning —
 You will not understand — but 'twas a man
 With aims not mine and yet pursued like mine,
- 40 With the same fervour and no more success
 Perishing in my sight; who summoned me
 As I would shun the ghastly fate I saw,
 To serve my race at once; to wait no longer
 That God should interfere in my behalf,
- But to distrust myself, put pride away,
 And give my gains, imperfect as they were,
 To men. I have not leisure to explain
 How, since, a singular series of events
 Has raised me to the station you behold,
 Wherein I seem to turn to most account 50
 The mere wreck of the past, — perhaps receive
 Some feeble glimmering token that God views
 And may approve my penance: therefore here
 You find me, doing most good or least harm.
 And if folks wonder much and profit little
 'Tis not my fault; only, I shall rejoice
 When my part in the farce is shuffled through,
 And the curtain falls: I must hold out till then.
Festus. Till when, dear Aureole?
Paracelsus. Till I'm fairly thrust
 From my proud eminence. Fortune is 60
 Fickle
 And even professors fall: should that arrive,
 I see no sin in ceding to my bent.
 You little fancy what rude shocks apprise us
 We sin; God's intimations rather fail
 In clearness than in energy: 'twere well Did they but indicate the course to take Like that to be forsaken. I would fain
 Be spared a further sample. Here I stand,
 And here I stay, be sure, till forced to flit.
Festus. Be you but firm on that head! 70 long ere then
 All I expect will come to pass, I trust:
 The cloud that wraps you will have disappeared.
 Meantime, I see small chance of such event:
 They praise you here as one whose lore, already Divulged, eclipses all the past can show,
 But whose achievements, marvellous as they be,
 Are faint anticipations of a glory
 About to be revealed. When Basil's crowds
 Dismiss their teacher, I shall be content
 That he depart. 80
Paracelsus. This favour at their hands
 I look for earlier than your view of things Would warrant. Of the crowd you saw
 to-day,
 Remove the full half sheer amazement draws,
 Mere novelty, nought else; and next, the tribe
 Whose innate blockish dulness just perceives
 That unless miracles (as seem my works)
 Be wrought in their behalf, their chance is slight

- To puzzle the devil; next, the numerous
 Who bitterly hate established schools, and The teacher that oppugns them, till he Have planted his own doctrine, when the May reckon on their rancour in his turn;
 Take, too, the sprinkling of sagacious Whose cunning runs not counter to the
 But seeks, by flattering and crafty nursing,
 To force my system to a premature Short-lived development. Why swell the Each has his end to serve, and his best way
 Of serving it: remove all these, remains
 A scantling, a poor dozen at the best,
 Worthy to look for sympathy and service,
 And likely to draw profit from my pains.
Festus. 'Tis no encouraging picture:
 still these few Redeem their fellows. Once the germ implanted,
 Its growth, if slow, is sure.
Paracelsus. God grant it so!
 I would make some amends: but if I fail,
 The luckless rogues have this excuse to urge,
 That much is in my method and my manner,
 My uncouth habits, my impatient spirit,
 Which hinders of reception and result My doctrine: much to say, small skill to speak!
 These old aims suffered not a looking-off
 Though for an instant; therefore, only
 when
 I thus renounced them and resolved to reap
 Some present fruit — to teach mankind
 some truth
 So dearly purchased — only then I found
 Such teaching was an art requiring cares
 And qualities peculiar to itself:
 That to possess was one thing — to display Another. With renown first in my
 thoughts,
 On popular praise, I had soon discovered
 it:
 One grows but little apt to learn these
 things.
Festus. If it be so, which nowise I believe,
 There needs no waiting fuller dispensation
 To leave a labour of so little use.
 Why not throw up the irksome charge at
 once?
Paracelsus. A task, a task!
 But wherefore hide the whole Extent of degradation, once engaged - In the confessing vein? Despite of all My fine talk of obedience and repugnance,
 Docility and what not, 'tis yet to learn
 If when the task shall really be performed,
 My inclination free to choose once more,
 I shall do aught but slightly modify
 The nature of the hated task I quit.
 In plain words, I am spoiled; my life still tends
 As first it tended; I am broken and trained 50
 To my old habits: they are part of me.
 I know, and none so well, my darling ends
 Are proved impossible: no less, no less,
 Even now what humours me, fond fool, as when
 Their faint ghosts sit with me and flatter
 me
 And send me back content to my dull
 round?
 How can I change this soul? — this apparatus
 Constructed solely for their purposes,
 So well adapted to their every want,
 To search out and discover, prove and per- 60
 fect;
 This intricate machine whose most minute
 And meanest motions have their charm to
 me
 Though to none else — an aptitude I seize,
 An object I perceive, a use, a meaning,
 A property, a fitness, I explain
 And I alone: — how can I change my soul?
 And this wronged body, worthless save when tasked
 Under that soul's dominion — used to care
 For its bright master's cares and quite subdue
 Its proper cravings — not to ail nor pine 70
 So he but prosper — whither drag this poor
 Tried patient body? God! how I essayed
 To live like that mad poet, for a while,
 To love alone; and how I felt too warped
 And twisted and deformed! What should I do,
 Even tho' released from drudgery, but return Faint, as you see, and halting, blind and sore,
 To my old life and die as I began?
 I cannot feed on beauty for the sake
 Of beauty only, nor can drink in balm 80
 From lovely objects for their loveliness;
 My nature cannot lose her first imprint:
 I still must hoard and heap and class all truths
 With one ulterior purpose: I must know!
 Would God translate me to his throne, believe
 That I should only listen to his word
 To further my own aim! For other men,
 Beauty is prodigally strewn around,
 And I were happy could I quench as they

This mad and thriveless longing, and content me
 With beauty for itself alone: alas,
 I have addressed a frock of heavy mail
 Yet may not join the troop of sacred knights;
 And now the forest-creatures fly from me,
 The grass-banks cool, the sunbeams warm no more.
 Best follow, dreaming that ere night arrive,
 I shall o'ertake the company and ride
 Glittering as they!

Festus. I think I apprehend
 10 What you would say: if you, in truth, design

To enter once more on the life thus left,
 Seek not to hide that all this consciousness
 Of failure is assumed!

Paracelsus. My friend, my friend,
 I toil, you listen; I explain, perhaps
 You understand: there our communion ends.

Have you learnt nothing from to-day's discourse?

When we would thoroughly know the sick man's state

We feel awhile the fluttering pulse, press soft

The hot brow, look upon the languid eye, 20 And thence divine the rest. Must I lay bare

My heart, hideous and beating, or tear up My vitals for your gaze, ere you will deem Enough made known? You! who are you, forsooth?

That is the crowning operation claimed
 By the arch-demonstrator — heaven the hall,

And earth the audience. Let Aprile and you

Secure good places: 'twill be worth the while.

Festus. Are you mad, Aureole? What can I have said

To call for this? I judged from your own words.

30 Paracelsus. Oh, doubtless! A sick wretch describes the ape

That mocks him from the bed-foot, and all gravely

You thither turn at once: or he recounts
 The perilous journey he has late performed,
 And you are puzzled much how that could be!

You find me here, half stupid and half mad:

It makes no part of my delight to search
 Into these matters, much less undergo Another's scrutiny; but so it chances
 That I am led to trust my state to you:

40 And the event is, you combine, contrast
 And ponder on my foolish words as though
 They thoroughly conveyed all hidden here —

Here, loathsome with despair and hate and rage!

Is there no fear, no shrinking and no shame?

Will you guess nothing? will you spare me nothing?

Must I go deeper? Ay or no?

Festus. Dear friend . . .

Paracelsus. True: I am brutal — 'tis a part of it;

The plague's sign — you are not a lazarus-haunter,

How should you know? Well then, you think it strange

I should profess to have failed utterly, 50

And yet propose an ultimate return

To courses void of hope: and this, because

You know not what temptation is, nor how

'Tis like to ply men in the sickliest part.

You are to understand that we who make

Sport for the gods, are hunted to the end:

There is not one sharp volley shot at us,

Which 'scaped with life, though hurt, we slacken pace

And gather by the wayside herbs and roots

To staunch our wounds, secure from further harm: 60

We are assailed to life's extremest verge.

It will be well indeed if I return,

A harmless busy fool, to my old ways!

I would forget hints of another fate,

Significant enough, which silent hours

Have lately scared me with.

— Festus. Another! and what?

Paracelsus. After all, Festus, you say well: I am

A man yet: I need never humble me.

I would have been — something, I know not what;

But though I cannot soar, I do not crawl. 70

There are worse portions than this one of mine.

You say well!

Festus. Ah!

Paracelsus. And deeper degradation!

If the mean stimulants of vulgar praise,

If vanity should become the chosen food

Of a sunk mind, should stifle even the wish

To find its early aspirations true,

Should teach it to breathe falsehood like life-breath —

An atmosphere of craft and trick and lie;

Should make it proud to emulate, surpass

Base natures in the practices which woke 80

Its most indignant loathing once . . . No, no!

Utter damnation is reserved for hell!

I had immortal feelings; such shall never

Be wholly quenched: no, no!

My friend, you wear

A melancholy face, and certain 'tis

There's little cheer in all this dismal work.

But was it my desire to set abroad

Such memories and forebodings? I foresaw
 Where they would drive. 'Twere better we discuss
 News from Lucerne or Zurich; ask and
 tell
 Of Egypt's flaring sky or Spain's cork-groves.
Festus. I have thought: trust me, this mood will pass away!
 I know you and the lofty spirit you bear,
 And easily ravel out a clue to all.
 These are the trials meet for such as you,
 Nor must you hope exemption: to be mortal
 Is to be plied with trials manifold.
 Look round! The obstacles which kept
 the rest
 From your ambition, have been spurned
 by you;
 Their fears, their doubts, the chains that bind them all,
 Were flax before your resolute soul, which
 nought
 Avails to awe save these delusions bred
 From its own strength, its selfsame strength
 disguised,
 Mocking itself. Be brave, dear Aureole!
 Since
 The rabbit has his shade to frighten him,
 The fawn a rustling bough, mortals their
 cares,
 And higher natures yet would slight and
 laugh
 At these entangling fantasies, as you
 At trammels of a weaker intellect, — Measure your mind's height by the shade it casts!
 I know you.
Paracelsus. And I know you, dearest
 Festus!
 And how you love unworthily; and how
 All admiration renders blind.
Festus. You hold
 That admiration blinds?
Paracelsus. Ay and alas!
Festus. Nought blinds you less than admiration, friend!
 Whether it be that all love renders wise
 In its degree; from love which blends with
 love —
 Heart answering heart — to love which spends itself
 In silent mad idolatry of some Pre-eminent mortal, some great soul of
 souls,
 Which ne'er will know how well it is adored.
 I say, such love is never blind; but rather Alive to every the minutest spot
 Which mars its object, and which hate (supposed
 So vigilant and searching) dreams not of.

Love broods on such: what then? When first perceived
 Is there no sweet strife to forget, to change, 49
 To overflush those blemishes with all The glow of general goodness they disturb?
 — To make those very defects an endless
 source
 Of new affection grown from hopes and
 fears?
 And, when all fails, is there no gallant
 stand
 Made even for much proved weak? no shrinking-back
 Lest, since all love assimilates the soul
 To what it loves, it should at length become Almost a rival of its idol? Trust me,
 If there be fiends who seek to work our 50
 hurt,
 To ruin and drag down earth's mightiest spirits
 Even at God's foot, 'twill be from such as
 love,
 Their zeal will gather most to serve their
 cause;
 And least from those who hate, who most essay
 By contumely and scorn to blot the light
 Which forces entrance even to their hearts:
 For thence will our defender tear the veil
 And show within each heart, as in a shrine,
 The giant image of perfection, grown In hate's despite, whose calumnies were 60 spawned
 In the untroubled presence of its eyes.
 True admiration blinds not; nor am I
 So blind. I call your sin exceptional;
 It springs from one whose life has passed the bounds
 Prescribed to life. Compound that fault with God!
 I speak of men; to common men like me
 The weakness you reveal endears you more,
 Like the far traces of decay in suns.
 I bid you have good cheer!
Paracelsus. Præclare! Optime!
 Think of a quiet mountain-cloistered priest 70
 Instructing Paracelsus! yet 'tis so.
 Come, I will show you where my merit lies.
 'Tis in the advance of individual minds
 That the slow crowd should ground their expectation
 Eventually to follow; as the sea
 Waits ages in its bed till some one wave
 Out of the multitudinous mass, extends The empire of the whole, some feet perhaps,
 Over the strip of sand which could confine
 Its fellows so long time: thenceforth the 80
 rest,
 Even to the meanest, hurry in at once,
 And so much is clear gained. I shall be glad
 If all my labours, failing of aught else,

Suffice to make such inroad and procure
A wider range for thought: nay, they do
this;

For, whatsoe'er my notions of true knowledge

And a legitimate success, may be,
I am not blind to my undoubted rank
When classed with others: I precede my age:

And whoso wills is very free to mount These labours as a platform whence his
own

May have a prosperous outset. But, alas!
to My followers — they are noisy as you heard;

But, for intelligence, the best of them
So clumsily wield the weapons I supply
And they extol, that I begin to doubt Whether their own rude clubs and pebble-stones

Would not do better service than my arms
Thus vilely swayed — if error will not fall
Sooner before the old awkward batterings Than my more subtle warfare, not half learned.

Festus. I would supply that art, then, or withhold

to New arms until you teach their mystery.
Paracelsus. Content you, 'tis my wish;
I have recourse

To the simplest training. Day by day I seek

To wake the mood, the spirit which alone
Can make those arms of any use to men.
Of course they are for swaggering forth at
once

Graced with Ulysses' bow, Achilles' shield —

Flash on us, all in armour, thou Achilles!
Make our hearts dance to thy resounding
step!

A proper sight to scare the crows away!
to Festus. Pity you choose not then some other method

Of coming at your point. The marvellous art

At length established in the world bids fair
To remedy all hindrances like these:
Trust to Frobenius' press the precious lore
Obscured by uncouth manner, or unfit
For raw beginners; let his types secure
A deathless monument to after-time;
Meanwhile wait confidently and enjoy
The ultimate effect: sooner or later to You shall be all-revealed.

Paracelsus. The old dull question
In a new form; no more. Thus: I possess

Two sorts of knowledge; one, — vast,
shadowy,

Hints of the unbounded aim I once pursued:

The other consists of many secrets, caught While bent on nobler prize, — perhaps a few

Prime principles which may conduct to
much:

These last I offer to my followers here.
Now, bid me chronicle the first of these,
My ancient study, and in effect you bid
Revert to the wild courses just abjured: 50
I must go find them scattered through the
world.

Then, for the principles, they are so simple (Being chiefly of the overturning sort),
That one time is as proper to propound
them

As any other — to-morrow at my class,
Or half a century hence embalmed in print.

For if mankind intend to learn at all,
They must begin by giving faith to them
And acting on them: and I do not see
But that my lectures serve indifferent well: 60
No doubt these dogmas fall not to the
earth,

For all their novelty and rugged setting.

I think my class will not forget the day

I let them know the gods of Israel,
Aëtius, Oribasius, Galen, Rhasis, Serapion, Avicenna, Averröes,
Were blocks!

Festus. And that reminds me, I heard something

About your waywardness: you burned
their books,

It seems, instead of answering those sages.

Paracelsus. And who said that? 70

Festus. Some I met yesternight With Æcolampadius. As you know, the purpose

Of this short stay at Basil was to learn
His pleasure touching certain missives sent For our Zuinglius and himself. 'Twas he Apprised me that the famous teacher here
Was my old friend.

Paracelsus. Ah, I forgot: you went . . .

Festus. From Zurich with advices for the ear

Of Luther, now at Wittenberg — (you
know,

I make no doubt, the differences of late With Carolostadius) — and returning 80 sought

Basil and . . .

Paracelsus. I remember. Here's a case now,

Will teach you why I answer not, but burn
The books you mention. Pray, does Luther dream

His arguments convince by their own force
The crowds that own his doctrine? No
indeed!

His plain denial of established points
Ages had sanctified and men supposed Could never be oppugned while earth was under

And heaven above them — points which chance or time

Affected not — did more than the array Of argument which followed. Boldly deny!

There is much breath-stopping, hair-stiffening
Awhile; then, amazed glances, mute awaiting

The thunderbolt which does not come:
and next,

Reproachful wonder and inquiry: those Who else had never stirred, are able now
To find the rest out for themselves, perhaps To outstrip him who set the whole at
work,

— As never will my wise class its instructor.
And you saw Luther?

Festus. 'Tis a wondrous soul!

Paracelsus. True: the so-heavy chain which galled mankind

Is shattered, and the noblest of us all Must bow to the deliverer — nay, the worker

Of our own project — we who long before Had burst our trammels, but forgot the
crowd,

We should have taught, still groaned beneath their load:

This he has done and nobly. Speed that may!

Whatever be my chance or my mischance,
What benefits mankind must glad me too;
And men seem made, though not as I believed,

For something better than the times produce.

Witness these gangs of peasants your new lights

From Suabia have possessed, whom Mün-zer leads,

And whom the duke, the landgrave and the elector

Will calm in blood! Well, well; 'tis not my world!

Festus. Hark!

Paracelsus. 'Tis the melancholy wind astir

Within the trees; the embers too are grey:
Morn must be near.

Festus. Best ope the casement: see,
The night, late strewn with clouds and flying stars,

Is blank and motionless: how peaceful
sleep

The tree-tops altogether! Like an asp,
The wind slips whispering from bough to bough.

Paracelsus. Ay; you would gaze on a wind-shaken tree

By the hour, nor count time lost.

Festus. So you shall gaze:
Those happy times will come again.

Paracelsus. Gone, gone,
'Those pleasant times! Does not the moaning wind

Seem to bewail that we have gained such gains

And bartered sleep for them?

Festus. It is our trust

That there is yet another world to mend

All error and mischance.

Paracelsus. Another world!

And why this world, this common world, to
be

A make-shift, a mere foil, how fair soever,
To some fine life to come? Man must be fed

With angels' food, forsooth; and some few traces

Of a diviner nature which look out

Through his corporeal baseness, warrant
him

In a supreme contempt of all provision

For his inferior tastes — some straggling marks

Which constitute his essence, just as truly

As here and there a gem would constitute

The rock, their barren bed, one diamond.

But were it so — were man all mind — he gains

A station little enviable. From God
Down to the lowest spirit ministrant,

Intelligence exists which casts our mind
Into immeasurable shade. No, no:

Love, hope, fear, faith — these make humanity;

These are its sign and note and character,

And these I have lost! — gone, shut from me for ever,

Like a dead friend safe from unkindness
more!

See, morn at length. The heavy darkness
seems

Diluted, grey and clear without the stars;
The shrubs bestir and rouse themselves

as if

Some snake, that weighed them down all night, let go

His hold; and from the East, fuller and fuller,

Day, like a mighty river, flowing in;

But clouded, wintry, desolate and cold.

Yet see how that broad prickly star-shaped plant,

Half-down in the crevice, spreads its woolly
leaves

All thick and glistening with diamond dew.

And you depart for Einsiedeln this day,

And we have spent all night in talk like
this!

If you would have me better for your love,
Revert no more to these sad themes.

Festus. One favour,

And I have done. I leave you, deeply moved;

Unwilling to have fared so well, the while My friend has changed so sorely. If this mood

Shall pass away, if light once more arise

Where all is darkness now, if you see fit
To hope and trust again, and strive again,
You will remember — not our love alone —
But that my faith in God's desire that man Should trust on his support, (as I must
think

You trusted) is obscured and dim through
you:

For you are thus, and this is no reward.
Will you not call me to your side, dear Aureole?

IV. — PARACELSUS ASPIRES.

SCENE. — Colmar in Alsatia: an Inn.
1528.

PARACELSUS, FESTUS.

Paracelsus [to JOHANNES OPORINUS, his Secretary]. Sic itur ad astra!
Dear Von Visenburg

Is scandalised, and poor Torinus paralysed
And every honest soul that Basil holds Aghast; and yet we live, as one may say,
Just as though Liechtenfels had never set
So true a value on his sorry carcass,
And learned Pütter had not frowned us
dumb.

We live; and shall as surely start tomorrow

For Nuremberg, as we drink speedy scathe
To Basil in this mantling wine, suffused
A delicate blush, no fainter tinge is born
I' the shut heart of a bud. Pledge me, good John —

"Basil; a hot plague ravage it, and Pütter
"Oppose the plague!" Even so? Do you too share

Their panic, the reptiles? Ha, ha; faint through these,
Desist for these! They manage matters
so

At Basil, 'tis like: but others may find
means

To bring the stoutest braggart of the tribe
Once more to crouch in silence — means to breed

A stupid wonder in each fool again,
Now big with admiration at the skill

Which stript a vain pretender of his plumes:

And, that done, — means to brand each slavish brow

So deeply, surely, ineffaceably,
That henceforth flattery shall not pucker it Out of the furrow; there that stamp shall
stay

To show the next they fawn on, what they
are,

This Basil with its magnates, — fill my cup, —

Whom I curse soul and limb. And now despatch,

Despatch, my trusty John; and what remains

To do, whate'er arrangements for our trip
Are yet to be completed, see you hasten This night; we'll weather the storm at least: to-morrow

For Nuremberg! Now leave us; this grave clerk

Has divers weighty matters for my ear:
[OPORINUS goes out.

And spare my lungs. At last, my gallant
Festus,

I am rid of this arch-knave that dogs my heels

As a gaunt crow a gasping sheep; at last May give a loose to my delight. How
kind,

How very kind, my first best only friend!
Why, this looks like fidelity. Embrace
me!

Not a hair silvered yet? Right! you shall live

Till I am worth your love; you shall be proud,

And I — but let time show! Did you not wonder?

I sent to you because our compact weighed Upon my conscience — (you recall the
night

At Basil, which the gods confound!) — because

Once more I aspire. I call you to my
side:

You come. You thought my message
strange?

Festus. So strange
That I must hope, indeed, your messenger
Has mingled his own fancies with the words
Purporting to be yours.

Paracelsus. He said no more, 6
'Tis probable, than the precious folk I leave

Said fiftyfold more roughly. Well-a-day,
'Tis true! Poor Paracelsus is exposed

At last; a most egregious quack he proves:
And those he overreached must spit their hate

On one who, utterly beneath contempt, Could yet deceive their topping wits. You heard

Bare truth; and at my bidding you come
here

To speed me on my enterprise, as once
Your lavish wishes sped me, my own 7
friend!

Festus. What is your purpose, Aureole?
Paracelsus. Oh, for purpose,

There is no lack of precedents in a case
Like mine; at least, if not precisely mine,
The case of men cast off by those they sought

To benefit.

Festus. They really cast you off?
 I only heard a vague tale of some priest, Cured by your skill, who wrangled at your
 claim,
 Knowing his life's worth best; and how the judge
 The matter was referred to, saw no cause
 To interfere, nor you to hide your full Contempt of him; nor he, again, to smother
 His wrath thereat, which raised so fierce a flame
 That Basil soon was made no place for you.
Paracelsus. The affair of Liechtenfels?
 the shallowest fable,
 The last and silliest outrage — mere pre-
 tence!
 I knew it, I foretold it from the first,
 How soon the stupid wonder you mistook
 For genuine loyalty — a cheering promise
 Of better things to come — would pall and pass;
 And every word comes true. Saul is among
 The prophets! Just so long as I was pleased
 To play off the mere antics of my art,
 Fantastic gambols leading to no end,
 I got huge praise: but one can ne'er keep
 down
 Our foolish nature's weakness. There they flocked,
 Poor devils, jostling, swearing and perspiring,
 Till the walls rang again; and all for me!
 I had a kindness for them, which was
 right;
 But then I stopped not till I tacked to that
 A trust in them and a respect — a sort Of sympathy for them; I must needs begin To teach them, not amaze them, "to im-
 part
 "Th. spirit which should instigate the search
 "O' ruth," just what you bade me! I poke out.
 Forthwith a mighty squadron, in disgust,
 Flung off — "the sifted chaff of the sack,"
 I said,
 Redoubling my endeavours to secure
 The rest. When lo! one man had tarried so long
 Only to ascertain if I supported
 This tenet of his, or that; another loved
 To hear impartially before he judged,
 And having heard, now judged; this bland disciple
 Passed for my dupe, but all along, it seems,
 Spied error where his neighbours marvelled
 most;
 That fiery doctor who had hailed me
 friend,
 Did it because my by-paths, once proved
 wrong

And beacons properly, would commend
 again
 The good old ways our sires jogged safely
 o'er,
 Though not their squeamish sons; the other worthy Discovered divers verses of St. John, Which, read successively, refreshed the
 soul,
 But, muttered backwards, cured the gout,
 the stone,
 The colic and what not. Quid multa?
 The end
 Was a clear class-room, and a quiet leer 50
 From grave folk, and a sour reproachful
 glance
 From those in chief who, cap in hand, installed
 The new professor scarce a year before;
 And a vast flourish about patient merit
 Obscured awhile by flashy tricks, but sure Sooner or later to emerge in splendour —
 Of which the example was some luckless wight
 Whom my arrival had discomfited,
 But now, it seems, the general voice recalled
 To fill my chair and so efface the stain 60
 Basil had long incurred. I sought no better,
 Only a quiet dismissal from my post,
 And from my heart I wished them better suited
 And better served. Good night to Basil,
 then!
 But fast as I proposed to rid the tribe
 Of my obnoxious back, I could not spare
 them
 The pleasure of a parting kick.
Festus. You smile:
 Despise them as they merit!
Paracelsus. If I smile,
 'Tis with as very contempt as ever turned Flesh into stone. This courteous recom- 70
 pense,
 This grateful . . . Festus, were your nature fit
 To be defiled, your eyes the eyes to ache
 At gangrene-blotches, eating poisonblains,
 The ulcerous barky scurf of leprosy
 Which finds — a man, and leaves — a hideous thing
 That cannot but be mended by hell fire,
 — I would lay bare to you the human
 heart
 Which God cursed long ago, and devils make since
 Their pet nest and their never-tiring
 home.
 Oh, sages have discovered we are born 80
 For various ends — to love, to know: has ever
 One stumbled, in his search, on any signs

Of a nature in us formed to hate? To hate?

If that be our true object which evokes
Our powers in fullest strength, be sure 'tis hate!

Yet men have doubted if the best and bravest

Of spirits can nourish him with hate alone.
I had not the monopoly of fools,
It seems, at Basil.

Festus. But your plans, your plans!

I have yet to learn your purpose, Aureole!

Paracelsus. Whether to sink beneath such ponderous shame,

15 To shrink up like a crushed snail, undergo
In silence and desist from further toil,
And so subside into a monument
Of one their censure blasted? or to bow
Cheerfully as submissively, to lower
My old pretensions even as Basil dictates,
To drop into the rank her wits assign me
And live as they prescribe, and make that use

Of my poor knowledge which their rules allow,

Proud to be patted now and then, and careful

20 To practise the true posture for receiving
The amplest benefit from their hoofs' appliance

When they shall condescend to tutor me?
Then, one may feel resentment like a flame

Within, and deck false systems in truth's garb,

And tangle and entwine mankind with error,

And give them darkness for a dower and falsehood

For a possession, ages: or one may mope
Into a shade through thinking, or else drowse

Into a dreamless sleep and so die off.

30 But I, — now Festus shall divine! — but I Am merely setting out once more, embracing

My earliest aims again! What thinks he now?

Festus. Your aims? the aims? — to know? and where is found

The early trust . . .

Paracelsus. Nay, not so fast; I say,
The aims — not the old means. You know they made me

A laughing-stock; I was a fool; you know
The when and the how: hardly those means again!

Not but they had their beauty; who should know

Their passing beauty, if not I? Still, dreams

40 They were, or let them vanish, yet in beauty

If that may be. Stay: thus they pass in song! [He sings.]

Heap cassia, sandal-buds and stripes
Of labdanum,¹ and aloe-balls,

Smeared with dull nard an Indian wipes
From out her hair: such balsam falls

Down sea-side mountain pedestals,
From tree-tops where tired winds are

fain,
Spent with the vast and howling main,
To treasure half their island-gain.

And strew faint sweetness from some old Egyptian's fine worm-eaten shroud

Which breaks to dust when once unrolled;

Or shredded perfume, like a clud
From closet long to quiet vowed,

With moth and dropping arras hung,
Mouldering her lute and books among,

As when a queen, long dead, was young.

Mine, every word! And on such pile shall die

My lovely fancies, with fair perished things, Themselves fair and forgotten; yes, forgotten,

Or why abjure them? So, I made this rhyme

That fitting dignity might be preserved;
No little proud was I; though the list of drugs

Smacks of my old vocation, and the verse
Halts like the best of Luther's psalms.

Festus. But, Aureole, Talk not thus wildly and madly. I am

here —
Did you know all! I have travelled far,
indeed,

To learn your wishes. Be yourself again!
For in this mood I recognise you less

Than in the horrible despondency
I witnessed last. You may account this,

joy;
But rather let me gaze on that despair

Than hear these incoherent words and see
This flushed cheek and intensely-sparkling

eye.
Paracelsus. Why, man, I was light-hearted in my prime,

I am light-hearted now; what would you have?

April was a poet, I make songs —
'Tis the very augury of success I want!

Why should I not be joyous now as then?
Festus. Joyous! and how? and what remains for joy?

You have declared the ends (which I am sick

Of naming) are impracticable.

Paracelsus. Ay,
Pursued as I pursued them — the arch-fool!

* A fragrant gum.

Listen: my plan will please you not, 'tis
 like,
 But you are little versed in the world's ways.
 This is my plan — (first drinking its good luck) —
 I will accept all helps; all I despised
 So rashly at the outset, equally With early impulses, late years have quenched:
 I have tried each way singly: now for both!
 All helps! no one sort shall exclude the
 rest.
 I seek to know and to enjoy at once,
 Not one without the other as before.
 Suppose my labour should seem God's own cause
 Once more, as first I dreamed, — it shall not baulk me
 Of the meanest earthliest sensualet delight
 That may be snatched; for every joy is
 gain,
 And gain is gain, however small. My soul Can die then, nor be taunted — "what was gained?"
 Nor, on the other hand, should pleasure
 follow
 As though I had not spurned her hitherto, Shall she o'ercloud my spirit's rapt communion
 With the tumultuous past, the teeming
 future,
 Glorious with visions of a full success.
Festus. Success!
Paracelsus. And wherefore not?
 Why not prefer Results obtained in my best state of being
 To those derived alone from seasons dark As the thoughts they bred? When I was best, my youth
 Unwasted, seemed success not surest too?
 It is the nature of darkness to obscure.
 I am a wanderer: I remember well
 One journey, how I feared the track was missed,
 So long the city I desired to reach
 Lay hid; when suddenly its spires afar Flashed through the circling clouds; you may conceive
 My transport. Soon the vapours closed
 again,
 But I had seen the city, and one such glance
 No darkness could obscure: nor shall the present —
 A few dull hours, a passing shame or two,
 Destroy the vivid memories of the past.
 I will fight the battle out; a little spent Perhaps, but still an able combatant.
 You look at my grey hair and furrowed
 brow?
 But I can turn even weakness to account:
 Of many tricks I know, 'tis not the least
 To push the ruins of my frame, whereon
 The fire of vigour trembles scarce alive,

Into a heap, and send the flame aloft.
 What should I do with age? So, sickness lends
 An aid; it being, I fear, the source of all
 We boast of: mind is nothing but disease,
 And natural health is ignorance.
Festus. I see
 But one good symptom in this notable 50
 scheme.
 I feared your sudden journey had in view
 To wreak immediate vengeance on your foes.
 'Tis not so: I am glad.
Paracelsus. And if I please
 To spit on them, to trample them, what
 then?
 'Tis sorry warfare truly, but the fools Provoke it. I would spare their self-conceit,
 But if they must provoke me, cannot suffer Forbearance on my part, if I may keep No quality in the shade, must needs put
 forth
 Power to match power, my strength against 60
 their strength,
 And teach them their own game with their own arms —
 Why, be it so and let them take their
 chance!
 I am above them like a god, there's no
 Hiding the fact: what idle scruples, then,
 Were those that ever bade me soften it,
 Communicate it gently to the world,
 Instead of proving my supremacy,
 Taking my natural station o'er their head,
 Then owning all the glory was a man's!
 — And in my elevation man's would be. 70
 But live and learn, though life's short,
 learning, hard!
 And therefore, though the wreck of my past self,
 I fear, dear Pütter, that your lecture-room
 Must wait awhile for its best ornament,
 The penitent empiric, who set up For somebody, but soon was taught his
 place;
 Now, but too happy to be let confess
 His error, snuff the candles, and illustrate (Fiat experientia corpore vili)
 Your medicine's soundness in his person. 80
 Wait,
 Good Pütter!
Festus. He who sneers thus, is a god!
Paracelsus. Ay, ay, laugh at me! I am very glad
 You are not gulled by all this swaggering;
 you
 Can see the root of the matter! — how I strive
 To put a good face on the overthrow
 I have experienced, and to bury and hide
 My degradation in its length and breadth;
 How the mean motives I would make you
 think

Just mingle as is due with nobler aims,
The appetites I modestly allow May influence me as being mortal still —
Do goad me, drive me on, and fast supplant My youth's desires. You are no stupid dupe:

You find me out! Yes, I had sent for you
To palm these childish lies upon you,
Festus!

Laugh — you shall laugh at me!

Festus. The past, then, Aureole, Proves nothing? Is our interchange of
love

10 Yet to begin? Have I to swear I mean
No flattery in this speech or that? For you,
Whate'er you say, there is no degradation;
These low thoughts are no inmates of your
mind,

Or, wherefore this disorder? You are vexed

As much by the intrusion of base views, Familiar to your adversaries, as they Were troubled should your qualities alight
Amid their murky souls; not otherwise,
A stray wolf which the winter forces down
20 From our bleak hills, suffices to affright
A village in the vales — while foresters Sleep calm, though all night long the famished troop
Snuff round and scratch against their crazy huts.

These evil thoughts are monsters, and will flee.

Paracelsus. May you be happy, Festus, my own friend!

Festus. Nay, further; the delights you fain would think

The superseders of your nobler aims,
Though ordinary and harmless stimulants,
Will ne'er content you. . . .

Paracelsus. Hush! I once despised
them,

30 But that soon passes. We are high at first
In our demand, nor will abate a jot
Of toil's strict value; but time passes o'er,
And humbler spirits accept what we refuse:

In short, when some such comfort is doled
out

As these delights, we cannot long retain Bitter contempt which urges us at first
To hurl it back, but hug it to our breast
And thankfully retire. This life of mine Must be lived out and a grave thoroughly earned:

40 I am just fit for that and nought beside.
I told you once, I cannot now enjoy Unless I deem my knowledge gains through
joy;

Nor can I know, but straight warm tears reveal

My need of linking also joy to knowledge:
So, on I drive, enjoying all I can,
And knowing all I can. I speak, of course,

Confusedly; this will better explain — feel here!

Quick beating, is it not? — a fire of the
heart

To work off some way, this as well as any.
So, Festus sees me fairly launched; his 50
calm

Compassionate look might have disturbed me once,

But now, far from rejecting, I invite
What bids me press the closer, lay myself
Open before him, and be soothed with pity:
I hope, if he command hope, and believe
As he directs me — satiating myself

With his enduring love. And Festus quits
me

To give place to some credulous disciple
Who holds that God is wise, but Paracelsus
Has his peculiar merits: I suck in 60
That homage, chuckle o'er that admiration,
And then dismiss the fool; for night is
come,

And I betake myself to study again,
Till patient searchings after hidden lore Half wring some bright truth from its prison; my frame

Trembles, my forehead's veins swell out, my hair

Tingles for triumph. Slow and sure the morn

Shall break on my pent room and dwindling lamp

And furnace dead, and scattered earths
and ores;

When, with a failing heart and throbbing 70
brow,

I must review my captured truth, sum up
Its value, trace what ends to what begins,
Its present power with its eventual bearings,

Latent affinities, the views it opens,
And its full length in perfecting my scheme,
I view it sternly circumscribed, cast down
From the high place my fond hopes yielded
it,

Proved worthless — which, in getting, yet had cost

Another wrench to this fast-falling frame.
Then, quick, the cup to quaff, that chases 80
sorrow!

I lapse back into youth, and take again
My fluttering pulse for evidence that God Means good to me, will make my cause his
own.

See! I have cast off this remorseless care
Which clogged a spirit born to soar so free,
And my dim chamber has become a tent,
Festus is sitting by me, and his Michal . . .
Why do you start? I say, she listening
here,

(For yonder — Würzburg through the orchard-bough!)

Motions as though such ardent words 90 should find

No echo in a maiden's quiet soul,
But her pure bosom heaves, her eyes fill
fast

-With tears, her sweet lips tremble all the while!

Ha, ha!

Festus. It seems, then, you expect to reap

No unreal joy from this your present
course,

But rather . . .

Paracelsus. Death! To die! I owe that much

To what, at least, I was. I should be sad
To live contented after such a fall,

To thrive and fatten after such reverse!

10 The whole plan is a makeshift, but will last

My time.

Festus. And you have never mused and
said,

"I had a noble purpose, and the strength
To compass it; but I have stopped half-

way,

"And wrongly given the first-fruits of my toil

"To objects little worthy of the gift.

"Why linger round them still? why clench my fault?

"Why seek for consolation in defeat,

"In vain endeavours to derive a beauty

"From ugliness? why seek to make the most

20 "Of what no power can change, nor strive instead

"With mighty effort to redeem the past

"And, gathering up the treasures thus cast
down,

"To hold a steadfast course till I arrive

"At their fit destination and my own?"

You have never pondered thus?

Paracelsus. Have I, you ask,
Often at midnight, when most fancies
come,

Would some such airy project visit me:

But ever at the end . . . or will you hear
The same thing in a tale, a parable?

30 You and I, wandering over the world wide,
Chance to set foot upon a desert coast.

Just as we cry, "No human voice before

"Broke the inveterate silence of these rocks!"

— Their querulous echo startles us; we
turn:

What ravaged structure still looks o'er the
sea?

Some characters remain, too! While we read,

The sharp salt wind, impatient for the last
Of even this record, wistfully comes and

goes,

Or sings what we recover, mocking it.

40 This is the record; and my voice, the wind's. [He sings.]

Over the sea our galleys went,
With cleaving prows in order brave
To a speeding wind and a bounding wave,

A gallant armament:

Each bark built out of a forest-tree

Left leafy and rough as first it grew,

And nailed all over the gaping sides,
Within and without, with black bull-hides,

Seethed in fat and suppld in flame,

To bear the playful billows' game: 50

So, each good ship was rude to see;

Rude and bare to the outward view,

But each upbore a stately tent

Where cedar pales in scented row

Kept out the flakes of the dancing brine,

And an awning drooped the mast
below,

In fold on fold of the purple fine,

That neither noontide nor starshine

Nor moonlight cold which maketh mad, 60

Might pierce the regal tenement.

When the sun dawned, oh, gay, and glad

We set the sail and plied the oar;

But when the night-wind blew like
breath,

For joy of one day's voyage more,

We sang together on the wide sea,

Like men at peace on a peaceful shore;

Each sail was loosed to the wind so free,

Each helm made sure by the twilight star,

And in a sleep as calm as death,

We, the voyagers from afar, 70

Lay stretched along, each weary crew

In a circle round its wondrous tent

Whence gleamed soft light and curled rich scent,

And with light and perfume, music too:

So the stars wheeled round, and the darkness past,

And at morn we started beside the mast,
And still each ship was sailing fast.

Now, one morn, land appeared — a speck
Dim trembling betwixt sea and sky:

"Avoid it," cried our pilot, "check 80

"The shout, restrain the eager eye!"

But the heaving sea was black behind

For many a night and many a day,

And land, though but a rock, drew nigh;

So, we broke the cedar pales away,

Let the purple awning flap in the wind,

And a statue bright was on every deck!

We shouted, every man of us,

And steered right into the harbour thus,

With pomp and pæan glorious. 90

A hundred shapes of lucid stone!

All day we built its shrine for each,

A shrine of rock for every one,

Nor paused till in the westering sun

We sat together on the beach
To sing because our task was done.
When lo! what shouts and merry songs!
What laughter all the distance stirs!
A loaded raft with happy throngs
Of gentle islanders!

"Our isles are just at hand," they cried,
"Like cloudlets faint in even sleeping;
"Our temple-gates are opened wide, 10 "Our olive-groves thick shade are keeping

"For these majestic forms"—they cried.
Oh, then we awoke with sudden start
From our deep dream, and knew, too
late,

How bare the rock, how desolate,
Which had received our precious freight:
Yet we called out—"Depart!

"Our gifts, once given, must here abide.
"Our work is done; we have no heart
"To mar our work,"—we cried.

10 Festus. In truth?

Paracelsus. Nay, wait: all this in tracings faint

On rugged stones strewn here and there, but piled

In order once: then follows—mark what follows!

"The sad rhyme of the men who proudly clung

"To their first fault, and withered in their
pride."

Festus. Come back then, Aureole; as you fear God, come!

This is foul sin; come back! Renounce
the past,

Forswear the future; look for joy no more,
But wait death's summons amid holy sights,

And trust me for the event—peace, if not
joy.

30 Return with me to Einsiedeln, dear
Aureole!

Paracelsus. No way, no way! it would not turn to good.

A spotless child sleeps on the flowering moss—

'Tis well for him; but when a sinful man, Envyng such slumber, may desire to put His guilt away, shall he return at once To rest by lying there? Our sires knew
well

(Spite of the grave discoveries of their sons)

The fitting course for such: dark cells,
dim lamps,

A stone floor one may writhe on like a worm:

40 No mossy pillow blue with violets!

Festus. I see no symptom of these absolute

And tyrannous passions. You are calmer
now.

This verse-making can purge you well
enough

Without the terrible penance you describe.
You love me still: the lusts you fear will never

Outrage your friend. To Einsiedeln, once
more!

Say but the word!

Paracelsus. No, no; those lusts forbid:
They crouch, I know, cowering with halfshut eye

Beside you; 'tis their nature. Thrust
yourself

Between them and their prey; let some 50
fool style me

Or king or quack, it matters not—then try

Your wisdom, urge them to forego their treat!

No, no; learn better and look deeper,
Festus!

If you knew how a devil sneers within me
While you are talking now of this, now
that,

As though we differed scarcely save in trifles!

Festus. Do we so differ? True, change must proceed,

Whether for good or ill; keep from me,
which!

Do not confide all secrets: I was born
To hope, and you . . .

Paracelsus. To trust: you know the 60
fruits!

Festus. Listen: I do believe, what you call trust

Was self-delusion at the best: for, see!
So long as God would kindly pioneer

A path for you, and screen you from the
world,

Procure you full exemption from man's lot, Man's common hopes and fears, on the mere pretext

Of your engagement in his service—
yield you

A limitless licence, make you God, in fact,
And turn your slave—you were content to

say

Most courtly praises! What is it, at last, 70
But selfishness without example? None

Could trace God's will so plain as you, while yours

Remained implied in it; but now you fail,
And we, who prate about that will, are fools!

In short, God's service is established here
As he determines fit, and not your way,

And this you cannot brook. Such discontent

Is weak. Renounce all creatureship at
once!

Affirm an absolute right to have and use Your energies; as though the rivers should 80
say—

- 'We rush to the ocean; what have we to do
 "With feeding streamlets, lingering in the vales,
 "Sleeping in lazy pools?" Set up that plea,
 That will be bold at least!
Paracelsus. 'Tis like enough.
 The serviceable spirits are those, no doubt,
 The East produces: lo, the master bids, —
 They wake, raise terraces and garden-grounds
 In one night's space; and, this done, straight begin Another century's sleep, to the great praise
 Of him that framed them wise and beautiful,
 Till a lamp's rubbing, or some chance akin,
 Wake them again. I am of different mould.
 I would have soothed my lord, and slaved for him
 And done him service past my narrow bond
 And thus I get rewarded for my pains!
 Beside, 'tis vain to talk of forwarding God's glory otherwise; this is alone
 The sphere of its increase, as far as men
 Increase it; why, then, look beyond this sphere?
 We are his glory; and if we be glorious,
 Is not the thing achieved?
Festus. Shall one like me
 Judge hearts like yours? Though years have changed you much,
 And you have left your first love, and retain Its empty shade to veil your crooked ways, Yet I still hold that you have honoured God.
 And who shall call your course without reward?
 For, wherefore this repining at defeat
 Had triumph ne'er inured you to high hopes?
 I urge you to forsake the life you curse,
 And what success attends me? — simply talk
 Of passion, weakness and remorse; in short,
 Anything but the naked truth — you choose
 This so-despised career, and cheaply hold My happiness, or rather other men's.
 Once more, return!
Paracelsus. And quickly. John the thief
 Has pilfered half my secrets by this time:
 And we depart by daybreak. I am weary,
 I know not how; not even the wine-cup soothes
 My brain to-night . . .
 Do you not thoroughly despise me, Festus?
 No flattery! One like you needs not be told
- We live and breathe deceiving and deceived.
 Do you not scorn me from your heart of hearts,
 Me and my cant, each petty subterfuge,
 My rhymes and all this frothy showers of words,
 My glozing self-deceit, my outward crust
 Of lies which wrap, as tetter, morphew, furfair Wrapt the sound flesh? — so, see you flatter not!
 Even God flatters: but my friend, at least, is true. I would depart, secure henceforth 54
 Against all further insult, hate and wrong
 From puny foes; my one friend's scorn shall brand me:
 No fear of sinking deeper!
Festus. No, dear Aureole!
 No, no; I came to counsel faithfully.
 There are old rules, made long ere we were born,
 By which I judge you. I, so fallible,
 So infinitely low beside your mighty Majestic spirit! — even I can see
 You own some higher law than ours which call Sin, what is no sin — weakness, what is 60
 strength.
 But I have only these, such as they are,
 To guide me; and I blame you where they bid,
 Only so long as blaming promises
 To win peace for your soul: the more, that sorrow
 Has fallen on me of late, and they have helped me
 So that I faint not under my distress.
 But wherefore should I scruple to avow
 In spite of all, as brother judging brother,
 Your fate is most inexplicable to me?
 And should you perish without recompense 70
 And satisfaction yet — too hastily
 I have relied on love: you may have sinned,
 But you have loved. As a mere human matter —
 As I would have God deal with fragile men
 In the end — I say that you will triumph yet!
Paracelsus. Have you felt sorrow, Festus? — 'tis because You love me. Sorrow, and sweet Michal yours!
 Well thought on: never let her know this last Dull winding-up of all: these miscreants dared Insult me — me she loved: — so, grieve 80 her not!
Festus. Your ill success can little grieve her now.
Paracelsus. Michal is dead! pray
 Christ we do not craze!

Festus. Aureole, dear Aureole, look not on me thus!

Fool, fool! this is the heart grown sorrow-proof —

I cannot bear those eyes.

Paracelsus. Nay, really dead?

Festus. 'Tis scarce a month.

Paracelsus. Stone dead! — then you have laid her

Among the flowers ere this. Now, do you know,

I can reveal a secret which shall comfort Even you. I have no julep, as men think, To cheat the grave; but a far better secret. Know, then, you did not ill to trust your love

10 To the cold earth: I have thought much of it:

For I believe we do not wholly die.

Festus. Aureole!

Paracelsus. Nay, do not laugh; there is a reason

For what I say: I think the soul can never Taste death. I am, just now, as you may see,

Very unfit to put so strange a thought

In an intelligible dress of words;

But take it as my trust, she is not dead.

Festus. But not on this account alone? you surely,

— Aureole, you have believed this all along?

20 Paracelsus. And Michal sleeps among the roots and dews,

While I am moved at Basil, and full of schemes

For Nuremberg, and hoping and despairing,

As though it mattered how the farce plays out,

So it be quickly played. Away, away!

Have your will, rabble! while we fight the prize,

Troop you in safety to the snug back-seats And leave a clear arena for the brave

30 About to perish for your sport! — Behold!

V. — PARACELSUS ATTAINS.

SCENE. — Salzburg; a cell in the Hospital of St. Sebastian. 1541.

FESTUS, PARACELSUS.

Festus. No change! The weary night is well-nigh spent,

30 The lamp burns low, and through the casement-bars

Grey morning glimmers feebly: yet no change!

Another night, and still no sigh has stirred That fallen discoloured mouth, no pang relit

Those fixed eyes, quenched by the decaying body,

Like torch-flame choked in dust. While all beside

Was breaking, to the last they held out bright,

As a stronghold where life intrenched itself;

But they are dead now — very blind and dead:

He will drowse into death without a groan.

My Aureole — my forgotten, ruined Aureole!

The days are gone, are gone! How grand thou wast!

And now not one of those who struck thee down —

Poor glorious spirit — concerns him even to stay

And satisfy himself his little hand Could turn God's image to a livid thing.

Another night, and yet no change! 'Tis much

That I should sit by him, and bathe his brow,

And chafe his hands; 'tis much: but he will sure

Know me, and look on me, and speak to me

Once more — but only once! His hollow 50 cheek

Looked all night long as though a creeping laugh

At his own state were just about to break From the dying man: my brain swam, my throat swelled,

And yet I could not turn away. In truth, They told me how, when first brought here, he seemed Resolved to live, to lose no faculty;

Thus striving to keep up his shattered strength,

Until they bore him to this stifling cell: When straight his features fell, an hour made white The flushed face, and relaxed the quiver- 60 ing limb,

Only the eye remained intense awhile As though it recognised the tomb-like place, And then he lay as here he lies.

Ay, here!

Here is earth's noblest, nobly garlanded — Her bravest champion with his well-won prize — Her best achievement, her sublime amends

For countless generations fleeting fast And followed by no trace; — the creature-

god She instances when angels would dispute

The title of her brood to rank with 70 them.

Angels, this is our angel! Those bright forms
We clothe with purple, crown and call to thrones,
Are human, but not his; those are but men
Whom other men press round and kneel before;
Those palaces are dwelt in by mankind;
Higher provision is for him you seek Amid our pomps and glories: see it here!
Behold earth's paragon! Now, raise thee, clay!

God! Thou art love! I build my faith on that.
10 Even as I watch beside thy tortured child
Unconscious whose hot tears fall fast by him,
So doth thy right hand guide us through the world
Wherein we stumble. God! what shall we say?
How has he sinned? How else should he have done?
Surely he sought thy praise — thy praise, for all
He might be busied by the task so much
As half forget awhile its proper end.
Dost thou well, Lord? Thou canst not but prefer
That I should range myself upon his side — 20 How could he stop at every step to set Thy glory forth? Hadst thou but granted him Success, thy honour would have crowned success,
A halo round a star. Or, say he erred, —
Save him, dear God; it will be like thee: bathe him
In light and life! Thou are not made like us;
We should be wroth in such a case; but thou 30 Forgivest — so, forgive these passionate thoughts
Which come unsought and will not pass away!
I know thee, who hast kept my path, and made Light for me in the darkness, tempering sorrow
So that it reached me like a solemn joy;
It were too strange that I should doubt thy love.
But what art thou? Thou madest him and knowest
How he was fashioned. I could never err
That way: the quiet place beside thy feet,
Reserved for me, was ever in my thoughts:
But he — thou shouldst have favoured him as well!
Ah! he wakens! Aureole, I am here! 'tis Festus!

I cast away all wishes save one wish —
Let him but know me, only speak to me! 46
He mutters; louder and louder; any other Than I, with brain less laden, could collect
What he pours forth. Dear Aureole, do but look!
Is it talking or singing, this he utters fast?
Misery that he should fix me with his eye,
Quick talking to some other all the while!
If he would husband this wild vehemence
Which frustrates its intent! — I heard, I know
I heard my name amid those rapid words.
Oh, he will know me yet! Could I divert 50
This current, lead it somehow gently back Into the channels of the past! — His eye
Brighter than ever! It must recognise me!

I am Erasmus: I am here to pray
That Paracelsus use his skill for me.
The schools of Paris and of Padua send
These questions for your learning to resolve.
We are your students, noble master: leave
This wretched cell, what business have you here?
Our class awaits you; come to us once 60
more!
(O Agony! the utmost I can do Touches him not; how else arrest his ear?)
I am commissioned . . . I shall craze like him.
Better be mute and see what God shall send.
Paracelsus. Stay, stay with me!
Festus. I will; I am come here
To stay with you — Festus, you loved of old;
Festus, you know, you must know!
Paracelsus. Festus! Where's
Aprile, then? Has he not chanted softly
The melodies I heard all night? I could
not
Get to him for a cold hand on my breast, 70
But I made out his music well enough, O well enough! If they have filled him
full
With magical music, as they freight a star
With light, and have remitted all his sin,
They will forgive me too, I too shall know!
Festus. Festus, your Festus!
Paracelsus. Ask him if Aprile Knows as he Loves — if I shall Love and
Know?
I try; but that cold hand, like lead — so cold!
Festus. My hand, see!
Paracelsus. Ah, the curse, Aprile,
Aprile!
We get so near — so very, very near!
'Tis an old tale: Jove strikes the Titans 80
down,

- Not when they set about their mountain-piling
But when another rock would crown the
work.
And Phaeton — doubtless his first radiant plunge
Astonished mortals, though the gods were
calm,
And Jove prepared his thunder: all old tales!
Festus. And what are these to you?
Paracelsus. Ay, fiends must laugh
So cruelly, so well! most like I never Could tread a single pleasure underfoot,
But they were grinning by my side, were chuckling
- 10 To see me toil and drop away by flakes!
Hell-spawn! I am glad, most glad, that thus I fail!
Your cunning has o'ershot its aim. One
year,
One month, perhaps, and I had served your
turn!
You should have curbed your spite awhile.
But now,
Who will believe 'twas you that held me
back?
Listen: there's shame and hissing and contempt,
And none but laughs who names me, none
but spits
Measureless scorn upon me, me alone,
The quack, the cheat, the liar, — all on
me!
- 20 And thus your famous plan to sink mankind
In silence and despair, by teaching them
One of their race had probed the inmost
truth,
Had done all man could do, yet failed no
less —
Your wise plan proves abortive. Men
despair?
Ha, ha! why, they are hooting the empiric,
The ignorant and incapable fool who rushed
Madly upon a work beyond his wits;
Nor doubt they but the simplest of themselves
Could bring the matter to triumphant issue.
- 30 So, pick and choose among them all, accursed!
Try now, persuade some other to slave for
you,
To ruin body and soul to work your ends!
No, no; I am the first and last, I think.
Festus. Dear friend, who are accursed?
who has done . . .
Paracelsus. What have I done? Fiends dare ask that? or you, Brave men? Oh, you can chime in boldly, backed
By the others! What had you to do, sage peers?
- Here stand my rivals; Latin, Arab, Jew, Greek, join dead hands against me: all I ask
Is, that the world enrol my name with theirs,
And even this poor privilege, it seems,
They range themselves, prepared to disallow.
Only observe! why, fiends may learn from
them!
How they talk calmly of my throes, my fierce Aspirings, terrible watchings, each one claiming
Its price of blood and brain; how they dissect
And sneeringly disparage the few truths Got at a life's cost; they too hanging the
while
About my neck, their lies misleading me
And their dead names browbeating me! 50
Grey crew,
Yet steeped in fresh malevolence from hell,
Is there a reason for your hate? My truths
Have shaken a little the palm about each prince?
Just think, Aprile, all these leering dotards Were bent on nothing less than to be crowned
As we! That yellow blear-eyed wretch in chief
To whom the rest cringe low with feigned respect,
Galen of Pergamos and hell — nay speak
The tale, old man! We met there face to face:
I said the crown should fall from thee. 60
Once more
We meet as in that ghastly vestibule:
Look to my brow! Have I redeemed my pledge?
Festus. Peace, peace; ah, see!
Paracelsus. Oh, emptiness of fame!
Oh Persic Zoroaster, lord of stars!
— Who said these old renowns, dead long ago,
Could make me overlook the living world
To gaze through gloom at where they stood, indeed,
But stand no longer? What a warm light
life
After the shade! In truth, my delicate witch,
My serpent-queen, you did but well to hide 70
The juggles I had else detected. Fire May well run harmless o'er a breast like
yours!
The cave was not so darkened by the
smoke
But that your white limbs dazzled me: oh
white,
And panting as they twinkled, wildly dancing!

I cared not for your passionate gestures
 then,
 But now I have forgotten the charm of charms,
 The foolish knowledge which I came to seek,
 While I remember that quaint dance; and
 thus
 I am come back, not for those mummeries,
 But to love you, and to kiss your little feet
 Soft as an ermine's winter coat!

Festus. A light
 Will struggle through these thronging words at last.

As in the angry and tumultuous West
 A soft star trembles through the drifting
 clouds.

These are the strivings of a spirit which hates

So sad a vault should coop it, and calls up
 The past to stand between it and its fate.
 Were he at Einsiedeln — or Michal here!

Paracelsus. Cruel! I seek her now —
 I kneel — I shriek —

I clasp her vesture — but she fades, still fades;

And she is gone; sweet human love is
 gone!

'Tis only when they spring to heaven that angels

Reveal themselves to you; they sit all day
 Beside you, and lie down at night by you Who care not for their presence, muse or sleep,

And all at once they leave you, and you know them!

We are so fooled, so cheated! Why, even
 now

I am not too secure against foul play;
 The shadows deepen and the walls contract:

No doubt some treachery is going on.
 'Tis very dusk. Where are we put,
 Aprile?

Have they left us in the lurch! This murky loathsome

Death-trap, this slaughter-house, is not the hall

In the golden city! Keep by me, Aprile!
 There is a hand groping amid the black-
 ness

To catch us. Have the spider-fingers got
 you,

Poet? Hold on me for your life! If once
 They pull you! — Hold!

'Tis but a dream — no more!
 I have you still; the sun comes out again;

Let us be happy: all will yet go well!
 Let us confer: is it not like, Aprile,

That spite of trouble, this ordeal passed,
 The value of my labours ascertained,

Just as some stream foams long among the rocks

But after glideth glassy to the sea,

So, full content shall henceforth be my lot?
 What think you, poet? Louder! Your clear voice

Vibrates too like a harp-string. Do you ask

How could I still remain on earth, should
 God

Grant me the great approval which I seek?
 I, you, and God can comprehend each other,

But men would murmur, and with cause
 enough;

For when they saw me, stainless of all sin,
 Preserved and sanctified by inward light, 50
 They would complain that comfort, shut
 from them,

I drank thus unspied; that they live on,
 Nor taste the quiet of a constant joy,
 For ache and care and doubt and weariness,
 While I am calm; help being vouchsafed
 to me,

And hid from them. — 'Twere best consider that!

You reason well, Aprile; but at least Let me know this, and die! Is this too
 much?

I will learn this, if God so please, and die!

If thou shalt please, dear God, if thou shalt 60
 please!

We are so weak, we know our motives
 least

In their confused beginning. It at first I sought . . . but wherefore bare my heart to thee?

I know thy mercy; and already thoughts
 Flock fast about my soul to comfort it,
 And intimate I cannot wholly fail,
 For love and praise would clasp me willingly

Could I resolve to seek them. Thou art
 good,

And I should be content. Yet — yet first show

I have done wrong in daring! Rather give 70
 The supernatural consciousness of strength Which fed my youth! Only one hour of
 that

With thee to help — O what should bar me then!

Lost, lost! Thus things are ordered here! 80
 God's creatures,

And yet he takes no pride in us! — none,
 none!

Truly there needs another life to come!
 If this be all — (I must tell Festus that)

And other life await us not — for one,
 I say 'tis a poor cheat, a stupid bungle,

A wretched failure. I, for one, protest 85
 Against it, and I hurl it back with scorn.

Well, onward though alone! Small time
 remains,

- And much to do: I must have fruit, must reap
Some profit from my toils. I doubt my body
Will hardly serve me through; while I have laboured
It has decayed; and now that I demand
Its best assistance, it will crumble fast:
A sad thought, a sad fate! How very full
Of wormwood 'tis, that just at altar-service,
The rapt hymn rising with the rolling
smoke,
When glory dawns and all is at the best,
10 The sacred fire may flicker and grow faint
And die for want of a wood-piler's help!
Thus fades the flagging body, and the
soul
Is pulled down in the overthrow. Well,
well —
Let men catch every word, let them lose
nought
Of what I say; something may yet be done.
- They are ruins! Trust me who am one of
you!
All ruins, glorious once, but lonely now.
It makes my heart sick to behold you crouch
Beside your desolate fane: the arches dim, 20 The crumbling columns grand against the moon,
Could I but rear them up once more — but that May never be, so leave them! Trust me,
friends,
Why should you linger here when I have built
A far resplendent temple, all your own?
Trust me, they are but ruins! See, Aprile, Men will not heed! Yet were I not prepared
With better refuge for them, tongue of mine Should ne'er reveal how blank their dwelling is:
I would sit down in silence with the rest.
- 30 Ha, what? you spit at me, you grin and shriek
Contempt into my ear — my ear which drank
God's accents once? you curse me? Why men, men,
I am not formed for it! Those hideous
eyes
Will be before me sleeping, waking, pray-
ing,
They will not let me even die. Spare, spare me,
Sinning or no, forget that, only spare me
The horrible scorn! You thought I could support it.
But now you see what silly fragile creature Cowers thus. I am not good nor bad
enough,
- Not Christ nor Cain, yet even Cain was 40
saved
From Hate like this. Let me but totter
back!
Perhaps I shall elude those jeers which creep
Into my very brain, and shut these scorched
Eyelids and keep those mocking faces out.
- Listen, Aprile! I am very calm:
Be not deceived, there is no passion here
Where the blood leaps like an imprisoned
thing:
I am calm: I will exterminate the race!
Enough of that: 'tis said and it shall be.
And now be merry: safe and sound am I 50
Who broke through their best ranks to get at you.
And such a havoc, such a rout, Aprile!
Festus. Have you no thought, no memory for me,
Aureole? I am so wretched — my pure
Michal
Is gone, and you alone are left me now,
And even you forget me. Take my
hand —
Lean on me thus. Do you not know me,
Aureole?
Paracelsus. Festus, my own friend, you are come at last?
As you say, 'tis an awful enterprise;
But you believe I shall go through with it: 60
'Tis like you, and I thank you. Thank him for me,
Dear Michal! See how bright St.
Saviour's spire
Flames in the sunset; all its figures quaint Gay in the glancing light: you might conceive them
A troop of yellow-vested white-haired Jews Bound for their own land where redemption dawns.
Festus. Not that blest time — not our youth's time, dear God!
Paracelsus. Ha — stay! true, I forget
— all is done since,
And he is come to judge me. How he speaks,
How calm, how well! yes, it is true, all 70
true;
All quackery; all deceit; myself can laugh
The first at it, if you desire: but still You know the obstacles which taught me tricks
So foreign to my nature — envy and hate,
Blind opposition, brutal prejudice,
Bald ignorance — what wonder if I sunk
To humour men the way they most approved?
My cheats were never palmed on such as
you,
Dear Festus! I will kneel if you require
me,

Impart the meagre knowledge I possess,
 Explain its bounded nature, and avow
 My insufficiency — whate'er you will:
 I give the fight up: let there be an end,
 A privacy, an obscure nook for me.
 I want to be forgotten even by God.
 But if that cannot be, dear Festus, lay me,
 When I shall die, within some narrow
 grave,
 Not by itself — for that would be too
 proud —
 But where such graves are thickest; let it
 look Nowise distinguished from the hillocks
 round,
 So that the peasant at his brother's bed
 May tread upon my own and know it not;
 And we shall all be equal at the last,
 Or classed according to life's natural ranks, Fathers, sons, brothers, friends — not rich, nor wise,
 Nor gifted: lay me thus, then say, "He lived
 "Too much advanced before his brother
 men;
 "They kept him still in front: 'twas for their good 20 "But yet a dangerous station. It were strange
 "That he should tell God he had never ranked
 "With men: so, here at least he is a man." Festus. That God shall take thee to his breast, dear spirit, Unto his breast, be sure! and here on
 earth
 30 Shall splendour sit upon thy name for ever.
 Sun! all the heaven is glad for thee: what care
 If lower mountains light their snowy phares
 At thine effulgence, yet acknowledge not The source of day? Their theft shall be their bale:
 30 For after-ages shall retrack thy beams,
 And put aside the crowd of busy ones
 And worship thee alone — the master
 mind,
 The thinker, the explorer, the creator!
 Then, who should sneer at the convulsive throes
 With which thy deeds were born, would scorn as well
 The sheet of winding subterranean fire Which, pent and writhing, sends no less at
 last
 Huge islands up amid the simmering sea.
 Behold thy might in me! thou hast infused 40 Thy soul in mine; and I am grand as thou,
 Seeing I comprehend thee — I so simple,
 Thou so august. I recognise thee first;
 I saw thee rise. I watched thee early and
 late,
 And though no glance reveal thou dost accept!

My homage — thus no less I proffer it,
 And bid thee enter gloriously thy rest.
Paracelsus. Festus!
Festus. I am for noble Aureole, God!
 I am upon his side, come weal or woe.
 His portion shall be mine. He has done
 well.
 I would have sinned, had I been strong 50
 enough,
 As he has sinned. Reward him or I waive Reward! If thou canst find no place for
 him,
 He shall be king elsewhere, and I will be
 His slave for ever. There are two of us.
Paracelsus. Dear Festus!
Festus. Here, dear Aureole! ever
 by you!
Paracelsus. Nay, speak on, or I dream again. Speak on!
 Some story, anything — only your voice.
 I shall dream else. Speak on! ay, leaning
 so!
Festus. Thus the Mayne glideth
 Where my Love abideth. 60
 Sleep's no softer: it proceeds
 On through lawns, on through meads,
 On and on, whate'er befall,
 Meandering and musical,
 Though the niggard pasturage
 Bears not on its shaven ledge
 Aught but weeds and waving grasses
 To view the river as it passes,
 Save here and there a scanty patch
 Of primroses too faint to catch 70
 A weary bee.
Paracelsus. More, more; say on!
Festus. And scarce it pushes Its gentle way through strangling rushes
 Where the glossy kingfisher Flutters when noon-heats are near,
 Glad the shelving banks to shun,
 Red and steaming in the sun,
 Where the shrew-mouse with pale
 throat
 Burrows, and the speckled stoat;
 Where the quick sandpipers flit 80
 In and out the marl and grit
 That seems to breed them, brown as
 they:
 Nought disturbs its quiet way,
 Save some lazy stork that springs,
 Trailing it with legs and wings,
 Whom the shy fox from the hill
 Rouses, creep he ne'er so still.
Paracelsus. My heart! they loose my heart, those simple words;
 Its darkness passes, which nought else could touch:
 Like some dark snake that force may not 90
 expel,
 Which glideth out to music sweet and low.
 What were you doing when your voice broke through

A chaos of ugly images? You, indeed!
Are you alone here?

Festus. All alone: you know me?

This cell?

Paracelsus. An unexceptionable vault:
Good brick and stone: the bats kept out,
the rats

Kept in: a snug nook: how should I mistake it?

Festus. But wherefore am I here?

Paracelsus. Ah, well remembered!
Why, for a purpose—for a purpose,
Festus!

'Tis like me: here I trifle while time fleets,
And this occasion, lost, will ne'er return.

10 You are here to be instructed. I will tell God's message; but I have so much to say,
I fear to leave half out. All is confused
No doubt; but doubtless you will learn in
time.

He would not else have brought you here:
no doubt

I shall see clearer soon.

Festus. Tell me but this—

You are not in despair?

Paracelsus. I? and for what?

Festus. Alas, alas! he knows not, as I feared!

Paracelsus. What is it you would ask me with that earnest

Dear searching face?

Festus. How feel you, Aureole?

Paracelsus. Well:

20 Well. 'Tis a strange thing: I am dying,
Festus,

And now that fast the storm of life subsides,

I first perceive how great the whirl has been.

I was calm then, who am so dizzy now—
Calm in the thick of the tempest, but no
less

A partner of its motion and mixed up
With its career. The hurricane is spent,
And the good boat speeds through the brightening weather;

But is it earth or sea that heaves below?

The gulf rolls like a meadow-swell, o'er-strewn

30 With ravaged boughs and remnants of the shore;

And now some islet, loosened from the
land,

Swims past with all its trees, sailing to ocean;

And now the air is full of uptorn canes,
Light strippings from the fan-trees, tamarisks

Unrooted, with their birds still clinging to
them,

All high in the wind. Even so my varied
life

Drifts by me; I am young, old, happy, sad,
Hoping, desponding, acting, taking rest,

And all at once: that is, those past conditions

Float back at once on me. If I select 44
Some special epoch from the crowd, 'tis but To will, and straight the rest dissolve
away,

And only that particular state is present
With all its long-forgotten circumstance
Distinct and vivid as at first—myself
A careless looker-on and nothing more,
Indifferent and amused, but nothing more.
And this is death: I understand it all.
New being waits me; new perceptions must

Be born in me before I plunge therein; 50
Which last is Death's affair; and while I
speak,

Minute by minute he is filling me
With power; and while my foot is on the threshold

Of boundless life—the doors unopened
yet,

All preparations not complete within—
I turn new knowledge upon old events,
And the effect is . . . but I must not tell;
It is not lawful. Your own turn will come One day. Wait, Festus! You will die like
me.

Festus. 'Tis of that past life that I burn 60
to hear.

Paracelsus. You wonder it engages me
just now?

In truth, I wonder too. What's life to me?
Where'er I look is fire, where'er I listen
Music, and where I tend bliss evermore.
Yet how can I refrain? 'Tis a refined Delight to view those chances,—one last view.

I am so near the perils I escape,
That I must play with them and turn them
over,

To feel how fully they are past and gone. 70
Still, it is like, some further cause exists
For this peculiar mood—some hidden purpose;

Did I not tell you something of it, Festus?
I had it fast, but it has somehow slipt
Away from me; it will return anon.

Festus. (Indeed his cheek seems young again, his voice

Complete with its old tones: that little
laugh

Concluding every phrase, with upturned
eye,

As though one stooped above his head to whom

He looked for confirmation and approval,
Where was it gone so long, so well pre- 80 served?

Then, the fore-finger pointing as he speaks,
Like one who traces in an open book
The matter he declares; 'tis many a year
Since I remarked it last: and this in him.
But now a ghastly wreck!)

And can it be,
 Dear Aureole, you have then found out at last
 That worldly things are utter vanity?
 That man is made for weakness, and should wait
 In patient ignorance, till God appoint . . .
Paracelsus. Ha, the purpose: the true purpose: that is it!
 How could I fail to apprehend! You here, I thus! But no more trifling: I see all, I know all: my last mission shall be done 10 If strength suffice. No trifling! Stay: this, posture Hardly befits one thus about to speak: I will arise.
Festus. Nay, Aureole, are you wild? You cannot leave your couch.
Paracelsus. No help; no help; Not even your hand. So! there, I stand once more!
 Speak from a couch? I never lectured thus.
 My gown — the scarlet lined with fur; now put
 The chain about my neck; my signet-ring Is still upon my hand, I think — even so; Last, my good sword; ah, trusty Azoth, leapest 20 Beneath thy master's grasp for the last time?
 This couch shall be my throne: I bid these walls
 Be consecrate, this wretched cell become A shrine, for here God speaks to men through me.
 Now, Festus, I am ready to begin.
Festus. I am dumb with wonder.
Paracelsus. Listen, therefore, Festus! There will be time enough, but none to spare.
 I must content myself with telling only The most important points. You doubtless feel That I am happy, Festus; very happy.
 30 Festus. 'Tis no delusion which uplifts him thus!
 Then you are pardoned, Aureole, all your sin?
Paracelsus. Ay, pardoned: yet why pardoned?
Festus. 'Tis God's praise
 That man is bound to seek, and you . . .
Paracelsus. Have lived!
 We have to live alone to set forth well God's praise. 'Tis true, I sinned much, as I thought,
 And in effect need mercy, for I strove To do that very thing; but, do your best Or worst, praise rises, and will rise for ever.
 Pardon from him, because of praise denied — 40 Who calls me to himself to exalt himself?

He might laugh as I laugh!
Festus. But all comes To the same thing. 'Tis fruitless for mankind
 To fret themselves with what concerns them not;
 They are no use that way: they should lie down
 Content as God has made them, nor go mad
 In thriveless cares to better what is ill
Paracelsus. No, no; mistake me not; let me not work
 More harm than I have worked! This is my case:
 If I go joyous back to God, yet bring No offering, if I render up my soul
 50 Without the fruits it was ordained to bear, If I appear the better to love God For sin, as one who has no claim on him, — Be not deceived! It may be surely thus
 With me, while higher prizes still await The mortal persevering to the end.
 Beside I am not all so valueless: I have been something, though too soon I left Following the instincts of that happy time.
Festus. What happy time? For God's sake, for man's sake, 60 What time was happy? All I hope to know That answer will decide. What happy time?
 * Paracelsus. When but the time I vowed myself to man?
Festus. Great God, thy judgments are inscrutable!
 * Paracelsus. Yes, it was in me; I was born for it —
 I, Paracelsus: it was mine by right. Doubtless a searching and impetuous soul Might learn from its own motions that some task
 Like this awaited it about the world;
 70 Might seek somewhere in this blank life of ours
 For fit delights to stay its longings vast; And, grappling Nature, so prevail on her
 To fill the creature full she dared thus frame
 Hungry for joy; and, bravely tyrannous
 Grow in demand, still craving more and more,
 And make each joy conceded prove a pledge
 Of other joy to follow — bating nought
 Of its desires, still seizing fresh pretence
 To turn the knowledge and the rapture wrong
 80 As an extreme, last boon, from destiny,
 Into occasion for new covetings,
 New strifes, new triumphs: — doubtless a strong soul,

Alone, unaided might attain to this,
 So glorious is our nature, so august
 Man's inborn uninstructed impulses,
 His naked spirit so majestic!
 But this was born in me; I was made so;
 Thus much time saved: the feverish appetites,
 The tumult of unproved desire, the unaimed
 Uncertain yearnings, aspirations blind, Distrust, mistake, and all that ends in tears
 10 Were saved me; thus I entered on my
 course.
 You may be sure I was not all exempt From human trouble; just so much of
 doubt
 As bade me plant a surer foot upon
 The sun-road, kept my eye unruined 'mid
 The fierce and flashing splendour, set my
 heart
 Trembling so much as warned me I stood
 there
 On sufferance — not to idly gaze, but cast Light on a darkling race; save for that
 doubt,
 I stood at first where all aspire at last 10 To stand: the secret of the world was mine.
 I knew, I felt, (perception unexpressed,
 Uncomprehended by our narrow thought,
 But somehow felt and known in every shift
 And change in the spirit, — nay, in every pore
 Of the body, even,) — what God is, what we are,
 What life is — how God tastes an infinite
 joy
 In infinite ways — one everlasting bliss,
 From whom all being emanates, all power
 Proceeds; in whom is life for evermore,
 30 Yet whom existence in its lowest form Includes; where dwells enjoyment there is he:
 With still a flying point of bliss remote,
 A happiness in store afar, a sphere
 Of distant glory in full view; thus climbs
 Pleasure its heights for ever and for ever.
 The centre-fire heaves underneath the
 earth,
 And the earth changes like a human face;
 The molten ore bursts up among the rocks,
 Winds into the stone's heart, outbranches bright
 40 In hidden mines, spots barren river-beds, Crumbles into fine sand where sunbeams bask —
 God joys therein. The wroth sea's waves are edged
 With foam, white as the bitten lip of hate,
 When, in the solitary waste, strange groups
 Of young volcanos come up, cyclops-like, Staring together with their eyes on flame —

God tastes a pleasure in their uncouth
 pride.
 Then all is still; earth is a wintry clod:
 But spring-wind, like a dancing psaltress, passes
 Over its breast to waken it, rare verdure 50
 Buds tenderly upon rough banks, between The withered tree-roots and the cracks of frost,
 Like a smile striving with a wrinkled face;
 The grass grows bright, the boughs are swoln with blooms
 Like chrysalids impatient for the air,
 The shining dorræ are busy, beetles run
 Along the furrows, ants make their ad;
 Above, birds fly in merry flocks, the lark
 Soars up and up, shivering for very joy;
 Afar the ocean sleeps; white fishing-gulls 60 Flit where the strand is purple with its
 tribe
 Of nested limpets; savage creatures seek Their loves in wood and plain — and God renews
 His ancient rapture. Thus he dwells in
 all,
 From life's minute beginnings, up at last
 To man — the consummation of this scheme
 Of being, the completion of this sphere
 Of life: whose attributes had here and
 there
 Been scattered o'er the visible world before, Asking to be combined, dim fragments 70
 meant
 To be united in some wondrous whole,
 Imperfect qualities throughout creation,
 Suggesting some one creature yet to make,
 Some point where all those scattered rays should meet
 Convergent in the faculties of man.
 Power — neither put forth blindly, nor controlled
 Calmly by perfect knowledge; to be used At risk, inspired or checked by hope and
 fear:
 Knowledge — not intuition, but the slow
 Uncertain fruit of an enhancing toil, 80 Strengthened by love: love — not serenely
 pure,
 But strong from weakness, like a chance-sown plant
 Which, cast on stubborn soil, puts forth changed buds
 And softer stains, unknown in happier climes;
 Love which endures and doubts and is oppressed
 And cherished, suffering much and much sustained,
 And blind, oft-failing, yet believing love,
 A half-enlightened, often-chequered
 trust: —
 Hints and previsions of which faculties,
 Are strewn confusedly everywhere about 90

The inferior natures, and all lead up higher,

All shape out dimly the superior race,
The heir of hopes too fair to turn out false,
And man appears at last. So far the seal
Is put on life; one stage of being complete,
One scheme wound up: and from the grand result

A supplementary reflux of light, Illustrates all the inferior grades, explains
Each back step in the circle. Not alone
For their possessor dawn those qualities,
But the new glory mixes with the heaven
And earth; man, once desried, imprints
for ever

His presence on all lifeless things: the winds

Are henceforth voices, wailing or a shout,
A querulous mutter or a quick gay laugh,
Never a senseless gust now man is born.
The herded pines commune and have deep
thoughts,

A secret they assemble to discuss
When the sun drops behind their trunks which glare

Like grates of hell: the peerless cup afloat
Of the lake-lily is an urn, some nymph Swims bearing high above her head: no
bird

Whistles unseen, but through the gaps
above

That let light in upon the gloomy woods,
A shape peeps from the breezy forest-top, Arch with small puckered mouth and mocking eye.

The morn has enterprise, deep quiet droops
With evening, triumph takes the sunset
hour,

Voluptuous transport ripens with the corn
Beneath a warm moon like a happy face:
— And this to fill us with regard for
man.

With apprehension of his passing worth,
Desire to work his proper nature out,
And ascertain his rank and final place,
For these things tend still upward, progress is

The law of life, man is not Man as yet.
Nor shall I deem his object served, his end Attained, his genuine strength put fairly
forth,

While only here and there a star dispels
The darkness, here and there a towering
mind

O'erlooks its prostrate fellows: when the host

Is out at once to the despair of night,
When all mankind alike is perfected,
Equal in full-blown powers — then, not till then,

I say, begins man's general infancy.
For wherefore make account of feverish starts

Of restless members of a dormant whole,

Impatient nerves which quiver while the body

Slumbers as in a grave? Oh long ago
The brow was twitched, the tremulous lids so astir,

The peaceful mouth disturbed; half-uttered speech

Ruffled the lip, and then the teeth were set,
The breath drawn sharp, the strong right-hand clenched stronger,

As it would pluck a lion by the jaw;
The glorious creature laughed out even in sleep!

But when full roused, each giant-limb
awake,

Each sinew strung, the great heart pulsing
fast,

He shall start up and stand on his own
earth,

Then shall his long triumphant march
begin,

Thence shall his being date, — thus wholly so roused,

What he achieves shall be set down to him.
When all the race is perfected alike

As man, that is; all tended to mankind,
And, man produced, all has its end thus
far:

But in completed man begins anew
A tendency to God. Prognostics told Man's near approach; so in man's self arise

August anticipations, symbols, types
Of a dim splendour ever on before
In that eternal circle life pursues.

For men begin to pass their nature's bound,

And find new hopes and cares which fast supplant

Their proper joys and griefs; they grow too great

For narrow creeds of right and wrong, which fade

Before the unmeasured thirst for good:
while peace

Rises within them ever more and more.
Such men are even now upon the earth,

Serene amid the half-formed creatures
round

Who should be saved by them and joined with them.

Such was my task, and I was born to it — so Free, as I said but now, from much that chains

Spirits, high-dowered but limited and vexed

By a divided and delusive aim,
A shadow mocking a reality

Whose truth avails not wholly to disperse
The fitting mimic called up by itself,

And so remains perplexed and nigh put
out

By its fantastic fellow's wavering gleam.
I, from the first, was never cheated thus:

- I never fashioned out a fancied good
Distinct from man's; a service to be done,
A glory to be ministered unto
With powers put forth at man's expense, withdrawn
From labouring in his behalf; a strength Denied that might avail him. I cared not Lest his success ran counter to success
Elsewhere: for God is glorified in man,
And to man's glory vowed I soul and limb.
10 Yet, constituted thus, and thus endowed,
I failed: I gazed on power till I grew blind.
Power; I could not take my eyes from
that:
That only, I thought, should be preserved, increased
At any risk, displayed, struck out at once —
The sign and note and character of man.
I saw no use in the past: only a scene
Of degradation, ugliness and tears,
The record of disgraces best forgotten,
A sullen page in human chronicles 20 Fit to erase. I saw no cause why man Should not stand all-sufficient even now,
Or why his annals should be forced to
tell
That once the tide of light, about to break Upon the world, was sealed within its
spring:
I would have had one day, one moment's space,
Change man's condition, push each slumbering claim
Of mastery o'er the elemental world
At once to full maturity, then roll
Oblivion o'er the work, and hide from man 30 What night had ushered morn. Not so,
dear child
Of after-days, wilt thou reject the past Big with deep warnings of the proper tenure
By which thou hast the earth: for thee the present
Shall have distinct and trembling beauty,
seen
Beside that past's own shade when, in relief,
Its brightness shall stand out: nor yet on
thee
Shall burst the future, as successive zones
Of several wonder open on some spirit Flying secure and glad from heaven to
heaven:
40 But thou shalt painfully attain to joy, While hope and fear and love shall keep thee man!
All this was hid from me: as one by one
My dreams grew dim, my wide aims circumscribed,
As actual good within my reach decreased, While obstacles sprung up this way and
that
To keep me from effecting half the sum,
Small as it proved; as objects, mean within
- The primal aggregate, seemed, even the
least,
Itself a match for my concentrated
strength —
What wonder if I saw no way to shun 50 Despair? The power I sought for man, seemed God's.
In this conjuncture, as I prayed to die,
A strange adventure made me know, one sin
Had spotted my career from its uprise;
I saw Aprile — my Aprile there!
And as the poor melodious wretch dis-burthened
His heart, and moaned his weakness in my
ear,
I learned my own deep error; love's undoing Taught me the worth of love in man's estate,
And what proportion love should hold with 60 power
In his right constitution; love preceding Power, and with much power, always much more love;
Love still too straitened in his present means
And earnest for new power to set love free.
I learned this, and supposed the whole was learned:
And thus, when men received with stupid
wonder
My first revealings, would have worshipped
me,
And I despised and loathed their proffered
praise —
When, with awakened eyes, they took revenge
70 For past credulity in casting shame
On my real knowledge, and I hated them —
It was not strange I saw no good in man,
To overbalance all the wear and waste
Of faculties, displayed in vain, but born To prosper in some better sphere: and
why?
In my own heart love had not been made wise
To trace love's faint beginnings in man-
kind,
To know even hate is but a mask of love's,
To see a good in evil, and a hope
In ill-success; to sympathise, be proud 80 Of their half-reasons, faint aspirings, dim Struggles for truth, their poorest fallacies, Their prejudice and fears and cares and doubts;
All with a touch of nobleness, despite Their error, upward tending all though
weak,
Like plants in mines which never saw the
sun,
But dream of him, and guess where he may
be,
And do their best to climb and get to him.
All this I knew not, and I failed. Let men

Regard me, and the poet dead long ago
 Who loved too rashly; and shape forth a third
 And better-tempered spirit, warned by
 both:
 As from the over-radiant star too mad
 To drink the life-springs, beamless thence itself —
 And the dark orb which borders the abyss, Ingulfed in icy night, — might have its
 course
 A temperate and equidistant world.
 Meanwhile, I have done well, though not all well.
 As yet men cannot do without contempt;
 'Tis for their good, and therefore fit awhile
 That they reject the weak, and scorn the
 false,
 Rather than praise the strong and true, in
 me:
 But after, they will know me. If I stoop
 Into a dark tremendous sea of cloud,
 It is but for a time; I press God's lamp Close to my breast; its splendour, soon or
 late,
 Will pierce the gloom: I shall emerge one
 day.
 You understand me? I have said enough?
Festus. Now die, dear Aureole!
Paracelsus. Festus, let my hand —
 This hand, lie in your own, my own true
 friend!
 Aprile! Hand in hand with you, Aprile!

Festus. And this was Paracelsus!

NOTE.

THE liberties I have taken with my subject are very trifling; and the reader may slip the foregoing scenes between the leaves of any memoir of Paracelsus he pleases, by way of commentary. To prove this, I subjoin a popular account, translated from the "Biographie Uni-verselle, Paris," 1822, which I select, not as the best, certainly, but as being at hand, and sufficiently concise for my purpose. I also append a few notes, in order to correct those parts which do not bear out my own view of the character of Paracelsus; and have incorporated with them a notice or two, illustrative of the poem
 itself.

"PARACELSUS (Philippus Aureolus
 Theophrastus Bombastus ab Hohenheim) was born in 1493 at Einsiedeln,⁽¹⁾ a little town in the canton of Schwyz, some leagues distant from Zurich. His father, who exercised the profession of medicine at Villach in Carinthia, was nearly related to George Bombast de Hohenheim, who became afterward Grand Prior of the Order of Malta: consequently Paracelsus could not spring from the dregs of the people, as Thomas Erastus, his sworn enemy, pretends.* It appears that his elementary education was much neglected, and that he spent part of his youth in pursuing the life common to the travelling litterati of the age; that is to say, in wandering from country to country, predicting the future by astrology and cheiromancy, evoking apparitions, and practising the different operations of magic and alchemy, in which he had been initiated whether by his father or by various ecclesiastics, among the number of whom he particularises the Abbot Tritheim,⁽²⁾ and many German bishops.

"As Paracelsus displays everywhere an ignorance of the rudiments of the most ordinary knowledge, it is not probable that he ever studied seriously in the schools:
 he contented himself with visiting the Universities of Germany, France, and Italy; and in spite of his boasting himself to have been the ornament of those institutions, there is no proof of his having legally acquired the title of Doctor, which he assumes. It is only known that he applied himself long, under the direction of the wealthy Sigismund Fugger of Schwatz, to the discovery of the Magnum Opus.

"Paracelsus travelled among the mountains of Bohemia, in the East, and in Sweden, in order to inspect the labours of the miners, to be initiated in the mysteries of the oriental adepts, and to observe the secrets of nature and the famous mountain of loadstone.⁽³⁾ He professes also to have visited Spain, Portugal, Prussia, Poland, and Transylvania; everywhere communicating freely, not merely with the physicians, but the old women, charlatans and conjurers of these several lands.
 It is even believed that he extended his journeyings as far as Egypt and Tartary, and that he accompanied the son of the Khan of the Tartars to Constantinople,

*I shall disguise M. Renauldin's next sentence a little. "Hic (Erastus sc.) Paracelsum trimum a milite quodam, alii a sue exectum fe-runt: constat imberbem illum, mulierumque osorem fuisse." A standing High-Dutch joke in those days at the expense of a number of learned men, as may be seen by referring to such rubbish as Melander's "Jocoseria," etc. In the prints from his portrait by Tintoretto, painted a year before his death, Paracelsus is barbatus, at all events. But Erastus was never without a good reason for his faith — e.g. "Helvetium fuisse (Paracelsum) vix credo, vix enim ea regio tale monstrum ediderit." (De Medicina Nova.)

for the purpose of obtaining the secret of the tincture of Trismegistus from a Greek who inhabited that capital.

"The period of his return to Germany is unknown: it is only certain that, at about the age of thirty-three, many astonishing cures which he wrought on eminent personages procured him such a celebrity, that he was called in 1526, on the recommendation of Ecolampadius,⁽⁴⁾ to fill a chair of physic and surgery at the University of Basil. There Paracelsus began by burning publicly in the amphitheatre the works of Avicenna and Galen, assuring his auditors that the latches of his shoes were more instructed than those two physicians; that all Universities, all writers put together, were less gifted than the hairs of his beard and of the crown of his head; and that, in a word, he was to be regarded as the legitimate monarch of medicine. 'You shall follow me,' cried he, 'you, Avicenna, Galen, Rhasis, Montagnana, Mesues, you, gentlemen of Paris, Montpellier, Germany, Cologne, Vienna,* and whomsoever the Rhine and Danube nourish; you who inhabit the isles of the sea; you, likewise, Dalmatians, Athenians; thou, Arab; thou, Greek; thou, Jew: all shall follow me, and the monarchy shall be mine.†

"But at Basil it was speedily perceived that the new Professor was no better than an egregious quack. Scarcely a year elapsed before his lectures had fairly driven away an audience incapable of comprehending their emphatic jargon. That which above all contributed to sully his reputation was the debauched life he led. According to the testimony of Oporinus, who lived two years in his intimacy, Paracelsus scarcely ever ascended the lecture-desk unless half drunk, and only

* Erastus, who relates this, here oddly remarks, "mirum quod non et Garamantos, Indos et Anglos adjunxit." Not so wonderful neither, if we believe what another adversary "had heard somewhere," — that all Paracelsus' system came of his pillaging "Anglum quendam, Rogerium Bacchonem."

† See his works passim. I must give one specimen: — Somebody had been styling him "Luther alter." "And why not?" (he asks, as he well might). "Luther is abundantly learned, therefore you hate him and me; but we are at least a match for you. — Nam et contra vos et vestros universos principes Avicennam, Galenum, Aristotelem, etc. me satis superque munitum esse novi. Et vertex iste meus calvus ac depilis multo plura et sublimiora novit quam vester vel Avicenna vel universæ academie. Prodit, et signum date, qui viri sitis, quid roboris habeatis? quid autem sitis? Doctores et magistri, pediculos pectentes et fricantes podicem." (Frag. Med.)

dictated to his secretaries when in a state of intoxication: if summoned to attend the sick, he rarely proceeded thither without previously drenching himself with wine. He was accustomed to retire to bed without changing his clothes; sometimes he spent the night in pot-houses with peasants, and in the morning knew no longer what he was about; and, nevertheless, up to the age of twenty-five his only drink had been water.⁽⁵⁾

"At length, fearful of being punished for a serious outrage on a magistrate,⁽⁶⁾ he fled from Basil towards the end of the year 1527, and took refuge in Alsatia, whither he caused Oporinus to follow with his chemical apparatus.

"He then entered once more upon the career of ambulatory theosophist.‡ Accordingly we find him at Colmar in 1528; at Nuremberg in 1529; at St. Gall in 1531; at Pfeffers in 1535; and at Augsburg in 1536: he next made some stay in Moravia, where he still further compromised his reputation by the loss of many distinguished patients, which compelled him to betake himself to Vienna; from thence he passed into Hungary; and in 1538 was at Villach, where he dedicated his 'Chronicle' to the States of Carinthia, in gratitude for the many kindnesses with which they had honoured his father. Finally, from Mindelheim, which he visited in 1540, Paracelsus proceeded to Salzburg, where he died in the Hospital of St. Stephen (Sebastian is meant), Sept. 24, 1541." — (Here follows a criticism on his writings, which I omit.)

(1) Paracelsus would seem to be a fantastic version of Von Hohenheim; Einsiedeln is the Latinised Eremus, whence Paracelsus is sometimes called, as in the correspondence of Erasmus, Eremita; Bombast, his proper name, probably acquired, from the characteristic phraseology of his lectures, that unlucky signification which it has ever since retained.

(2) Then Bishop of Spanheim, and residing at Würzburg in Franconia; a town situated in a grassy fertile country, whence its name, Herbipolis. He was much visited there by learned men, as may be seen by his "Epistolæ Familiares," Hag. 1536: among others, by his staunch friend Cornelius Agrippa, to whom he dates thence, in 1510, a letter in answer to the dedicatory epistle prefixed to the treatise De Occult. Philosoph., which last contains the following ominous allusion to Agrippa's sojourn: "Quum nuper tecum, R. P. in cœnobio tuo apud Herbipolim aliquamdiu conversatus, multa de chymicis, multa de magicis, multa de cabalisticis, cæterisque quæ adhuc in occulto delitescunt, arcanis scientiis atque artibus una contulissemus," etc.

‡ "So migratory a life could afford Paracelsus but little leisure for application to books, and accordingly he informs us that for the space of ten years he never opened a single volume, and that his whole medical library was not composed of six sheets: in effect, the inventory drawn up after his death states that the only books which he left were the Bible, the New Testament, the Commentaries of St. Jerome on the Gospels, a printed volume on Medicine, and seven manuscripts."

(3) "Inexplebilis illa aviditas naturæ perscrutandi secreta et reconditarum supellectile scientiarum animum locupletandi, uno eodemque loco diu persistere non patiebatur, sed Mercurii instar, omnes terras, nationes et urbes perlustrandi igniculos supponebat, ut cum viris naturæ scrutatoribus, chymicis præsertim, ore tenus conferret, et quæ diuturnis laboribus nocturnisque vigiliis invenerant una vel altera communicatione obtineret." (Bitiskius in Præfat.) "Patris auxilio primum, deinde propria industria doctissimos viros in Germania, Italia, Gallia, Hispania, aliisque Europæ regionibus, nactus est præceptores; quorum liberali doctrina, et potissimum propria inquisitione ut qui esset ingenio acutissimo ac fere divino, tantum profecit, ut multi testati sint, in universa philosophia, tam ardua, tam arcana et abdita eruisse mortalium neminem." (Melch. Adam. in Vit. Germ. Medic.) "Paracelsus qui in intima naturæ viscera sic penitus introierit, metallorum stirpiumque vires et facultates tam incredibili ingenii acumine exploraverit ac perviderit, ad morbos omnes vel desperatos et opinione hominum insanabiles percurandum; ut cum Theophrasto nata primum medicina perfectaque videtur." (Petri Rami Orat. de Basilea.) His passion for wandering is best described in his own words: "Ecce amatorem adolescentem difficillimi itineris hæud piget, ut venustam saltem puellam vel fœminam aspiciat: quanto minus nobilissimarum artium amore laboris ac cujuslibet tædii pigebit?" etc. ("Defensiones Septem adversus æmulos suos." 1573. Def. 4ta. "De peregrinationibus et exilio.")

(4) The reader may remember that it was in conjunction with Ecolampadius, then Divinity Professor at Basil, that Zuinglius published in 1528 an answer to Luther's Confession of Faith; and that both proceeded in company to the subsequent conference with Luther and Melanchthon at Marburg. Their letters fill a large volume. — "D. D. Johannis Ecolampadii et Huldrici Zuinglii Epistolarum lib. quatuor." Bas. 1536. It must be also observed that Zuinglius began to preach in 1516, and at Zurich in 1519, and that in 1525 the Mass was abolished in the cantons. The tenets of Ecolampadius were supposed to be more evangelical than those up to that period maintained by the glorious German, and our brave Bishop Fisher attacked them as the fouler heresy: — "About this time arose out of Luther's school one Ecolampadius, like a mighty and fierce giant; who, as his master had gone beyond the Church, went beyond his master (or else it had been impossible he could have been reputed the better scholar), who denied the real presence; him, this worthy champion (the Bishop) sets upon, and with five books (like so many smooth stones taken out of the river that doth always run with living water) slays the Philistine; which five books were written in the year of our Lord 1526, at which time he had governed the see of Rochester twenty years." (Life of Bishop Fisher, 1655.) Now, there is no doubt of the Protestantism of Paracelsus, Erasmus, Agrippa, etc., but the nonconformity of Paracelsus was always scandalous. L. Crasso ("Elogj d'Huomini Letterati," Ven. 1666) informs us that his books were excommunicated by the Church. Quenstedt (de Patr. Doct.) affirms "nec tantum novæ medicinæ, verum etiam novæ theologiæ autor est." Delrio, in his Disquisit. Magicar. classes him among those "partim atheos, partim hæreticos" (lib. i. cap. 3). "Omnino tamen multa theologica in ejusdem scriptis plane atheismum olent, ac duriuscule sonant in auribus vere Christiani." (D. Gabrielis Claudi Schediasma de Tinct. Univ. Norimb. 1736.) I shall only add one more authority: — "Oporinus dicit se (Paracelsum) aliquando Lutherum et Papam, non minus quam nunc Galenum et Hippocratem redacturum in ordinem minabatur, neque enim eorum qui hactenus in scripturam sacram scripsissent, sive veteres, sive recentiores, quenquam scripturæ nucleum recte eruisse, sed circa corticem et quasi membranam tantum hære." (Th. Erastus, Disputat. de Med. Nova.) These and similar notions had their due effect on Oporinus, who, says Zuingerus, in his "Theatrum," "longum vale dixit ei (Paracelso), ne ob præceptoris, aliqui amicissimi, horrendas blasphemias ipse quoque aliquando pœnas Deo Opt. Max. lueret."

(5) His defenders allow the drunkenness. Take a sample of their excuses:

"Gentis hoc, non viri vitium est, a Taciti seculo ad nostrum usque non interrupto filo devolutum, sinceritati forte Germanæ coævum, et nescio an aliquo consanguinitatis vinculo junctum. (Bitiskius.) The other charges were chiefly trumped up by Oporinus: "Domi, quod Oporinus amanuensis ejus sæpe narravit nunquam nisi potus ad explicanda sua accessit, atque in medio conclavi ad columinam τετυφωμένους assistens, apprehenso manibus capulo ensis, cujus κοίλωμα hospitium præbuit, ut aiunt, spiritui familiari, imaginationes aut concepta sua protulit: — alii illud quod in capulo habuit, ab ipso Azoth appellatum, medicinam fuisse præstantissimam aut lapidem Philosophicum putant." (Melch. Adam.) This famous sword was no laughing-matter in those days, and it is now a material feature in the popular idea of Paracelsus. I recollect a couple of allusions to it in our own literature, at the moment.

Ne had been known the Danish Gonswart,
Or Paracelsus with his long sword.

'Volpone,' act ii. scene 2.

Bumbastus kept a devil's bird
Shut in the pummel of his sword,
That taught him all the cunning pranks
Of past and future mountebanks.

'Hudibras,' part ii. cant. 3.

This Azoth was simply "laudanum suum." But in his time he was commonly believed to possess the double tincture — the power of curing diseases and transmuting metals. Oporinus often witnessed, as he declares, both these effects, as did also Franciscus, the servant of Paracelsus, who describes, in a letter to Neander, a successful projection at which he was present, and the results of which, good golden ingots, were confided to his keeping. For the other quality, let the following notice vouch among many others: — "Degebat Theophrastus Norimbergæ prociſus a medentibus illius urbis, et vaniloquus deceptorque proclamatus, qui, ut laboranti famæ subveniat, viros quosdam autoritatis summæ in Republica illa adit, et infamiæ amoliendæ, artique suæ asserendæ, specimen ejus pollicetur editurum, nullo stipendio vel accepto pretio, horum faciles præbentium aures jussu elephantiacos aliquot, a communione hominum cæterorum segregatos, et in valetudinarium detrusos, alieno arbitrio eliguntur, quos virtute singulari remediſſimorum suorum Theophrastus a fœda Græcorum lepra mundat, pristinæque sanitati restituit; conservat illustre harum curationum urbs in archivis suis testi-monium." (Bitiskius.)* It is to be remarked that Oporinus afterwards repented of his treachery: "Sed resipuit tandem, et quem vivum convitiis insectatus fuerat defunctum veneratione prosequutus, infames famæ præceptoris morsus in remorsus conscientiæ conversi poenitentia, heu nimis tarda, vulnera clausere exanimi quæ spiranti infixierant." For these "bites" of Oporinus, see Disputat. Erasti, and Andrea Jocisci "Oratio de Vit. ob. Opori," for the "remorse," Mic. Toxita in pref. Testamenti, and Conringius (otherwise an enemy of Paracelsus), who says it was contained in a letter from Oporinus to Doctor Vegerus.†

Whatever the moderns may think of these marvellous attributes, the title of Paracelsus to be considered the father of modern chemistry is indisputable. Gerardus Vossius, "De Philos* et Philos^{um} sectis," thus prefaces the ninth section of cap. 9, "De Chymia" — "Nobilem hanc medicinæ partem, diu sepultam avorum ætate, quasi ab orco revocavit Th. Paracelsus." I suppose many hints lie scattered in his neglected books, which clever appropriators have since developed with applause. Thus, it appears from his treatise "De Phlebotomia," and elsewhere, that he had discovered the circulation of the blood and the sanguification of the heart; as did after him Realdo Colombo, and still more perfectly Andrea Cesalpino of Arezzo, as Bayle and Bartoli observe. Even Lavater quotes a passage from his work "De Natura Rerum," on practical Physiognomy, in which the definitions and axioms are precise enough: he adds, "though an astrological enthusiast, a man of prodigious genius." See Holcroft's translation, vol. iii. p. 179 — "The Eyes." While on the subject of the writings of Paracelsus, I may explain a passage in the third part of the Poem. He was, as I have said, unwilling to publish his works, but in effect did publish a vast number. Valentius (in Præfat. in Paramyr.) declares "quod ad librorum Paracelsi copiam attinet, audio, a Germanis prope trecentos recenseri." "O fœcunditas ingenii!" adds he, appositely. Many of these were, however, spurious; and Fred. Bitiskius gives his good edition (3 vols. fol. Gen. 1658) "rejectis suppositis solo ipsius nomine superbientibus quorum ingens circumfertur numerus." The rest were "charissimum et pretiosissimum authoris pignus, extorsum potius ab illo quam obtentum." "Jam minime eo volente atque jubente hæc ipsius scripta in lucem prodisse videntur; quippe quæ muro inclusa ipso absente, servi cujusdam indicio, furto surrepta atque sublata sunt," says Valentius. These have been the study of a host of commentators, amongst whose labours are most notable, Petri Severini, "Idea Medicinæ Philosophiæ. Bas. 1571;" Mic. Toxetis, "Onomastica. Arg. 1574;" Dornei, "Dict.

* The premature death of Paracelsus casts no manner of doubt on the fact of his having possessed the Elixir Vitæ: the alchemists have abundant reasons to adduce, from which I select the following, as explanatory of a property of the Tincture not calculated on by its votaries: — "Objectionem illam, quod Paracelsus non fuerit longævus, nonnulli quoque solvunt per rationes physicas: vita nimirum abbreviationem fortasse talibus accidere posse, ob Tincturam frequentiore ac largiore dosi sumtam, dum a summe efficaci et penetrabili hujus virtute calor innatus quasi suffocatur." (Gabrielis Clauderi S hediasma.)

† For a good defence of Paracelsus I refer the reader to Olaus Borrichius' treatise — "Hermetis etc. Sapientia vindicata," 1674. Or, if he is no more learned than myself in such matters, I mention simply that Paracelsus introduced the use of Mercury and Laudanum.

Parac. Franc. 1584;" and "Pi Philæ Compendium cum scholiis auctore Leone Suavio. Paris." (This last, a good book.)

(6) A disgraceful affair. One Liechtenfels, a canon, having been rescued in extremis by the "laudanum" of Paracelsus, refused the stipulated fee, and was supported in his meanness by the authorities, whose interference Paracelsus would not brook. His own liberality was allowed by his bitterest foes, who found a ready solution of his indifference to profit in the aforesaid sword-handle and its guest. His freedom from the besetting sin of a profession he abhorred — (as he curiously says somewhere, "Quis quæso deinceps honorem deferat professione tali, quæ a tam facinorosis nebulonibus obitur et administratur?") — is recorded in his epitaph, which affirms — "Bona sua in pauperes distribuenda collocandaque erogavit," honoravit, or ordinavit — for accounts differ.

STRAFFORD;

A TRAGEDY.

1837.

[Acted 1st May 1837 at Covent Garden Theatre, Mr. Macready as Strafford and Miss Helen Faucit as Lady Carlisle.]

DEDICATED, IN ALL AFFECTIONATE ADMIRATION

TO

WILLIAM C. MACREADY

LONDON: April 23, 1837.

STRAFFORD.

PERSONS.

CHARLES I.
Earl of HOLLAND.
Lord SAVILE.
Sir HENRY VANE.
WENTWORTH, Viscount WENTWORTH,
Earl of STRAFFORD.
JOHN PYM.
JOHN HAMPDEN.
The younger VANE.
DENZIL HOLLIS.
BENJAMIN RUDYARD.
NATHANIEL FIENNES.
Earl of LOUDON.
MAXWELL, Usher of the Black Rod.
A Puritan.
Queen HENRIETTA.
LUCY PERCY, Countess of Carlisle.

Presbyterians, Scots Commissioners, Adherents of Strafford, Secretaries, Officers of the Court, &c. Two of Strafford's children.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — A House near Whitehall.
HAMPDEN, HOLLIS, the younger VANE, RUDYARD, FIENNES and many of the Presbyterian Party: LOUDON and other Scots Commissioners.

Vane. I say, if he be here —

Rudyard. (And he is here!) — Hollis. For England's sake let every man be still

Nor speak of him, so much as say his
name,
Till Pym rejoin us! Rudyard! Henry
Vane!
One rash conclusion may decide our
course :
And with it England's fate — think —
England's fate!
Hampden, for England's sake they should be still!
Vane. You say so, Hollis? Well, I must be still.
It is indeed too bitter that one man,
Any one man's mere presence, should suspend
England's combined endeavour: little need
To name him!
Rudyard. For you are his brother,
Hollis!
Hampden. Shame on you, Rudyard!
time to tell him that,
When he forgets the Mother of us all.
Rudyard. Do I forget her?
Hampden. You talk idle hate Against her foe: is that so strange a
thing?
Is hating Wentworth all the help she needs?
A Puritan. The Philistine strode, cursing as he went:
But David — five smooth pebbles from the brook
Within his scrip . . .
Rudyard. Be you as still as David!
Fiennes. Here's Rudyard not ashamed to wag a tongue
Stiff with ten years' disuse of Parliaments:
Why, when the last sat, Wentworth sat with us!

Rudyard. Let's hope for news of them now he returns —
 He that was safe in Ireland, as we thought!
 — But I'll abide Pym's coming.
Vane. Now, by Heaven,
 Then may be cool who can, silent who will —
 Some have a gift that way! Wentworth is here,
 Here, and the King's safe closeted with him
 Ere this. And when I think on all that's past
 Since that man left us, how his single arm
 Rolled the advancing good of England back
 And set the awful past up in its place, Exalting Dagon where the Ark should be, —
 How that man has made firm the fickle King (Hampden, I will speak out!) — in aught he feared
 To venture on before; taught tyranny
 Her dismal trade, the use of all her tools,
 To ply the scourge yet screw the gag so close
 That strangled agony bleeds mute to death;
 How he turns Ireland to a private stage
 For training infant villanies, new ways
 Of wringing treasure out of tears and blood,
 Unheard oppressions nourished in the dark
 To try how much man's nature can endure
 — If he dies under it, what harm? if not,
 Why, one more trick is added to the rest
 Worth a king's knowing, and what Ireland bears England may learn to bear: — how all this while
 That man has set himself to one dear task,
 The bringing Charles to relish more and more Power, power without law, power and blood too — Can I be still?
Hampden. For that you should be still.
Vane. Oh Hampden, then and now!
 The year he left us,
 The People in full Parliament could wrest
 The Bill of Rights from the reluctant King;
 And now, he'll find in an obscure small room
 A stealthy gathering of great-hearted men
 That take up England's cause: England is here!
Hampden. And who despairs of England?
Rudyard. That do I,
 If Wentworth comes to rule her. I am sick
 To think her wretched masters, Hamilton,
 The muckworm Cottington, the maniac Laud,
 May yet be longed-for back again. I say,

I do despair.
Vane. And, Rudyard, I'll say this — Which all true men say after me, not loud
 But solemnly and as you'd say a prayer!
 This King, who treads our England under-foot,
 Has just so much . . . it may be fear or craft,
 As bids him pause at each fresh outrage;
 friends,
 He needs some sterner hand to grasp his own,
 Some voice to ask, "Why shrink? Am I not by?"
 Now, one whom England loved for serving 50
 her,
 Found in his heart to say, "I know where best
 "The iron heel shall bruise her, for she leans
 "Upon me when you trample." Witness, you!
 So Wentworth heartened Charles, so England fell.
 But inasmuch as life is hard to take
 From England . . .
Many Voices. Go on, Vane! 'Tis well said, Vane!
Vane. — Who has not so forgotten Runnymede! — Voices. 'Tis well and bravely spoken, Vane! Go on!
Vane. — There are some little signs of late she knows
 The ground no place for her. She glances 6
 round,
 Wentworth has dropped the hand, is gone his way
 On other service: what if she arise?
 No! the King beckons, and beside him stands
 The same bad man once more, with the same smile
 And the same gesture. Now shall England crouch,
 Or catch at us and rise?
Voices. The Renegade!
 Haman! Ahithophel!
Hampden. Gentlemen of the North,
 It was not thus the night your claims were urged,
 And we pronounced the League and Covenant,
 The cause of Scotland, England's cause as 74
 well:
 Vane there, sat motionless the whole night through.
Vane. Hampden!
Fiennes. Stay, Vane!
Loudon. Be just and patient, Vane!
Vane. Mind how you counsel patience, Loudon! you Have still a Parliament, and this your League

To back it; you are free in Scotland still:

While we are brothers, hope's for England yet.

But know you wherefore Wentworth comes? to quench

This last of hopes? that he brings war with him?

Know you the man's self? what he dares? Loudon. We know,

All know — 'tis nothing new.

Vane. And what's new, then, in calling for his life? Why, Pym himself —

You must have heard — ere Wentworth dropped our cause

He would see Pym first; there were many more

10 Strong on the people's side and friends of his,

Eliot that's dead, Rudyard and Hampden here,

But for these Wentworth cared not; only, Pym

He would see — Pym and he were sworn, 'tis said,

To live and die together; so, they met At Greenwich. Wentworth, you are sure, was long,

Specious enough, the devil's argument Lost nothing on his lips; he'd have Pym own

A patriot could not play a purer part Than follow in his track; they two combined

10 Might put down England. Well, Pym heard him out;

One glance — you know Pym's eye — one word was all:

"You leave us, Wentworth! while your head is on,

"I'll not leave you."

Hampden. Has he left Wentworth, then?

Has England lost him? Will you let him speak,

Or put your crude surmises in his mouth?

Away with this! Will you have Pym or Vane?

Voices. Wait Pym's arrival! Pym shall speak.

Hampden. Meanwhile Let Loudon read the Parliament's report

From Edinburgh: our last hope, as Vane says,

30 Is in the stand it makes. Loudon!

Vane. No, no!

Silent I can be: not indifferent!

Hampden. Then each keep silence, praying God to spare

His anger, cast not England quite away In this her visitation!

A Puritan.

Seven years long

The Midianite drove Israel into dens And caves. Till God sent forth a mighty man, Pym enters.

Even Gideon!

Pym. Wentworth's come: nor sickness, care,

The ravaged body nor the ruined soul, More than the winds and waves that beat his ship,

Could keep him from the King. He has not reached

Whitehall: they've hurried up a Council there

To lose no time and find him work enough. Where's Loudon? your Scots' Parliament . . .

Loudon. Holds firm: We were about to read reports.

Pym. The King Has just dissolved your Parliament.

Loudon and other Scots. Great God! An oath-breaker! Stand by us, England, then!

Pym. The King's too sanguine; doubtless Wentworth's here;

But still some little form might be kept up. Hampden. Now speak, Vane! Rudyard, you had much to say!

Hollis. The rumour's false, then . . .

Pym. Ay, the Court gives out 50 His own concerns have brought him back:

I know

Tis the King calls him. Wentworth supersedes

The tribe of Cottingtons and Hamiltons Whose part is played; there's talk enough, by this, —

Merciful talk, the King thinks: time is now To turn the record's last and bloody leaf

Which, chronicling a nation's great despair, Tells they were long rebellious, and their lord

Indulgent, till, all kind expedients tried, He drew the sword on them and reigned in 60

peace.

Laud's laying his religion on the Scots Was the last gentle entry: the new page Shall run, the King thinks, "Wentworth thrust it down

"At the sword's point."

A Puritan. I'll do your bidding, Pym, England's and God's — one blow!

Pym. A goodly thing — We all say, friends, it is a goodly thing

To right that England. Heaven grows dark above:

Let's snatch one moment ere the thunder fall,

To say how well the English spirit comes out

Beneath it! All have done their best, 70 indeed,

From lion Eliot, that grand Englishman,
To the least here: and who, the least one
here,
When she is saved (for her redemption
dawns
Dimly, most dimly, but it dawns — it dawns)
Who'd give at any price his hope away
Of being named along with the Great
Men?
We would not — no, we would not give that up!

Hampden. And one name shall be dearer than all names.

When children, yet unborn, are taught that
name
After their fathers', — taught what matchless man . . .

Pym. . . . Saved England? What if Wentworth's should be still

That name?

Rudyard and others. We have just said it, Pym! His death

Saves her! We said it — there's no way
beside!

I'll do God's bidding, Pym! They struck down Joab

And purged the land.

Vane. No villanous striking-down!

Rudyard. No, a calm vengeance: let the whole land rise

And shout for it. No Feltons!

Pym. Rudyard, no!

England rejects all Feltons; most of all Since Wentworth . . . Hampden, say the trust again

Of England in her servants — but I'll
think

You know me, all of you. Then, I believe,
Spite of the past, Wentworth rejoins you,
friends!

Vane and others. Wentworth? Apostate! Judas! Double-dyed

A traitor! Is it Pym, indeed . . .

Pym. . . . Who says

Vane never knew that Wentworth, loved that man,

Was used to stroll with him, arm locked in
arm,

Along the streets to see the people pass,
And read in every island-countenance

Fresh argument for God against the King, —

Never sat down, say, in the very house Where Eliot's brow grew broad with noble

thoughts,
(You've joined us, Hampden — Hollis, you as well,)

And then left talking over Gracchus'
death . . .

Vane. To frame, we know it well, the choicest clause

In the Petition of Right: he framed such clause

One month before he took at the King's
hand

His Northern Presidency, which that Bill Denounced.

Pym. Too true! Never more, never more

Walked we together! Most alone I went.
I have had friends — all here are fast my
friends —

But I shall never quite forget that friend.
And yet it could not but be real in him!

You, Vane, — you, Rudyard, have no right to trust

To Wentworth: but can no one hope with
me?

Hampden, will Wentworth dare shed English blood?

Like water?

Hampden. Ireland is Acelanda.

Pym. Will he turn Scotland to a hunting-ground

To please the King, now that he knows the King?

The People or the King? and that King,
Charles!

Hampden. Pym, all here know you: 50 you'll not set your heart

On any baseless dream. But say one deed
Of Wentworth's since he left us . . .

Vane. [Shouting without.
There! he comes,

And they shout for him! Wentworth's at Whitehall,

The King embracing him, now, as we
speak,

And he, to be his match in courtesies,
Taking the whole war's risk upon himself,

Now, while you tell us here how changed
he is!

Hear you?

Pym. And yet if 'tis a dream, no more,
That Wentworth chose their side, and brought the King

To love it as though Laud had loved it first, 60
And the Queen after; — that he led their

cause

Calm to success, and kept it spotless
through,

So that our very eyes could look upon
The travail of our souls, and close content

That violence, which something mars even
right

Which sanctions it, had taken off no grace
From its serene regard. Only a dream!

Hampden. We meet here to accomplish certain good

By obvious means, and keep tradition up
Of free assemblages, else obsolete, 70

In this poor chamber: nor without effect
Has friend met friend to counsel and con-

firm,

As, listening to the beats of England's heart,
We spoke its wants to Scotland's prompt

reply

By these her delegates. Remains alone
That word grow deed, as with God's help it shall —

But with the devil's hindrance, who doubts
too?

Looked we or no that tyranny should turn
Her engines of oppression to their use?
Whereof, suppose the worst be Wentworth
here —

Shall we break off the tactics which succeed

In drawing out our formidablist foe, Let bickering and disunion take their
place?

10 Or count his presence as our conquest's
proof,

And keep the old arms at their steady
play?

Proceed to England's work! Fiennes, read the list!

Fiennes. Ship-money is refused or fiercely paid

In every county, save the northern parts
Where Wentworth's influence

[Shouting.

Vane. I, in England's name, Declare her work, this way, at end! Till
now,

Up to this moment, peaceful strife was best,
We English had free leave to think; till
now,

We had a shadow of a Parliament

20 In Scotland. But all's changed: they change the first,

They try brute-force for law, they, first of
all . . .

Voices. Good! Talk enough! The old true hearts with Vane!

Vane. Till we crush Wentworth for her,
there's no act

Serves England!

Voices. Vane for England!

Pym. Pym should be Something to England. I seek Wentworth,

friends.

SCENE II. — Whitehall.

Lady CARLISLE and WENTWORTH.

Wentworth. And the King?

Lady Carlisle. Wentworth, lean on me! Sit then!

I'll tell you all; this horrible fatigue
Will kill you.

Wentworth. No; — or, Lucy, just your
arm;

I'll not sit till I've cleared this up with him:

30 After that, rest. The King?

Lady Carlisle. Confides in you.

Wentworth. Why? or, why now? —

They have kind throats, the knaves!
'hout for me — they!

Lady Carlisle. You come so strangely
soon:

Yet we took measures to keep off the crowd —

Did they shout for you?

Wentworth. Wherefore should they not?

Does the King take such measures for himself?

Beside, there's such a dearth of malcontents,

You say!

Lady Carlisle. I said but few dared carp
at you.

Wentworth. At me? at us, I hope! The King and I!

He's surely not disposed to let me hear
The fame away from him of these late 40 deeds

In Ireland? I am yet his instrument
Be it for well or ill? He trusts me, too!

Lady Carlisle. The King, dear Wentworth, purposes, I said,

To grant you, in the face of all the Court . . .

Wentworth. All the Court! Evermore
the Court about us!

Savile and Holland, Hamilton and Vane
About us, — then the King will grant me
— what?

That he for once put these aside and say —
"Tell me your whole mind, Wentworth!"

Lady Carlisle. You professed

You would be calm. 50

Wentworth. Lucy, and I am calm!

How else shall I do all I come to do,
Broken, as you may see, body and mind,

How shall I serve the King? Time wastes
meanwhile,

You have not told me half. His footstep!
No.

Quick, then, before I meet him, — I am
calm —

Why does the King distrust me?

Lady Carlisle. He does not

Distrust you.

Wentworth. Lucy, you can help me;
you

Have even seemed to care for me: one
word!

Is it the Queen?

Lady Carlisle. No, not the Queen:
the party

That poisons the Queen's ear, Savile and 60
Holland.

Wentworth. I know, I know: old Vane, too, he's one too?

Go on — and he's made Secretary. Well?
Or leave them out and go straight to the charge —

The charge!

Lady Carlisle. Oh, there's no charge,
no precise charge;

Only they sneer, make light of — one may
say,

Nibble at what you do.

Wentworth. I know! but, Lucy, I reckoned on you from the first! — Go on! — Was sure could I once see this gentle friend

When I arrived, she'd throw an hour away To help her . . . what am I?

Lady Carlisle. You thought of me, Dear Wentworth?

Wentworth. But go on! The party here!

Lady Carlisle. They do not think your Irish government

Of that surpassing value. . .

Wentworth. The one thing Of value! The one service that the crown May count on! All that keeps these very Vanes

In power, to vex me — not that they do vex, Only it might vex some to hear that service Decried, the sole support that's left the King!

Lady Carlisle. So the Archbishop says.

Wentworth. Ah? well, perhaps

The only hand held up in my defence May be old Laud's! These Hollands then, these Saviles Nibble? They nibble? — that's the very word!

Lady Carlisle. Your profit in the Customs, Bristol says,

Exceeds the due proportion: while the tax . . .

Wentworth. Enough! 'tis too unworthy, — I am not

So patient as I thought. What's Pym about?

Lady Carlisle. Pym?

Wentworth. Pym and the People.

Lady Carlisle. Oh, the Faction! Extinct — of no account: there'll never be Another Parliament.

Wentworth. Tell Savile that! You may know — (ay, you do — the creatures here Never forget!) that in my earliest life I was not . . . much that I am now! The

King

May take my word on points concerning

Pym

Before Lord Savile's, Lucy, or if not,

I bid them ruin their wise selves, not me, These Vanes and Hollands! I'll not be their tool

Who might be Pym's friend yet. But there's the King!

Where is he?

Lady Carlisle. Just apprised that you arrive.

Wentworth. And why not here to meet me? I was told

He sent for me, nay, longed for me.

Lady Carlisle. Because, —

He is now . . . I think a Council's sitting now

About this Scots affair.

Wentworth. A Council sits?

They have not taken a decided course

Without me in the matter?

Lady Carlisle. I should say . . .

Wentworth. The war? They cannot have agreed to that?

Not the Scots' war? — without consulting me —

Me, that am here to show how rash it is, How easy to dispense with? — Ah, you too Against me! well, — the King may take his time.

— Forget it, Lucy! Cares make peevish: mine

Weigh me (but 'tis a secret) to my grave.

Lady Carlisle. For life or death I am your own, dear friend! [Goes out.]

Wentworth. Heartless! but all are heartless here. Go now,

Forsake the People!

I did not forsake The People: they shall know it, when the King

Will trust me! — who trusts all beside at once,

While I have not spoke Vane and Savile fair,

And am not trusted: have but saved the throne:

Have not picked up the Queen's glove prettily,

And am not trusted. But he'll see me now.

Weston is dead: the Queen's half English now —

More English: one decisive word will brush

These insects from . . . the step I know so well!

The King! But now, to tell him . . . no — to ask

What's in me he distrusts: — or, best begin By proving that this frightful Scots affair

Is just what I foretold. So much to say, And the flesh fails, now, and the time is come, And one false step no way to be repaired.

You were avenged, Pym, could you look on me.

PYM enters.

Wentworth. I little thought of you just then.

Pym. No? I Think always of you, Wentworth.

Wentworth. The old voice! I wait the King, sir.

Pym. True — you look so pale! A Council sits within; when that breaks up

He'll see you.

Wentworth. Sir, I thank you.

Pym. Oh, thank Laud! 74

You know when Laud once gets on Church affairs

The case is desperate: he'll not be long To-day: he only means to prove, to-day, We English all are mad to have a hand In butchering the Scots for serving God After their fathers' fashion: only that!

Wentworth. Sir, keep your jests for those who relish them!

(Does he enjoy their confidence?) 'Tis kind

To tell me what the Council does.

Pym. You grudge
10 That I should know it had resolved on war Before you came? no need: you shall have all

The credit, trust me!

Wentworth. Have the Council dared — They have not dared . . . that is — I know you not.

Farewell, sir: times are changed.

Pym. — Since we two met At Greenwich? Yes: poor patriots though we be,

You cut a figure, makes some slight return For your exploits in Ireland! Changed indeed,

Could our friend Eliot look from out his grave!

Ah, Wentworth, one thing for acquaintance' sake,

20 Just to decide a question; have you, now, Felt your old self since you forsook us?

Wentworth. Sir!

Pym. Spare me the gesture! you misapprehend.

Think not I mean the advantage is with me. I was about to say that, for my part, I never quite held up my head since then — Was quite myself since then: for first, you see,

I lost all credit after that event

With those who recollect how sure I was Wentworth would outdo Eliot on our side.

30 Forgive me: Savile, old Vane, Holland here,

Eschew plain-speaking: 'tis a trick I keep.

Wentworth. How, when, where, Savile, Vane, and Holland speak, Plainly or otherwise, would have my scorn, All of my scorn, sir . . .

Pym. . . . Did not my poor thoughts Claim somewhat?

Wentworth. Keep your thoughts! believe the King

Mistrusts me for their prattle, all these Vane's

And Saviles! make your mind up, o' God's love,

That I am discontented with the King!

Pym. Why, you may be: I should be, that I know,

40 Were I like you.
Wentworth. Like me?

Pym.

I care not much

For titles: our friend Eliot died no lord, Hampden's no lord, and Savile is a lord; But you care, since you sold your soul for one.

I can't think, therefore, your soul's purchaser

Did well to laugh you to such utter scorn When you twice prayed so humbly for its price,

The thirty silver pieces . . . I should say, The Earldom you expected, still expect, And may. Your letters were the moving-est!

Console yourself: I've borne him prayers 50 just now

From Scotland not to be oppressed by Laud,

Words moving in their way: he'll pay, be sure,

As much attention as to those you sent.

Wentworth. False, sir! Who showed them you? Suppose it so,

The King did very well . . . nay, I was glad

When it was shown me: I refused, the first!

John Pym, you were my friend — forbear me once!

Pym. Oh, Wentworth, ancient brother of my soul,

That all should come to this!

Wentworth. Leave me!

Pym. My friend, Why should I leave you?

Wentworth. To tell Rudyard this, And Hampden this!

Pym. Whose faces once were bright At my approach, now sad with doubt and fear,

Because I hope in you — yes, Wentworth, you

Who never mean to ruin England — you Who shake off, with God's help, an obscene dream

In this Ezekiel chamber, where it crept Upon you first, and wake, yourself, your true

And proper self, our Leader, England's Chief,

And Hampden's friend!

This is the proudest day!

Come, Wentworth! Do not even see the 60 King!

The rough old room will seem itself again! We'll both go in together: you've not seen

Hampden so long: come: and there's Fiennes: you'll have

To know young Vane. This is the proudest day!

[THE KING enters. WENTWORTH lets fall PYM's hand.

Charles. Arrived my lord? — This gentleman, we know

Was your old friend.

The Scots shall be informed
What we determine for their happiness.

[Pym goes out.]
You have made haste, my lord.

Wentworth. Sir, I am come . . .

Charles. To see an old familiar — nay,
'tis well;

Aid us with his experience: this Scots'
League

And Covenant spreads too far, and we have proofs

That they intrigue with France: the Faction too,

Whereof your friend there is the head and front,

Abets them, — as he boasted, very like.

Wentworth. Sir, trust me! but for this once, trust me, sir!

Charles. What can you mean?

Wentworth. That you should trust me, sir!

Oh — not for my sake! but 'tis sad, so sad
That for distrusting me, you suffer — you

Whom I would die to serve: sir, do you
think

That I would die to serve you?

Charles. But rise, Wentworth!

Wentworth. What shall convince you?

What does Savile do

To prove him . . . Ah, one can't tear out one's heart

And show it, how sincere a thing it is!

Charles. Have I not trusted you?

Wentworth. Say aught but that!

There is my comfort, mark you: all will be So different when you trust me — as you shall!

It has not been your fault, — I was away, Mistook, maligned, how was the King to
know?

I am here, now — he means to trust me,
now —

All will go on so well!

Charles. Be sure I do —

I've heard that I should trust you: as you
came,

Your friend, the Countess, told me . . .

Wentworth. No, — hear nothing —

Be told nothing about me! — you're not told

Your right-hand serves you, or your children love you!

Charles. You love me, Wentworth:
rise!

Wentworth. I can speak now.

I have no right to hide the truth. 'Tis I Can save you: only I. Sir, what must be?

Charles. Since Laud's assured (the minutes are within)

— Loath as I am to spill my subjects'
blood . . .

Wentworth. That is, he'll have a war:
what's done is done!

Charles. They have intrigued with France; that's clear to Laud.

Wentworth. Has Laud suggested any way to meet

The war's expense?

Charles. He'd not decide so far

Until you joined us.

Wentworth. Most considerate!

He's certain they intrigue with France, 40 these Scots?

The People would be with us.

Charles. Pym should know.

Wentworth. The People for us — were the People for us!

Sir, a great thought comes to reward your
trust:

Summon a Parliament! in Ireland first,
Then, here.

Charles. In truth?

Wentworth. That saves us! that puts off

The war, gives time to right their grievances —

To talk with Pym. I know the Faction, —
Laud

So styles it, — tutors Scotland: all their plans

Suppose no Parliament: in calling one

You take them by surprise. Produce the 50
proofs

Of Scotland's treason; then bid England
help:

Even Pym will not refuse.

Charles. You would begin

With Ireland?

Wentworth. Take no care for that:
that's sure

To prosper.

Charles. You shall rule me. You were best

Return at once: but take this ere you go!
Now, do I trust you? You're an Earl: my

Friend

Of Friends: yes, while . . . You hear me
not!

Wentworth. Say it all o'er again — but once again:

The first was for the music: once again!

Charles. Strafford, my friend, there may 60 have been reports,

Vain rumours. Henceforth touching Strafford is

To touch the apple of my sight: why gaze
So earnestly?

Wentworth. I am grown young again,
And foolish. What was it we spoke of?

Charles. Ireland,

The Parliament, —

Wentworth. I may go when I will?

— Now?

Charles. Are you tired so soon of us?

Wentworth. My King!

But you will not so utterly abhor
A Parliament? I'd serve you any way.

Charles. You said just now this was the only way.

Wentworth. Sir, I will serve you.

Charles. Strafford, spare yourself: You are so sick, they tell me.

Wentworth. 'Tis my soul That's well and prospers now.

This Parliament — We'll summon it, the English one — I'll care

For everything. You shall not need them much.

Charles. If they prove restive . . .

Wentworth. I shall be with you.

Charles. Ere they assemble?

Wentworth. I will come, or else

Deposit this infirm humanity

10 I the dust. My whole heart stays with you, my King!

[As WENTWORTH goes out, the QUEEN enters.]

Charles. That man must love me.

Queen. Is it over then?

Why, he looks yellower than ever! Well, At least we shall not hear eternally

Of service — services: he's paid at least. Charles. Not done with: he engages to surpass

All yet performed in Ireland.

Queen. I had thought

Nothing beyond was ever to be done. The war, Charles — will he raise supplies enough?

Charles. We've hit on an expedient; he . . . that is,

6 I have advised . . . we have decided on The calling — in Ireland — of a Parliament.

Queen. O truly! You agree to that?

Is that

The first fruit of his counsel? But I guessed

As much.

Charles. This is too idle, Henriette! I should know best. He will strain every nerve,

And once a precedent established . . .

Queen. Notice How sure he is of a long term of favour! He'll see the next, and the next after that;

No end to Parliaments!

Charles. Well, it is done.

50 He talks it smoothly, doubtless. If, indeed,

The Commons here . . .

Queen. Here! you will summon them Here? Would I were in France again to see

A King!

Charles. But, Henriette . . .

Queen. Oh, the Scots see clear!

Why should they bear your rule?

Charles. But listen, sweet

Queen. Let Wentworth listen — you confide in him!

Charles. I do not, love, — I do not so confide!

The Parliament shall never trouble us . . . Nay, hear me! I have schemes, such schemes: we'll buy

The leaders off: without that, Wentworth's counsel

Had ne'er prevailed on me. Perhaps I call it

To have excuse for breaking it for ever, And whose will then the blame be? See you not?

Come, dearest! — look, the little fairy, now,

That cannot reach my shoulder! Dearest, come!

ACT II.

SCENE I. — (As in Act I. Scene I.)

The same Party enters.

Rudyard. Twelve subsidies!

Vane. Oh, Rudyard, do not laugh At least!

Rudyard. True: Strafford called the Parliament —

'Tis he should laugh!

A Puritan. Out of the serpent's root Comes forth a cockatrice.

Fiennes. — A stinging one, If that's the Parliament: twelve subsidies! A stinging one! but, brother, where's your word

For Strafford's other nest-egg, the Scots' war?

The Puritan. His fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

Fiennes. Shall be? It chips the shell, man; peeps abroad.

Twelve subsidies! — Why, how now, Vane?

Rudyard. Peace, Fiennes!

Fiennes. Ah? — But he was not more a dupe than I,

Or you, or any here, the day that Pym Returned with the good news. Look up, friend Vane!

We all believed that Strafford meant us well

In summoning the Parliament.

HAMPDEN enters.

Vane. Now, Hampden, Clear me! I would have leave to sleep again:

I'd look the People in the face again: Clear me from having, from the first, hoped, dreamed Better of Strafford!

Hampden. You may grow one day
A steadfast light to England, Henry Vane!

Rudyard. Meantime, by flashes I make shift to see

Strafford revived our Parliaments; before,
War was but talked of; there's an army,
now:

Still, we've a Parliament! Poor Ireland bears

Another wrench (she dies the hardest
death!) —

Why, speak of it in Parliament! and lo,
'Tis spoken, so console yourselves!

Piennes. The jest!

We clamoured, I suppose, thus long, to win
The privilege of laying on our backs

A sorer burden than the King dares lay!

Rudyard. Mark now: we meet at length, complaints pour in

From every county, all the land cries out
On loans and levies, curses ship-money, Calls vengeance on the Star Chamber; we lend

An ear. Ay, lend them all the ears you have!"

Puts in the King; "my subjects, as you
find,

"Are fretful, and conceive great things of
you.

"Just listen to them, friends; you'll sanction me

"The measures they most wince at, make them yours,

"Instead of mine, I know: and, to begin,
"They say my levies pinch them, — raise me straight

"Twelve subsidies!"

Piennes. All England cannot furnish Twelve subsidies!

Hollis. But Strafford, just returned From Ireland — what has he to do with
that?

How could he speak his mind? He left
before

The Parliament assembled. Pym, who knows

Strafford . . .

Rudyard. Would I were sure we know ourselves!

What is for good, what, bad — who friend, who foe!

Hollis. Do you count Parliaments no
gain?

Rudyard. A gain?

While the King's creatures overbalance us?
— There's going on, beside, among ourselves

A quiet, slow, but most effectual course
Of buying over, sapping, leavening

The lump till all is leaven. Glanville's
gone.

I'll put a case; had not the Court declared
That no sum short of just twelve subsidies

Will be accepted by the King — our House,
I say, would have consented to that offer 40
To let us buy off ship-money!

Hollis. Most like,
If, say, six subsidies will buy it off,
The House . . .

Rudyard. Will grant them! Hampden, do you hear?

Congratulate with me! the King's the
king,

And gains his point at last — our own assent

To that detested tax? All's over, then!
There's no more taking refuge in this room,

Protesting, "Let the King do what he will,
"We, England, are no party to our shame:

"Our day will come!" Congratulate with 50
me!

Pym enters.

Vane. Pym, Strafford called this Parliament, you say,

But we'll not have our Parliaments like those

In Ireland, Pym!

Rudyard. Let him stand forth,
your friend!

One doubtful act hides far too many sins;
It can be stretched no more, and, to my

mind,
Begins to drop from those it covered.

Other Voices. Good!

Let him avow himself! No fitter time!
We wait thus long for you.

Rudyard. Perhaps, too long!
Since nothing but the madness of the

Court,
In thus unmasking its designs at once, 6
Has saved us from betraying England.

Stay —

This Parliament is Strafford's: let us vote
Our list of grievances too black by far

To suffer talk of subsidies: or best,
That ship-money's disposed of long ago

By England: any vote that's broad enough:
And then let Strafford, for the love of it,

Support his Parliament!

Vane. And vote as well
No war to be with Scotland! Hear you,
Pym?

We'll vote, no war! No part nor lot in it 79
For England!

Many Voices. Vote, no war! Stop the new levies!

No Bishops' war! At once! When next we meet!

Pym. Much more when next we meet!
Friends, which of you

Since first the course of Strafford was in
doubt,

Has fallen the most away in soul from me?
Vane. I sat apart, even now under God's eye,

Pondering the words that should denounce you, Pym,

In presence of us all, as one at league With England's enemy.

Pym. You are a good And gallant spirit, Henry. Take my hand And say you pardon me for all the pain Till now! Strafford is wholly ours.

Many Voices. Sure? sure?

Pym. Most sure: for Charles dissolves the Parliament While I speak here.

— And I must speak, friends, now! Strafford is ours. The King detects the change, 10 Casts Strafford off for ever, and resumes His ancient path: no Parliament for us, No Strafford for the King!

Come, all of you, To bid the King farewell, predict success To his Scots' expedition, and receive Strafford, our comrade now. The next will be Indeed a Parliament!

Vane. Forgive me, Pym!

Voices. This looks like truth: Strafford can have, indeed, No choice.

Pym. Friends, follow me! He's with the King.

Come, Hampden and come, Rudyard, and come, Vane!

10 This is no sullen day for England, sirs! Strafford shall tell you!

Voices. To Whitehall then! Come!

SCENE II. — Whitehall.

CHARLES and STRAFFORD.

Charles. Strafford!

Strafford. Is it a dream? my papers, here —

Thus, as I left them, all the plans you found So happy — (look! the track you pressed my hand

For pointing out) — and in this very room, Over these very plans, you tell me, sir, With the same face, too — tell me just one thing

That ruins them! How's this? What may this mean?

Sir, who has done this?

Charles. Strafford, who but I?

30 You bade me put the rest away: indeed You are alone.

Strafford. Alone, and like to be!

No fear, when some unworthy scheme grows ripe,

Of those, who hatched it, leaving me to loose

The mischief on the world! Laud hatches war,

Falls to his prayers, and leaves the rest to me,

And I'm alone.

Charles. At least, you knew as much When first you undertook the war.

Strafford. My liege, Was this the way? I said, since Laud would lap

A little blood, 'twere best to hurry over The loathsome business, not to be whole months

At slaughter — one blow, only one, then, peace,

Save for the dreams. I said, to please you both

I'd lead an Irish army to the West, While in the South an English . . . but you look

As though you had not told me fifty times 'Twas a brave plan! My army is all raised,

I am prepared to join it . . .

Charles. Hear me, Strafford!

Strafford. . . . When, for some little thing, my whole design Is set aside — (where is the wretched paper?)

I am to lead — (ay, here it is) — to lead The English army: why? Northumberland

That I appointed, chooses to be sick — Is frightened: and, meanwhile, who answers for

The Irish Parliament? or army, either? Is this my plan?

Charles. So disrespectful, sir?

Strafford. My liege, do not believe it!

I am yours,

Yours ever: 'tis too late to think about: To the death, yours. Elsewhere, this untoward step

Shall pass for mine; the world shall think it mine.

But here! But here! I am so seldom here,

Seldom with you, my King! I, soon to rush Alone upon a giant in the dark!

Charles. My Strafford!

Strafford [examines papers awhile].

"Seize the passes of the Tyne!"

But, sir, you see — see all I say is true? My plan was sure to prosper, so, no cause To ask the Parliament for help; whereas We need them frightfully.

Charles. Need the Parliament?

Strafford. Now, for God's sake, sir, not one error more!

We can afford no error; we draw, now. Upon our last resource: the Parliament Must help us!

Charles. I've undone you, Strafford!

Strafford. Nay —

Nay — why despond, sir, 'tis not come to that!

I have not hurt you? Sir, what have I said
To hurt you? I unsay it! Don't despond!

Sir, do you turn from me?

Charles. My friend of friends!
Strafford. We'll make a shift. Leave me the Parliament!

Help they us ne'er so little and I'll make Sufficient out of it. We'll speak them fair.
They're sitting, that's one great thing;
that half gives

Their sanction to us; that's much: don't despond!

Why, let them keep their money, at the worst!

The reputation of the People's help

Is all we want: we'll make shift yet!

Charles. Good Strafford!

Strafford. But meantime, let the sum be ne'er so small

They offer, we'll accept it: any sum —

For the look of it: the least grant tells the Scots

The Parliament is ours — their staunch ally

Turned ours: that told, there's half the blow to strike!

What will the grant be? What does Glanville think?

Charles. Alas!

Strafford. My liege?

Charles. Strafford!

Strafford. But answer me!

Have they . . . O surely not refused us half?

Half the twelve subsidies? We never looked

For all of them. How many do they give?

Charles. You have not heard . . .

Strafford. (What has he done?) — Heard what?

But speak at once, sir, this grows terrible!

[The KING continuing silent.]

You have dissolved them! — I'll not leave this man.

Charles. 'Twas old Vane's ill-judged vehemence.

Strafford. Old Vane?

Charles. He told them, just about to vote the half,

That nothing short of all twelve subsidies would serve our turn, or be accepted.

Strafford. Vane!

Vane! Who, sir, promised me, that very Vane . . .

O God, to have it gone, quite gone from me, The one last hope — I that despair, my hope —

That I should reach his heart one day, and cure

All bitterness one day, be proud again And young again, care for the sunshine too,

And never think of Eliot any more, —

God, and to toil for this, go far for this, Get nearer, and still nearer, reach this heart

And find Vane there!

[Suddenly taking up a paper, and continuing with a forced calmness.]

Northumberland is sick:

Well, then, I take the army: Wilmot leads

The horse, and he, with Conway, must secure

The passes of the Tyne: Ormond supplies My place in Ireland. Here, we'll try the City:

If they refuse a loan — debase the coin And seize the bullion! we've no other choice.

Herbert . . .

And this while I am here! with you!

And there are hosts such, hosts like Vane! I go,

And, I once gone, they'll close around you, sir,

When the least pique, pettiest mistrust, is sure

To ruin me — and you along with me!

Do you see that? And you along with me!

— Sir, you'll not ever listen to these men, And I away, fighting your battle? Sir,

If they — if She — charge me, no matter how —

Say you, "At any time when he returns "His head is mine!" Don't stop me there! You know

My head is yours, but never stop me there!

Charles. Too shameful, Strafford! You advised the war,

And . . .

Strafford. I! I! that was never spoken with

Till it was entered on! That loathe the war!

That say it is the maddest, wickedest . . . 60

Do you know, sir, I think within my heart, That you would say I did advise the war;

And if, through your own weakness, or what's worse,

These Scots, with God to help them, drive me back,

You will not step between the raging People

And me, to say . . .

I knew it! from the first

I knew it! Never was so cold a heart! Remember that I said it — that I never Believed you for a moment!

— And, you loved me?

You thought your perfidy profoundly hid 70

Because I could not share the whisperings With Vane, with Savile? What, the face was masked?

I had the heart to see, sir! Face of flesh But heart of stone — of smooth cold frightful stone!

Ay, call them! Shall I call for you? The Scots
 Goaded to madness? Or the English —
 Pym —
 Shall I call Pym, your subject? Oh, you
 think
 I'll leave them in the dark about it all?
 They shall not know you? Hampden,
 Pym shall not?

PYM, HAMPDEN, VANE, etc., enter.

[Dropping on his knee.] Thus favoured with your gracious countenance
 What shall a rebel League avail against Your servant, utterly and ever yours?
 So, gentlemen, the King's not even left
 The privilege of bidding me farewell
 Who haste to save the People — that you style

Your People — from the mercies of the Scots

And France their friend?

[To CHARLES.] Pym's grave grey eyes are fixed

Upon you, sir!

Your pleasure, gentlemen?

Hampden. The King dissolved us —
 'tis the King we seek

And not Lord Strafford.

Strafford. — Strafford, guilty too
 Of counselling the measure. [To CHARLES.]

[Hush . . . you know —

You have forgotten — sir, I counselled it)
 A heinous matter, truly! But the King
 Will yet see cause to thank me for a course Which now, perchance . . . (Sir, tell them so!) — he blames.

Well, choose some fitter time to make your
 charge:

I shall be with the Scots, you understand?
 Then yelp at me!

Meanwhile, your Majesty Binds me, by this fresh token of your
 trust . . .

[Under the pretence of an earnest farewell, STRAFFORD conducts CHARLES to the door, in such a manner as to hide his agitation from the rest: as the King disappears, they turn as by one impulse to PYM, who has not changed his original posture of surprise.

Hampden. Leave we this arrogant strong wicked man!

Vane and others. Hence, Pym! Come out of this unworthy place.

To our old room again! He's gone.

[STRAFFORD, just about to follow the KING, looks back.

Pym.

Not gone!

[To STRAFFORD.] Keep trust! the old appointment's made anew:

30 Forget not we shall meet again!

Strafford.

So be it!

And if an army follows me?

Vane.

His friends

Will entertain your army!

Pym.

I'll not say

You have misreckoned, Strafford: time shows.

Perish

Body and spirit! Fool to feign a doubt,
 Pretend the scrupulous and nice reserve
 Of one whose prowess shall achieve the feat!

What share have I in it? Do I affect
 To see no dismal sign above your head
 When God suspends his ruinous thunder
 there?

Strafford is doomed. Touch him no one of you! [*PYM, HAMPDEN, etc., go out.*

Strafford. Pym, we shall meet again!

Lady CARLISLE enters.

You here, child?

Lady Carlisle.

Hush —

I know it all: hush, Strafford!

Strafford.

Ah? you know?

Well. I shall make a sorry soldier, Lucy!
 All knights begin their enterprise, we read,
 Under the best of auspices; 'tis morn,
 The Lady girds his sword upon the Youth (He's always very young) — the trumpets sound,

Cups pledge him; and, why, the King blesses him —

You need not turn a page of the romance
 To learn the Dreadful Giant's fate. Indeed,

We've the fair Lady here; but she apart, —

A poor man, rarely having handled lance,
 And rather old, weary, and far from sure
 His Squires are not the Giant's friends.

All's one:

Let us go forth!

Lady Carlisle.

Go forth?

Strafford.

What matters it?

We shall die gloriously — as the book says.

Lady Carlisle. To Scotland? Not to Scotland?

Strafford.

Am I sick

Like your good brother, brave Northumberland?

Beside, these walls seem falling on me.

Lady Carlisle.

Strafford,

The wind that saps these walls can under-
 mine

Your camp in Scotland, too. Whence creeps the wind?

Have you no eyes except for Pym? Look
 here!

A breed of silken creatures lurk and thrive
 In your contempt. You'll vanquish Pym?

Old Vane

Can vanquish you. And Vane you think to fly?

Rush on the Scots! Do nobly! Vane's slight sneer

Shall test success, adjust the praise, suggest
The faint result: Vane's sneer shall reach you there.

— You do not listen!

Strafford. Oh, — I give that up!
There's fate in it: I give all here quite up.
Care not what old Vane does or Holland does

Against me! 'Tis so idle to withstand!
In no case tell me what they do!

Lady Carlisle. But, Strafford . . .

Strafford. I want a little strife, beside;
real strife;

o This petty palace-warfare does me harm:
I shall feel better, fairly out of it.

Lady Carlisle. Why do you smile?

Strafford. I got to fear them, child!
I could have torn his throat at first, old Vane's,

As he leered at me on his stealthy way
To the Queen's closet. Lord, one loses heart!

I often found it on my lips to say

"Do not traduce me to her!"

Lady Carlisle. But the King . . .

Strafford. The King stood there, 'tis not so long ago,

— There; and the whisper, Lucy, "Be my friend

o "Of friends!" — My King! I would have . . .

Lady Carlisle. . . . Died for him?

Strafford. Sworn him true, Lucy: I can die for him.

Lady Carlisle. But go not, Strafford!
But you must renounce

This project on the Scots! Die, wherefore die?

Charles never loved you.

Strafford. And he never will.
He's not of those who care the more for men
That they're unfortunate.

Lady Carlisle. Then wherefore die
For such a master?

Strafford. You that told me first
How good he was — when I must leave true friends

To find a truer friend! — that drew me here

o From Ireland, — "I had but to show myself

"And Charles would spurn Vane, Savile, and the rest" —

You, child, to ask me this?

Lady Carlisle. (If he have set His heart abidingly on Charles!)

Then, friend,

I shall not see you any more.

Strafford. Yes, Lucy.
There's one man here I have to meet.

Lady Carlisle. (The King!
What way to save him from the King?

My soul —

That lent from its own store the charmed disguise

Which clothes the King — he shall behold my soul!)

Strafford. — I shall speak best if you'll not gaze

Upon me: I had never thought, indeed, 40
To speak, but you would perish, too, so sure!

Could you but know what 'tis to hear, my friend,

One image stamped within you, turning blank

The else imperial brilliance of your mind, —

A weakness, but most precious, — like a flaw

I' the diamond, which should shape forth some sweet face

Yet to create, and meanwhile treasured there

Lest nature lose her gracious thought for ever!

Strafford. When could it be? no!

Yet . . . was it the day

We waited in the anteroom, till Holland 50
Should leave the presence-chamber?

Lady Carlisle. What?

Strafford. — That I described to you my love for Charles?

Lady Carlisle. (Ah, no —
One must not lure him from a love like that!

Oh, let him love the King and die! 'Tis past.

I shall not serve him worse for that one brief

And passionate hope, silent for ever now!)

And you are really bound for Scotland, then?

I wish you well: you must be very sure
Of the King's faith, for Pym and all his crew

Will not be idle — setting Vane aside! 60

Strafford. If Pym is busy, — you may write of Pym.

Lady Carlisle. What need, since there's your King to take your part?

He may endure Vane's counsel; but for Pym —

Think you he'll suffer Pym to . . .

Strafford. Child, your hair is glossier than the Queen's!

Lady Carlisle. Is that to ask
A curl of me?

Strafford. Scotland — the weary way!
Lady Carlisle. Stay, let me fasten it.

— A rival's, Strafford?

Strafford [showing the George]. He hung it there: twine yours around it, child!

Lady Carlisle. No — no — another time
— I trifle so!

And there's a masque on foot. Farewell.

The Court

Is dull; do something to enliven us

In Scotland: we expect it at your hands.

Strafford. I shall not fail in Scotland.

Lady Carlisle.

Prosper — if

You'll think of me sometimes!

Strafford.

How think of him

And not of you? of you, the lingering streak

(A golden one) in my good fortune's eve.

Lady Carlisle. Strafford . . . Well,

when the eve has its last streak

The night has its first star. [She goes out.]

Strafford.

That voice of hers —

10 You'd think she had a heart sometimes!

His voice

Is soft too.

Only God can save him now.

Be Thou about his bed, about his path!

His path! Where's England's path?

Diverging wide,

And not to join again the track my foot

Must follow — whither? All that forlorn

way

Among the tombs! Far — far — till . . .

What, they do

Then join again, these paths? For, huge in the dusk,

There's — Pym to face!

Why then, I have a foe

To close with, and a fight to fight at last 20 Worthy my soul! What, do they beard

the King,

And shall the King want Strafford at his need?

Am I not here?

Not in the market-place,

Pressed on by the rough artisans, so proud

To catch a glance from Wentworth! They lie down

Hungry yet smile "Why, it must end some

day:

"Is he not watching for our sake?" Not

there!

But in Whitehall, the whited sepulchre,

The . . .

Curse nothing to-night! Only one name

They'll curse in all those streets to-night.

Whose fault?

30 Did I make kings? set up, the first, a man

To represent the multitude, receive

All love in right of them — supplant them

so,

Until you love the man and not the king —

The man with the mild voice and mournful eyes

Which send me forth.

— To breast the bloody sea

That sweeps before me: with one star for guide.

Night has its first, supreme, forsaken star.

ACT III.

SCENE I. — Opposite Westminster Hall.

Sir HENRY VANE, Lord SAVILE, Lord
HOLLAND and others of the Court.

Sir H. Vane. The Commons thrust you
out?

Savile. And what kept you

From sharing their civility?

Sir H. Vane. Kept me?

Fresh news from Scotland, sir! worse than the last,

If that may be. All's up with Strafford

there:

Nothing to bar the mad Scots marching

hither

Next Lord's-day morning. That detained me, sir!

Well now, before they thrust you out, —

go on, —

Their Speaker — did the fellow Lenthal

say

All we set down for him?

Holland.

Not a word missed.

Ere he began, we entered, Savile, I

And Bristol and some more, with hope to

breed

A wholesome awe in the new Parliament.

But such a gang of graceless ruffians, Vane, so

As glared at us!

Vane.

So many?

Savile.

Not a bench

Without its complement of burly knaves;

Your hopeful son among them: Hampden

leant

Upon his shoulder — think of that!

Vane.

I'd think

On Lenthal's speech, if I could get at it.

Urged he, I ask, how grateful they should prove

For this unlooked-for summons from the

King?

Holland. Just as we drilled him.

Vane.

That the Scots will march

On London?

Holland.

All, and made so much of it,

A dozen subsidies at least seemed sure

To follow, when . . .

Vane.

Well?

Holland.

'Tis a strange thing, now!

I've a vague memory of a sort of sound,

A voice, a kind of vast unnatural voice —

Pym, sir, was speaking! Savile, help me

out:

What was it all?

Savile. Something about "a matter" —

No, — "work for England."

Holland.

"England's great revenge"

He talked of.

Savile.

How should I get used to Pym

More than yourselves?

Holland. However that be.
 'Twas something with which we had nought to do.
 For we were "strangers" and 'twas "England's work" —
 (All this while looking us straight in the face)
 In other words, our presence might be spared.
 So, in the twinkling of an eye, before
 I settled to my mind what Ugly meant Was likest Pym just then, they yelled us
 out,
 Locked the doors after us, and here are we.
Vane. Eliot's old method . . .
Savile. Prithee, Vane, a truce
 To Eliot and his times, and the great Duke.
 And how to manage Parliaments: 'Twas
 you
 Advised the Queen to summon this: why,
 Strafford
 (To do him justice) would not hear of it.
Vane. Say rather, you have done the best of turns
 To Strafford: he's at York, we all know
 why.
 I would you had not set the Scots on Straf-ford
 Till Strafford put down Pym for us, my lord!
Savile. Was it I altered Strafford's plans? did I . . .

A Messenger enters.

Messenger. The Queen, my lords — she sends me: follow me
 At once; 'tis very urgent! she requires Your counsel: something perilous and
 strange
 Occasions her command.
Savile. We follow, friend!
 Now, Vane; — your Parliament will plague
 us all!
Vane. No Strafford here beside!
Savile. If you dare hint
 I had a hand in his betrayal, sir . . .
Holland. Nay, find a fitter time for quarrels — Pym
 Will overmatch the best of you; and,
 think,
 The Queen!
Vane. Come on, then: understand,
 I loathe
 Strafford as much as any — but his use!
 To keep off Pym, to screen a friend or two,
 I would we had reserved him yet awhile.

SCENE II. — Whitehall.

The QUEEN and Lady CARLISLE.

Queen. It cannot be.

Lady Carlisle. It is so.

Queen. Why, the House
 Have hardly met.

Lady Carlisle. They met for that.

Queen. No, no.
 Meet to impeach Lord Strafford? 'Tis a jest.

Lady Carlisle. A bitter one.

Queen. Consider! 'Tis the House
 We summoned so reluctantly, which nothing

But the disastrous issue of the war

Persuaded us to summon. They'll break
 all.

Their spite on us, no doubt: but the old
 way

Is to begin by talk of grievances:

They have their grievances to busy them.

Lady Carlisle. Pym has begun his
 speech.

Queen. Where's Vane? — That is, Pym will impeach Lord Strafford if he
 leaves

His Presidency; he's at York, we know,

Since the Scots beat him: why should he leave York?

Lady Carlisle. Because the King sent for him.

Queen. Ah — but if

The King did send for him, he'd be known

We had been forced to call a Parliament —

A step which Strafford, now I come to go
 think,

Was vehement against.

Lady Carlisle. The policy

Escaped him, of first calling Parliaments
 To start, soon setting them upon their feet

And giving them a scare: but that is done.
 Did the King send for Strafford? He will come.

Queen. And what am I to do?

Lady Carlisle. What do? Fail, madam!

Be ruined for his sake? what matters how?

So it but stand on record that you made

An effort, only one?

Queen. The King away

At Theobald's!

Lady Carlisle. Send for him at once: so he must

Dissolve the House.

Queen. Wait till Vane finds the truth
 Of the report: then . . .

Lady Carlisle. — It will matter little What the King does. Strafford that lends his arm

And breaks his heart for you!

Sir H. VANE enters.

Vane. The Commons, madam,
 Are sitting with closed doors. A huge debate.

No lack of noise: but nothing, I should guess,

Concerning Strafford: Pym has certainly
Not spoken yet.

Queen [to Lady CARLISLE]. You hear?

Lady Carlisle. I do not hear

That the King's sent for!

Vane.

Savile will be able

To tell you more.

HOLLAND enters.

Queen. The last news, Holland?

Holland. Pym

Is raging like a fire. The whole House
means

To follow him together to Whitehall

And force the King to give up Strafford.

Queen. Strafford?

Holland. If they content themselves with Strafford! Laud

Is talked of, Cottington and Windebank
too.

10 Pym has not left out one of them—I would

You heard Pym raging!

Queen. Vane, go find the King!

Tell the King, Vane, the People follow Pym
To brave us at Whitehall!

SAVILE enters.

Savile.

Not to Whitehall—

'Tis to the Lords they go: they seek redress
On Strafford from his peers—the legal
way,

They call it.

Queen. (Wait, Vane!)

Savile. But the adage gives

Long life to threatened men. Strafford can save

Himself so readily: at York, remember,
In his own county: what has he to fear?

20 The Commons only mean to frighten him
From leaving York. Surely, he will not come.

Queen. Lucy, he will not come!

Lady Carlisle. Once more, the King
Has sent for Strafford. He will come.

Vane. Oh doubtless!

And bring destruction with him: that's his
way.

What but his coming spoilt all Conway's plan?

The King must take his counsel, choose his
friends,

Be wholly ruled by him! What's the result?

The North that was to rise, Ireland to
help,

What came of it? In my poor mind, a fright

30 Is no prodigious punishment.

Lady Carlisle.

A fright?

Pym will fail worse than Strafford if he thinks

To frighten him. [To the QUEEN.] You will not save him then?

Savile. When something like a charge is made, the King

Will best know how to save him: and 'tis clear,

While Strafford suffers nothing by the matter,

The King may reap advantage: this in question,

No dinning you with ship-money complaints!

Queen [to Lady CARLISLE]. If we dissolve them, who will pay the army?

Protect us from the insolent Scots?

Lady Carlisle.

In truth,

I know not, madam. Strafford's fate concerns

Me little: you desired to learn what course
Would save him: I obey you.

Vane.

Notice, too,

There can't be fairer ground for taking full Revenge—(Strafford's revengeful)—than he'll have

Against his old friend Pym.

Queen.

Why, he shall claim

Vengeance on Pym!

Vane.

And Strafford, who is he

To 'scape unscathed amid the accidents
That harass all beside? I, for my part,

Should look for something of discomfiture
Had the King trusted me so thoroughly

And been so paid for it.

Holland.

He'll keep at York:

All will blow over: he'll return no worse,
Humbled a little, thankful for a place

Under as good a man. Oh, we'll dispense With seeing Strafford for a month or two!

STRAFFORD enters.

Queen. You here!

Strafford. The King sends for me,
madam.

Queen.

Sir,

The King . . .

Strafford. An urgent matter that imports the King!

[To Lady CARLISLE.] Why, Lucy, what's in agitation now,

That all this muttering and shrugging, see,
Begins at me? They do not speak!

Lady Carlisle.

'Tis welcome!

For we are proud of you—happy and proud

To have you with us, Strafford. You were staunch

At Durham: you did well there! Had you not

Been stayed, you might have . . . we said, even now,

Our hope's in you!

Vane [to Lady CARLISLE]. The Queen would speak with you.

Strafford. Will one of you, his servants here, vouchsafe
 To signify my presence to the King?
Savile. An urgent matter?
Strafford. None that touches you,
 Lord Savile! Say, it were some treacherous Sly pitiful intriguing with the Scots —
 You would go free, at least! (They half divine My purpose!) Madam, shall I see the King?
 The service I would render, much concerns His welfare.
Queen. But his Majesty, my lord, May not be here, may . . .
Strafford. Its importance, then, Must plead excuse for this withdrawal, madam,
 And for the grief it gives Lord Savile here.
Queen [who has been conversing with VANE and HOLLAND]. The king will see you, sir!
[To Lady CARLISLE.] Mark me: Pym's worst
 Is done by now: he has impeached the Earl,
 Or found the Earl too strong for him, by now.
 Let us not seem instructed! We should work
 No good to Strafford, but deform ourselves With shame in the world's eye. [To STRAFFORD.] His Majesty Has much to say with you.
Strafford. Time fleeting, too!
[To Lady CARLISLE.] No means of getting them away? And She —
 What does she whisper? Does she know my purpose?
 What does she think of it? Get them away!
Queen [to Lady CARLISLE]. He comes to baffle Pym — he thinks the danger Far off: tell him no word of it! a time For help will come; we'll not be wanting then.
 Keep him in play, Lucy — you, self-possessed
 And calm! [To STRAFFORD.] To spare your lordship some delay
 I will myself acquaint the King. [To Lady CARLISLE.] Beware!
[The QUEEN, VANE, HOLLAND, and SAVILE go out.]
Strafford. She knows it?
Lady Carlisle. Tell me, Strafford!
Strafford. Afterward!
 This moment's the great moment of all time.
 She knows my purpose?
Lady Carlisle. Thoroughly: just now
 She bade me hide it from you.

Strafford. Quick, dear child, The whole o' the scheme?
Lady Carlisle. (Ah, he would learn if they Connive at Pym's procedure! Could they but Have once apprised the King! But there's no time For falsehood, now.) Strafford, the whole is known.
Strafford. Known and approved?
Lady Carlisle. Hardly discountenanced.
Strafford. And the King — say, the King consents as well?
Lady Carlisle. The King's not yet informed, but will not dare
 To interpose. 40
Strafford. What need to wait him, then? He'll sanction it! I stayed, child, tell him, long!
 It vexed me to the soul — this waiting here.
 You know him, there's no counting on the King.
 Tell him I waited long!
Lady Carlisle. (What can he mean? Rejoice at the King's hollowness?) Strafford. I knew
 They would be glad of it, — all over once,
 I knew they would be glad: but he'd contrive,
 The Queen and he, to mar, by helping it, An angel's making.
Lady Carlisle. (Is he mad?) Dear Strafford, 50
 You were not wont to look so happy.
Strafford. Sweet,
 I tried obedience thoroughly. I took
 The King's wild plan: of course, ere I could reach My army, Conway ruined it. I drew
 The wrecks together, raised all heaven and earth,
 And would have fought the Scots: the King at once Made truce with them. Then, Lucy, then, dear child, God put it in my mind to love, serve, die
 For Charles, but never to obey him more! While he endured their insolence at Ripon
 I fell on them at Durham. But you'll tell 60
 The King I waited? All the anteroom
 Is filled with my adherents.
Lady Carlisle. Strafford — Strafford,
 What daring act is this you hint?
Strafford. No, no!
 'Tis here, not daring if you knew? all here!
[Drawing papers from his breast.]
 Full proof, see, ample proof — does the Queen know I have such damning proof? Bedford and Essex,

- Brooke, Warwick, Savile (did you notice Savile?)
 The simper that I spoilt?), Saye, Mandeville —
 Sold to the Scots, body and soul, by Pym!
Lady Carlisle. Great heaven!
Strafford. From Savile and his lords, to Pym
 And his losels, crushed! — Pym shall not ward the blow Nor Savile creep aside from it! The Crew
 And the Cabal — I crush them!
Lady Carlisle. And you go — Strafford, — and now you go? —
Strafford. — About no work
 In the background, I promise you! I go 10 Straight to the House of Lords to claim these knaves.
 Mainwaring!
Lady Carlisle. Stay — stay, Strafford!
Strafford. She'll return,
 The Queen — some little project of her own!
 No time to lose: the King takes fright perhaps.
Lady Carlisle. Pym's strong, remember!
Strafford. Very strong, as fits
 The Faction's head — with no offence to Hampden, Vane, Rudyard and my loving Hollis: one
 And all they lodge within the Tower to-night
 In just equality. Bryan! Mainwaring!
 [Many of his Adherents enter.]
 The Peers debate just now (a lucky chance)
 20 On the Scots' war; my visit's opportune
 When all is over, Bryan, you proceed
 To Ireland: these dispatches, mark me, Bryan,
 Are for the Deputy, and these for Ormond:
 We want the army here — my army, raised
 At such a cost, that should have done such good,
 And was inactive all the time! no matter,
 We'll find a use for it. Willis . . . or, no — you!
 You, friend, make haste to York: bear this, at once . . .
 Or, — better stay for form's sake, see yourself!
 30 The news you carry. You remain with me
 To execute the Parliament's command,
 Mainwaring! Help to seize these lesser knaves,
 Take care there's no escaping at back doors:
 I'll not have one escape, mind me — not one!
 I seem revengeful, Lucy? Did you know
 What these men dare!
Lady Carlisle. It is so much they dare!
- Strafford.* I proved that long ago; my turn is now.
 Keep sharp watch, Goring, on the citizens!
 Observe who harbours any of the brood
 That scramble off: be sure they smart for it!
 Our coffers are but lean.
 And you, child, too,
 Shall have your task; deliver this to Laud.
 Laud will not be the slowest in my praise:
 "Thorough" he'll cry! — Foolish, to be so glad!
 This life is gay and glowing, after all:
 'Tis worth while, Lucy, having foes like mine
 Just for the bliss of crushing them. To-day
 Is worth the living for.
Lady Carlisle. That reddening brow!
 You seem . . .
Strafford. Well — do I not? I would be well —
 I could not but be well on such a day! 50
 And, this day ended, 'tis of slight import
 How long the ravaged frame subjects the soul
 In Strafford.
Lady Carlisle. Noble Strafford!
Strafford. No farewell!
 I'll see you anon, to-morrow — the first thing.
 — If She should come to stay me!
Lady Carlisle. Go — 'tis nothing —
 Only my heart that swells: it has been thus Ere now: go, Strafford!
Strafford. To-night, then, let it be.
 I must see Him: you, the next after Him.
 I'll tell you how Pym looked. Follow me, friends!
 You, gentlemen, shall see a sight this 60
 hour
 To talk of all your lives. Close after me!
 "My friend of friends!"
 [STRAFFORD and the rest go out.
Lady Carlisle. The King — ever the King!
 No thought of one beside, whose little word
 Unveils the King to him — one word from me,
 Which yet I do not breathe!
 Ah, have I spared
 Strafford a pang, and shall I seek reward
 Beyond that memory? Surely too, some way
 He is the better for my love. No, no —
 He would not look so joyous — I'll believe
 His very eye would never sparkle thus, 70
 Had I not prayed for him this long, long while.

SCENE III. — The Ante-chamber of the House of Lords.

Many of the Presbyterian Party. The Adherents of STRAFFORD, etc.

A Group of Presbyterians. — 1. I tell you he struck Maxwell: Maxwell
sought

To stay the Earl: he struck him and passed
on.

2. Fear as you may, keep a good countenance.

Before these rufflers.

3. Strafford here the first,
With the great army at his back!

4. No doubt.
I would Pym had made haste: that's Bryan, hush —

The gallant pointing.

Strafford's Followers. — 1. Mark these worthies, now!

2. A goodly gathering! "Where the carcass is

"There shall the eagles" — what's the
rest?

3. For eagles
Say crows.

A Presbyterian. Stand back, sirs!

One of Strafford's Followers. Are we in Geneva?

A Presbyterian. No, nor in Ireland; we have leave to breathe.

One of Strafford's Followers. Truly?

Behold how privileged we be

That serve "King Pym"! There's Someone at Whitehall

Who skulks obscure; but Pym struts . . .

The Presbyterian. Nearer.

A Follower of Strafford.

We look to see him. [To his Companions.] I'm to have St. John

In charge; was he among the knaves just
now

That followed Pym within there?

Another. The gaunt man

Talking with Rudyard. Did the Earl expect

Pym at his heels so fast? I like it not.

MAXWELL enters.

Another. Why, man, they rush into the net! Here's Maxwell —

Ha, Maxwell? How the brethren flock around

The fellow! Do you feel the Earl's hand
yet

Upon your shoulder, Maxwell?

Maxwell. Gentlemen,

Stand back! a great thing passes here.

A Follower of Strafford. [To another.]

The Earl

Is at his work! [To M.] Say, Maxwell, what great thing!

Speak out! [To a Presbyterian.] Friend,
I've a kindness for you! Friend,
I've seen you with St. John: O stockish-
ness!

Wear such a ruff, and never call to
mind

St. John's head in a charger? How, the plague,

Not laugh?

Another. Say, Maxwell, what great
thing!

Another.

Nay, wait:

The jest will be to wait.

First.

And who's to bear
These demure hypocrites? You'd swear they came . . .

Came . . . just as we come!

[A Puritan enters hastily and without observing STRAFFORD's Followers.

The Puritan. How goes on the work?

Has Pym . . .

A Follower of Strafford. The secret's out at last. Aha,

The carrion's scented! Welcome, crow
the first!

Gorge merrily, you with the blinking eye!
"King Pym has fallen!"

The Puritan.

Pym?

A Strafford.

Pym!

A Presbyterian.

Only Pym?

Many of Strafford's Followers. No, brother, not Pym only; Vane as well, Rudyard as well, Hampden, St. John as
well!

A Presbyterian. My mind misgives: can 40
it be true?

Another.

Lost! Lost!

A Strafford. Say we true, Maxwell?

The Puritan. Pride before destruction,

A haughty spirit goeth before a fall.

Many of Strafford's Followers. Ah now!

The very thing! A word in season!

A golden apple in a silver picture,

To greet Pym as he passes!

[The doors at the back begin to open, noise and light issuing.

Maxwell. Stand back, all!

Many of the Presbyterians. I hold with Pym! And I!

Strafford's Followers. Now for the text!

He comes! Quick!

The Puritan. How hath the oppressor ceased!

The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked! . . .

The sceptre of the rulers, he who smote

The people in wrath with a continual 50
stroke,

That ruled the nations in his anger — he is persecuted and none hindereth!

[The doors open, and STRAFFORD issues in the greatest disorder, and amid cries from within of "Void the House!"

Strafford. Impeach me! Pym! I never struck, I think,
 The felon on that calm insulting mouth
 When it proclaimed — Pym's mouth proclaimed me . . . God!
 Was it a word, only a word that held
 The outrageous blood back on my heart — which beats!
 Which beats! Some one word — "Traitor," did he say,
 Bending that eye, brimful of bitter fire,
 Upon me?
 10 Maxwell. In the Commons' name, their servant
 Demands Lord Strafford's sword.
Strafford. What did you say?
Maxwell. The Commons bid me ask your lordship's sword.
Strafford. Let us go forth: follow me, gentlemen!
 Draw your swords too: cut any down that bar us.
 On the King's service! Maxwell, clear the way!
[The Presbyterians prepare to dispute his passage.]
Strafford. I stay: the King himself shall see me here.
 Your tablets, fellow!
[To MAINWARING.] Give that to the King
 Yes, Maxwell, for the next half-hour, let be!
 Nay, you shall take my sword!
[MAXWELL advances to take it.]
 Or, no — not that!
 Their blood, perhaps, may wipe out all thus far,
 All up to that — not that! Why, friend,
 20 When the King lays your head beneath my foot
 It will not pay for that. Go, all of you!
Maxwell. I dare, my lord, to disobey: none stir!
Strafford. This gentle Maxwell! — Do not touch him, Bryan!
[To the Presbyterians.] Whichever cur of you will carry this Escapes his fellow's fate. None saves his life?
 None?
[Cries from within of "STRAFFORD!"]
Slingsby, I've loved you at least: make haste!
 Stab me! I have not time to tell you why.
 You then, my Bryan! Mainwaring, you then!
 Is it because I spoke so hastily 30 At Allerton? The King had vexed me.
[To the Presbyterians.] You!
 — Not even you? If I live over this,
 The King is sure to have your heads, you know!

But what if I can't live this minute through?
 Pym, who is there with his pursuing smile!
[Louder cries of "STRAFFORD!"]
 The King! I troubled him, stood in the way
 Of his negotiations, was the one Great obstacle to peace, the Enemy
 Of Scotland: and he sent for me, from York,
 My safety guaranteed — having prepared
 A Parliament — I see! And at Whitehall
 The Queen was whispering with Vane — I see
 The trap! [Tearing off the George.]
 I tread a gewgaw underfoot,
 And cast a memory from me. One stroke, now!
[His own Adherents disarm him.]
Renewed cries of "STRAFFORD!"
 England! I see thy arm in this and yield.
 Pray you now — Pym awaits me — pray you now!
[STRAFFORD reaches the doors: they open wide. HAMPDEN and a crowd discovered, and, at the bar, PYM standing apart. As STRAFFORD kneels, the scene shuts.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Whitehall.

The KING, the QUEEN, HOLLIS, Lady
 CARLISLE. (VANE, HOLLAND, SAVILE, in the background.)
Lady Carlisle. Answer them, Hollis, for his sake! One word!
Charles. [To HOLLIS.] You stand, silent and cold, as though I were Deceiving you — my friend, my playfellow
 Of other times. What wonder after all? Just so, I dreamed my People loved me.
Hollis. Sir,
 It is yourself that you deceive, not me. You'll quit me comforted, your mind made up
 That, since you've talked thus much and grieved thus much,
 All you can do for Strafford has been done.
Queen. If you kill Strafford — (come, we grant you leave, Suppose) —
Hollis. I may withdraw, sir?
Lady Carlisle. Hear them out
 'Tis the last chance for Strafford! Hear them out!

Hollis. "If we kill Strafford" — on the eighteenth day
Of Strafford's trial — "We!"

Charles. Pym, my good Hollis — Pym, I should say!

Hollis. Ah, true — sir, pardon me! You witness our proceedings every day; But the screened gallery, I might have guessed, Admits of such a partial glimpse at us, Pym takes up all the room, shuts out the view.

Still, on my honour, sir, the rest of the place is not unoccupied. The Commons sit 10 — That's England; Ireland sends, and Scotland too,

Their representatives; the Peers that judge Are easily distinguished; one remarks
The People here and there: but the close curtain

Must hide so much!

Queen. Acquaint your insolent crew, This day the curtain shall be dashed aside! It served a purpose.

Hollis. Think! This very day? Ere Strafford rises to defend himself?

Charles. I will defend him, sir! — sanction the past

This day: it ever was my purpose. Rage 20 At me, not Strafford!

Lady Carlisle. Nobly! — will he not Do nobly?

Hollis. Sir, you will do honestly; And, for that deed, I too would be a king.

Charles. Only, to do this now! — "deaf" (in your style)

"To subjects' prayers," — I must oppose them now!

It seems their will the trial should proceed, So palpably their will!

Hollis. You peril much, But it were no bright moment save for that.

Strafford, your prime support, the sole roof-tree

Which props this quaking House of Privilege,

30 (Floods come, winds beat, and see — the treacherous sand!)

Doubtless, if the mere putting forth an arm

Could save him, you'd save Strafford.

Charles. And they dare Consummate calmly this great wrong!

No hope?

This ineffaceable wrong! No pity then?

Hollis. No plague in store for perfidy? — Farewell!

You called me, sir — [To Lady CARLISLE.] you, lady, bade me come

To save the Earl: I came, thank God for it, To learn how far such perfidy can go!

You, sir, concert with me on saving him

40 Who have just ruined Strafford!

Charles. I? — and how?

Hollis. Eighteen days long he throws, one after one,

Pym's charges back: a blind moth-eaten law!

— He'll break from it at last: and whom to thank?

The mouse that gnawed the lion's net for him

Got a good friend, — but he, the other mouse,

That looked on while the lion freed himself —

Fared he so well, does any fable say?

Charles. What can you mean?

Hollis. Pym never could have proved

Strafford's design of bringing up the troops To force this kingdom to obedience: 50

Vane —

Your servant, not our friend, has proved it.

Charles. Vane?

Hollis. This day. Did Vane deliver up or no

Those notes which, furnished by his son to Pym,

Seal Strafford's fate?

Charles. Sir, as I live, I know Nothing that Vane has done! What treason next?

I wash my hands of it. Vane, speak the truth!

Ask Vane himself!

Hollis. I will not speak to Vane, Who speak to Pym and Hampden every day.

Queen. Speak to Vane's master then! What gain to him

Were Strafford's death? 60

Hollis. Ha? Strafford cannot turn As you, sir, sit there — bid you forth, demand

If every hateful act were not set down In his commission? — whether you contrived

Or no, that all the violence should seem His work, the gentle ways — your own, — his part

To counteract the King's kind impulses — While . . . but you know what he could say! And then

He might produce, — mark, sir! — a certain charge

To set the King's express command aside, If need were, and be blameless. He might 70 add . . .

Charles. Enough!

Hollis. — Who bade him break the Parliament,

Find some pretence for setting up sword-law!

Queen. Retire!

Charles. Once more, whatever Vane dared do,

I know not: he is rash, a fool — I know Nothing of Vane!

Hollis. Well — I believe you. Sir,
Believe me, in return, that . . .

[Turning to Lady CARLISLE.] Gentle
lady,

The few words I would say, the stones might hear

Sooner than these, — I rather speak to
you,

You, with the heart! The question, trust me, takes

Another shape, to-day: not, if the King Or England shall succumb, — but, who shall pay

The forfeit, Strafford or his master. Sir, 10 You loved me once: think on my warning
now!

Charles. On you and on your warning both! — Carlisle!

That paper!

Queen. But consider!

Charles. Give it me!
There, signed — will that content you? Do not speak!

You have betrayed me, Vane! See! any
day,

According to the tenor of that paper,
He bids your brother bring the army up,
Strafford shall head it and take full revenge.
Seek Strafford! Let him have the same,
before

He rises to defend himself!

Queen. In truth?

20 That your shrewd Hollis should have worked a change

Like this! You, late reluctant . . .

Charles. Say, Carlisle,
Your brother Percy brings the army up, Falls on the Parliament — (I'll think of you,

My Hollis!) say, we plotted long — 'tis
mine,

The scheme is mine, remember! Say, I cursed

Vane's folly in your hearing! If the Earl Does rise to do us shame, the fault shall lie
With you, Carlisle!

Lady Carlisle. Nay, fear not me! but
still

That's a bright moment, sir, you throw
away.

30 Tear down the veil and save him!

Queen. Go, Carlisle!

Lady Carlisle. (I shall see Strafford — speak to him: my heart

Must never beat so, then! And if I tell
The truth? What's gained by falsehood?

There they stand

Whose trade it is, whose life it is! How
vain

To gild such rottenness! Strafford shall
know,

Thoroughly know them!)

Queen. Trust to me! [To

CARLISLE.] Carlisle,
You seem inclined, alone of all the Court,
To serve poor Strafford: this bold plan of
yours

Merits much praise, and yet . . .

Lady Carlisle. Time presses, madam.

Queen. Yet — may it not be something premature?

Strafford defends himself to-day — reserves

Some wondrous effort, one may well suppose!

Lady Carlisle. Ay, Hollis hints as much.

Charles. Why linger then?

Haste with the scheme — my scheme: I shall be there

To watch his look. Tell him I watch his
look!

Queen. Stay, we'll precede you!

Lady Carlisle. At your pleasure.

Charles. Say —

Say, Vane is hardly ever at Whitehall!

I shall be there, remember!

Lady Carlisle. Doubt me not.

Charles. On our return, Carlisle, we wait you here!

Lady Carlisle. I'll bring his answer. 50

Sir, I follow you.

(Prove the King faithless, and I take away All Strafford cares to live for: let it be —
'Tis the King's scheme!)

My Strafford, I can save,
Nay, I have saved you, yet am scarce content,

Because my poor name will not cross your
mind.

Strafford, how much I am unworthy you!)

SCENE II. — A Passage adjoining Westminster Hall.

Many Groups of Spectators of the Trial.
Officers of the Court, &c.

1st Spectator. More crowd than ever!
Not know Hampden, man?

That's he, by Pym, Pym that is speaking
now.

No, truly, if you look so high you'll see Little enough of either!

2nd Spectator. Stay: Pym's arm
Points like a prophet's rod.

3rd Spectator. Ay, ay, we've heard Some pretty speaking: yet the Earl escapes.

4th Spectator. I fear it: just a foolish word or two

About his children — and we see, forsooth, Not England's foe in Strafford, but the
man

Who, sick, half-blind . . .

2nd Spectator. What's that Pym's saying now

Which makes the curtains flutter? look!

A hand

Clutches them. Ah! The King's hand!

5th Spectator. I had thought

Pym was not near so tall. What said he, friend?

2nd Spectator. "Nor is this way a novel way of blood,"

And the Earl turns as if to . . . look! look!

Many Spectators.

There!

What ails him? no — he rallies, see — goes on,

And Strafford smiles. Strange!

An Officer. Haselrig!

Many Spectators. Friend? Friend?

The Officer. Lost, utterly lost: just when we looked for Pym

10 To make a stand against the ill effects Of the Earl's speech! Is Haselrig with-out?

Pym's message is to him.

3rd Spectator.

Now, said I true?

Will the Earl leave them yet at fault or no?

1st Spectator. Never believe it, man!

These notes of Vane's

Ruin the Earl.

5th Spectator. A brave end: not a whit Less firm, less Pym all over. Then, the trial

Is closed. No — Strafford means to speak again?

An Officer. Stand back, there!

5th Spectator.

Why, the

Earl is coming hither!

Before the court breaks up! His brother, look, —

20 You'd say he'd deprecated some fierce act In Strafford's mind just now.

An Officer. Stand back, I say!

2nd Spectator. Who's the veiled woman that he talks with?

Many Spectators.

Hush —

The Earl! the Earl!

[Enter STRAFFORD, SLINGSBY, and other Secretaries, HOLLIS, Lady CARLISLE, MAXWELL, BALFOUR, etc. STRAFFORD converses with Lady CARLISLE.

Hollis. So near the end! Be patient — Return!

Strafford [to his Secretaries]. Here anywhere — or, 'tis freshest here!

To spend one's April here, the blossom-month:

Set it down here!

[They arrange a table, papers, etc.

So, Pym can quail, can cower Because I glance at him, yet more's to do?

What's to be answered, Slingsby? Let us end!

[To Lady CARLISLE.] Child, I refuse his offer; whatso'er

It be! Too late! Tell me no word of him!

'Tis something, Hollis, I assure you

that —

To stand, sick as you are, some eighteen days

Fighting for life and fame against a pack Of very curs, that lie through thick and thin,

Eat flesh and bread by wholesale, and can't say

"Strafford" if it would take my life!

Lady CARLISLE.

Be moved

Glance at the paper!

Strafford.

Already at my heels!

Pym's faulting bloodhounds scent the track again.

Peace, child! Now, Slingsby!

[Messengers from LANE and other of STRAFFORD'S Council within the Hall are coming and going during the Scene.

Strafford [setting himself to write and dictate]. I shall beat you, Hollis!

Do you know that? In spite of St. John's 40

tricks,

In spite of Pym — your Pym who shrank from me!

Eliot would have contrived it otherwise. [To a Messenger.] In truth? This slip, tell Lane, contains as much

As I can call to mind about the matter. Eliot would have disdained . . .

[Calling after the Messenger.] And Paul chide, say,

The only person who could answer Pym, Is safe in prison, just for that.

Well, well!

It had not been recorded in that case, I baffled you.

[To Lady CARLISLE.] May, child, why look so grieved?

All's gained without the King! You saw your Pym quail?

What shall I do when they acquit me, think you,

But tranquilly resume my task as though Nothing had happened since I proposed

To call that traitor to account! Such tricks,

Trust me, shall not be played a second time,

Not even against Laud, with his grey hair — Your good work, Hollis! Peace! To make amends,

You, Lady, shall be here when I impeach Pym and his fellows.

Hollis.

Wherefore not protest

Against our whole proceeding, long ago? Why feel indignant now? Why stand thus

whole

Enduring patiently?

Strafford.

Child, I'll tell you —

You, and not Pym — you, the slight graceful girl

Tall for a flowering lily, and not Hollis — Why I stood patient! I was fool enough To see the will of England in Pym's will; To fear, myself had wronged her, and to wait

Her judgment: when, behold, in place of it . . .

[To a Messenger who whispers.] Tell Lane to answer no such question! Law, — I grapple with their law! I'm here to try My actions by their standard, not my own!
10 Their law allowed that levy: what's the rest

To Pym, or Lane, any but God and me? Lady Carlisle. The King's so weak!

Secure this chance! 'Twas Vane, Never forget, who furnished Pym the notes . . .

Strafford. Fit, — very fit, those precious notes of Vane,

To close the Trial worthily! I feared Some spice of nobleness might linger yet And spoil the character of all the past.

Vane eased me . . . and I will go back and say

As much — to Pym, to England! Follow me!

20 I have a word to say! There, my defence Is done!

Stay! why be proud? Why care to own

My gladness, my surprise? — Nay, not surprise!

Wherefore insist upon the little pride Of doing all myself, and sparing him The pain? Child, say the triumph is my King's!

When Pym grew pale, and trembled, and sank down,

One image was before me: could I fail? Child, care not for the past, so indistinct, Obscure — there's nothing to forgive in it 30 'Tis so forgotten! From this day begins A new life, founded on a new belief In Charles.

Hollis. In Charles? Rather believe in Pym!

And here he comes in proof! Appeal to Pym!

Say how unfair . . .

Strafford. To Pym? I would say nothing!

I would not look upon Pym's face again. Lady Carlisle. Stay, let me have to think I pressed your hand!

[STRAFFORD and his friends go out.]

Enter HAMPDEN and VANE.

Vane. O Hampden, save the great misguided man!

Plead Strafford's cause with Pym! I have remarked

He moved no muscle when we all de- claimed

Against him: you had but to breathe — 40 he turned

Those kind calm eyes upon you.

[Enter Pym, the Solicitor-General ST. JOHN, the Managers of the Trial, FIENNES, RUDYARD, etc.]

Rudyard. Horrible!

Till now all hearts were with you: I with- draw

For one. Too horrible! But we mistake Your purpose, Pym: you cannot snatch away

The last spar from the drowning man. Fiennes. He talks

With St. John of it — see, how quietly! [To other Presbyterians.] You'll join us?

Strafford may deserve the worst: But this new course is monstrous. Vane, take heart!

This Bill of his Attainder shall not have One true man's hand to it. 50

Vane. Consider, Pym! Confront your Bill, your own Bill: what is it?

You cannot catch the Earl on any charge, —

No man will say the law has hold of him On any charge; and therefore you resolve

To take the general sense on his desert, As though no law existed, and we met

To found one. You refer to Parliament To speak its thought upon the abortive mass Of half-borne-out assertions, dubious hints Hereafter to be cleared, distortions — ay, 60

And wild inventions. Every man is saved The task of fixing any single charge

On Strafford: he has but to see in him The enemy of England.

Pym. A right scruple!

I have heard some called England's enemy With less consideration.

Vane. Pity me!

Indeed you made me think I was your friend!

I who have murdered Strafford, how re- move

That memory from me? Pym. I absolve you, Vane.

Take you no care for aught that you have 70 done!

Vane. John Hampden, not this Bill! Reject this Bill!

He staggers through the ordeal: let him go, Strew no fresh fire before him! Plead for us!

When Strafford spoke, your eyes were thick with tears!

Hampden. England speaks louder: who are we, to play

The generous pardoner at her expense,

Magnanimously waive advantages,
And, if he conquer us, applaud his skill?

Vane. He was your friend.

Pym. I have heard that before.

Fiennes. And England trusts you.

Hampden. Shame be his, who turns
The opportunity of serving her She trusts him with, to his own mean account —

Who would look nobly frank at her expense!

Fiennes. I never thought it could have come to this.

Pym. But I have made myself familiar,
Fiennes,

20 With this one thought — have walked,
and sat, and slept,

This thought before me. I have done such
things,

Being the chosen man that should destroy The traitor. You have taken up this
thought

To play with, for a gentle stimulant,
To give a dignity to idler life
By the dim prospect of emprise to come,
But ever with the softening, sure belief,
That all would end some strange way right
at last.

Fiennes. Had we made out some weightier charge!

Pym. You say

20 That these are petty charges: can we come To the real charge at all? There he is safe

In tyranny's stronghold. Apostasy

Is not a crime, treachery not a crime:

The cheek burns, the blood tingles, when you speak

The words, but where's the power to take revenge

Upon them? We must make occasion
serve, —

The oversight shall pay for the main sin
That mocks us.

Rudyard. But this unexampled course,
This Bill!

Pym. By this, we roll the clouds away
30 Of precedent and custom, and at once

Bid the great beacon-light God sets in all,
The conscience of each bosom, shine upon

The guilt of Strafford: each man lay his
hand

Upon his breast, and judge!

Vane. I only see Strafford, nor pass his corpse for all beyond!

Rudyard and others. Forgive him! He would join us, now he finds

What the King counts reward! The pardon, too,

Should be your own. Yourself should bear to Strafford

The pardon of the Commons.

Pym. Meet him? Strafford?

Have we to meet once more, then? Be it 40
so!

And yet — the prophecy seemed half fulfilled

When, at the Trial, as he gazed, my youth,
Our friendship, divers thoughts came back at once

And left me, for a time . . . 'Tis very sad!
To-morrow we discuss the points of law
With Lane — to-morrow?

Vane. Not before to-morrow —
So, time enough! I knew you would relent!

Pym. The next day, Haselrig, you introduce

The Bill of his Attainder. Pray for me!

SCENE III. — Whitehall.

The KING.

Charles. My loyal servant! To defend 50
himself

Thus irresistibly, — withholding aught
That seemed to implicate us!

We have done Less gallantly by Strafford. Well, the future

Must recompense the past.

She tarries long.
I understand you, Strafford, now!

The scheme —
Carlisle's mad scheme — he'll sanction it,
I fear,

For love of me. 'Twas too precipitate:
Before the army's fairly on its march,
He'll be at large: no matter.

Well, Carlisle?

Enter PYM.

Pym. Fear me not, sir: — my mission is 60 to save,

This time.

Charles. To break thus on me! Unannounced!

Pym. It is of Strafford I would speak.

Charles. No more
Of Strafford! I have heard too much from you.

Pym. I spoke, sir, for the People; will you hear

A word upon my own account?

Charles. Of Strafford?
(So turns the tide already? Have we tamed

The insolent brawler? — Strafford's eloquence

Is swift in its effect.) Lord Strafford, sir,
Has spoken for himself.

Pym. Sufficiently.

I would apprise you of the novel course 70
The People take: the Trial fails.

Charles. Yes, yes:
We are aware, sir: for your part in it Means shall be found to thank you.

Pym. Pray you, read This schedule! I would learn from your own mouth

— (It is a matter much concerning me) —
Whether, if two Estates of us concede

The death of Strafford, on the grounds set
forth

Within that parchment, you, sir, can resolve

To grant your own consent to it. This Bill 10 Is framed by me. If you determine, sir, That England's manifested will should guide

Your judgment, ere another week such will Shall manifest itself. If not, — I cast Aside the measure.

Charles. You can hinder, then,
The introduction of this Bill?

Pym. I can.

Charles. He is my friend, sir: I have wronged him: mark you,

Had I not wronged him, this might be.
You think

Because you hate the Earl . . . (turn not
away,

We know you hate him) — no one else could love

20 Strafford: but he has saved me, some affirm.

Think of his pride! And do you know one strange,

One frightful thing? We all have used the
man

As though a drudge of ours, with not a source

Of happy thoughts except in us; and yet Strafford has wife and children, household
cares,

Just as if we had never been. Ah sir,
You are moved, even you, a solitary man
Wed to your cause — to England if you
will!

Pym. Yes — think, my soul — to England! Draw not back!

30 Charles. Prevent that Bill, sir! All your course seems fair

Till now. Why, in the end, 'tis I should sign

The warrant for his death! You have said
much

I ponder on; I never meant, indeed, Strafford should serve me any more. I
take

The Commons' counsel; but this Bill is
yours —

Nor worthy of its leader: care not, sir,
For that, however! I will quite forget
You named it to me. You are satisfied?

Pym. Listen to me, sir! Eliot laid his
hand,

40 Wasted and white, upon my forehead once;

Wentworth — he's gone now! — has talked on, whole nights,

And I beside him; Hampden loves me: sir,
How can I breathe and not wish England
well,

And her King well?

Charles. I thank you, sir, who leave
That King his servant. Thanks, sir!

Pym. Let me speak!
— Who may not speak again; whose spirit
years

For a cool night after this weary day:
— Who would not have my soul turn sicker yet

In a new task, more fatal, more august,
More full of England's utter weal or woe. 50

I thought, sir, could I find myself with you,
After this trial, alone, as man to man —
I might say something, warn you, pray you,
save —

Mark me, King Charles, save — you!
But God must do it. Yet I warn you, sir —

(With Strafford's faded eyes yet full on me)
As you would have no deeper question
moved

— "How long the Many must endure the
One,"

Assure me, sir, if England give assent
To Strafford's death, you will not interfere! 60

Or — Charles. God forsakes me. I am in a net

And cannot move. Let all be as you say!

Enter Lady CARLISLE

Lady Carlisle. He loves you — looking beautiful with joy

Because you sent me! he would spare you
all

The pain! he never dreamed you would forsake

Your servant in the evil day — nay, see Your scheme returned! That generous heart of his!

He needs it not — or, needing it, disdains
A course that might endanger you — you,
sir,

Whom Strafford from his inmost soul . . . 70 [Seeing Pym.] Well met!

No fear for Strafford! All that's true and brave

On your own side shall help us: we are
now

Stronger than ever.

Ha — what, sir, is this?
All is not well! What parchment have you
there?

Pym. Sir, much is saved us both.
Lady Carlisle. This Bill! Your lip

Whitens — you could not read one line to
me

Your voice would falter so!

Pym. No recreant yet!

The great word went from England to my soul,
And I arose. The end is very near.
Lady Carlisle. I am to save him! All have shrunk beside;
'Tis only I am left. Heaven will make strong
The hand now as the heart. Then let both die!

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Whitehall.

HOLLIS, Lady CARLISLE.

Hollis. Tell the King then! Come in with me!

Lady Carlisle. Not so!

He must not hear till it succeeds.

Hollis. Succeed?

No dream was half so vain — you'd rescue
Strafford

And outwit Pym! I cannot tell you . . .
lady,

The block pursues me, and the hideous
show.

To-day . . . is it to-day? And all the
while

He's sure of the King's pardon. Think, I have

To tell this man he is to die. The King
May rend his hair, for me! I'll not see
Strafford!

Lady Carlisle. Only, if I succeed, remember — Charles

Has saved him. He would hardly value
life

Unless his gift. My staunch friends wait.
Go in —

You must go in to Charles!

Hollis. And all beside

Left Strafford long ago. The King has signed

The warrant for his death! the Queen was sick

Of the eternal subject. For the Court, —
The Trial was amusing in its way,

Only too much of it: the Earl withdrew
In time. But you, fragile, alone, so young

Amid rude mercenaries — you devise
A plan to save him! Even though it fails,

What shall reward you?

Lady Carlisle. I may go, you think

To France with him? And you reward me, friend,

Who lived with Strafford even from his youth

Before he set his heart on state-affairs
And they bent down that noble brow of his.

I have learned somewhat of his latter life
And all the future I shall know: but, Hollis,

I ought to make his youth my own as well.

Tell me, — when he is saved!

Hollis. My gentle friend,

He should know all and love you, but 'tis
vain!

Lady Carlisle. Love? no — too late now! Let him love the King!

'Tis the King's scheme! I have your word, remember!

We'll keep the old delusion up. But,
quick!

Quick! Each of us has work to do, be- 40
side!

Go to the King! I hope — Hollis — I
hope!

Say nothing of my scheme! Hush, while we speak

Think where he is! Now for my gallant
friends!

Hollis. Where he is? Calling wildly upon Charles,

Guessing his fate, pacing the prison-floor.
Let the King tell him! I'll not look on Strafford.

SCENE II. — The Tower.

STRAFFORD sitting with his Children.

They sing.

*O bell' andare
Per barca in mare,
Verso la sera
Di Primavera!*

50

William. The boat's in the broad moonlight all this while —

*Verso la sera
Di Primavera!*

And the boat shoots from underneath the moon

Into the shadowy distance; only still

You hear the dipping oar —

Verso la sera,

And faint, and fainter, and then all's quite
gone,

Music and light and all, like a lost star.

Anne. But you should sleep, father: you 60 were to sleep.

Strafford. I do sleep, Anne; or if not — you must know

There's such a thing as . . .

William. You're too tired to sleep?

Strafford. It will come by-and-by and all day long,

In that old quiet house I told you of:

We sleep safe there.

Anne. Why not in Ireland?

Strafford. No!

Too many dreams! — That song's for Venice, William:

You know how Venice looks upon the map —

Isles that the mainland hardly can let go?

William. You've been to Venice, father?

Strafford. I was young, then.

William. A city with no King; that's why I like

Even a song that comes from Venice.

Strafford. William!

William. Oh, I know why! Anne, do you love the King?

But I'll see Venice for myself one day.

Strafford. See many lands, boy — England last of all, —

That way you'll love her best.

William. Why do men say

10 You sought to ruin her then?

Strafford. Ah, — they say that.

William. Why?

Strafford. I suppose they must have words to say,

As you to sing.

Anne. But they make songs beside:

Last night I heard one, in the street beneath,

That called you . . . Oh, the names!

William. Don't mind her, father!

They soon left off when I cried out to them.

Strafford. We shall so soon be out of it, my boy!

'Tis not worth while: who heeds a foolish song?

William. Why, not the King.

Strafford. Well: it has been the fate

Of better; and yet, — wherefore not feel sure

10 That Time, who in the twilight comes to mend

All the fantastic day's caprice, consign

To the low ground once more the ignoble Term,

And raise the Genius on his orb again, — That Time will do me right?

Anne. (Shall we sing, William?

He does not look thus when we sing.)

Strafford. For Ireland,

Something is done: too little, but enough To show what might have been.

William. (I have no heart

To sing now! Anne, how very sad he looks!

Oh, I so hate the King for all he says!)

30 Strafford. Forsook them! What, the common songs will run

That I forsook the People? Nothing more?

Ay, Fame, the busy scribe, will pause, no doubt,

Turning a deaf ear to her thousand slaves

Noisy to be enrolled, — will register

The curious glosses, subtle notices,

Ingenious clearings-up one fain would see Beside that plain inscription of The

Name —

The Patriot Pym, or the Apostate Strafford!

[The Children resume their song timidly, but break off.

Enter HOLLIS and an Attendant.

Strafford. No, — Hollis? in good time! — Who is he?

Hollis. One

That must be present.

Strafford. Ah — I understand.

They will not let me see poor Laud alone. How politic! They'd use me by degrees

To solitude: and, just as you came in, I was solicitous what life to lead.

When Strafford's "not so much as Constantable

"In the King's service." Is there any means

To keep oneself awake? What would you do

After this bustle, Hollis, in my place?

Hollis. Strafford!

Strafford. Observe, not but that

Pym and you

Will find me news enough — news I shall hear

Under a quince-tree by a fish-pond side At Wentworth. Garrard must be re-engaged

My newsman. Or, a better project now — What if when all's consummated, and the

Saints

Reign, and the Senate's work goes swimmingly, —

What if I venture up, some day, unseen, To saunter through the Town, notice how

Pym,

Your Tribune, likes Whitehall, drop quietly Into a tavern, hear a point discussed

As, whether Strafford's name were John or James —

And be myself appealed to — I, who shall myself have near forgotten!

Hollis. I would speak

Strafford. Then you shall speak, — not

now. I want just now,

To hear the sound of my own tongue. This place

Is full of ghosts.

Hollis. Nay, you must hear me,

Strafford!

Strafford. Oh, readily! Only, one rare thing more, —

The minister! Who will advise the King Turn his Sejanus, Richelieu and what not,

And yet have health — children, for aught I know —

My patient pair of traitors! Ah, — but, William —

Does not his cheek grow thin?

William.

'Tis you look thin, Father!

Strafford. A scamper o'er the breezy wolds Sets all to-rights.
Hollis. You cannot sure forget
A prison-roof is o'er you, Strafford?
Strafford. No.
Why, no. I would not touch on that, the first.
I left you that. Well, Hollis? Say at once,
The King can find no time to set me free!
A mask at Theobald's? ¹
Hollis. Hold: no such affair
Detains him.
Strafford. True: what needs so great a matter?
The Queen's lip may be sore. Well: when he pleases, —
Only, I want the air: it vexes flesh
To be pent up so long.
Hollis. The King — I bear
His message, Strafford: pray you, let me
speak!
Strafford. Go, William! Anne, try o'er your song again!
[The Children retire.]
They shall be loyal, friend, at all events.
I know your message: you have nothing
new
To tell me: from the first I guessed as
much.
I know, instead of coming here himself,
Leading me forth in public by the hand,
The King prefers to leave the door ajar
As though I were escaping — bids me trudge
While the mob gapes upon some show prepared
On the other side of the river! Give at
once
His order of release! I've heard, as well
Of certain poor manœuvres to avoid
The granting pardon at his proper risk;
First, he must prattle somewhat to the Lords,
Must talk a trifle with the Commons first,
Be grieved I should abuse his confidence,
And far from blaming them, and . . .
Where's the order?
Hollis. Spare me!
Strafford. Why, he'd not have me steal away?
With an old doublet and a steeple hat
Like Prynne's? Be smuggled into France,
perhaps?
Hollis. 'Tis for my children! 'Twas for
them
I first consented to stand day by day
And give your Puritans the best of words,
Be patient, speak when called upon, observe
Their rules, and not return them prompt their lie!

What's in that boy of mine that he should prove
Son to a prison-breaker? I shall stay
And he'll stay with me. Charles should ⁴⁰ know as much,
He too has children!
[Turning to HOLLIS's Companion.] Sir,
you feel for me!
No need to hide that face! Though it have looked Upon me from the judgment-seat . . . I
know
Strangely, that somewhere it ha looked on
me . . .
Your coming has my pardon, nay, my
thanks:
For there is one who comes not.
Hollis. Whom forgive,
As one to die!
Strafford. 'Truc, all die, and all need Forgiveness: I forgive him from my soul.
Hollis. 'Tis a world's wonder: Straf-
ford, you must die!
Strafford. Sir, if your errand is to set ⁵⁰ me free
This heartless jest mars much. Ha!
Tears in truth?
We'll end this! See this paper, warm — feel — warm
With lying next my heart! Whose hand is
there?
Whose promise? Read, and loud for God
to hear!
"Strafford shall take no hurt" — read it, I
say!
"In person, honour, nor estate" —
Hollis. The King . . .
Strafford. I could unking him by a breath! You sit
Where Loudon sat, who came to prophesy
The certain end, and offer me Pym's grace
If I'd renounce the King: and I stood firm ⁶⁰
On the King's faith. The King who lives . . .
Hollis. To sign
The warrant for your death.
Strafford. "Put not your trust
"In princes, neither in the sons of men,
"In whom is no salvation!"
Hollis. Trust in God!
The scaffold is prepared: they wait for
you
He has consented. Cast the earth behind!
Charles. You would not see me, Straf- ford, by your foot!
It was wrong from me! Only, curse me
not!
Hollis [to STRAFFORD]. As you hope grace and pardon in your need,
Be merciful to this most wretched man. ⁷⁰
[Voices from within.]

Strafford. You'll be good to those children, sir? I know You'll not believe her, even should the Queen
 Think they take after one they rarely saw.
 I had intended that my son should live
 A stranger to these matters: but you are So utterly deprived of friends! He too Must serve you — will you not be good to him?
 Or, stay, sir, do not promise — do not swear!
 'You, Hollis — do the best you can for me!
 10 I've not a soul to trust to: Wandesford's dead,
 And you've got Radcliffe safe, Laud's turn comes next:
 I've found small time of late for my affairs;
 But I trust any of you, Pym himself —
 No one could hurt them: there's an infant, too.
 These tedious cares! Your Majesty could spare them.
 Nay — pardon me, my King! I had forgotten
 Your education, trials, much temptation,
 Some weakness: there escaped a peevish word —
 'Tis gone: I bless you at the last. You know 20 All's between you and me: what has the world
 To do with it? Farewell!
Charles [at the door]. Balfour! Balfour!

Enter BALFOUR.

The Parliament! — go to them: I grant all Demands. Their sittings shall be permanent:
 Tell them to keep their money if they will:
 I'll come to them for every coat I wear
 And every crust I eat: only I choose To pardon Strafford. As the Queen shall choose!
 — You never heard the People howl for blood,
 Beside!
Balfour. Your Majesty may hear them now:
 30 The walls can hardly keep their murmurs out:
 Please you retire!
Charles. Take all the troops, Balfour!
Balfour. There are some hundred thousand of the crowd.
Charles. Come with me, Strafford!
 You'll not fear, at least!
Strafford. Balfour, say nothing to the world of this!
 I charge you, as a dying man, forget
 You gazed upon this agony of one . . .
 Of one . . . or if . . . why you may say,
 Balfour,

The King was sorry: 'tis no shame in him:
 Yes, you may say he even wept, Balfour,
 And that I walked the lighter to the block 41
 Because of it. I shall walk lightly, sir!
 Earth fades, heaven breaks on me: I shall stand next
 Before God's throne: the moment's close at hand
 When man the first, last time, has leave to lay
 His whole heart bare before its Maker, leave
 To clear up the long error of a life
 And choose one happiness for evermore.
 With all mortality about me, Charles,
 The sudden wreck, the dregs of violent death —
 What if, despite the opening angel-song, 50
 There penetrate one prayer for you? Be saved Through me! Bear witness, no one could prevent My death! Lead on! ere he awake — best, now!
 All must be ready: did you say, Balfour,
 The crowd began to murmur? They'll be kept Too late for sermon at St. Antholin's!
 Now! But tread softly — children are at play
 In the next room. Precede! I follow —
Enter Lady CARLISLE, with many Attendants.

Lady Carlisle. Me!
 Follow me, Strafford, and be saved! The King?
 [To the KING.] Well — as you ordered, 60 they are ranged without,
 The convoy . . . [seeing the KING's state]
 [To STRAFFORD.] You know all, then,
 Why, I thought
 It looked best that the King should save you, — Charles Alone; 'tis a shame that you should owe me aught.
 Or no, not shame! Strafford, you'll not feel shame
 At being saved by me?
Hollis. All true! Oh Strafford,
 She saves you! all her deed! this lady's deed!
 And is the boat in readiness? You, friend,
 Are Billingsley, no doubt. Speak to her, Strafford!
 See how she trembles, waiting for your voice!
 The world's to learn its bravest story yet. 70
Lady Carlisle. Talk afterward! Long nights in France enough,
 To sit beneath the vines and talk of home.

Strafford. You love me, child? Ah,

Strafford can be loved

As well as Vane! I could escape, then?

Lady Carlisle.

Haste!

Advance the torches, Bryan!

Strafford.

I will die.

They call me proud: but England had no right,

When she encountered me — her strength to mine —

To find the chosen foe a craven. Girl,

I fought her to the utterance, I fell,

I am her's now, and I will die. Beside,

The lookers-on! Eliot is all about

This place, with his most uncomplaining brow.

Lady Carlisle. Strafford!

Strafford.

I think if you could know how much

I love you, you would be repaid, my friend!

Lady Carlisle. Then, for my sake!

Strafford. Even for your sweet sake,

I stay.

Hollis. For their sake!

Strafford. To bequeath a stain?

Leave me! Girl, humour me and let me die!

Lady Carlisle. Bid him escape — wake,

King! Bid him escape!

Strafford. True, I will go! Die, and forsake the King?

I'll not draw back from the last service.

Lady Carlisle. Strafford!

Strafford.

And, after all, what is disgrace to me?

Let us come, child! That it should end this way!

Lead then! but I feel strangely: it was not To end this way.

Lady Carlisle. Lean — lean on me!

Strafford.

My King!

Oh, had he trusted me — his friend of friends!

Lady Carlisle. I can support him, Hollis!

Strafford.

Not this way!

This gate — I dreamed of it, this very gate.

Lady Carlisle. It opens on the river:

our good boat

Is moored below, our friends are there.

Strafford.

The same:

Only with something ominous and dark, Fatal, inevitable.

Lady Carlisle. Strafford! Strafford!

Strafford. Not by this gate! I feel what will be there!

I dreamed of it, I tell you: touch it not!

Lady Carlisle. To save the King, —

Strafford, to save the King!

[As STRAFFORD opens the door, PYM is discovered with HAMPDEN, VANE, etc. STRAFFORD falls back; PYM follows slowly and confronts him.

Pym. Have I done well? Speak, England! Whose sole sake

I still have laboured for, with disregard

To my own heart, — for whom my youth was made

Barren, my manhood waste, to offer up

Her sacrifice — this friend, this Wentworth here —

Who walked in youth with me, loved me, it may be,

And whom, for his forsaking England's cause,

I hunted by all means (trusting that she 4c

Would sanctify all means) even to the block

Which waits for him. And saying this, I feel

No bitter pang than first I felt, the hour I swore that Wentworth might leave us,

but I

Would never leave him: I do leave him now.

I render up my charge (be witness, God!) To England who imposed it. I have done

Her bidding — poorly, wrongly, — it may be,

With ill effects — for I am weak, a man: Still, I have done my best, my human best, 5c

Not faltering for a moment. It is done. And this said, if I say . . . yes, I will say

I never loved but one man — David not More Jonathan! Even thus, I love him

now:

And look for my chief portion in that world Where great hearts led astray are turned

again,

(Soon it may be, and, certes, will be soon: My mission over, I shall not live long,) —

Ay, here I know I talk — I dare and must, 6c

Of England, and her great reward, as all I look for there; but in my inmost heart,

Believe, I think of stealing quite away To walk once more with Wentworth — my youth's friend

Purged from all error, gloriously renewed, And Eliot shall not blame us. Then indeed . . .

This is no meeting, Wentworth! Tears increase

Too hot. A thin mist — is it blood? — enwraps

The face I loved once. Then, the meeting be!

Strafford. I have loved England too; we'll meet then, Pym.

As well die now! Youth is the only time 7c

To think and to decide on a great course: Manhood with action follows; but 'tis dreary,

To have to alter our whole life in age — The time past, the strength gone! As well die now.

When we meet, Pym, I'd be set right — not now!

- Best die. Then if there's any fault, fault
too
Dies, smothered up. Poor grey old little
Laud
May dream his dream out, of a perfect
Church,
In some blind corner. And there's no one left.
I trust the King now wholly to you, Pym!
And yet, I know not: I shall not be there:
Friends fail — if he have any, And he's
weak,
And loves the Queen, and . . . Oh, my fate is nothing —
Nothing! But not that awful head — not
that!
- 10 Pym. If England shall declare such will
to me . . .
Strafford. Pym, you help England! I,
that am to die,
What I must see! 'tis here — all here!
My God,
Let me but gasp out, in one word of fire,
How thou wilt plague him, satiating hell!
What? England that you help, become through you
A green and putrefying charnel, left Our children . . . some of us have children, Pym —
Some who, without that, still must ever wear
A darkened brow, an over-serious look,
20 And never properly be young! No word?
What if I curse you? Send a strong curse
forth
- Clothed from my heart, lapped round with horror till She's fit with her white face to walk the
world
Scaring kind natures from your cause and
you —
Then to sit down with you at the board-
head,
The gathering for prayer . . . O speak, but speak!
. . . Creep up, and quietly follow each one
home,
You, you, you, be a nestling care for each
To sleep with, — hardly moaning in his
dreams,
She gnaws so quietly, — till, lo he starts,
Gets off with half a heart eaten away! 30
Oh, shall you 'scape with less if she's my child?
You will not say a word — to me — to
Him?
Pym. If England shall declare such will
to me . . .
Strafford. No, not for England now, not for Heaven now, — See, Pym, for my sake, mine who kneel to
you!
There, I will thank you for the death, my
friend!
This is the meeting: let me love you well!
Pym. England, — I am thine own!
Dost thou exact
That service? I obey thee to the end, 40 Strafford. O God, I shall die first — I shall die first!

SORDELLO.

1840.

[Sordello was a Mantuan Troubadour mentioned by Dante, some of whose poetry is extant. See Sismondi's "History of the Literature of the South of Europe," vol. i. An analysis of Browning's poem may be found in Mrs. Orr's Handbook.]

TO J. MILSAND, OF DIJON.

DEAR FRIEND, — Let the next poem be introduced by your name, therefore remembered along with one of the deepest of my affections, and so repay all trouble it ever cost me. I wrote it twenty-five years ago for only a few, counting even in these on somewhat more care about its subject than they really had. My own faults of expression were many; but with care for a man or book such would be surmounted, and without it what avails the faultlessness of either? I blame nobody, least of all myself, who did my best then and since; for I lately gave time and pains to turn my work into what the many might, — instead of what the few must, — like; but after all, I imagined another thing at first, and therefore leave as I find it. The historical decoration was purposely of no more importance than a background requires; and my stress lay on the incidents in the development of a soul: little else is worth study. I, at least, always thought so: — you, with many known and unknown to me, think so — others may one day think so; and whether my attempt remain for them or not, I trust, though away and past it, to continue ever yours, R. B.

SORDELLO.

BOOK THE FIRST.

Who will, may hear Sordello's story told:
His story? Who believes me shall behold
The man, pursue his fortunes to the end,
Like me: for as the friendless-people's
friend
Spied from his hill-top once, despite the din
And dust of multitudes, Pentapolin
Named: o' the Naked Arm,¹ I single out

Sordello, compassed murkily about
With ravage of six long sad hundred years.
Only believe me. Ye believe? 10

Verona . . . Never, — I should warn you first, — Appears

Of my own choice had this, if not the worst
Yet not the best expedient, served to tell A story I could body forth so well
By making speak, myself kept out of view,
The very man as he was wont to do,
And leaving you to say the rest for him.
Since, though I might be proud to see the dim

Abysmal past divide its hateful surge,
Letting of all men this one man emerge 20
Because it pleased me, yet, that moment
past,

I should delight in watching first to last
His progress as you watch it, not a whit
More in the secret than yourselves who sit Fresh-chapleted to listen. But it seems Your setters-forth of unexampled themes,
Makers of quite new men, producing them,
Would best chalk broadly on each vesture's hem

The wearer's quality; or take their stand,
Motley on back and pointing-pole in hand, 30
Beside him. So, for once I face ye, friends, Summoned together from the world's four
ends,

Dropped down from heaven or cast up from hell,

To hear the story I propose to tell.
Confess now, poets know the dragnet's
trick,

Catching the dead, if fate denies the quick,
And shaming her; 'tis not for fate to choose Silence or song because she can refuse Real eyes to glisten more, real hearts to ache

Less oft, real brows turn smoother for our 40
sake:

I have experienced something of her spite;
But there's a realm wherein she has no
right

And I have many lovers. Say, but few Friends fate accords me? Here they are:
now view

- The host I muster! Many a lighted face
Foul with no vestige of the grave's disgrace;
What else should tempt them back to taste
our air
Except to see how their successors fare?
My audience! and they sit, each ghostly
man
Striving to look as living as he can,
Brother by breathing brother; thou art set,
Clear-witted critic, by . . . but I'll not fret
A wondrous soul of them, nor move death's spleen
- Who loves not to unlock them. Friends! I mean
The living in good earnest — ye elect Chiefly for love — suppose not I reject
Judicious praise, who contrary shall peep,
Some fit occasion, forth, for fear ye sleep,
To glean your bland approvals. Then,
appear,
Verona! stay — thou, spirit, come not near
Now — not this time desert thy cloudy
place
To scare me, thus employed, with that pure
face!
I need not fear this audience, I make free
With them, but then this is no place for
thee!
The thunder-phrase of the Athenian,¹ grown
Up out of memories of Marathon,
Would echo like his own sword's griding screech Braying a Persian shield, — the silver
speech
Of Sidney's self, the starry paladin, Turn intense as a trumpet sounding in
The knights to tilt, — wert thou to hear!
What heart
Have I to play my puppets, bear my part Before these worthies?
- Lo, the past is hurled
In twain: in-thrust, out-staggering on the
world.
Subsiding into shape, a darkness rears
Its outline, kindles at the core, appears Verona. 'Tis six hundred years and more Since an event. The Second Friedrich wore
The purple, and the Third Honorius filled
The holy chair. That autumn eve was stilled:
A last remains of sunset dimly burned
O'er the far forests, like a torch-flame
turned
By the wind back upon its bearer's hand
In one long flare of crimson; as a brand,
The woods beneath lay black. A single
eye
From all Verona cared for the soft sky.
- But, gathering in its ancient market-place, Talked group with restless group; and not a face
But wrath made livid, for among them were Death's staunch purveyors, such as have in care
To feast him. Fear had long since taken root
In every breast, and now these crushed its fruit,
The ripe hate, like a wine: to note the way
It worked while each grew drunk! Men grave and grey
Stood, with shut eyelids, rocking to and fro,
Letting the silent luxury trickle slow
About the hollows where a heart should be;
But the young gulped with a delirious glee
Some foretaste of their first debauch in
blood
At the fierce news: for, be it understood,
Envoys apprised Verona that her prince Count Richard of Saint Boniface, joined
since
A year with Azzo, Este's Lord, to thrust
Taurello Salinguerra, prime in trust
With Ecelin Romano, from his seat
Ferrara, — over zealous in the feat
And stumbling on a peril unaware,
Was captive, trammelled in his proper
snare,
They phrase it, taken by his own intrigue.
Immediate succour from the Lombard
League
Of fifteen cities that affect the Pope,
For Azzo, therefore, and his fellow-hope
Of the Gueff cause, a glory overcast!
Men's faces, late agape, are now agast.
"Prone is the purple pavis;¹ Este makes "Mirth for the devil when he undertakes
"To play the Ecelin; as if it cost
"Merely your pushing-by to gain a post
"Like his! The patron tells ye, once for
all,
"There be sound reasons that preferment

"On our beloved" . . .
"Duke o' the Rood, why not?"
Shouted an Estian, "grudge ye such a lot?
"The hill-cat boasts some cunning of her
own,
"Some stealthy trick to better beasts unknown,
"That quick with prey enough her hunger
blunts,
"And feeds her fat while gaunt the lion hunts."
"Taurello," quoth an envoy, "as in wane
"Dwelt at Ferrera. Like an osprey fain
"To fly but forced the earth his couch to make
"Far inland, till his friend the tempest
wake,

Waits he the Kaiser's coming; and as yet
 "That fast friend sleeps, and he too sleeps: but let
 "Only the billow freshen, and he snuffs
 "The aroused hurricane ere it enrougns

 "Sinketh the breeze? His hope-sick eye grows dim;
 "Creep closer on the creature! Every day

 "Dozes now at Oliero, with dry lips
 "Telling upon his perished finger-tips
 "How many ancestors are to depose

 "Their houses; not a drop of blood was spilt
 "When Cino Bocchimpane chanced to meet
 "Buccio Virtù — God's wafer, and the street
 "Is narrow! Tutti Santi, think, a-swarm
 "With Ghibellins, and yet he took no harm!
 "This could not last. Off Salinguerra went 20 "To Padua, Podestà, 'with pure intent,'
 "Said he, 'my presence, judged the single bar

 "'No longer' — so! his back is fairly turned?
 "The pair of goodly palaces are burned,
 "The gardens ravaged, and our Guelfs laugh, drunk
 "A week with joy. The next, their laughter sunk
 "In sobs of blood, for they found, some strange way,
 "Old Salinguerra back again — I say,
 "Old Salinguerra in the town once more 30 "Uprooting, overturning, flame before,
 "Blood fetlock-high beneath him. Azzo fled;
 "Who 'scaped the carnage followed; then the dead
 "Were pushed aside from Salinguerra's throne,
 "He ruled once more Ferrara, all alone,
 "Till Azzo, stunned awhile, revived, would pounce
 "Coupled with Boniface, like lynx and ounce,
 "On the gorged bird. The burghers ground their teeth
 "To see troop after troop encamp beneath
 "I' the standing corn thick o'er the scanty patch 40 "It took so many patient months to snatch
 "Out of the marsh; while just within their walls
 "Men fed on men. At length Taurello calls

"A parley: 'let the Count wind up the war!'
 "Richard, light-hearted as a plunging star,
 "Agrees to enter for the kindest ends
 "Ferrara, flanked with fifty chosen friends,
 "No horse-boy more, for fear your timid sort
 "Should fly Ferrara at the bare report.
 "Quietly through the town they rode, jog jog;
 "Ten, twenty, thirty, — curse the catalogue
 "Of burnt Guelf houses! Strange, Taurello shows
 "Not the least sign of life' — whereat arose
 "A general growl: 'How? With his victors by?
 "'I and my Veronese? My troops and I?
 "'Receive us, was your word?' So jogged they on,
 "Nor laughed their host too openly: once gone
 "Into the trap! —"
 Six hundred years ago!
 Such the time's aspect and peculiar woe (Yourselves may spell it yet in chronicles, Albeit the world, our busy brother, drills
 60 His sprawling path through letters anciently
 Made fine and large to suit some abbot's eye)
 When the new Hohenstauffen dropped the mask,
 Flung John of Brienne's favour from his casque, Forswore crusading, had no mind to leave
 Saint Peter's proxy leisure to retrieve Losses to Otho and to Barbaross,
 Or make the Alps less easy to recross;
 And, thus confirming Pope Honorius' fear, 70 Was excommunicate that very year.
 "The triple-bearded Teuton come to life!"
 Groaned the Great League; and, arming for the strife,
 Wide Lombardy, on tiptoe to begin,
 Took up, as it was Guelf or Ghibellin,
 Its cry: what cry?
 "The Emperor to come!"
 His crowd of feudatories, all and some,
 That leapt down with a crash of swords, spears, shields,
 One fighter on his fellow, to our fields,
 Scattered anon, took station here and there,
 And carried it, till now, with little care — 80
 Cannot but cry for him; how else rebut
 Us longer? — cliffs, an earthquake suffered jut
 In the mid-sea, each domineering crest
 Which nought save such another throe can wrest
 From out (conceive) a certain chokeweed grown

- Since o'er the waters, twine and tangle thrown
Too thick, too fast accumulating round,
Too sure to over-riot and confound
Ere long each brilliant islet with itself,
Unless a second shock save shoal and shelf, Whirling the sea-drift wide: alas, the bruised
And sullen wreck! Sunlight to be diffused
For that! — sunlight, 'neath which, a scum
at first,
The million fibres of our chokeweed nurst to Dispread themselves, mantling the troubled main,
And, shattered by those rocks, took hold
again,
So kindly blazed it — that same blaze to brood
O'er every cluster of the multitude
Still hazing new clasps, ties, filaments,
An emulous exchange of pulses, vents
Of nature into nature; till some growth
Unfancied yet, exuberantly clothe
A surface solid now, continuous, one:
"The Pope, for us the People, who begun 20 "The People, carries on the People thus,
"To keep that Kaiser off and dwell with us!"
See you?
Or say, Two Principles that live
Each fitly by its Representative.
"Hill-cat" — who called him so? — the gracefullest
Adventurer, the ambiguous stranger-guest
Of Lombardy (sleek but that ruffling fur, Those talons to their sheath!) whose velvet purr
Soothes jealous neighbours when a Saxon scout — Arpo or Yoland, is it? — one without 30 A country or a name, presumes to couch
Beside their noblest; until men avouch
That, of all Houses in the Trevisan,
Conrad describes no fitter, rear or van Than Ecelo! They laughed as they enrolled
That name at Milan on the page of gold, Godego's lord, — Ramon, Marostica,
Cartigion, Bassano, Loria,
And every sheep-cote on the Suabian's fief!
No laughter when his son, "the Lombard
Chief"
40 Forsooth, as Barbarossa's path was bent
To Italy along the Vale of Trent, Welcomed him at Roncaglia! Sadness
now —
The hamlets nested on the Tyrol's brow,
The Asolan and Euganean hills,
The Rhetian and the Julian, sadness fills
Them all, for Ecelin vouchsafes to stay
Among and care about them; day by day
Choosing this pinnacle, the other spot,
A castle building to defend a cot,
A cot built for a castle to defend,
Nothing but castles, castles, nor an end
To boasts how mountain ridge may join with ridge
By sunken gallery and soaring bridge.
He takes, in brief, a figure that beseems
The griesliest nightmare of the Church's
dreams,
— A Signory firm-rooted, unestranged
From its old interests, and nowise changed
By its new neighbourhood: perchance the vaunt
Of Otho, "my own Este shall supplant
"Your Este," come to pass. The sire led 60
in
A son as cruel; and this Ecelin Had sons, in turn, and daughters sly and tall
And curling and compliant; but for all Romano (so they styled him) throve, that neck
Of his so pinched and white, that hungry
cheek
Proved 'twas some fiend; not him, the man's-flesh went
To feed: whereas Romano's instrument, Famous Taurello Salinguerra, sole
I' the world, a tree whose boughs were slipt
the bole
Successively, why should not he shed blood 70
To further a design? Men understood Living was pleasant to him as he wore His careless surcoat, glanced some missive
o'er,
Propped on his truncheon in the public
way,
While his lord lifted writen hands to pray,
Lost at Oliero's convent.
Hill-cats, face
Our Azzo, our Guelph Lion! Why disgrace
A worthiness conspicuous near and far (Atii at Rome while free and consular, Este at Padua who repulsed the Hun) 80
By trumpeting the Church's princely son?
— Styled Patron of Rovigo's Polesine, Ancona's march, Ferrara's . . . ask, in
fine,
Our chronicles, commenced when some old monk
Found it intolerable to be sunk
(Vexed to the quick by his revolting cell)
Quite out of summer while alive and well:
Ended when by his mat the Prior stood,
'Mid busy promptings of the brotherhood,
Striving to coax from his decrepit brains 90
The reason Father Porphyry took pains To blot those ten lines out which used to
stand
First on their charter drawn by Hildebrand.
The same night wears. Verona's rule of yore
Was vested in a certain Twenty-four;
And while within his palace these debate
Concerning Richard and Ferrara's fate,

Glide we by clapping doors, with sudden glare

Of cressets¹ vented on the dark, nor care
For aught that's seen or heard until we shut

The smother in, the lights, all noises but
The carroch's booming: safe at last!
Why strange

Such a recess should lurk behind a range Of banquet rooms? Your finger—thus—you push

A spring, and the wall opens, would you rush

Upon the banqueters, select your prey,
10 Waiting (the slaughter-weapons in the way Strewing this very bench) with sharpened
ear

A preconcerted signal to appear;
Or if you simply crouch with beating heart,
Bearing in some voluptuous pageant part To startle them. Nor mutes nor masquers
now;

Nor any . . . does that one man sleep
whose brow

The dying lamp-flame sinks and rises o'er?
What woman stood beside him? not the
more

Is he unfastened from the earnest eyes
Because that arras fell between! Her wise
And lulling words are yet about the room,

20 Her presence wholly poured upon the gloom

Down even to her vesture's creeping stir.
And so reclines he, saturate with her,
Until an outcry from the square beneath Pierces the charm: he springs up, glad to breathe,

Above the cunning element, and shakes
The stupor off as (look you) morning breaks

On the gay dress, and, near concealed by it,
The lean frame like a half-burnt taper, lit 30 Erst at some marriage-feast, then laid
away

Till the Armenian bridegroom's dying day,
In his wool wedding-robe.

For he—for he,
Gate-vein of this hearts' blood of Lombardy,

(If I should falter now)—for he is thine!
Sordello, thy forerunner, Florentine!

A herald-star I know thou didst absorb Relentless into the consummate orb
That scared it from its right to roll along

40 A sempiternal path with dance and song
Fulfilling its allotted period,
Serenest of the progeny of God—

Who yet resigns it not! His darling stoops With no quenched lights, desponds with no blank troops

Of disenfranchised brilliances, for, blent
Utterly with thee, its shy element

Like thine upburneth prosperous and clear.
Still, what if I approach the august sphere Named now with only one name, disen-twine

That under-current soft and argentine 54
From its fierce mate in the majestic mass
Leavened as the sea whose fire was mixt with glass

In John's transcendent vision,—launch
once more

That lustre? Dante, pacer of the shore Where glutton hell disgorgeth filthiest
gloom,

Unbitten by its whirring sulphur-spume—
Or whence the grieved and obscure waters slope

Into a darkness quieted by hope;
Plucker of amaranths grown beneath God's eye

In gracious twilights where his chosen lie,— 60
I would do this! If I should falter now!

In Mantua territory half is slough,
Half pine-tree forest; maples, scarlet oaks Breed o'er the river-beds; even Mincio
chokes

With sand the summer through: but 'tis morass

In winter up to Mantua walls. There was,
Some thirty years before this evening's coil,

One spot reclaimed from the surrounding spoil,

Goito; just a castle built amid
A few low mountains; firs and larches hid 74
Their main defiles, and rings of vineyard
bound

The rest. Some captured creature in a pound,

Whose artless wonder quite precludes distress,

Secure beside in its own loveliness,
So peered with airy head, below, above,
The castle at its toils, the lapwings love
To glean among at grape-time. Pass within.

A maze of corridors contrived for sin,
Dusk winding-stairs, dim galleries got past,
You gain the inmost chambers, gain at 80
last

A maple-panelled room: that haze which seems

Floating about the panel, if there gleams
A sunbeam over it, will turn to gold
And in light-graven characters unfold

The Arab's wisdom everywhere; what shade

Marred them a moment, those slim pillars
made,

Cut like a company of palms to prop
The roof, each kissing top entwined with top,

Leaning together; in the carver's mind
Some knot of bacchanals, flushed cheek 94 combined

With straining forehead, shoulders purpled,
hair
Diffused between, who in a goat-skin bear
A vintage; graceful sister-palms! But
quick
To the main wonder, now. A vault, see;
thick
Black shade about the ceiling, though fine slits
Across the buttress suffer light by fits Upon a marvel in the midst. Nay, stoop—
A dullish grey-streaked cumbrous font, a group
Round it, — each side of it, where'er one sees, —
10 Upholds it; shrinking Caryatides
Of just-tinged marble like Eve's liliated
flesh
Beneath her maker's finger when the fresh First pulse of life shot brightening the snow.
The font's edge burthens every shoulder,
so
They muse upon the ground, eyelids half closed;
Some, with meek arms behind their backs disposed,
Some, crossed above their bosoms, some, to veil
Their eyes, some, propping chin and cheek
so pale,
Some, hanging slack an utter helpless
length
o Dead as a buried vestal whose whole
strength
Goes when the grate above shuts heavily.
So dwell these noiseless girls, patient to see,
Like priestesses because of sin impure
Penanced for ever, who resigned endure, Having that once drunk sweetness to the dregs.
And every eve, Sordello's visit begs Pardon for them: constant as eve he came To sit beside each in her turn, the same
As one of them, a certain space: and awe 30 Made a great indistinctness till he saw Sunset slant cheerful through the buttresschinks,
Gold seven times globed; surely our maiden shrinks
And a smile stirs her as if one faint grain
Her load were lightened, one shade less the stain Obscured her forehead, yet one more bead slipt
From off the rosary whereby the crypt Keeps count of the contritions of its
charge?
Then with a step more light, a heart more large,
He may depart, leave her and every one 40 To linger out the penance in mute stone.
Ah, but Sordello? 'Tis the tale I mean
To tell you.

In this castle may be seen,
On the hill-tops, or underneath the vines,
Or eastward by the mound of firs and pines
That shuts out Mantua, still in loneliness,
A slender boy in a loose page's dress,
Sordello: do but look on him awhile Watching ('tis autumn) with an earnest
smile
The noisy flock of thievish birds at work Among the yellowing vineyards; see him 50
lurk
('Tis winter with its sullenest of storms)
Beside that arras length of broidered forms,
On tiptoe, lifting in both hands a light Which makes yon warrior's visage flutter bright
— Ecelo, dismal father of the brood,
And Ecelin, close to the girl he wooed,
Auria, and their Child, with all his wives
From Agnes to the Tuscan that survives, Lady of the castle, Adelaide. His face — Look, now he turns away! Yourselves 60 shall trace (The delicate nostril swerving wide and
fine,
A sharp and restless lip, so well combine
With that calm brow) a soul fit to receive Delight at every sense; you can believe Sordello foremost in the regal class
Nature has broadly severed from her mass
Of men, and framed for pleasure, as she frames
Some happy lands, that have luxurious names,
For loose fertility; a footfall there
Suffices to upturn to the warm air 70
Half-germinating spices; mere decay
Produces richer life; and day by day
New pollen on the lily-petal grows,
And still more labyrinthine buds the rose.
You recognise at once the finer dress
Of flesh that amply lets in loveliness
At eye and ear, while round the rest is furled
(As though she would not trust them with her world)
A veil that shows a sky not near so blue,
And lets but half the sun look fervid 80
through.
How can such love? — like souls on each full-fraught
Discovery brooding, blind at first to aught
Beyond its beauty, till exceeding love Becomes an aching weight; and, to remove A curse that haunts such natures — to preclude
Their finding out themselves can work no
good
To what they love nor make it very blest
By their endeavour, — they are fain invest
The lifeless thing with life from their own
soul,
Availing it to purpose, to control, 90
To dwell distinct and have peculiar joy

And separate interests that may employ
That beauty fitly, for its proper sake.
Nor rest they here; fresh births of beauty
wake
Fresh homage, every grade of love is past,
With every mode of loveliness: then cast
Inferior idols off their borrowed crown
Before a coming glory. Up and down Runs arrowy fire, while earthly forms combine
To throb the secret forth; a touch divine —
And the scaled eyeball owns the mystic rod;
Visibly through his garden walketh God.
So fare they. Now revert. One character Denotes them through the progress and the stir, —
A need to blend with each external charm, Bury themselves, the whole heart wide and warm, —
In something not themselves; they would belong
To what they worship — stronger and more strong
Thus prodigally fed — which gathers shape
And feature, soon imprisons past escape
The votary framed to love and to submit Nor ask, as passionate he kneels to it, Whence grew the idol's empery. So runs A legend; light had birth ere moons and
suns,
Flowing through space a river and alone,
Till chaos burst and blank the spheres were strown
Hither and thither, foundering and blind:
When into each of them rushed light — to
find
Itself no place, foiled of its radiant chance.
Let such forego their just inheritance!
For there's a class that eagerly looks, too,
On beauty, but, unlike the gentler crew, Proclaims each new revelation born a twin
With a distinctest consciousness within,
Referring still the quality, now first Revealed, to their own soul — its instinct
nursed
In silence, now remembered better, shown
More thoroughly, but not the less their own,
A dream come true; the special exercise
Of any special function that implies
The being fair, or good, or wise, or strong,
Dormant within their nature all along — Whose fault? So, homage, other souls direct Without, turns inward. "How should this deject
"Thee, soul?" they murmur; "wherefore strength be quelled
"Because, its trivial accidents withheld,
"Organs are missed that clog the world,
inert,

"Wanting a will, to quicken and exert,
"Like thine — existence cannot satiate,
"Cannot surprise? Laugh thou at envious fate,
"Who, from earth's simplest combination stamp
"With individuality — uncramp'd
"By living its faint elemental life,
"Dost soar to heaven's complexest essence,
rife
"With grandeurs, unaffronted to the last,
"Equal to being all!"
In truth? Thou hast Life, then — wilt challenge life for us: our race
Is indicated so, obtains its place
In thy ascent, the first of us; whom we May follow, to the meanest, finally,
With our more bounded wills? 6a
Ah, but to find
A certain mood enervate such a mind,
Counsel it slumber in the solitude
Thus reached nor, stooping, task for mankind's good
Its nature just as life and time accord
"— Too narrow an arena to reward
"Emprize — the world's occasion worthless since
"Not absolutely fitted to evince
"Its mastery!" Or if yet worse befall,
And a desire possess it to put all That nature forth, forcing our straitened 7a
sphere
Contain it, — to display completely here
The mastery another life should learn,
Thrusting in time eternity's concern, —
So that Sordello . . .
Fool, who spied the mark
Of leprosy upon him, violet-dark
Already as he loiters? Born just now,
With the new century, beside the glow
And efflorescence out of barbarism;
Witness a Greek or two from the abyss That stray through Florence-town with studious air,
Calming the chisel of that Pisan pair:
If Nicolo should carve a Christus yet!
While at Siena is Guidone set,
Forehead on hand; a painful birth must be Matured ere Saint Eufemia's sacristy
Or transept gather fruits of one great gaze
At the moon: look you! The same orange haze, —
The same blue stripe round that — and,
in the midst,
Thy spectral whiteness, Mother-maid, who didst
Pursue the dizzy painter!
Woe, then, worth 9
Any officious babble letting forth
The leprosy confirmed and ruinous
To spirit lodged in a contracted house!
Go back to the beginning, rather; blend
It gently with Sordello's life; the end

Is piteous, you may see, but much between Pleasant enough. Meantime, some pyx to screen

The full-grown pest, some lid to shut upon
The goblin! So they found at Babylon, (Colleagues, mad Lucius and sage Antoinine)

Sacking the city, by Apollo's shrine,
In rummaging among the rarities,
A certain coffer; he who made the prize
Opened it greedily; and out there curled 10 Just such another plague, for half the
world

Was stung. Crawl in then, hag, and couch asquat,

Keeping that blotchy bosom thick in spot
Until your time is ripe! The coffer-lid
Is fastened, and the coffer safely hid
Under the Loxian's¹ choicest gifts of gold.

Who will may hear Sordello's story told,
And how he never could remember when He dwelt not at Goito. Calmly, then,
About this secret lodge of Adelaide's

6 Glided his youth away; beyond the glades
On the fir-forest border, and the rim
Of the low range of mountain, was for him
No other world: but this appeared his own

To wander through at pleasure and alone.
The castle too seemed empty; far and wide
Might he disport; only the northern side
Lay under a mysterious interdict —

Slight, just enough remembered to restrict
His roaming to the corridors, the vault

30 Where those font-bearers expiate their fault,

The maple-chamber, and the little nooks
And nests, and breezy parapet that looks Over the woods to Mantua: there he strolled.

Some foreign women-servants, very old,
Tended and crept about him — all his clue
To the world's business and embroiled ado Distant a dozen hill-tops at the most.

And first a simple sense of life engrossed
Sordello in his drowsy Paradise;

40 The day's adventures for the day suffice —
Its constant tribute of perceptions strange,
With sleep and stir in healthy interchange,
Suffice, and leave him for the next at ease
Like the great palmer-worm that strips the
trees,

Eats the life out of every luscious plant,
And, when September finds them sere or scant,

Puts forth two wondrous winglets, alters quite,

And hies him after unforeseen delight.
So fed Sordello, not a shard² dissheathed;

50 As ever, round each new discovery, wreathed

Luxuriantly the fancies infantine
His admiration, bent on making fine

Its novel friend at any risk, would fling
In gay profusion forth: a fickliest king, Confessed those minions! — eager to dispense

So much from his own stock of thought and sense

As might enable each to stand alone
And serve him for a fellow; with his own,
Joining the qualities that just before Had graced some older favourite. Thus 6 they wore

A fluctuating halo, yesterday
Set flicker and to-morrow filched away, —
Those upland objects each of separate
name,

Each with an aspect never twice the same,
Waxing and waning as the new-born host
Of fancies, like a single night's hoar-frost,
Gave to familiar things a face grotesque;
Only, preserving through the mad burlesque

A grave regard. Conceive! the orpine³ patch

Blossoming earliest on the log-house thatch 70
The day those archers wound along the vines —

Related to the Chief that left their lines
To climb with clinking step the northern stair

Up to the solitary chambers where Sordello never came. Thus thrall reached thrall:

He o'er-fersteoning every interval,
As the adventurous spider, making light
Of distance, shoots her threads from depth to height,

From barbarian to battlement: so flung Fantasies forth and in their centre swung 80
Our architect, — the breezy morning fresh Above, and merry, — all his waving mesh Laughing with lucid dew-drops rainbow-edged.

This world of ours by tacit pact is pledged

To laying such a spangled fabric low
Whether by gradual brush or gallant blow.
But its abundant will was balked here:
doubt

Rose tardily in one so fenced about From most that nurtures judgment; — care and pain:

Judgment, that dull expedient we are fain, 90
Less favoured, to adopt betimes and force
Stead us, diverted from our natural course Of joys — contrive some yet amid the dearth,

Vary and render them, it may be, worth
Most we forego. Suppose Sordello hence Selfish enough, without a moral sense
However feeble; what informed the boy
Others desired a portion in his joy?
Or say a ruthless chance broke woof and warp —

² A fragment.

³ Stonecrop.

A heron's nest beat down by March winds sharp,
A fawn breathless beneath the precipice,
A bird with unsoiled breast and unfilmed
eyes
Warm in the brake — could these undo the trance
Lapping Sordello? Not a circumstance That makes for you, friend Naddo! Eat fern-seed¹
And peer beside us and report indeed
If (your word) "genius" dawned with throes and stings
And the whole fiery catalogue, while springs,
Summers, and winters quietly came and went.
Time put at length that period to content,
By right the world should have imposed:
bereft
Of its good offices, Sordello, left
To study his companions, managed rip
Their fringe off, learn the true relationship, Core with its crust, their nature with his
own:
Amid his wild-wood sights he lived alone.
As if the poppy felt with him! Though
he
Partook the poppy's red effrontery Till Autumn spoiled their fleecing quite with rain,
And, turbanless, a coarse brown rattling crane
Lay bare. That's gone: yet why renounce, for that,
His disenchanted tributaries — flat
Perhaps, but scarce so utterly forlorn, Their simple presence might not well be borne
Whose parley was a transport once: recall
The poppy's gifts, it flaunts you, after all,
A poppy: — why distrust the evidence
Of each soon satisfied and healthy sense?
The new-born judgment answered, "little boots
"Beholding other creatures' attributes
"And having none!" or, say that it sufficed,
"Yet, could one but possess, oneself," (enticed Judgment) "some special office!" Nought
beside Serves you? "Well then, be somehow justified
"For this ignoble wish to circumscribe
"And concentrate, rather than swell, the tribe
"Of actual pleasures: what, now, from without
"Effects it? — proves, despite a lurking
doubt.
"Mere sympathy sufficient, trouble
spared?

"That, tasting joys by proxy thus, you fared
"The better for them?" Thus much
craved his soul.
Alas, from the beginning love is whole
And true; if sure of nought beside, most
sure
Of its own truth at least; nor may endure
A crowd to see its face, that cannot know
How hot the pulses throb its heart below:
While its own helplessness and utter want
Of means to worthily be ministrant
To what it worships, do but fan the more 50
Its flame, exalt the idol far before Itself as it would have it ever be.
Souls like Sordello, on the contrary,
Coerced and put to shame, retaining will,
Care little, take mysterious comfort still,
But look forth tremblingly to ascertain If others judge their claims not urged in
vain,
And say for them their stifled thoughts aloud.
So, they must ever live before a crowd:
—"Vanity," Naddo tells you. 60
Whence contrive
A crowd, now? From these women just alive,
That archer-troop? Forth glided — not alone
Each painted warrior, every girl of stone,
Nor Adelaide (bent double o'er a scroll,
One maiden at her knees, that eve, his soul
Shook as he stumbled through the arras'd
glooms
On them, for, 'mid quaint robes and weird perfumes,
Started the meagre Tuscan up, — her eyes,
The maiden's, also, bluer with surprise)
— But the entire out-world: whatever, 70 scraps
And snatches, song and story, dreams
perhaps,
Conceited the world's offices, and he Had hitherto transferred to flower or tree,
Not counted a befitting heritage
Each, of its own right, singly to engage Some man, no other, — such now dared to
stand Alone. Strength, wisdom, grace on every
hand
Soon disengaged themselves, and he discerned
A sort of human life: at least, was turned A stream of lifelike figures through his 80
brain.
Lord, liegeman, valvassor¹ and suzerain, Ere he could choose, surrounded him; a stuff
To work his pleasure on; there, sure
enough:
But as for gazing, what shall fix that gaze?

¹ Vassal.

- Are they to simply testify the ways
 He who convoked them sends his soul along
 With the cloud's thunder or a dove's brood-song?
 — While they live each his life, boast each
 his own
 Peculiar dower of bliss, stand each alone
 In some one point where something dearest loved
 Is easiest gained — far worthier to be proved
 Than aught he envies in the forest-wights!
 No simple and self-evident delights,
 But mixed desires of unimagined range, Contrasts or combinations, new and
 strange,
 Irksome perhaps, yet plainly recognised
 By this, the sudden company — loves prized
 By those who are to prize his own amount Of loves. Once care because such make account,
 Allow that foreign recognitions stamp
 The current value, and his crowd shall vamp
 Him counterfeits enough; and so their print
 Be on the piece. 'Tis gold, attests the mint, 20 And "good," pronounce they whom his new appeal
 Is made to: if their casual print conceal —
 This arbitrary good of theirs o'ergloss
 What he has lived without, nor felt the loss —
 Qualities strange, ungainly, wearisome, — What matter? So must speech expand the dumb
 Part-sigh, part-smile with which Sordello,
 late Whom no poor woodland-sights could satiate,
 Betakes himself to study hungrily
 Just what the puppets his crude phantasy 30 Supposes notabest, — popes, kings, priests, knights, —
 May please to promulgate for appetites;
 Accepting all their artificial joys
 Not as he views them, but as he employs
 Each shape to estimate the other's stock
 Of attributes, whereon — a marshalled flock
 Of authorised enjoyments — he may spend Himself, be men, now, as he used to blend
 With tree and flower — nay more entirely,
 else
 'Twere mockery: for instance, "How excels 40 "My life that chieftain's?" (who apprised the youth
 Ecelin, here, becomes this month, in truth, Imperial Vicar?) "Turns he in his tent
 "Remissly? Be it so — my head is bent
 "Deliciously amid my girls to sleep.
- "What if he stalks the Trentine-pass?
 Yon steep
 "I climbed an hour ago with little toil:
 "We are alike there. But can I, too, foil
 "The Guelph's paid stabber, carelessly afford
 "Saint Mark's a spectacle, the sleight o' the sword
 "Baffling the treason in a moment?" 50
 Here
 No rescue! Poppy he is none, but peer
 To Ecelin, assuredly: his hand, Fashioned no otherwise, should wield a brand
 With Ecelin's success — try, now! He
 soon
 Was satisfied, returned as to the moon
 From earth; left each abortive boy's-attempt
 For feats, from failure happily exempt,
 In fancy at his beck. "One day I will "Accomplish it! Are they not older still "— Not grown-up men and women? 60
 'Tis beside
 "Only a dream; and though I must abide "With dreams now, I may find a thorough vent
 "For all myself, acquire an instrument
 "For acting what these people act; my
 soul
 "Hunting a body out may gain its whole
 "Desire some day!" How else express chagrin
 And resignation, show the hope steal in
 With which he let sink from an aching wrist
 The rough-hewn ash-bow? Straight, a gold shaft hissed
 Into the Syrian air, struck Malek down 70 Superbly! "Crosses to the breach! God's Town
 "Is gained him back!" Why bend rough ash-bows more?
 Thus lives he: if not careless as before,
 Comforted: for one may anticipate,
 Rehearse the future, be prepared when fate Shall have prepared in turn real men whose names
 Startle, real places of enormous fames
 Este abroad and Ecelin at home
 To worship him, — Mantua, Verona.
 Rome
 To witness it. Who grudges time so 80
 spent?
 Rather test qualities to heart's content — Summon them, thrice selected, near and
 far —
 Compress the starriest into one star,
 And grasp the whole at once!
 The pageant thinned
 Accordingly; from rank to rank, like wind
 His spirit passed to winnow and divide; Back fell the simpler phantasms; every
 side

The strong clave to the wise; with either classed
 The bauteous; so, till two or three amassed
 Mankind's beseemingnesses, and reduced
 Themselves eventually, — graces loosed,
 Strengths lavished, — all to heighten up
 One Shape
 Whose potency no creature should escape.
 Can it be Friedrich of the bowmen's talk?
 Surely that grape-juice, bubbling at the stalk,
 Is some grey scorching Saracenic wine
 The Kaiser quaffs with the Miramoline.¹ — Those swarthy hazel-clusters, seamed and chapped,
 Or filberts russet-sheathed and velvet-capped,
 Are dates plucked from the bough John Brienne sent
 To keep in mind his sluggish armament
 Of Canaan: — Friedrich's, all the pomp and fierce Demeanour! But harsh sounds and sights transpierce
 So rarely the serene cloud where he dwells Whose looks enjoin, whose lightest words are spells
 On the obdurate! That right arm indeed Has thunder for its slave; but where's the need
 Of thunder if the stricken multitude
 Harkens, arrested in its angriest mood,
 While songs go up exulting, then dispread,
 Dispart, disperse, lingering overhead
 Like an escape of angels? 'Tis the tune, Nor much unlike the words his women croon
 Smilingly, colourless and faint-designed Each, as a worn-out queen's face some remind
 Of her extreme youth's love-tales. "Eglamor
 "Made that!" Half minstrel and half emperor,
 What but ill objects vexed him? Such he slew.
 The kinder sort were easy to subdue
 By those ambrosial glances, dulcet tones;
 And these a gracious hand advanced to thrones
 Beneath him. Wherefore twist and torture this,
 Striving to name afresh the antique bliss,
 Instead of saying, neither less nor more,
 He had discovered, as our world before,
 Apollo? That shall be the name; nor bid Me rag by rag expose how patchwork hid
 The youth — what thefts of every clime and day
 Contributed to purfle the array

He climbed with (June at deep) some close ravine
 Mid clatter of its million pebbles sheen,
 Over which, singing soft, the runnel slipped Elate with rains: into whose streamlet dipped
 He foot, yet trod, you thought, with unwet sock —
 Though really on the stubs of living rock
 Ages ago it crenelled; vines for roof,
 Lindens for wall; before him, aye aloof, 50
 Flittered in the cool some azure damsel-fly, Born of the simmering quiet, there to
 die.
 Emerging whence, Apollo still, he spied
 Mighty descents of forest; multiplied
 Tuft on tuft, here, the frolic myrtle-trees,
 There gendered the grave maple stocks at ease.
 And, proud of its observer, straight the wood
 Tried old surprises on him; black it stood
 A sudden barrier ('twas a cloud passed o'er)
 So dead and dense, the tiniest brute no 60
 more Must pass; yet presently (the cloud dispatched)
 Each clump, behold, was glistening detached
 A shrub, oak-boles shrunk into ilex-stems!
 Yet could not he denounce the stratagems
 He saw thro', till, hours thence, aloft would hang White summer-lightnings; as it sank and sprang
 To measure, that whole palpitating breast
 Of heaven, 'twas Apollo, nature prest
 At eve to worship.
 Time stole: by degrees
 The Pythons perish off; his votaries 70
 Sink to respectful distance; songs redeem
 Their pains, but briefer; their dismissals
 seem
 Emphatic; only girls are very slow
 To disappear — his Delians! Some that glow
 O' the instant, more with earlier loves to wrench
 Away, reserves to quell, disdains to quench;
 Alike in one material circumstance —
 All soon or late adore Apollo! Glance
 The bevy through, divine Apollo's choice,
 His Daphne! "We secure Count Rich- 80
 ard's voice
 "In Este's counsels, good for Este's ends
 "As our Taurello," say his faded friends,
 "By granting him our Palma!" — the sole
 child,
 They mean, of Agnes Este who beguiled
 Ecelin, years before this Adelaide Wedded and turned him wicked: "but the maid

 ful.

"Rejects his suit," those sleepy women
 boast.
 She, scorning all beside, deserves the most Sordello: so, conspicuous in his world
 Of dreams sat Palma. How the tresses curled
 Into a sumptuous swell of gold and wound
 About her like a glory! even the ground
 Was bright as with spilt sunbeams; breathe not, breathe
 Not! — poised, see, one leg doubled underneath,
 Its small foot buried in the dimpling snow,
 to Rests, but the other, listlessly below, O'er the couch-side swings feeling for cool
 air,
 The 'vein-streaks swollen a richer violet
 where
 The languid blood lies heavily; yet calm
 On her slight prop, each flat and outspread
 palm,
 As but suspended in the act to rise
 By consciousness of beauty, whence her
 eyes
 Turn with so frank a triumph, for she meets
 Apollo's gaze in the pine glooms.
 Time fleets:
 That's worst! Because the pre-appointed
 age
 to Approaches. Fate is tardy with the stage And crowd she promised. Lean he grows and pale,
 Though restlessly at rest. Hardly avail Fancies to soothe him. Time steals, yet
 alone
 He farries here! The earnest smile is
 gone.
 How long this might continue matters not;
 — For ever, possibly; since to the spot
 None come: our lingering Taurello quits
 Mantua at last, and light our lady flits
 Back to her place disburthened of a care.
 30 Strange — to be constant here if he is
 there!
 Is it distrust? Oh, never! for they both Goad Ecein alike, Romano's growth
 Is daily manifest, with Azzo dumb
 And Richard wavering: let but Friedrich
 come,
 Find matter for the minstrelsy's report — Lured from the Isle and its young Kaiser's court
 To sing us a Messina morning up,
 And, double rillet of a drinking cup,
 Sparkle along to ease the land of drouth, 40 Northward to Provence that, and thus far south
 The other! What a method to apprise
 Neighbours of births, espousals, obsequies,
 Which in their very tongue the Troubadour Records! and his performance makes a tour,

For Trouveres bear the miracle about,
 Explain its cunning to the vulgar rout,
 Until the Formidable House is famed Over the country — as Taurello aimed,
 Who introduced, although the rest adopt,
 The novelty. Such games, her absence 50
 stopped,
 Begin afresh now Adelaide, recluse
 No longer, in the light of day pursues
 Her plans at Mantua: whence an accident Which, breaking on Sordello's mixed content
 Opened, like any flash that cures the blind,
 The veritable business of mankind.

BOOK THE SECOND.

THE woods were long austere with snow:
 at last
 Pink leaflets budded on the beech, and fast Larches, scattered through pine-tree solitudes,
 Brightened, "as in the slumbrous heart o' 60
 the woods
 "Our buried year, a witch, grew young
 again
 "To placid incantations, and that stain
 "About were from her cauldron, green smoke blent
 "With those black pines" — so Eglamor gave vent
 To a chance fancy. Whence a just rebuke
 From his companion; brother Naddo shook
 The solemnest of brows: "Beware," he
 said,
 "Of setting up conceits in nature's stead!"
 Forth wandered our Sordello. Nought so sure
 As that to-day's adventure will secure 70
 Palma, the visioned lady — only pass O'er yon damp mound and its exhausted
 grass,
 Under that brake where sundawn feeds the stalks
 Of withered fern with gold, into those walks
 Of pine and take her! Buoyantly he went.
 Again his stooping forehead was besprent
 With dew-drops from the skirting ferns.
 Then wide
 Opened the great morass, shot every side
 With flashing water through and through;
 a-shine,
 Thick-steaming, all-alive. Whose shape 80
 divine,
 Quivered i' the farthest rainbow-vapour, glanced Athwart the flying herons? He advanced,
 But warily; though Mincio leaped no more,
 Each foot-fall burst up in the marish-floor
 A diamond jet: and if he stopped to pick

Rose-lichen, or molest the leeches quick,
 And circling blood-worms, minnow, newt or loach,
 A sudden pond would silently encroach
 This way and that. On Palma passed.
 The verge
 Of a new wood was gained. She will emerge
 Flushed, now, and panting, — crowds to see, — will own
 She loves him — Boniface to hear, to
 groan,
 To leave his suit! One screen of pine-trees still
 Opposes: but — the startling spectacle — 10 Mantua, this time! Under the walls — a crowd
 Indeed, real men and women, gay and loud
 Round a pavilion. How he stood!
 In truth
 No prophecy had come to pass: his youth
 In its prime now — and where was homage poured
 Upon Sordello? — born to be adored,
 And suddenly discovered weak, scarce
 made
 To cope with any, cast into the shade
 By this and this. Yet something seemed to prick
 And tingle in his blood; a sleight — a trick —
 20 And much would be explained. It went for nought —
 The best of their endowments were ill bought
 With his identity: nay, the conceit,
 That this day's roving led to Palma's feet
 Was not so vain — list! The word,
 "Palma!" Steal
 Aside, and die, Sordello; this is real,
 And this — abjure!
 What next? The curtains see Dividing! She is there; and presently He will be there — the proper You, at length —
 In your own cherished dress of grace and
 strength:
 30 Most like, the very Boniface!
 Not so.
 It was a showy man advanced; but though A glad cry welcomed him, then every sound
 Sank and the crowd disposed themselves
 around,
 — "This is not he," Sordello felt; while,
 "Place
 "For the best Troubadour of Boniface!" Hollaed the Jongleurs, — "Eglamor,¹ whose lay
 "Concludes his patron's Court of Love to-day!"

Obsequious Naddo strung the master's lute
 With the new lute-string, "Elys," named to suit
 The song: he stealthily at watch, the 40
 while,
 Biting his lip to keep down a great smile
 Of pride: then up he struck. Sordello's brain
 Swam; for he knew a sometime deed
 again;
 So, could supply each foolish gap and chasm
 The minstrel left in his enthusiasm,
 Mistaking its true version — was the tale
 Not of Apollo? Only, what avail
 Luring her down, that Elys an he pleased,
 If the man dared no further? Has he ceased
 And, lo, the people's frank applause half 50
 done,
 Sordello was beside him, had begun (Spite of indignant twitchings from his
 friend
 The Trouvere) the true lay with the true
 end,
 Taking the other's names and time and
 place
 For his. On flew the song, a giddy race,
 After the flying story; word made leap Out word, rhyme — rhyme; the lay could barely keep Pace with the action visibly rushing past:
 Both ended. Back fell Naddo more aghast
 Than some Egyptian from the harassed 60 bull
 That wheeled abrupt and, bellowing, fronted full
 His plague, who spied a scarab 'neath the
 tongue,
 And found 'twas Apis' flank his hasty prong
 Insulted. But the people — but the cries,
 The crowding round, and proffering the
 prize!
 — For he had gained some prize. He seemed to shrink
 Into a sleepy cloud, just at whose brink
 One sight withheld him. There sat
 Adelaide,
 Silent; but at her knees the very maid
 Of the North Chamber, her red lips as rich, 70
 The same pure fleecy hair; one weft of
 which,
 Golden and great, quite touched his cheek as o'er
 She leant, speaking some six words and
 no more.
 He answered something, anything; and
 she Unbound a scarf and laid it heavily Upon him, her neck's warmth and all.
 Again

Moved the arrested magic; in his brain Noises grew, and a light that turned to glare,
 And greater glare, until the intense flare Engulfed him, shut the whole scene from his sense.
 And when he woke 'twas many a furlong
 thence,
 At home; the sun shining his ruddy wont;
 The customary birds'-chirp; but his front
 Was crowned — was crowned! Her scented scarf around His neck! Whose gorgeous vesture heaps the ground?

10 A prize? He turned, and peeringly on
 him

Brooded the women-faces, kind and dim,
 Ready to talk — "The Jongleurs in a troop
 "Had brought him back, Naddo and Squarcialupe

"And Tagliafer; how strange! a childhood spent

"In taking, well for him, so brave a bent!
 "Since Eglamor," they heard, "was dead with spite,

"And Palma chose him for her minstrel."

Light

Sordello rose — to think, now; hitherto
 He had perceived. Sure, a discovery grew

20 Out of it all! Best live from first to last The transport o'er again. A week he passed,

Sucking the sweet out of each circumstance,

From the bard's outbreak to the luscious trance

Bounding his own achievement. Strange!
 A man

Recounted an adventure, but began Imperfectly; his own task was to fill The frame-work up, sing well what he sung ill,

Supply the necessary points, set loose
 As many incidents of little use

30 — More imbecile the other, not to see Their relative importance clear as he!

But, for a special pleasure in the act
 Of singing — had he ever turned, in fact,
 From Elys, to sing Elys? — from each fit
 Of rapture to contrive a song of it?

True, this snatch or the other seemed to wind

Into a treasure, helped himself to find
 A beauty in himself; for, see, he soared
 By means of that mere snatch, to many a hoard

40 Of fancies; as some falling cone bears soft
 The eye along the fir-tree-spire, aloft
 To a dove's nest. Then, how divine the cause

Why such performance should exact applause

From men, if they had fancies too? Did
 fate

Decree they found a beauty separate
 In the poor snatch itself? — "Take Elys,
 there,

"— 'Her head that's sharp and perfect like
 a pear,

"So close and smooth are laid the few fine locks

"Coloured like honey oozed from topmost
 rocks

"Sun-blanchd the livelong summer' — 50
 if they heard

"Just those two rhymes, assented at my
 word,

"And loved them as I love them who have run

"These fingers through those pale locks, let the sun

"Into the white cool skin — who first could clutch,

"Then praise — I needs must be a god to such.

"Or what if some, above themselves, and
 yet

"Beneath me, like their Eglamor, have set "An impress on our gift? So, men believe

"And worship what they know not, nor receive

"Delight from. Have they fancies — 60 slow, perchance,

"Not at their beck, which indistinctly
 glance

"Until, by song, each floating part be linked

"To each, and all grow palpable, distinct!"

He pondered this.

Meanwhile, sounds low and drear
 Stole on him, and a noise of footsteps, near And nearer, while the underwood was pushed

Aside, the larches grazed, the dead leaves
 crushed

At the approach of men. The wind seemed laid;

Only, the trees shrunk slightly and a shade
 Came o'er the sky although 'twas midday 70
 yet:

You saw each half-shut downcast floweret Flutter — "A Roman bride, when they'd dispart

"Her unbound tresses with the Sabine dart,

"Holding that famous rape in memory still
 "Felt creep into her curls the iron chill,

"And looked thus," Eglamor would say —
 indeed

'Tis Eglamor, no other, these precede Home hither in the woods. "Twere surely sweet

"Far from the scene of one's forlorn defeat

"To sleep!" judged Naddo, who in person 80 led

Jongleurs and Trouveres, chanting at their head,
 A scanty company; for, sooth to say,
 Our beaten Troubadour had seen his day.
 Old worshippers were something shamed,
 old friends
 Nigh weary; still the death proposed amends.
 "Let us but get them safely through my song
 "And home again!" quoth Naddo.
 All along,
 This man (they rest the bier upon the sand)
 — This calm corpse with the loose flowers in his hand, Eglamor, lived Sordello's opposite.
 For him indeed was Naddo's notion right,
 And verse a temple-worship vague and vast,
 A ceremony that withdrew the last Opposing bolt, looped back the lingering veil
 Which hid the holy place: should one so frail
 Stand there without such effort? or repine
 If much was blank, uncertain at the shrine
 He knelt before, till, soothed by many a rite,
 The power responded, and some sound or sight
 Grew up, his own for ever, to be fixed,
 In rhyme, the beautiful, for ever! — mixed
 With his own life, unloosed when he should please,
 Having it safe at hand, ready to ease
 All pain, remove all trouble; every time
 He loosed that fancy from its bonds of rhyme,
 (Like Perseus when he loosed his naked love)
 Faltering; so distinct and far above
 Himself, these fancies! He, no genius rare,
 Transfiguring in fire or wave or air
 At will, but a poor gnome that, cloistered up
 In some rock-chamber with his agate cup,
 His topaz rod, his seed-pearl, in these few
 And their arrangement finds enough to do
 For his best art. Then, how he loved that art!
 The calling marking him a man apart
 From men — one not to care, take counsel for Cold hearts, comfortless faces — (Eglamor Was neediest of his tribe) — since verse, the gift,
 Was his, and men, the whole of them, must shift Without it, e'en content themselves with wealth

And pomp and power, snatching a life by stealth.
 So, Eglamor was not without his pride!
 The sorriest bat which cowers throughout noontide
 While other birds are jocund, has one time
 When moon and stars are blinded, and the prime
 Of earth is his to claim, nor find a peer;
 And Eglamor was noblest poet here —
 He well knew, 'mid those April woods he cast
 Conceits upon in plenty as he passed,
 That Naddo might suppose him not to think Entirely on the coming triumph: wink
 At the one weakness! 'Twas a fervid child,
 That song of his; no brother of the guild
 Had e'er conceived its like. The rest you know,
 The exaltation and the overthrow:
 Our poet lost his purpose, lost his rank,
 His life — to that it came. Yet envy sank Within him, as he heard Sordello out,
 And, for the first time, shouted — tried to shout
 Like others, not from any zeal to show
 Pleasure that way: the common sort did so,
 What else was Eglamor? who, bending down
 As they, placed his beneath Sordello's crown,
 Printed a kiss on his successor's hand,
 Left one great tear on it, then joined his band
 — In time; for some were watching at the door:
 Who knows what envy may effect? "Give o'er,
 "Nor charm his lips, nor craze him!" (here one spied And disengaged the withered crown) —
 "Beside
 "His crown? How prompt and clear those verses rang
 "To answer yours! nay, sing them!"
 And he sang
 Them calmly. Home he went; friends used to wait
 His coming, zealous to congratulate;
 But, to a man — so quickly runs report —
 Could do no less than leave him, and escort
 His rival. That eve, then, bred many a thought:
 What must his future life be? was he brought
 So low, who stood so lofty this Spring morn?
 At length he said, "Best sleep now with my scorn,
 "And by to-morrow I devise some plain

"Expedient!" So, he slept, nor woke again.

They found as much, those friends, when they returned

O'erflowing with the marvels they had learned

About Sordello's paradise, his roves

Among the hills and vales and plains and groves,

Wherein, no doubt, this lay was roughly cast,

Polished by slow degrees, completed last To Eglamor's discomfiture and death.

Such form the chanter's now, and, out of breath,

o They lay the beaten man in his abode, Naido reciting that same luckless ode, Doleful to hear. Sordello could explore By means of it, however, one step more In joy; and, mastering the round at length, Learnt how to live in weakness as in strength,

When from his covert forth he stood, addressed

Eglamor, bade the tender ferns invest,

Primæval pines o'er canopy his couch,

And, most of all, his fame — (shall I avouch

o Eglamor heard it, dead though he might look,

And laughed as from his brow Sordello took

The crown, and laid on the bard's breast, and said

It was a crown, now, fit for poet's head?) — Continue. Nor the prayer quite fruitless fell. A plant they have, yielding a three-leaved bell¹

Which whitens at the heart ere noon, and ails

Till evening; evening gives it to her gales To clear away with such forgotten things

As are an eyesore to the morn: this brings

30 Him to their mind, and bears his very name.

So much for Eglamor. My own month came;

"Twas a sunrise of blossoming and May. Beneath a flowering laurel thicket lay

Sordello; each new sprinkle of white stars That smell fainter of wine than Massic jars

Dug up at Baia, when the south wind shed The ripest, made him happier; filleted

And robbed the same, only a lute beside Lay on the turf. Before him far and wide

10 The country stretched: Goito slept behind — The castle and its covert, which confin'd Him with his hopes and fears; so fain of old

To leave the story of his birth untold.

At intervals, 'spite the fantastic glow Of his Apollo-life, a certain low And wretched whisper, winding through the bliss,

Admonished, no such fortune could be his, All was quite false and sure to fade one day:

The closelier drew he round him his array Of brilliance to expel the truth. But when 50

A reason for his difference from men Surprised him at the grave, he took no rest

While aught of that old life, superbly dressed

Down to its meanest incident, remained A mystery: alas, they soon explained

Away Apollo! and the tale amounts To this: when at Vicenza both her counts

Banished the Vivaresi kith and kin, Those Maltraversi hung on Ecelin,

Reviled him as he followed; he for spite 60 Must fire their quarter, though that self-same night Among the flames young Ecelin was born

Of Adelaide, there too, and barely torn From the roused populace hard on the rear, By a poor archer when his chieftain's fear

Grew high; into the thick Elcorte leapt, Saved her, and died; no creature left except His child to thank. And when the full escape Was known — how men impaled from chine to nape Unlucky Prata, all to pieces spurned 70

Bishop Pistore's concubines, and burned Taurello's entire household, flesh and fell,

Missing the sweeter prey — such courage well

Might claim reward. The orphan, ever since,

Sordello, had been nurtured by his prince Within a blind retreat where Adelaide —

(For, once this notable discovery made, The past at every point was understood)

— Might harbour easily when times were rude,

When Azzo schemed for Palma, to retrieve 80 That pledge of Agnes Este — loth to leave

Mantua unguarded by a vigilant eye, While there Taurello bode ambiguously —

He who could have no motive now to moil For his own fortunes since their utter spoil — As it were worth while yet (went the report)

To disengage himself from her. In short, Apollo vanished; a mean youth, just named His lady's minstrel, was to be proclaimed

— How shall I phrase it? — Monarch of 90 the World!

For, on the day when that array was furled

For ever, and in place of one a slave

To longings, wild indeed, but longings save
In dreams as wild, suppressed — one daring not

Assume the mastery such dreams allot,
Until a magical equipment, strength, Grace, wisdom, decked him too, — he chose at length,
Content with unproved wits and failing frame,

In virtue of his simple will, to claim
That mastery, no less — to do his best
With means so limited, and let the rest
Go by, — the seal was set: never again
Sordello could in his own sight remain
One of the many, one with hopes and cares
And interests nowise distinct from theirs,
Only peculiar in a thriveless store
Of fancies, which were fancies and no
more;

Never again for him and for the crowd
A common law was challenged and allowed

If calmly reasoned of, howe'er denied
By a mad impulse nothing justified
Short of Apollo's presence. The divorce Is clear: why needs Sordello square his
course

By any known example? Men no more Compete with him than tree and flower
before.

Himself, inactive, yet is greater far
Than such as act, each stooping to his star, Acquiring thence his function; he has gained

The same result with meaner mortals trained

To strength or beauty, moulded to express
Each the idea that rules him; since no less
He comprehends that function, but can still Embrace the others, take of might his fill
With Richard as of grace with Palma, mix
Their qualities, or for a moment fix
On one; abiding free meantime, un-cramped

By any partial organ, never stamped Strong, and to strength turning all energies —

Wise, and restricted to becoming wise —
That is, he loves not, nor possesses One Idea that, star-like over, lures him on To its exclusive purpose. "Fortunate!

"This flesh of mine ne'er strove to emulate
"A soul so various — took no casual mould

"Of the first fancy and, contracted, cold,
"Clogged her for ever — soul averse to
change

"As flesh: whereas flesh leaves soul free to range,

"Remains itself a blank, cast into shade,
"Encumbers little, if it cannot aid.

"So, range, free soul! — who, by self-consciousness,

"The last drop of all beauty dost express —

"The grace of seeing grace, a quintessence 59
"For thee: while for the world, that can dispense

"Wonder on men who, themselves, wonder
— make

"A shift to love at second-hand, and take
"For idols those who do but idolise,

"Themselves, — the world that counts men strong or wise,

"Who, themselves, court strength, wisdom,
— it shall bow

"Surely in unexampled worship now,
"Discerning me!" —

(Dear monarch, I beseech,
Notice how lamentably wide a breach
Is here: discovering this, discover too 64
What our poor world has possibly to do With it! As 'pigmy natures as you
please —

So much the better for you; take your ease,
Look on, and laugh; style yourself God
alone;

Strange some day with a cross olive-stone!
All that is right enough: but why want us
To know that you yourself know thus and
thus?)

"The world shall bow to me conceiving all "Man's life, who see its blisses, great and small,

"Afar — not tasting any; no machine 70
"To exercise my utmost will is mine:

"Be mine mere consciousness! Let men perceive

"What I could do, a mastery believe,
"Asserted and established to the throng

"By their selected evidence of song
"Which now shall prove, whate'er they are, or seek

"To be, I am — whose words, not actions
speak,

"Who change no standards of perfection, vex

"With no strange forms created to perplex,
"But just perform their bidding and no 80
more,

"At their own satiating-point give o'er,
"While each shall love in me the love that leads

"His soul to power's perfection." Song, not deeds,

(For we get tired) was chosen. Fate would brook

Mankind no other organ; he would look
For not another channel to dispense

His own volition by, receive men's sense
Of its supremacy — would live content,
Obstructed else, with merely verse for vent.

Nor should, for instance, strength an 90 outlet seek

And, striving, be admired: nor grace be-
speak

Wonder, displayed in gracious attitudes:
Nor wisdom, poured forth, change unseemly moods;

But he would give and take on song's one point.
 Like some huge throbbing stone that,
 poised a-joint,
 Sounds, to affect on its basaltic bed,
 Must sue in just one accent; tempests shed Thunder, and raves the windstorm: only let
 That key by any little noise be set —
 The far benighted hunter's halloo pitch
 On that, the hungry curlew chance to scritch
 Or serpent hiss it, rustling through the rift,
 10 However loud, however low — all lift
 The groa'ning monster, stricken to the
 heart.
 Lo ye, the world's concernment, for its
 part,
 And this, for his, will hardly interfere!
 Its businesses in blood and blaze this year
 But wile the hour away — a pastime slight Till he shall step upon the platform: right!
 And, now thus much is settled, cast in rough,
 Proved feasible, be counselled! thought
 enough, —
 Slumber, Sordello! any day will serve:
 20 Were it a less digested plan! how swerve To-morrow? Meanwhile eat these sun-dried grapes,
 And watch the soaring hawk there! Life escapes
 Merrily thus.

He thoroughly read o'er
 His truchman Naddo's missive six times
 more,
 Praying him visit Mantua and supply
 A famished world.

The evening star was high
 When he reached Mantua, but his fame arrived
 Before him: friends applauded, foes connived,
 And Naddo looked an angel, and the rest
 30 Angels, and all these angels would be blest Supremely by a song — the thrice-renowned
 Goito-manufacture. Then he found (Casting about to satisfy the crowd)
 That happy vehicle, so late allowed,
 A sore annoyance; 'twas the song's effect
 He cared for, scarce the song itself: reflect!
 In the past life, what might be singing's use?
 Just to delight his Delians, whose profuse Praise, not the toilsome process which procured 40 That praise, enticed Apollo: dreams
 abjured,
 No overleaping means for ends — take
 both
 For granted or take neither! I am loth
 To say the rhymes at last were Eglamor's;
 But Naddo, chuckling, bade competitors

Go pine; "the master certes meant to waste
 "No effort, cautiously had probed the taste
 "He'd please anon: true bard, in short, — disturb
 "His title if they could; nor spur nor curb,
 "Fancy nor reason, wanting in him;
 whence
 "The staple of his verses, common sense: 50
 "He built on man's broad nature — gift of gifts,
 "That power to build! The world contented shifts
 "With counterfeits enough, a dreary sort
 "Of warriors, statesmen, ere it can extort
 "Its poet-soul — that's, after all, a freak
 "(The having eyes to see and tongue to
 speak)
 "With our herd's stupid sterling happiness
 "So plainly incompatible that — yes —
 "Yes — should a son of his improve the breed
 "And turn our poet, he were cursed in- 60
 deed!"
 "Well, there's Goito and its woods anon,
 "If the worst happen; best go stoutly on
 "Now!" thought Sordello.

Ay, and goes on yet!
 You pother with your glossaries to get
 A notion of the Troubadour's intent
 In rondel, tenzon, virlai or sirvent —
 Much as you study arras how to twirl
 His angelot, plaything of page and girl Once; but you surely reach, at last, — or, no!
 Never quite reach what struck the people 70
 so,
 As from the welter of their time he drew
 Its elements successively to view, Followed all actions backward on their
 course,
 And catching up, unmingled at the source,
 Such a strength, such a weakness, added
 then
 A touch or two, and turned them into men.
 Virtue took form, nor vice refused a shape;
 Here heaven opened, there was hell agape,
 As Saint this simpered past in sanctity, 80
 Sinner the other flared portentous by A greedy people. Then why stop, surprised
 At his success? The scheme was realised Too suddenly in one respect: a crowd Praising, eyes quick to see, and lips as loud
 To speak, delicious homage to receive,
 The woman's breath to feel upon his sleeve,
 Who said, "But Anafest — why asks he
 less
 "Than Lucio, in your verses? how confess,
 "It seemed too much but yestereve!" —
 the youth,

Who bade him earnestly, "Avow the truth!

"You love Bianca, surely, from your song:
"I knew I was unworthy!" — soft or strong,

In poured such tributes ere he had arranged
Ethereal ways to take them, sorted, changed,

Digested. Courted thus at unawares,
In spite of his pretensions and his cares,
He caught himself shamefully hankering
After the obvious petty joys that spring
o From true life, fain-relinquish pedestal
And condescend with pleasures — one and all

To be renounced, no doubt; for, thus to chain

Himself to single joys and so refrain From tasting their quintessence, frustrates,
sure,

His prime design; each joy must he abjure
Even for love of it.

He laughed: what sage
But perishes if from his magic page

He look because, at the first line, a proof
'Twas heard salutes him from the cavern roof?

o "On! Give yourself, excluding aught
beside,

"To the day's task; compel your slave provide

"Its utmost at the soonest; turn the leaf "Thoroughly conned. These lays of yours, in brief —

"Cannot men bear, now, something better?
— fly

"A pitch beyond this unreal pageantry
"Of essences? the period sure has ceased

"For such: present us with ourselves, at
least,

"Not portions of ourselves, mere loves and hates

"Made flesh: wait not!"

Awile the poet waits 3o However. The first trial was enough:

He left imagining, to try the stuff
That held the imaged thing, and, let it writhe

Never so fiercely, scarce allowed a tithe To reach the light — his Language. How he sought

The cause, conceived a cure, and slow re-wrought

That Language, — welding words into the crude

Mass from the new speech round him, till a rude

Armour was hammered out, in time to be Approved beyond the Roman panoply

o Melted to make it; — boots not. This obtained

With some ado, no obstacle remained
To using it; accordingly he took

An action with its actors, quite forsook

Himself to live in each, returned anon
With the result — a creature, and, by one
And one, proceeded leisurely to equip
Its limbs in harness of his workmanship.
"Accomplished! Listen, Mantuans!"

Fond essay!
Piece after piece that armour broke away,
Because perceptions whole, like that he 5o
sought

To clothe, reject so pure a work of thought As language: thought may take percep-tion's place

But hardly co-exist in any case,
Being its mere presentment — of the whole

By parts, the simultaneous and the sole
By the successive and the many. Lacks

The crowd perception? painfully it tacks Thought to thought, which Sordello, needing such,

Has rent perception into: it's to clutch
And reconstruct — his office to diffuse, 6o

Destroy: as hard, then, to obtain a Muse
As to become Apollo. "For the rest,

"E'en if some wondrous vehicle expressed
"The whole dream, what impertinence in
me

"So to express it, who myself can be "The dream! nor, on the other hand, are those

"I sing to, over-likely to suppose
"A higher than the highest I present

"Now, which they praise already: be content

"Both parties, rather — they with the old 7o verse,

"And I with the old praise — far go, fare
worse!"

A few adhering rivets loosed, upsprings
The angel, sparkles off his mail, which rings

Whirled from each delicatest limb it warps;

So might Apollo from the sudden corpse
Of Hyacinth¹ have cast his luckless quoits.

He set to celebrating the exploits
Of Montfort o'er the Mountaineers.

Then came
The world's revenge: their pleasure, now his aim

Merely, — what was it? "Not to play 8o
the fool

"So much as learn our lesson in your school!"

Replied the world. He found that, every
time

He gained applause by any ballad-rhyme,
His auditory recognised no jot

As he intended, and, mistaking not Him for his meanest hero, ne'er was dunce

Sufficient to believe him — all, at once.

¹ Accidentally killed by Apollo whilst playing quoits, and changed into the flower.

- His will . . . conceive it caring for his will!
 — Mantuans, the main of them, admiring still How a mere singer, ugly, stunted, weak, Had Montfort at completely (so to speak) His fingers' ends; while past the praise-tide swept To Montfort, either's share distinctly kept: The true need for true merit! — his abates Into a sort he most repudiates, And on them angrily he turns. Who were 10 The Mantuans, after all, that he should care
 About their recognition, ay or no?
 In spite of the convention months ago, (Why blink the truth?) was not he forced to help
 This same ungrateful audience, every whelp
 Of Naddo's litter, make them pass for peers With the bright band of old Goito years, As erst he toiled for flower or tree? Why, there Sat Palma! Adelaide's funereal hair Ennobled the next corner. Ay, he strewed 20 A fairy dust upon that multitude Although he feigned to take them by themselves;
 His giants dignified those puny elves, Sublimed their faint applause. In short, he found Himself still footing a delusive round, Remote as ever from the self-display He meant to compass, hampered every way By what he hoped assistance. Wherefore then Continue, make believe to find in men A use he found not?
 Weeks, months, years went by,
 30 And lo, Sordello vanished utterly, Sundered in twain; each spectral part at strife
 With each; one jarred against another life;
 The Poet thwarting hopelessly the Man — Who, fooled no longer, free in fancy ran Here, there: let slip no opportunities As pitiful, forsooth, beside the prize To drop on him some no-time and acquit His constant faith (the Poet-half's to wit — That waiving any compromise between 40 No joy and all joy kept the hunger keen Beyond most methods) — of incurring scoff
 From the Man-portion — not to be put off With self-reflectings by the Poet's scheme, Though ne'er so bright. Who sauntered forth in dream, Dressed any how, nor waited mystic frames,
 Immeasurable gifts, astounding claims, But just his sorrier self? — who yet might be Sorrier for aught he in reality
- Achieved, so pinioned Man's the Poet-part,
 Fondling, in turn of fancy, verse; the Art 50
 Developing his soul a thousand ways — Potent, by its assistance, to amaze The multitude with majesties, convince Each sort of nature that the nature's prince Accosted it. Language, the makeshift, grew Into a bravest of expedients, too; Apollo, seemed it now, ~~in~~ verse had thrown Quiver and bow away, the lyre alone Sufficed. While, out of dream, his day's work went To tune a crazy tenzon¹ or sirvent² — 30
 So hampered him the Man-part, thrust to judge
 Between the bard and the bard's audience, grudge
 A minute's toil that missed its due reward! But the complete Sordello, Man and Bard. John's cloud-girt angel, this foot on the land,
 That on the sea, with, open in his hand, A bitter-sweetling of a book — was gone.
 Then, if internal struggles to be one, Which frittered him incessantly piecemeal, Referred, ne'er so obliquely, to the real 70
 Intruding Mantuans! ever with some call To action while he pondered, once for all, Which looked the easier effort — to pursue This course, still leap o'er paltry joys, yearn through
 The present ill-appreciated stage Of self-revelment, and compel the age Know him — or else, forswearing bard-craft, wake
 From out his lethargy and nobly shake Off timid habits of denial, mix With men, enjoy like men. Ere he could 80 fix
 On aught, in rushed the Mantuans; much they cared
 For his perplexity! Thus unprepared, The obvious if not only shelter lay In deeds, the dull conventions of his day Prescribed the like of him: why not be glad 'Tis settled Palma's minstrel, good or bad, Submits to this and that established rule? Let Vidal change, or any other fool, His murrey-coloured³ robe for flamot,⁴ And crop his hair; too skin-deep, is it 90
 not,
 Such vigour? Then, a sorrow to the heart,

² Sirvent. Martial, political, and satirical songs. Both Provençal terms.

³ Mulberry-colour.

⁴ The colour of a dead leaf.

His talk! Whatever topics they might start

Had to be groped for in his consciousness
Straight, and as straight delivered them by guess.

Only obliged to ask himself, "What was,"
A speedy answer followed; but, alas,
One of God's large ones, tardy to condense Itself into a period; answers whence
A tangle of conclusions must be stripped

At any risk ere, trim to pattern clipped, io They matched rare specimens the Mantuan flock

Regaled him with, each talker from his stock

Of sorted-o'er opinions, every stage,
Juicy in youth or desiccate with age,
Fruits like the fig-tree's, rathe ripe, rotten-rich,

Sweet-sour, all tastes to take: a practice which

He too had not impossibly attained,
Once either of those fancy-flights restrained;
(For, at conjecture how might words appear

To others, playing there what happened here,

io And occupied abroad by what he spurned
At home, 'twas slipped, the occasion he returned

To seize:) he'd strike that lyre adroitly — speech,

Would but a twenty-cubit plectre,¹ reach;
A clever hand, consummate instrument,
Were both brought close; each excellency went

For nothing, else. The question Naddo asked,

Had just a lifetime moderately tasked
To answer, Naddo's fashion. More disgust

And more: why move his soul, since move it must

io At minute's notice or as good it failed
To move at all? The end was, he retailed
Some ready-made opinion, put to use
This quip, that maxim, ventured reproduce
Gestures and tones — at any folly caught Serving to finish with, nor too much sought
If false or true 'twas spoken; praise and blame

Of what he said grew pretty nigh the same — Meantime awards to meantime acts:
his soul,

Unequal to the compassing a whole, io Saw, in a tenth part, less and less to strive
About. And as for men in turn . . . contrive

Who could to take eternal interest
In them, so hate the worst, so love the best!

¹ An instrument for twanging the strings of a lyre.

Though, in pursuance of his passive plan,
He hailed, decried, the proper way.

As Man
So figured he; and how as Poet? Verse
Came only not to a stand-still. The worse,
That his poor piece of daily work to do
Was — not sink under any rivals; who Loudly and long enough, without these 50

qualms,
Turned, from Bocafoli's stark-naked psalms,

To Plara's sonnets spoilt by toying with,
"As knops² that stud some al mug³ to the pith

"Pricked for gum, wry thence, and crinkled worse

"Than pursed eyelids of a river-horse
"Sunning himself o' the slime when whirrs the breeze" —

Gad-fly, that is. He might compete with these!

But — but —

"Observe a pompion⁴-twine afloat;
"Pluck me one cup from off the castle-moat!

"Along with cup you raise leaf, stalk and 60 root,

"The entire surface of the pool to boot.
"So could I pluck a cup, put in one song

"A single sight, did not my hand, too strong,

"Twitch in the least the root-strings of the whole.

"How should externals satisfy my soul?"
"Why that's precise the error Squarcialupe"

(Hazarded Naddo) "finds; 'the man can't stoop

"To sing us out,' quoth he, 'a mere romance;

"He'd fain do better than the best, enhance

"The subjects' rarity, work problems out 70
"Therewith.' Now, you're a bard, a bard past doubt,

"And no philosopher; why introduce
"Crotchets like these? fine, surely, but no use

"In poetry — which still must be, to strike,
"Based upon common sense; there's nothing like

"Appealing to our nature! what beside "Was your first poetry? No tricks were tried

"In that, no hollow thrills, affected throes!
"The man,' said we, 'tells his own joys and woes:

"We'll trust him.' Would you have your 80 songs endure?

"Build on the human heart! — why, to be sure

² Buds. ³ Sandal-wood. ⁴ Melon.

"Yours is one sort of heart — but I mean theirs,
 "Ours, every one's; the healthy heart one cares
 "To build on! Central peace, mother of strength,
 "That's father of . . . nay, go yourself that length,
 "Ask those calm-hearted doers what they do
 "When they have got their calm! And is it true,
 "Fire rangles at the heart of every globe?
 "Perhaps. But these are matters one may probe
 "Too deeply for poetic purposes:
 10 "Rather select a theory that . . . yes,
 "Laugh! what does that prove? — stations you midway
 "And saves some little o'er-refining. Nay,
 "That's rank injustice done me! I restrict "The poet? Don't I hold the poet picked "Out of a host of warriors, statesmen . . . did
 "I tell you? Very like! As well you hid "That sense of power, you have! True bards believe
 "All able to achieve what they achieve —
 "That is, just nothing — in one point abide 20 "Profounder simpletons than all beside.
 "Oh, ay! The knowledge that you are a bard
 "Must constitute your prime, nay sole, reward!"
 So prattled Naddo, busiest of the tribe
 Of genius-haunters — how shall I describe
 What grubs or nips or rubs or rips — your louse
 For love, your flea for hate, magnanimous,
 Malignant, Pappacoda, Tagliafer,¹ Picking a sustenance from wear and tear
 By implements it sedulous employs 30 To undertake, lay down, mete out, o'ertoise
 Sordello? Fifty creepers to elude
 At once! They settled staunchly; shame ensued:
 Behold the monarch of mankind succumb
 To the last fool who turned him round his thumb,
 As Naddo styled it! 'Twas not worth oppose
 The matter of a moment, gainsay those
 He aimed at getting rid of; better think Their thoughts and speak their speech, secure to slink
 Back expeditiously to his safe place,
 40 And chew the cud — what he and what his race
 Were really, each of them. Yet even this Conformity was partial. He would miss

Some point, brought into contact with them ere Assured in what small segment of the sphere
 Of his existence they attended him;
 Whence blunders, falsehoods rectified — a grim List — slur it over! How? If dreams were tried,
 His will swayed sicklily from side to side,
 Nor merely neutralised his waking act
 But tended e'en in fancy to distract 54 The intermediate will, the choice of means,
 He lost the art of dreaming: Mantuan scenes Supplied a baron, say, he sang before,
 Handsomely reckless, full to running-o'er
 Of gallantries; "abjure the soul, content "With body, therefore!" Scarcely had he bent Himself in dream thus low, when matter fast
 Cried out, he found, for spirit to contrast
 And task it duly; by advances slight,
 The simple stuff becoming composite, 6:
 Count Lori grew Apollo: best recall
 His fancy! Then would some rough peasant-Paul,
 Like those old Ecelin confers with, glance
 His gay apparel o'er; that countenance
 Gathered his shattered fancies into one,
 And, body clean abolished, soul alone Sufficed the grey Paulician; by and by,
 To balance the ethereality,
 Passions were needed; foiled he sank again.
 Meanwhile the world rejoiced ('tis time 70 explain)
 Because a sudden sickness set it free
 From Adelaide. Missing the mother-bee,
 Her mountain-hive Romano swarmed; at once
 A rustle-forth of daughters and of sons Blackened the valley. "I am sick too, old,
 "Half-crazed I think; what good's the Kaiser's gold
 "To such an one? God help me! for I catch
 "My children's greedy sparkling eyes at watch —
 "'He bears that double breastplate on,' they say,
 "'So many minutes less than yesterday!' 80
 "Beside, Monk Hilary is on his knees
 "Now, sworn to kneel and pray till God shall please
 "Exact a punishment for many things
 "You know, and some you never knew; which brings "To memory, Azze's sister Beatrix
 "And Richard's Giglia are my Alberic's
 "And Ecelin's betrothed; the Count himself
 "Must get my Palma: Ghibellin and Guelf

"Mean to embrace each other." So began Romano's missive to his fighting man
 Taurello — on the Tuscan's death, away
 With Friedrich sworn to sail from Naples' bay
 Next month for Syria. Never thunder-clap
 Out of Vesuvius' throat, like this mishap Startled him. "That accursed Vicenza! I
 "Absent, and she selects this time to die!
 "Ho, fellows, for Vicenza!" Half a score Of horses ridden dead, he stood before Romano in his reeking spurs: too late —
 "Boniface urged me, Este could not wait," The chieftain stammered; "let me die in peace —
 "Forget me! Was it I who craved increase "Of rule? Do you and Friedrich plot your worst
 "Against the Father: as you found me
 first
 "So leave me now. Forgive me! Palma,
 sure,
 "Is at Goito still. Retain that lure —
 "Only be pacified!"
 The country rung
 20 With such a piece of news: on every
 tongue,
 How Ecelin's great servant, congeed off,
 Had done a long day's service, so, might duff
 The green and yellow, and recover breath
 At Mantua, whither, — since Retrude's
 death,
 (The girlish slip of a Sicilian bride
 From Otho's house, he carried to reside
 At Mantua till the Ferrarese should pile
 A structure worthy her imperial style,
 The gardens raise, the statues there enshrine,
 30 She never lived to see) — although his line
 Was ancient in her archives and she took
 A pride in him, that city, nor forsook Her child when he forsook himself and
 spent
 A prowess on Romano surely meant
 For his own growth — whither he ne'er resorts
 If wholly satisfied (to trust reports)
 With Ecelin. So, forward in a trice Were shows to greet him. "Take a friend's advice," Quoth Naddo to Sordello, "nor be rash 40 "Because your rivals (nothing can abash
 "Some folks) demur that we pronounced you best
 "To sound the great man's welcome; 'tis a test,
 "Remember! Strojavacca looks asquint,
 "The rough fat sloven; and there's plenty hint
 "Your pinions have received of late a shock —
 "Outsoar them, cobswan of the silver flock!
 "Sing well!" A signal wonder, song's no whit
 Facilitated.
 Fast the minutes flit;
 Another day, Sordello finds, will bring
 The soldier, and he cannot choose but sing; 50
 So, a last shift, quits Mantua — slow,
 alone:
 Out of that aching brain, a very stone, Song must be struck. What occupies that front?
 Just how he was more awkward than his wont
 The night before, when Naddo, who had seen
 Taurello on his progress, praised the mien
 For dignity no crosses could affect —
 Such was a joy, and might not he detect
 A satisfaction if established joys
 Were proved imposture? Poetry annoys 60 Its utmost: wherefore fret? Verses may
 come
 Or keep away! And thus he wandered,
 dumb
 Till evening, when he paused, thoroughly
 spent,
 On a blind hill-top: down the gorge he
 went,
 Yielding himself up as to an embrace.
 The moon came out; like features of a face,
 A querulous fraternity of pines,
 Sad blackthorn clumps, leafless and grovelling vines
 Also came out, made gradually up
 The picture; 'twas Goito's mountain-cup 70
 And castle. He had dropped through one defile
 He never dared explore, the Chief erewhile Had vanished by. Back rushed the dream, enwrapped
 Him wholly. 'Twas Apollo now they lapped,
 Those mountains, not a pettish minstrel
 meant
 To wear his soul away in discontent, Brooding on fortune's malice. Heart and
 brain
 Swelled; he expanded to himself again,
 As some thin seedling spice-tree starved and frail,
 Pushing between cat's head and ibis' tail 80
 Crusted into the porphyry pavement smooth,
 — Suffered remain just as it sprung, to soothe
 The Soldan's pining daughter, never yet
 Well in her chilly green-glazed minaret, —
 When rooted up, the sunny day she died,
 And flung into the common court beside Its parent tree. Come home, Sordello!
 Soon
 Was he low muttering, beneath the moon

Of sorrow saved, of quiet evermore, — Since from the purpose, he maintained
before,

Only resulted wailing and hot tears.
Ah, the slim castle! dwindled of late years,
But more mysterious; gone to ruin — trails

Of vine through every loop-hole. Nought avails

The night as, torch in hand, he must explore

The maple chamber: did I say, its floor
Was made of intersecting cedar beams?

10 Worn now with gaps so large, there blew cold streams

Of air quite from the dungeon; lay your ear

Close and 'tis like, one after one, you hear In the blind darkness water drop. The nests

And nooks retain their long ranged vesturechests

Empty and smelling of the iris root

The Tuscan grated o'er them to recruit Her wasted wits. Palma was gone that
day,

Said the remaining women. Last, he lay Beside the Carian group reserved and still.

20 The Body, the Machine for Acting Will,
Had been at the commencement proved unfit;

That for Demonstrating, Reflecting it,
Mankind — no fitter: was the Will itself
In fault?

His forehead pressed the moonlit shelf
Beside the youngest marble maid awhile;
Then, raising it, he thought, with a long
smile,

"I shall be king again!" as he withdrew
The envied scarf; into the font he threw His crown.

Next day, no poet! "Wherefore?" asked

30 Taurello, when the dance of Jongleurs, masked

As devils, ended; "don't a song come next?"

The master of the pageant looked perplexed
Till Naddo's whisper came to his relief.

"His Highness knew what poets were: in brief,

"Had not the tetchy race prescriptive right
"To peevishness, caprice? or, call it spite,

"One must receive their nature in its length

"And breadth, expect the weakness with the strength!"

— So phrasing, till, his stock of phrases
spent,

40 The easy-natured soldier smiled assent, Settled his portly person, smoothed his chin,

And nodded that the bull-bait might begin.

BOOK THE THIRD.

AND the font took them: let our laurels
lie!

Braid moonfern now with mystic trifoly
Because once more Goito gets, once more, Sordello to itself! A dream is o'er,
And the suspended life begins anew;
Quiet those throbbing temples, then, subdue

That cheek's distortion! Nature's strict embrace,

Putting aside the past, shall soon efface 54
Its print as well — factitious humours
grown

Over the true — loves, hatreds not his
own —

And turn him pure as some forgotten vest
Woven of painted byssus,¹ silkiest

Tufting the Tyrrhene whelk's pearl-sheeted
lip,

Left welter where a trireme let it slip
I' the sea, and vexed a satrap; so the stain O' the world forsakes Sordello, with its pain,

Its pleasure: how the tinct loosening
escapes,

Cloud after cloud! Mantua's familiar 60
shapes

Die, fair and foul die, fading as they flit,
Men, women, and the pathos and the wit,

Wise speech and foolish, deeds to smile or sigh

For, good, bad, seemly or ignoble, die.
The last face glances through the eglan-
tines,

The last voice murmurs, 'twixt the blossomed vines,

Of Men, of that machine supplied by
thought

To compass self-perception with, he sought
By forcing half himself — an insane pulse

Of a god's blood, on clay it could convulse, 70 Never transmute — on human sights and sounds,

To watch the other half with; irksome bounds

It ebbs from to its source, a fountain sealed
For ever. Better sure be unrevealed

Than part revealed: Sordello well or ill
Is finished: then what further use of Will,

Point in the prime idea not realised,
An oversight? inordinately prized,

No less, and pampered with enough of each Delight to prove the whole above its reach. 80

"To need become all natures, yet retain
"The law of my own nature — to remain

"Myself, yet yearn . . . as if that chestnut, think,

"Should yearn for this first larch-bloom
crisp and pink,

“Or those pale fragrant tears where zephyrs stanch

“March wounds along the fretted pine-tree branch!

“Will and the means to show will, great and small,

“Material, spiritual, — abjure them all “Save any so distinct, they may be left

“To amuse, not tempt become! and, thus bereft,

“Just as I first was fashioned would I be!

“Nor, moon, is it Apollo now, but me

“Thou visitest to comfort and befriend!

30 “Swim thou into my heart, and there an
end,

“Since I possess thee! — nay, thus shut mine eyes

“And know, quite know, by this heart’s fall and rise,

“When thou dost bury thee in clouds, and when

“Out-standest: wherefore practise upon
men

“To make that plainer to myself?”
Slide here

Over a sweet and solitary year
Wasted; or simply notice change in him —

How eyes, once with exploring bright, grew dim

And satiate with receiving. Some distress
Was caused, too, by a sort of consciousness

Under the imbecility, — nought kept That down; he slept, but was aware he slept,

So, frustrated: as who brainsick made pact

Erst with the overhanging cataract
To deafen him, yet still distinguished plain

His own blood’s measured clicking at his brain.

To finish. One declining Autumn day —
Few birds about the heaven chill and grey,

No wind that cared trouble the tacit
woods —

50 He sauntered home complacently, their moods

According, his and nature’s. Every spark
Of Mantua life was trodden out; so dark

The embers, that the Troubadour, who sung

Hundreds of songs, forgot, its trick his
tongue,

Its craft his brain, how either brought to pass

Singing at all; that faculty might class
With any of Apollo’s now. The year

Began to find its early promise sere
As well. Thus beauty vanishes; thus

stone
40 Outlingers flesh: nature’s and his youth
gone,

They left the world to you, and wished you
joy.

When, stopping his benevolent employ.

A presage shuddered through the welkin;
harsh

The earth’s remonstrance followed. ’Twas the marsh

Gone of a sudden. Mincio, in its place, Laughed, a broad water, in next morning’s

face,
And, where the mists broke up immense and white

’T the steady wind, burned like a wraith of
light

Out of the crashing of a myriad stars.

And here was nature, bound by the same 50 bars

Of fate with him!

“No! youth once gone is gone:
“Deeds, let escape, are never to be done.

“Leaf-fall and grass-spring for the year;
for us —

“Oh forfeit I unalterably thus “My chance? nor two lives wait me, this to spend,

“Learning save that? Nature has time, may mend

“Mistake, she knows occasion will recur;
“Landslip or seabreach, how affects it her

“With her magnificent resources? — I “Must perish once and perish utterly.

60 “Not any strollings now at even-close “Down the field-path, Sordello! by thorn-rows

“Alive with lamp-flies, swimming spots of fire

“And dew, outlining the black cypress’
spire

“She waits you at, Elys, who heard you
first

“Woo her, the snow-month through, but ere she durst

“Answer ’twas April. Linden-flower-time-long

“Her eyes were on the ground; ’tis July,
strong

“Now; and because white dust-clouds overwhelm

“The woodside, here or by the village elm 70
“That holds the moon, she meets you,

somewhat pale,
“But letting you lift up her coarse flax veil

“And whisper (the damp little hand in
yours)

“Of love, heart’s love, your heart’s love that endures

“Till death. Tush! No mad mixing with the rout

“Of haggard ribalds wandering about “The hot torchlit wine-scented island-
house

“Where Friedrich holds his wickedest carouse,

“Parading, — to the gay Palermitans,
“Soft Messinese, dusk Saracenic clans 80

“Nuocera holds, — those tall grave dazzling Norse,

- "High-cheeked, lank-haired, toothed whiter than the morse,
"Queens of the caves of jet stalactites,
"He sent his barks to fetch through icy seas,
"The blind night seas without a saving star,
"And here in snowy birdskin robes they
are,
"Sordello! — here, mollitious alcoves gilt
"Superb as Byzant domes that devils built!
"— Ah, Byzant, there again! no chance to go
"Ever like august cheery Dandolo, 10 "Worshipping hearts about him for a wall,
"Conducted, blind eyes, hundred years and
all,
"Through vanquished Byzant where friends note for him
"What pillar, marble massive, sardius¹ slim,
"Twere fittest he transport to Venice'
Square —
"Flattered and promised life to touch them
there
"Soon, by those fervid sons of senators!
"No more lifes, deaths, loves, hatreds, peaces, wars!
"Ah, fragments of a whole ordained to be,
"Points in the life I waited! what are ye 20 "But roundels of a ladder which appeared "Awhile the very platform it was reared
"To lift me on? — that happiness I find "Proofs of my faith in, even in the blind
"Instinct which bade forego you all unless "Ye led me past yourselves. Ay, happi-
ness
"Awaited me; the way life should be used
"Was to acquire, and deeds like you conducted
"To teach it by a self-revelment, deemed "Life's very use, so long! Whatever
seemed 30 "Progress to that, was pleasure; aught that stayed
"My reaching it — no pleasure. I have laid
"The ladder down; I climb not; still, aloft
"The platform stretches! Blissess strong and soft,
"I dared not entertain, elude me; yet
"Never of what they promised could I get "A glimpse till now! The common sort,
the crowd,
"Exist, perceive; with Being are endowed,
"However slight, distinct from what they
See,
"However bounded; Happiness must be, 40 "To feed the first by gleanings from the
last,
"Attain its qualities, and slow or fast
- "Become what they behold; such peace-in-strife,
"By transmutation, — is the Use of Life,
"The Alien turning Native to the soul
"Or body — which instructs me; I am
whole
"There and demand a Palma; had the
world
"Been from my soul to a like distance
hurled,
"Twere Happiness, to make it one with
me:
"Whereas I must, ere I begin to Be,
"Include a world, in flesh; I comprehend 50
"In spirit now; and this done, what's to blend
"With? Nought is Alien in the world — my Will
"Owns all already; yet can turn it — still "Less — Native, since my Means to correspond
"With Will are so unworthy, 'twas my bond
"To tread the very joys that tantalise
"Most now, into a grave, never to rise.
"I die then! Will the rest agree to die?
"Next Age or no? Shall its Sordello try
"Clue after clue, and catch at last the clue 60
"I miss? — that's underneath my finger
too,
"Twice, thrice a day, perhaps, — some yearning traced
"Deeper, some petty consequence embraced
"Closer! Why fled I Mantua, then? — complained
"So much my Will was fettered, yet remained
"Content within a tether half the range
"I could assign it? — able to exchange
"My ignorance (I felt) for knowledge, and "Idle because I could thus understand —
"Could e'en have penetrated to its core 70
"Our mortal mystery, yet — fool — for-
bore,
"Preferred elaborating in the dark
"My casual stuff, by any wretched spark
"Born of my predecessors, though one stroke
"Of mine had brought the flame forth!
Mantua's yoke,
"My minstrel's-trade, was to behold mankind, —
"My own concern was just to bring my
mind
"Behold, just extricate, for my acquit,
"Each object suffered stifle in the mist
"Which hazard, custom, blindness inter- 80
pose
"Betwixt things and myself."

Whereat he rose.

The level wind carried above the firs
Clouds, the irrevocable travellers, Onward.

¹ Carnelian stone.

"Pushed thus into a drowsy copse,
 "Arms twine about my neck, each eyelid drops
 "Under a humid finger; while there fleets,
 "Outside the screen, a pageant time repeats
 "Never again! To be deposed, im-mured
 "Clandestinely — still petted, still assured
 "To govern were fatiguing work — the Sight
 "Fleeting meanwhile! 'Tis noontide:
 wreak ere night
 "Somehow my will upon it, rather! Slake
 "This thirst somehow, the poorest impress
 take
 "That serves! A blasted bud displays you, torn,
 "Faint rudiments of the full flower un-
 born;
 "But who divines what glory coats o'er-clasp
 "Of the bulb dormant in the mummy's grasp
 "Taurello sent?"
 "Taurello? Palma sent
 "Your Trouvere," (Naddo interposing
 leant
 Over the lost bard's shoulder) — "and,
 believe,
 "You cannot more reluctantly receive
 "Than I pronounce her message: we de-
 part
 "Together. What avail a poet's heart
 "Verona's pomps and gauds? five blades of grass
 "Suffice him. News? Why, where your marish was,
 "On its mud-banks smoke rises after
 smoke
 "I' the valley, like a spout of hell new-broke.
 "Oh, the world's tidings! small your thanks, I guess,
 "For them. The father of our Patroness,
 "Has played Taurello an astounding trick,
 "Parts between Ecelin and Alberic
 "His wealth and goes into a convent: both
 "Wed Guelfs: the Count and Palma
 plighted troth
 "A week since at Verona: and they want
 "You doubtless to contrive the marriagechant
 "Ere Richard storms Ferrara." Then was told
 The tale from the beginning — how, made bold
 By Salinguerra's absence, Guelfs had burned
 And pillaged till he unawares returned
 To take revenge: how Azzo and his friend
 Were doing their endeavour, how the end
 O' the siege was nigh, and how the Count, released

From further care, would with his marriage-feast
 Inaugurate a new and better rule, Absorbing thus Romano.
 "Shall I schoor
 "My master," added Naddo, "and suggest
 "How you may clothe in a poetic vest
 "These doings, at Verona? Your response
 "To Palma! Wherefore jest? 'Depart
 at once?'"
 "A good resolve! In truth, I hardly hoped
 "So prompt an acquiescence. Have you groped
 "Out wisdom in the wilds here? — thoughts may be
 "Over-poetical for poetry.
 "Pearl-white, you poets liken Palma's
 neck;
 "And yet what spoils an orient like some speck
 "Of genuine white, turning its own white grey?
 "You take me? Curse the cicala!"
 One more day
 One eve — appears Verona! Many a
 group,
 (You mind) instructed of the osprey's swoop
 On lynx and ounce, was gathering —
 Christendom
 Sure to receive, whate'er the end was, from
 The evening's purpose cheer or detriment,
 Since Friedrich only waited some event
 Like this, of Ghibellins establishing Themselves within Ferrara, ere, as King
 Of Lombardy, he'd glad descend there,
 wage
 Old warfare with the Pontiff, disengage
 His barons from the burghers, and restore
 The rule of Charlemagne, broken of yore
 By Hildebrand.
 I' the palace, each by each,
 Sordello sat and Palma: little speech
 At first in that dim closet, face with face
 (Despite the tumult in the market-place) Exchanging quick low laughter: now would rush
 Word upon word to meet a sudden flush,
 A look left off, a shifting lips' surmise —
 But for the most part their two histories Ran best thro' the locked fingers and linked arms.
 And so the night flew on with its alarms
 Till in burst one of Palma's retinue;
 "Now, Lady!" gasped he. Then arose the two
 And leaned into Verona's air, dead-still.
 A balcony lay black beneath until Out, 'mid a gush of torchfire, grey-haired
 men
 Came on it and harangued the people: then

Sea-like that people surging to and fro Shouted, "Hale forth the carroch — trumpets, ho,
 "A flourish! Run it in the ancient grooves!
 "Back from the bell! Hammer — that whom behoves
 "May hear the League is up! Peal — learn who list,
 "Verona means not first of towns break tryst
 "To-morrow with the League!"
 Enough. Now turn —
 Over the eastern cypresses: discern!
 Is any beacon set a-glimmer?

Rang

10 The air with shouts that overpowered the clang
 Of the incessant carroch, even: "Haste —
 "The candle's at the gateway! ere it
 waste,
 "Each soldier stand beside it, armed to march
 "With 'Tiso Sampier through the eastern arch!"
 Ferrara's succoured, Palma!

Once again

They sat together; some strange thing in train

To say, so difficult was Palma's place
 In taking, with a coy fastidious grace
 Like the bird's flutter ere it fix and feed.

20 But when she felt she held her friend indeed Safe, she threw back her curls, began implant

Her lessons; telling of another want Goito's quiet nourished than his own;
 Palma — to serve him — to be served,
 alone

Importing; Agnes' milk so neutralised
 The blood of Ecelin. Nor be surprised If, while Sordello fain had captive led Nature, in dream was Palma subjected To some out-soul, which dawned not though she pined

30 Delaying, till its advent, heart and mind Their life. "How dared I let expand the force

"Within me, till some out-soul, whose resource

"It grew for, should direct it? Every law
 "Of life, its every fitness, every flaw,

"Must One determine whose corporeal
 shape

"Would be no other than the prime escape
 "And revelation to me of a Will

"Orb-like o'ershrouded and inscrutable

"Above, save at the point which, I should
 know,

40 "Shone that myself, my powers, might overflow

"So far, so much; as now it signified

"Which earthly shape it henceforth chose my guide,

"Whose mortal lip selected to declare
 "Its oracles, what fleshly garb would wear
 "— The first of intimations, whom to love;
 "The next, how love him. Seemed that orb, above

"The castle-covert and the mountain-
 close,

"Slow in appearing? — if beneath it rose

"Cravings, aversions, — did our green precinct

"Take pride in me, at unawares distinct

"With this or that endowment, — how, repressed

"At once, such jetting power shrank to the
 rest!

"Was I to have a chance touch spoil me,
 leave

"My spirit thence unfitted to receive

"The consummating spell? — that spell so near

"Moreover! 'Waits he not the waking
 year?

"His almond-blossoms must be honey-ripe

"By this; to welcome him, fresh runnels stripe

"The thawed ravines; because of him,
 the wind

"Walks like a herald. I shall surely find
 "Him now!"

"And chief, that earnest April morn
 "Of Richard's Love-court, was it time, so
 worn

"And white my cheek, so idly my blood
 beat,

"Sitting that morn beside the Lady's feet
 "And saying as she prompted; till outburst

"One face from all the faces. Not then
 first

"I knew it; where in maple chamber
 glooms,

"Crowned with what sanguine-heart
 pomegranate blooms,

"Advanced it ever? Men's acknowledgment

"Sanctioned my own: 'twas taken, Palma's bent, —

"Sordello, — recognised, accepted.
 "Dumb

"Sat she still scheming. Ecelin would coine

"Gaunt, scared, 'Cesano baffles me,' he'd
 say:

"'Better I fought it out, my father's way!
 "Strangle Ferrara in its drowning flats,

"And you and your Taurello yonder! — what's

"'Romano's business there?' An hour's concern

"To cure the froward Chief! — induce return

"As heartened from those overmeaning
 eyes

"Wound up to persevere, — his enterprise
 "Marked out anew, its exigent of wit
 "Apportioned, — she at liberty to sit
 "And scheme against the next emergence,
 I —
 "To covet her Taurello-sprite, made fly
 "Or fold the wing — to con your horo-
 scope
 "For leave command those steely shafts shoot ope,
 "Or straight assuage their blinding eager-
 ness
 "In blank smooth snow. What semblance of success
 "To any of my plans for making you "Mine and Romano's? Break the first wall through,
 "Tread o'er the ruins of the Chief, supplant
 "His sons beside, still, vainest were the
 vaunt:
 "There, Salinguerra would obstruct me sheer,
 "And the insuperable Tuscan, here,
 "Stay me! But one wild eve that Lady died
 "In her lone chamber: only I beside:
 "Taurello far at Naples, and my sire
 "At Padra, Ecelin away in ire
 "With Alberic. She held me thus — a clutch
 "To make our spirits as our bodies touch —
 "And so began flinging the past up, heaps "Of uncouth treasure from their sunless sleeps
 "Within her soul; deeds rose along with
 dreams,
 "Fragments of many miserable schemes,
 "Secrets, more secrets, then — no, not the
 last
 "Mongst others, like a casual trick o' the
 past,
 "How . . . ay, she told me, gathering up her face,
 "All left of it, into one arch-grimace
 "To die with . . .
 "Friend, 'tis gone! but not the fear
 "Of that fell laughing, heard as now I hear.
 "Nor faltered voice, nor seemed her heart grow weak
 "When i' the midst abrupt she ceased to
 speak
 "— Dead, as to serve a purpose, mark! — for in
 "Rushed o' the very instant Ecelin
 "(How summoned, who divines?) — looking as if
 "He understood why Adelaide lay stiff
 "Already in my arms; for 'Girl, how must
 "I manage Este in the matter thrust
 "Upon me, how unravel your bad coil?
 "Since' (he declared) 'tis on your brow
 — a soil
 "Like hers there!' then in the same breath,
 'he lacked
 "No counsel after all, had signed no pact
 "With devils, nor was treason here or
 there,
 "Goito or Vicenza, his affair:
 "He buried it in Adelaide's deep grave,
 "Would begin life afresh, now, — would not slave
 "For any Friedrich's nor Taurello's sake!
 "What bootied him to meddle or to make "In Lombardy?' And afterward I knew 5
 "The meaning of his promise to undo
 "All she had done — why marriages were
 made,
 "New friendships entered on, old followers paid
 "With curses for their pains, — new friends' amaze
 "At height, when, passing out by Gate
 Saint Blaise,
 "He stopped short in Vicenza, bent his
 head
 "Over a friar's neck, — 'had vowed,' he
 said,
 "Long since, nigh thirty years, because his wife
 "And child were saved there, to bestow
 his life
 "On God, his gettings on the Church.' 60
 "Exiled
 "Within Goito, still one dream beguiled
 "My days and nights; 'twas found, the orb
 I sought
 "To serve, those glimpses came of Fomalhaut,
 "No other: but how serve it? — authorise
 "Yqu and Romano mingle destinies?
 "And straight Romano's angel stood beside "Me who had else been Boniface's bride,
 "For Salinguerra 'twas, with neck low bent,
 "And voice lightened to music, (as he
 meant
 "To learn, not teach me,) who withdrew 70
 the pall
 "From the dead past and straight revived
 it all,
 "Making me see how first Romano waxed,
 "Wherefore he waned now, why, if I relaxed
 "My grasp (even I!) would drop a thing
 effete,
 "Frayed by itself, unequal to complete
 "Its course, and counting every step astray
 "A gain so much. Romano, every way "Stable, a Lombard House now — why start back
 "Into the very outset of its track?
 "This patching principle which late allied 80
 "Our House with other Houses — what
 beside
 "Concerned the apparition, the first Knight

- "Who followed Conrad hither in such plight
"His utmost wealth was summed in his one steed?
"For Ecelo, that prowler, was decreed
"A task, in the beginning hazardous
"To him as ever task can be to us;
"But did the weather-beaten thief despair
"When first our crystal cincture of warm
air
"That binds the Trevisan, — as its spice-belt
"(Crusaders say) the tract where Jesus dwelt, — 10 "Furtive he pierced, and Este was to face —
"Despaired Saponian strength of Lombard
grace?
"Tried he at making surer aught made sure,
"Maturing what already was mature?
"No; his heart prompted Ecelo, 'Confront
"Este, inspect yourself. What's nature?
Wont.
"Discard three-parts your nature, and adopt
"The rest as an advantage!' Old strength propped
"The man who first grew Podestà among "The Vicentines, no less than, while there sprung
20 "His palace up in Padua like a threat,
"Their noblest spied a grace, unnoticed
yet
"In Conrad's crew. Thus far the object
gained,
"Romano was established — has remained —
"For are you not Italian, truly peers?
"With Este? Azzo better soothes our ears
"Than Alberic? or is this lion's-crime
"From over-mounts' (this yellow hair of
mine)
"So weak a graft on Agnes Este's stock?
"(Thus went he on with something of a mock) 30 "Wherefore recoil, then, from the very fate
"Conceded you, refuse to imitate
"Your model farther? Este long since
left
"Being mere Este: as a blade its heft,
"Este required the Pope to further him:
"And you, the Kaiser — whom your father's whim
"Foregoes or, better, never shall forego
"If Palma dare pursue what Ecelo
"Commenced, but Ecelin desists from:
just
"As Adelaide of Susa could intrust 40 "Her donative, — her Piedmont given the Pope,
"Her Alpine-pass for him to shut or ope
"Twixt France and Italy, — to the superb
"Matilda's perfecting, — so, lest aught curb
"Our Adelaide's great counter-project for "Giving her Trentine to the Emperor
"With passage here from Germany, — shall you
"Take it, — my slender plodding talent,
too!
"— Urged me Taurello with his half-
smile.
"He
"As Patron of the scattered family
"Conveyed me to his Mantua, kept in bruit
"Azzo's alliances and Richard's suit
"Until, the Kaiser excommunicate, "Nothing remains,' Taurello said, 'but
wait
"Some rash procedure: Palma was the link,
"As Agnes' child, between us, and they shrink
"From losing Palma: judge if we advance,
"Your father's method, your inheritance!
"The day I was betrothed to Boniface
"At Padua by Taurello's self, took place
"The outrage of the Ferrarese: again, 6 "The day I sought Verona with the train
"Agreed for, — by Taurello's policy
"Convicting Richard of the fault, since we "Were present to annul or to confirm, — "Richard, whose patience had outstayed its term,
"Quitted Verona for the siege.
"And now
"What glory may engird Sordello's brow?
"Through this? A month since at Oliero slunk
"All that was Ecelin into a monk;
"But how could Salinguerra so forget 7 "His liege of thirty years as grudge even yet
"One effort to recover him? He sent "Forthwith the tidings of this last event
"To Ecelin — declared that he, despite "The recent folly, recognised his right
"To order Salinguerra: 'Should he wring
"Its uttermost advantage out, or fling
"This chance away? Or were his sons now Head
"O' the House?' Through me Taurello's missive sped;
"My father's answer will by me return. 8
"Behold! 'For him,' he writes, 'no more concern
"With strife than, for his children, with fresh plots
"Of Friedrich. Old engagements out he blots
"For aye: Taurello shall no more sub-
serve,
"Nor Ecelin impse.' Lest this unnerve

"Taurello at this juncture, slack his grip
 "Of Richard, suffer the occasion slip,
 "I, in his sons' default (who, mating with
 "Este, forsake Romano as the frith
 "Its mainsea for that firmiland, sea makes
 head
 "Against I stand, Romano, — in their
 stead
 "Assume the station they desert, and give
 "Still, as the Kaiser's representative, "Taurello licence he demands. Mid-
 night —
 "Morning — by noon to-morrow, making
 light
 "Of the League's issue, we, in some gay weed
 "Like yours, disguised together, may preceede
 "The arbitrators to Ferrara: reach
 "Him, let Taurello's noble accents teach "The rest! Then say if I have miscon-
 ceived
 "Your destiny, too readily believed
 "The Kaiser's cause your own!"
 And Palma's fled.
 Though no affirmative disturbs the head,
 A dying lamp-flame sinks and rises o'er,
 Like the alighted planet Pollux wore,
 Until, morn breaking, he resolves to be Gate-vein of this heart's blood of Lombardy,
 Soul of this body — to wield this aggregate
 Of souls and bodies, and so conquer fate
 Though he should live — a centre of disgust
 Even — apart, core of the outward crust
 He vivifies, assimilates. For thus
 I bring Sordello to the rapturous Exclaim at the crowd's cry, because one
 round
 Of life was quite accomplished; and he
 found
 Not only that a soul, whate'er its might,
 Is insufficient to its own delight,
 Both in corporeal organs and in skill
 By means of such to body forth its Will —
 And, after, insufficient to apprise
 Men of that Will, oblige them recognise The Hid by the Revealed — but that, — the last
 Nor lightest of the struggles overpast, —
 Will, he bade abdicate, which would not void
 The throne, might sit there, suffer he enjoyed
 Mankind, a varied and divine array Incapable of homage, the first way,
 Nor fit to render incidentally Tribute connived at, taken by the by,
 In joys. If thus with warrant to rescind
 The ignominious exile of mankind —
 Whose proper service, ascertained intact
 As yet, (to be by him themselves made act,
 Not watch Sordello acting each of them)

Was to secure — if the true diadem Seemed imminent while our Sordello
 drank
 The wisdom of that golden Palma, — thank Verona's Lady in her citadel
 Founded by Gaulish Brennus, legends tell:
 And truly when she left him, the sun reared
 A head like the first clamberer's who peered
 A-top the Capitol, his face on flame
 With triumph, triumphing till Manlius
 came.
 Nor slight too much my rhymes — that spring, disspread,
 Dispart, disperse, lingering overhead 66
 Like an escape of angels! Rather say,
 My transcendental platan! mounting gay
 (An archimage so courts a novice-queen)
 With tremulous silvered trunk, whence branches sheen Laugh out, thick-foliaged next, a-shiver
 soon
 With coloured buds, then glowing like the moon
 One mild flame, — last a pause, a burst,
 and all
 Her ivory limbs are smothered by a fall, Bloom-flinders and fruit-sparkles and leaf-
 dust,
 Ending the weird work prosecuted just 70
 For her amusement; he decrepit, stark,
 Dozes; her uncontrolled delight may mark
 Apart —
 Yet not so, surely never so
 Only, as good my soul were suffered go
 O'er the lagune: forth fare thee, put aside —
 Entrance thy synod, as a god may glide
 Out of the world he fills, and leave it mute
 For myriad ages as we men compute,
 Returning into it without a break
 O' the consciousness! They sleep, and I 80
 awake
 O'er the lagune, being at Venice.
 Note,
 In just such songs as Eglamor (say) wrote With heart and soul and strength, for he believed
 Himself achieving all to be achieved
 By singer — in such songs you find alone
 Completeness, judge the song and singer
 one,
 And either purpose answered, his in it Or its in him: while from true works (to wit
 Sordello's dream-performances that will Never be more than dreamed) escapes 90 there still
 Some proof, the singer's proper life was
 'neath
 The life his song exhibits, this a sheath
 To that; a passion and a knowledge far Transcending these, majestic as they are,

Smouldered; his lay was but an episode
In the bard's life: which evidence you owed

To some slight weariness, some looking-off
Or start-away. The childish skit or scoff In "Charlemagne," (his poem, dreamed
divine

In every point except one silly line
About the restiff daughters) — what may
lurk

in that? "My life commenced before this
work,"

(So I interpret the significance

10 Of the bard's start aside and look askance)

"My life continues after: on I fare

'With no more stopping, possibly, no care

"To note the undercurrent, the why and how,

"Where, when, o' the deeper life, as thus
just now.

"But, silent, shall I cease to live? Alas

"For you! who sigh, 'When shall it come to pass

"We read that story? How will he compress

"The future gains, his life's true business,

"Into the better lay which — that one
flout,

20 "Howe'er inopportune it be, lets out —

"Engrosses him already, though professed

"To meditate with us eternal rest,

"And partnership in all his life has
found?"

'Tis but a sailor's promise, weather-bound:

"Strike sail, slip cable, here the bark be moored

"For once, the awning stretched, the poles assured!

"Noontide above; except the wave's crisp
dash,

"Or buzz of colibri,¹ or tortoise' splash,

"The margin's silent: out with every spoil

30 "Made in our tracking, coil by mighty coil,

"This serpent of a river to his head

"I the midst! Admire each treasure, as we spread

"The bank, to help us tell our history

"Aright: give ear, endeavour to descry

"The groves of giant rushes, how they grew

"Like demons' endlong tresses we sailed
through,

"What mountains yawned, forests to give us vent

"Opened, each doleful side, yet on we went

"Till . . . may that beetle (shake your cap) attest

40 "The springing of a land-wind from the West!"

— Wherefore? Ah yes, you frolic it to-
day!

To-morrow, and, the pageant moved away

Down to the poorest tent-pole, we and you
Part company: no other may pursue Eastward your voyage, be informed what
fate

Intends, if triumph or decline await

The tempter of the everlasting steppe.

I muse this on a ruined palace-step

At Venice: why should I break off, nor sit

Longer upon my step, exhaust the fit

England gave birth to? Who's adorable

Enough reclaim a — no Sordello's Will Alack! — be queen to me? That Bas-sanese

Busied among her smoking fruit-boats?
These

Perhaps from our delicious Asolo

Who twinkle, pigeons o'er the portico

Not prettier, bind June lilies into sheaves

To deck the bridge-side chapel, dropping
leaves

Soiled by their own loose gold-meal? Ah,
beneath

The cool arch stoops she, brownest cheek!
Her wreath

Endures a month — a half-month — if I make

A queen of her, continue for her sake
Sordello's story? Nay, that Paduan girl

Splashes with barer legs where a live whirl
In the dead black Giudecca proves seaweed

Drifting has sucked down three, four, all
indeed

Save one pale-red striped, pale-blue turbanned post

For gondolas.

You sad dishevelled ghost
That pluck at me and point, are you advised

I breathe? Let stay those girls (e'en her disguised

— Jewels i' the locks that love no crownet
like

Their native field-buds and the green
wheat-spike,

So fair! — who left this end of June's turmoil,

Shook off, as might a lily its gold soil,
Pomp, save a foolish gem or two, and free

In dream, came join the peasants o'er the
sea.)

Look they too happy, too tricked out?
Confess

There is such niggard stock of happiness
To share, that, do one's uttermost, dear
wretch,

One labours ineffectually to stretch
It o'er you so that mother and children,
both

May equitably flaunt the sumpter-cloth!
Divide the robe yet farther: be content

With seeing just a score pre-eminent Through shreds of it, acknowledged happy wights,

Engrossing what should furnish all, by rights!
 For, these in evidence, you clearer claim
 A like garb for the rest, — grace all, the same
 As these my peasants. I ask youth and strength
 And health for each of you, not more — at length
 Grown wise, who asked at home that the whole race
 Might add the spirit's to the body's grace,
 And all be dizenod out as chiefs and bards.
 But in this magic weather one discards Much old requirement. Venice seems a type
 Of Life — 'twixt blue and blue extends, a stripe,
 As Life, the somewhat, hangs 'twixt nought and nought:
 'Tis Venice, and 'tis Life — as good you sought
 To spare me the Piazza's slippery stone
 Or keep me to the unchoked canals alone,
 As hinder Life the evil with the good
 Which make up Living, rightly understood.
 Only, do finish something! Peasants, queens,
 Take them, made happy by whatever means,
 Parade them for the common credit, vouch
 That a luckless residue, we send to crouch
 In corners out of sight, was just as framed
 For happiness, its portion might have claimed
 As well, and so, obtaining joy, had stalked
 Fastuous as any! — such my project, balked
 Already; I hardly venture to adjust
 The first rags, when you find me. To mistrust Me! — nor unreasonably. You, no doubt,
 Have the true knack of tiring suitors out
 With those thin lips on tremble, lashless eyes
 Inveterately tear-shot: there, be wise,
 Mistress of mine, there, there, as if I meant You insult! — shall your friend (not slave) be shent
 For speaking home? Beside, care-bit erased Broken-up beauties ever took my taste supremely; and I love you more, far more Than her I looked should foot Life's temple-floor.
 Years ago, leagues at distance, when and where A whisper came, "Let others seek! — thy care
 'Is found, thy life's provision; if thy race
 'Should be thy mistress, and into one face
 'The many faces crowd?" Ah, had I,
 judge,

Or no, your secret? Rough apparel — grudge
 All ornaments save tag or tassel worn
 To hint we are not thoroughly forlorn —
 Slouch bonnet, unloop mantle, careless go Alone (that's saddest, but it must be so) Through Venice, sing now and now glance
 aside,
 Aught desultory or undignified, —
 Then, ravishingest lady, will you pass 50
 Or not each formidable group, the mass
 Before the Basilic (that feast gone by, God's great day of the Corpus Domini)
 And, wistfully foregoing proper men,
 Come timid up to me for alms? And then
 The luxury to hesitate, feign do Some unexampled grace! — when, whom
 but you
 Dare I bestow your own upon? And hear
 Further before you say, it is to sneer
 I call you ravishing; for I regret 60
 Little that she, whose early foot was set Forth as she'd plant it on a pedestal,
 Now, i' the silent city, seems to fall
 Toward me — no wreath, only a lip's unrest
 To quiet, surcharged eyelids to be pressed Dry of their tears upon my bosom. Strange Such sad chance should produce in thee
 such change,
 My love! Warped souls and bodies! yet
 God spoke
 Of right-hand, foot and eye — selects our yoke,
 Sordello, as your poetship may find! 70
 So, sleep upon my shoulder, child, nor mind
 Their foolish talk; we'll manage reinstate Your old worth; ask moreover, when they prate
 Of evil men past hope, "Don't each contrive,
 "Despite the evil you abuse, to live? —
 "Keeping, each losel, through a maze of lies,
 "His own conceit of truth? to which he hies
 "By obscure windings, tortuous, if you will,
 "But to himself not inaccessible;
 "He sees truth, and his lies are for the 80
 crowd
 "Who cannot see; some fancied right
 allowed
 "His vilest wrong, empowered the losel
 clutch
 "One pleasure from a multitude of such "Denied him." Then assert, "All men appear
 "To think all better than themselves, by
 here
 "Trusting a crowd they wrong; but really," say,
 "All men think all men stupider than
 they,

"Since, save themselves, no other comprehends
 'The complicated scheme to make amends
 "— Evil, the scheme by which, thro' Ignorance,
 "Good labours to exist." A slight advance, — Merely to find the sickness you die through,
 And nought beside! but if one can't eschew One's portion in the common lot, at least
 One can avoid an ignorance increased Tenfold by dealing out hint after hint
 10 How nought were like dispensing without stint
 The water of life — so easy to dispense Beside, when one has probed the centre whence Commotion's born — could tell you of it all!
 "— Meantime, just meditate my madrigal
 "O' the mugwort that conceals a dewdrop safe!"
 What, dullard? we and you in smothery chafe,
 Babes, baldheads, stumbled thus far into Zin
 The Horrid,¹ getting neither out nor in,
 A hungry sun above us, sands that bung
 20 Our throats, — each dromedary lolls a tongue,
 Each camel churns a sick and frothy chap,
 And you, 'twixt tales of Potiphar's mishap,
 And sonnets on the earliest ass that spoke,
 — Remark, you wonder any one needs choke
 With founts about! Potsherd him, Gibeonites!
 While awkwardly enough your Moses smites
 The rock, though he forego his Promised Land Thereby, have Satan claim his carcass, and Figure as Metaphysic Poet . . . ah,
 30 Mark ye the dim first ooziings? Meribah!²
 Then, quaffing at the fount my courage gained,
 Recall — not that I prompt ye — who explained . . .
 "Presumptuous!" interrupts one. You, not I
 'Tis brother, marvel at and magnify
 Such office: "office," quotha? can we get
 To the beginning of the office yet?
 What do we here? simply experiment
 Each on the other's power and its intent
 When elsewhere tasked, — if this of mine were trucked
 40 For yours to either's good, — we watch construct,

In short, an engine: with a finished one,
 What it can do, is all, — nought, how 'tis done.
 But this of ours yet in probation, dusk
 A kernel of strange wheelwork through its husk
 Grows into shape by quarters and by halves;
 Remark this tooth's spring, wonder what that valve's
 Fall bodes, presume each faculty's device,
 Make out each other more or less precise —
 The scope of the whole engine's to be proved;
 We die; which means to say, the whole's removed,
 Dismounted wheel by wheel, this complex gin, —
 To be set up anew elsewhere, begin
 A task indeed, but with a clearer clime
 Than the murk lodgment of our building-time.
 And then, I grant you, it behoves forget
 How 'tis done — all that must amuse us yet
 So long: and, while you turn upon your heel,
 Pray that I be not busy slitting steel
 Or shredding brass, camped on some virgin shore
 Under a cluster of fresh stars, before 60 I name a tithe o' the wheels I trust to do!
 So occupied, then, are we: hitherto,
 At present, and a weary while to come,
 The office of ourselves, — nor blind nor dumb,
 And seeing somewhat of man's state, — has been,
 For the worst of us, to say they so have seen;
 For the better, what it was they saw; the best Impart the gift of seeing to the rest:
 "So that I glance," says such an one,
 "around,
 "And there's no face but I can read profound
 "Disclosures in; this stands for hope,
 that — fear,
 "And for a speech, a deed in proof, look here!
 "Stoop, else the strings of blossom, where the nuts
 "O'erarch, will blind thee! Said I not?
 She shuts
 "Both eyes this time, so close the hazels meet!
 "Thus, prisoned in the Piombi, I repeat
 "Events one rove occasioned, o'er and o'er,
 "Putting 'twixt me and madness evermore
 "Thy sweet shape, Zanze! Therefore stoop!"

¹ Isaiah xiii. 21, 22.² Waters of Meribah, that is, of Strife. See Exodus xvii. 7.

"That's truth!"
 "(Adjudge you) 'the incarcerated youth
 "Would say that!"
 "Youth? Plara the bard? Set down
 "That Plara spent his youth in a grim town
 "Whose cramped ill-featured streets huddled about
 "The minster for protection, never out "Of its black belfry's shade and its bell's roar.
 "The brighter shone the suburb, — all the
 more
 "Ugly and absolute that shade's reproof
 "Of any chance escape of joy, — some roof,
 "Taller than they, allowed the rest detect, —
 "Before the sole permitted laugh (suspect
 "Who could, 'twas meant for laughter, that ploughed cheek's
 "Repulsive gleam!) when the sun stopped
 both peaks
 "Of the cleft belfry like a fiery wedge,
 "Then sank, a huge flame on its socket
 edge,
 "With leavings on the grey glass oriel pane
 "Ghastly some minutes more. No fear of rain —
 "The minster minded that! in heaps the dust
 "Lay everywhere. This town, the min-ster's trust,
 "Held Plara; who, its denizen, bade hail
 "In twice twelve sonnets, Tempe's dewy vale."
 "Exact the town, the minster and the street!"
 "As all mirth triumphs, sadness means
 defeat:
 "Lust triumphs and is gay, Love's triumphed o'er
 "And sad: but Lucio's sad. I said before,
 "Love's sad, not Lucio; one who loves may be
 "As gay his love has leave to hope, as he
 "Downcast that lusts' desire escapes the springe:
 "Tis of the mood itself I speak, what tinge
 "Determines it, else colourless, — or
 mirth,
 "Or melancholy, as from heaven or earth."
 "Ay, that's the variation's gist!"
 "Indeed?"
 "Thus far advanced in safety then, proceed!
 "And having seen too what I saw, be bold
 "And next encounter what I do behold
 "(That's sure) but bid you take on trust!"
 Attack
 The use and purpose of such sights! Alack,
 Not so unwisely does the crowd dispense
 On Salinguerras praise in preference

To the Sordellos: men of action, these!
 Who, seeing just as little as you please,
 Yet turn that little to account, — engage
 With, do not gaze at, — carry on, a stage,
 The work o' the world, not merely make report
 The work existed ere their day! In short,
 When at some future no-time a brave band Sees, using what it sees, then shake my
 hand
 In heaven, my brother! Meanwhile where's the hurt
 Of keeping the Makers-see on the alert, 5a
 At whose defection mortals stare aghast
 As though heaven's bounteous windows were slammed fast
 Incontinent? Whereas all you, beneath, Should scowl at, bruise their lips and break their teeth
 Who ply the pullics, for neglecting you:
 And therefore have I moulded, made anew
 A Man, and give him to be turned and
 tried,
 Be angry with or pleased at. On your
 side,
 Have ye times, places, actors of your own?
 Try them upon Sordello when full-grown, 6a
 And then — ah then! If Hercules first parched
 His foot in Egypt only to be marched
 A sacrifice for Jove with pomp to suit, What chance have I? The demigod was mute
 Till, at the altar, where time out of mind
 Such guests became oblations, chaplets twined
 His forehead long enough, and he began
 Slaying the slayers, nor escaped a man.
 Take not affront, my gentle audience!
 whom
 No Hercules shall make his hecatomb, 7a Believe, nor from his brows your chaplet rend —
 That's your kind suffrage, yours, my patron-friend,
 Whose great verse blares unintermittent
 on
 Like your own trumpeter at Marathon, —
 You who, Plataea and Salamis being scant,
 Put up with Ætna for a stimulant —
 And did well, I acknowledged, as he loomed
 Over the midland sea last month, presumed Long, lay demolished in the blazing West
 At eve, while towards him tilting cloudlets 8a
 pressed
 Like Persian ships at Salamis. Friend, wear
 A crest proud as desert while I declare
 Had I a flawless ruby fit to wring
 Tears of its colour from that painted king¹
 Who lost it, I would, for that smile which

To my heart, fling it in the sea, content,
Wearing your verse in place, an amulet Sovereign against all passion, wear and fret!

My English Eyebright, if you are not glad
That, as I stopped my task awhile, the sad
Dishevelled form, wherein I put mankind
To come at times and keep my pact in
mind,

Renewed me, — hear no crickets in the hedge,

Nor let a glowworm spot the river's edge

10 At home, and may the summer showers gush

Without a warning from the missel thrush!
So, to our business, now — the fate of such
As find our common nature — overmuch
Despised because restricted and unfit
To bear the burthen they impose on it — Cling when they would discard it; craving
strength

To leap from the allotted world, at length
They do leap, — flounder on without a term,

Each a god's germ, doomed to remain a germ

20 In unexpanded infancy, unless . . .
But that's the story — dull enough, confess!

There might be fitter subjects to allure;
Still, neither misconceive my portraiture
Nor undervalue its adornments quaint:
What seems a fiend perchance may prove a saint.

Ponder a story ancient pens transmit,
Then say if you condemn me or acquit.

John the Beloved, banished Antioch
For Patmos, bade collectively his flock

20 Farewell, but set apart the closing eve
To comfort those his exile most would grieve,

He knew: a touching spectacle, that house
In motion to receive him! Xanthus'
spouse

You missed, made panther's meat a month since; but

Xanthus himself (his nephew 'twas, they shut

'Twixt boards and sawed asunder)
Polycarp,

Soft Charicle, next year no wheel could warp

To swear by Caesar's fortune, with the rest
Were ranged; thro' whom the grey disciple
pressed,

30 Busily blessing right and left, just stopped
To pat one infant's curls, the hangman cropped

Soon after, reached the portal. On its hinge

The door turns and he enters: what quick twinge

Ruins the smiling mouth, those wide eyes
fix

Whereon, why like some spectral candlestick's

Branch the disciple's arms? Dead swooned he, woke

Anon, heaved sigh, made shift to gasp, heart-broke,

"Get thee behind me, Satan! Have I toiled

"To no more purpose? Is the gospel foiled

"Here too, and o'er my son's, my Xanthus' 5 hearth,

"Portrayed with sooty garb and features swarth —

"Ah, Xanthus, am I to thy roof beguiled
"To see the — the — the Devil domiciled?"

Where to sobbed Xanthus, "Father, 'tis
yourself

"Installed, a limning which our utmost pelf

"Went to procure against to-morrow's
loss;

"And that's no twy-prong, but a pastoral cross,

"You're painted with!"

His puckered brows unfold —
And you shall hear Sordello's story told.

BOOK THE FOURTH.

MEANTIME Ferrara lay in rueful case; 60

The lady-city, for whose sole embrace Her pair of suitors struggled, felt their arms

A brawny mischief to the fragile charms
They tugged for — one discovering that to twist

Her tresses twice or thrice about his wrist Secured a point of vantage — one, how
best

He'd parry that by planting in her breast
His elbow spike — each party too intent

For noticing, howe'er the battle went,
The conqueror would but have a corpse to 70
kiss.

"May Boniface be duly damned for this!"
— Howled some old Ghibellin, as up he

turned,

From the wet heap of rubbish where they burned

His house, a little skull with dazzling teeth:
"A boon, sweet Christ — let Salinguerra

seethe

"In hell for ever, Christ, and let myself
"Be there to laugh at him!" — moaned

some young Guelf Stumbling upon a shrivelled hand nailed fast

To the charred lintel of the doorway, last
His father stood within to bid him speed. 80

The thoroughfares were overrun with weed

—Docks, quitchgrass, loathy mallows no man plants.

The stranger, none of its inhabitants
Crept out of doors to taste fresh air again,
And ask the purpose of a splendid train
Admitted on a morning; every town
Of the East League was come by envoy
down

To treat for Richard's ransom: here you saw

The Vicentine, here snowy oxen draw
The Paduan carroch, its vermilion cross
On its white field. A-tiptoe o'er the fosse Looked Legate Montelungo wistfully
After the flock of steeples he might spy
In Este's time, gone (doubts he) long ago
To mend the ramparts: sure the laggards
know

The Pope's as good as here! They paced
the streets

More soberly. At last, "Taurello greets
"The League," announced a pursuivant,
—"will match

"Its courtesy, and labours to dispatch
"At earliest Tito, Friedrich's Pretor, sent "On pressing matters from his post at Trent,

"With Mainard Count of Tyrol, — simply waits

"Their going to receive the delegates."
"Tito!" Our delegates exchanged a
glance,

And, keeping the main way, admired
askance

The lazy engines of outlandish birth, Couched like a king each on its bank of
earth —

Arbalist, manganel¹ and catapult;
While stationed by, as waiting a result,
Lean silent gangs of mercenaries ceased Working to watch the strangers. "This,
at least

"Were better spared; he scarce presumes gainsay

"The League's decision! Get our friend
away

"And profit for the future: how else teach "Fools 'tis not safe to stray within claw's reach

"Ere Salinguerra's final gasp be blown?
"Those mere convulsive scratches find the bone.

"Who bade him bloody the spent osprey's nare²?"

The carrochs³ halted in the public square.

Pennons of every blazon once a-flaunt, Men prattled, freelier than the crested gaunt

White ostrich with a horse-shoe in her beak

Was missing, and whoever chose might
speak

"Ecelin" boldly out: so, — "Ecelin
"Needed his wife to swallow half the sin
"And sickens by himself: the devil's whelp,
"He styles his son, dwindles away, no
help

"From conserves, your fine triple-curved froth

"Of virgin's blood, your Venice viperbroth —

"Eh? Jubilate!" — "Peace! no little
word

"You utter here that's not distinctly heard 54
"Up at Oliero: he was absent sick

"When we besieged Bassano — who, if the thick

"O' the work, perceived the progress Azzo
made,

"Like Ecelin, through his witch Adelaide?
"She managed it so well that, night by
night

"At their bed-foot stood up a soldiersprite,

"First fresh, pale by-and-by without a
wound,

"And, when it came with eyes filmed as in swoond,

"They knew the place was taken." —
"Ominous

"That Ghibellins should get what caute- 60
lous

"Old Redbeard sought from Azzo's sire to wrench

"Vainly; Saint George contrived his town a trench

"O' the marshes, an impermeable bar."
"— Young Ecelin is meant the tutelar

"Of Padua, rather; veins embrace upon
"His hand like Brenta and Bacchiglion."

What now? — "The founts! God's bread, touch not a plank!

"A crawling hell of carrion — every tank
"Choke-full! — found out just now to Cino's cost —

"The same who gave Taurello up for lost, 70
"And, making no account of fortune's freaks,

"Refused to budge from Padua then, but sneaks

"Back now with Concorezzi: 'faith! they drag

"Their carroch to San Vitale, plant the flag

"On his own palace, so adroitly razed
"He knew it not; a sort of Guelf folk
gazed

"And laughed apart; Cino disliked their
air —

"Must pluck up spirit, show he does not care —

"Seats himself on the tank's edge — will begin

"To hum, sa, sa, Cavalier Ecelin —

² Nostril.

³ Cars of state.

- "A silence; he gets warmer, clinks to chime,
 "Now both feet plough the ground, deeper each time,
 "At last, za, za, and up with a fierce kick
 "Comes his own mother's face caught by
 the thick
 "Grey hair about his spur!"*
 Which means, they lift
 The covering, Salinguerra made a shift
 To stretch upon the truth; as well avoid Further disclosures; leave them thus employed.
 Our dropping Autumn morning clears
 apace,
 10 And poor Ferrara puts a softened face
 On her misfortunes. Let us scale this tall Huge foursquare line of red brick garden-
 wall
 Bastioned within by trees of every sort
 On three sides, slender, spreading, long and short;
 Each grew as it contrived, the poplar ramped,
 The fig-tree reared itself, — but stark and cramped,
 Made fools of, like tamed lions: whence,
 on the edge,
 Running 'twixt trunk and trunk to smooth one ledge
 Of shade, were shrubs inserted, warp and woof,
 20 Which smothered up that variance. Scale the roof
 Of solid tops, and o'er the slope you slide
 Down to a grassy space level and wide, Here and there dotted with a tree, but
 trees
 Of rarer leaf, each foreigner at ease,
 Set by itself: and in the centre spreads,
 Borne upon three uneasy leopards' heads,
 A laver, broad and shallow, one bright
 spirt
 Of water bubbles in. The walls begirt
 With trees leave off on either hand; pursue 30 Your path along a wondrous avenue
 Those walls about on, heaped of gleamy
 stone,
 With aloes leering everywhere, grey-grown From many a Moorish summer: how they wind
 Out of the fissures! likelier to bind
 The building than those rusted cramps which drop
 Already in the eating sunshine. Stop, You fleeting shapes above there! Ah, the
 pride
 Or else despair of the whole country-side!
 A range of statues, swarming o'er with wasps,
 40 God, goddess, woman, man, the Greek rough-rasps
 In crumbling Naples marble — meant to
 look
- Like those Messina marbles Constance took Delight in, or Taurello's self conveyed To Mantua for his mistress, Adelaide, —
 A certain font with caryatides
 Since cloistered at Goito; only, these Are up and doing, not abashed, a troop
 Able to right themselves — who see you, stoop
 Their arms o' the instant after you! Un-plucked
 By this or that, you pass; for they conduct
 To terrace raised on terrace, and, between, Creatures of brighter mould and braver mien
 Than any yet, the choicest of the Isle
 No doubt. Here, left a sullen breathing-
 while,
 Up-gathered on himself the Fighter stood
 For his last fight, and, wiping treacherous
 blood
 Out of the eyelids just held ope beneath
 Those shading fingers in their iron sheath, Steadied his strengths amid the buzz and stir
 Of the dusk hideous amphitheatre
 60 At the announcement of his over-match
 To wind the day's diversion up, dispatch
 The pertinacious Gaul: while, limbs one heap,
 The Slave, no breath in her round mouth, watched leap
 Dart after dart forth, as her hero's car Clove dizzily the solid of the war
 — Let coil about his knees for pride in him.
 We reach the farthest terrace, and the grim
 San Pietro Palace stops us.
 Such the state
 Of Salinguerra's plan to emulate
 70 Sicilian marvels, that his girlish wife
 Retrude still might lead her ancient life
 In her new home: whereat enlarged so
 much
 Neighbours upon the novel princely touch
 He took, — who here imprisons Boniface.
 Here must the Envoys come to sue for
 grace;
 And here, emerging from the labyrinth
 Below, Sordello paused beside the plinth
 Of the door-pillar.
 He had really left.
 Verona for the cornfields (a poor theft 80 From the morass) where Este's camp was
 made;
 The Envoys' march, the Legate's cavalcade —
 All had been seen by him, but scarce as
 when, —
 Eager for cause to stand aloof from men
 At every point save the fantastic tie
 Acknowledged in his boyish sophistry, —
 He made account of such. A crowd, — he meant
 To task the whole of it; each part's intent

Concerned him therefore: and, the more he pried,
 The less became Sordello satisfied
 With his own figure at the moment.
 Sought
 He respite from his task? Descried he aught
 Novel in the anticipated sight
 Of all these livers upon all delight?
 This phalanx, as of myriad points combined,
 Whereby he still had imaged the mankind
 His youth was passed in dreams of rivalling,
 His age — in plans to prove at least such
 thing
 Had been so dreamed, — which now he must impress
 With his own will, effect a happiness
 By theirs, — supply a body to his soul Thence, and become eventually whole
 With them as he had hoped to be without — Made these the mankind he once raved about?
 Because a few of them were notable,
 Should all be figured worthy note? As
 well
 Expect to find Taurello's triple line
 Of trees a single and prodigious pine.
 Real pines rose here and there; but, close
 among,
 Thrust into and mixed up with pines, a throng
 Of shrubs, he saw, — a nameless common sort
 O'erpast in dreams, left out of the report
 And hurried into corners, or at best Admitted to be fancied like the rest.
 Reckon that morning's proper chiefs — how few!
 And yet the people grew, the people grew,
 Grew ever, as if the many there indeed,
 More left behind and most who should succeed, —
 Simply in virtue of their mouths and eyes,
 Petty enjoyments and huge miseries, —
 Mingled with, and made veritably great Those chiefs: he overlooked not Mainard's state
 Nor Concorezzi's station, but instead Of stopping there, each dwindled to be
 head
 Of infinite and absent Tyrolese
 Or Paduans; startling all the more, that
 these Seemed passive and disposed of, uncared
 for,
 Yet doubtless on the whole (like Eglamor)
 Smiling; for if a wealthy man decays
 And out of store of robes must wear, all
 days,
 One tattered suit, alike in sun and shade,
 'Tis commonly some tarnished gay brocade
 Fit for a feast-night's flourish and no more:
 Nor otherwise poor Misery from her store

Of looks is fain upgather, keep unfurled
 For common wear as she goes through the
 world,
 The faint remainder of some worn-out
 smile
 Meant for a feast-night's service merely. 5
 While
 Crowd upon crowd rose on Sordello
 thus, — (Crowds no way interfering to discuss,
 Much less dispute, life's joys with one employed
 In envying them, — or, if they aught enjoyed,
 Where lingered something indefinable
 In every look and tone, the mirth as well
 As woe, that fixed at once his estimate Of the result, their good or bad estate) —
 Old memories returned with new effect:
 And the new body, ere he could suspect, 60
 Cohered, mankind and he were really fused,
 The new self seemed impatient to be used
 By him, but utterly another way
 Than that anticipated: strange to say,
 They were too much below him, more in thrall
 Than he, the adjunct than the principal.
 What bootied scattered units? — here a
 mind
 And there, which might repay his own to
 find,
 And stamp, and use? — a few, how'er
 august,
 If all the rest were grovelling in the dust? 70
 No: first a mighty equilibrium, sure,
 Should he establish, privilege procure For all, the few had long possessed! He felt
 An error, an exceeding error melt:
 While he was occupied with Mantuan chants,
 Behoved him think of men, and take their wants,
 Such as he now distinguished every side,
 As his own want which might be satisfied, —
 And, after that, think of rare qualities
 Of his own soul demanding exercise. 80
 It followed naturally, through no claim
 On their part, which made virtue of the aim
 At serving them, on his, — that, past retrieve,
 He felt now in their toils, theirs — nor could leave
 Wonder how, in the eagerness to rule,
 Impress his will on mankind, he (the fool!)
 Had never even entertained the thought That this his last arrangement might be fraught
 With incidental good to them as well,
 And that mankind's delight would help to 90
 swell

His own. So, if he sighed, as formerly Because the merry time of life must fleet,
'Twas deeper now, — for could the crowds repeat

Their poor experiences? His hand that shook

Was twice to be deplored. "The Legate,
look!

"With eyes, like fresh-blown thrush-eggs on a thread,

"Faint-blue and loosely floating in his
head,

"Large tongue, moist open mouth; and this long while

"That owner of the idiotic smile

10 "Serves them!"

He fortunately saw in time
His fault however, and since the office prime

Includes the secondary — best accept
Both offices; Taurello, its adept,
Could teach him the preparatory one,
And how to do what he had fancied done
Long previously, ere take the greater task.
How render first these people happy?

Ask

The people's friends: for there must be one good,

One way to it — the Cause! He understood

20 The meaning now of Palma; why the jar
Else, the ado, the trouble wide and far
Of Gueifs and Ghibellins, the Lombard
hope

And Rome's despair? — 'twixt Emperor and Pope

The confused shifting sort of Eden tale —
Hardihood still recurring, still to fail —
That foreign interloping fiend, this free
And native overbrooding deity:

Yet a dire fascination o'er the palms
The Kaiser ruined, troubling even the calms

30 Of paradise; or, on the other hand,
The Pontiff, as the Kaisers understand,
One snake-like cursed of God to love the ground,

Whose heavy length breaks in the noon profound

Some saving tree — which needs the Kaiser, dressed

As the dislodging angel of that pest:
Yet flames that pest bedropped, flat head,
full fold,

With coruscating dower of dyes. "Be-
hold

"The secret, so to speak, and master-
spring

"O' the contest! — which of the two Powers shall bring

40 "Men good, perchance the most good: ay, it may

"Be that! — the question, which best knows the way."

And hereupon Count Mainard strutted
past

Out of San Pietro; never seemed the last
Of archers, slingers: and our friend began To recollect strange modes of serving
man —

Arbalist, catapult, brake, manganel,
And more. "This way of theirs may, — who can tell? —

"Need perfecting," said he: "let all be solved

"At once! Taurello 'tis, the task devolved

"On late: confront Taurello!"

And at last

He did confront him. Scarce an hour had past

When forth Sordello came, older by years
Than at his entry. Unexampled fears Oppressed him, and he staggered off, blind, mute

And deaf, like some fresh-mutilated brute,
Into Ferrara — not the empty town That morning witnessed: he went up and
down

Streets whence the veil had been stript
shred by shred,

So that, in place of huddling with their dead

Indoors, to answer Salinguerra's ends, Townfolk make shift to crawl forth, sit like friends

With any one. A woman gave him choice
Of her two daughters, the infantile voice
Or the dimpled knee, for half a chain, his throat

Was clasped with; but an archer knew the coat —

Its blue cross and eight lilies, — bade beware

One dogging him in concert with the pair
Though thrumming on the sleeve that hid his knife.

Night set in early, autumn dews were
rife,

They kindled great fire while the Leaguer's mass

Began at every carroch: he must pass
Between the kneeling people. Presently

The carroch of Verona caught his eye
With purple trappings; silently he bent

Over its fire, when voices violent Began, "Affirm not whom the youth was like

"That struck me from the porch: I did not strike

"Again: I too have chestnut hair; my kin
"Hate Azzo and stand up for Ecelin.

"Here, minstrel, drive bad thoughts away!
Sing! Take

"My glove for guerdon!" And for that man's sake

He turned: "A song of Eglamor's!" — scarce named,

When, "Our Sordello's rather!" — all exclaimed;
 "Is not Sordello famous for rhyme?"
 He had been happy to deny, this time, —
 Profess as heretofore the aching head
 And failing heart, — suspect that in his stead
 Some true Apollo had the charge of them,
 Was champion to reward or to condemn,
 So his intolerable risk might shift
 Or share itself; but Naddo's precious gift Of gifts, he owned, be certain! At the close —
 "I made that," said he to a youth who rose
 As if to hear: 'twas Palma through the band Conducted him in silence by her hand.
 Back now for Salinguerra. Tito of Trent Gave place to Palma and her friend, who went
 In turn at Montelungo's visit: one
 After the other were they come and gone, —
 These spokesmen for the Kaiser and the Pope,
 This incarnation of the People's hope,
 Sordello, — all the say of each was said;
 And Salinguerra sat, — himself instead
 Of these to talk with, lingered musing yet.
 'Twas a drear vast presence-chamber roughly set
 In order for the morning's use; full face,
 The Kaiser's ominous sign-mark had first place,
 The crowned grim twy-necked eagle, coarsely blacked
 With ochre on the naked wall; nor lacked Romano's green and yellow either side;
 But the new token Tito brought had tried
 The Legate's patience — nay, if Palma knew What Salinguerra almost meant to do
 Until the sight of her restored his lip
 A certain half-smile, three months' chieftainship
 Had banished! Afterward, the Legate found
 No change in him, nor asked what badge he wound
 And unwound carelessly. Now sat the Chief Silent as when our couple left, whose brief
 Encounter wrought so opportune effect
 In thoughts he summoned not, nor would reject,
 Though time 'twas now if ever, to pause — fix
 On any sort of ending: wiles and tricks
 Exhausted, judge! his charge, the crazy town,
 Just managed to be hindered crashing down —

His last sound troops ranged — care observed to post
 His best of the maimed soldiers innermost —
 So much was plain enough, but somehow struck Him not before. And now with this strange luck
 Of Tito's news, rewarding his address
 So well, what thought he of? — how the success
 With Friedrich's rescript there, would 5 either hush
 Old Feelin's scrupics, bring the manly flush
 To his young son's white cheek, or, last, exempt Himself from telling what there was to tempt?
 No: that this minstrel was Romano's last Servant — himself the first! Could he contrast
 The whole! — that minstrel's thirty years just spent
 In doing nought, their notablest event
 This morning's journey hither, as I told —
 Who yet was lean, outworn and really old,
 A stammering awkward man that scarce 60 dared raise
 His eye before the magisterial gaze —
 And Salinguerra with his fears and hopes
 Of sixty years, his Emperors and Popes, Cares and contrivances, yet, you would say
 'Twas a youth nonchalantly looked away
 Through the embrasure northward o'er the sick
 Expostulating trees — so agile, quick
 And graceful turned the head on the broad chest
 Encased in pliant steel, his constant vest,
 Whence split the sun off in a spray of fire 70
 Across the room; and, loosened of its tire
 Of steel, that head let breathe the comely brown
 Large massive locks discoloured as if a crown Encircled them, so frayed the basnet¹ where
 A sharp white line divided clean the hair;
 Glossy above, glossy below, it swept Curling and fine about a brow thus kept Calm, laid coat upon coat, marble and sound:
 This was the mystic mark the Tuscan found,
 Mused of, turned over books about. 80
 Square-faced,
 No lion more; two vivid eyes, enchased
 In hollows filled with many a shade and streak Settling from the bold nose and bearded cheek.

Nor might the half-smile reach them that deformed

A lip supremely perfect else — unwarmed,
Unwidened, less or more; indifferent
Whether on trees or men his thoughts were bent, Thoughts rarely, after all, in trim and train

As now a period was fulfilled again:
Of such, a series made his life, compressed
In each, one story serving for the rest —
How his life-streams rolling arrived at last

o At the barrier, whence, were it once over-
past,

They would emerge, a river to the end, —
Gathered themselves up, paused, bade fate befriend,

Took the leap, hung a minute at the height,

Then fell back to oblivion infinite:

Therefore he smiled. Beyond stretched garden-grounds

Where late the adversary, breaking
bounds,

Had gained him an occasion, That above,
That eagle, testified he could improve Effectually. The Kaiser's symbol lay

20 Beside his rescript, a new badge by way Of baldrick; while, — another thing that marred

Alike emprise, achievement and reward, —
Ecelin's missive was conspicuous too.

What past life did those flying thoughts pursue?

As his, few names in Mantua half so old;
But at Ferrara, where his sires enrolled
It latterly, the Adclardi spared

No pains to rival them: both factions shared

Ferrara, so that, counted out, 'twould
yield

30 A product very like the city's shield, Half black and white, or Ghibellin and
Gulf

As after Salinguerra styled himself
And Este who, till Marchesalla died, (Last of the Adelardi) — never tried His fortune there: with Marchesalla's
child

Would pass, — could Blacks and Whites be reconciled

And young Taurello wed Linguetta, — wealth

And away to a sole grasp. Each treats by stealth

Already: when the Guelfs, the Ravennese

40 Arrive, assault the Pietro quarter, seize Linguetta, and are gone! Men's first dismay

Abated somewhat, hurries down, to lay

The after indignation, Boniface,

This Richard's father. "Learn the full disgrace

"Averted, ere you blame us Guelfs, who rate

"Your Salinguerra, your sole potentate
"That might have been, 'mongst Este's valvassors —

"Ay, Azzo's — who, not privy to, abhors
"Our step; but we were zealous." Azzo
then

To do with! Straight a meeting of old 5
men:

"Old Salinguerra dead, his heir a boy,

"What if we change our ruler and decoy

"The Lombard Eagle of the azure sphere

"With Italy to build in, fix him here,

"Settle the city's troubles in a trice?

"For private wrong, let public good suffice!"

In fine, young Salinguerra's staunchest
friends

Talked of the townsmen making him
amends,

Gave him a goshawk, and affirmed there
was

Rare sport, one morning, over the green 60
grass

A mile or so. He sauntered through the plain,

Was restless, fell to thinking, turned again

In time for Azzo's entry with the bride;

Count Boniface rode smirking at their
side;

"She brings him half Ferrara," whispers flew,

"And all Ancona! If the stripling knew!"

Anon the stripling was in Sicily
Where Heinrich ruled in right of Constance; he

Was gracious nor his guest incapable;
Each understood the other. So it fell, 70

One Spring, when Azzo, thoroughly at
ease,

Had near forgotten by what precise degrees

He crept at first to such a downy seat,
The Count trudged over in a special heat

To bid him of God's love dislodge from each

Of Salinguerra's palaces, — a breach
Might yawn else, not so readily to shut,

For who was just arrived at Mantua but The youngster, sword on thigh and tuft

on chin,
With tokens for Celano, Ecelin, 8

Pistore, and the like! Next news, — no
whit

Do any of Ferrara's domes befit
His wife of Heinrich's very blood: a band

Of foreigners assemble, understand
Garden-constructing, level and surround,

Build up and bury in. A last news
crowned

The consternation. since his infant's
birth,

He only waits they end his wondrous girth

Of trees that link San Pietro with Tomà,
To visit Mantua. When the Podestà
Ecelin, at Vicenza, called his friend
Taurello thither, what could be their end
But to restore the Ghibellins' late Head,
The Kaiser helping? He with most to dread

From vengeance and reprisal, Azzo, there
With Boniface beforehand, as aware
Of plots in progress, gave alarm, expelled

10 Both plotters: but the Guelfs in triumph yelled

Too hastily. The burning and the flight,
And how Taurello, occupied that night
With Ecelin, lost wife and son, I told:

— Not how he bore the blow, retained his
hold,

Got friends safe through, left enemies the worst

O' the fray, and hardly seemed to care at
first:

But afterward men heard not constantly
Of Salinguerra's House so sure to be!

Though Azzo simply gained by the event

20 A shifting of his plagues — the first, content

To fall behind the second and estrange
So far his nature, suffer such a change
That in Romano sought he wife and child,
And for Romano's sake seemed reconciled
To losing individual life, which shrunk
As the other prospered — mortised in his trunk;

Like a dwarf palm which wanton Arabs foil

Of bearing its own proper wine and oil,
By grafting into it the stranger-vine,

30 Which sucks its heart out, sly and serpentine,

Till forth one vine-palm feathers to the root,

And red drops moisten the insipid fruit.
Once Adelaide set on, — the subtle mate
Of the weak soldier, urged to emulate
The Church's valiant women deed for
deed,

And paragon her namesake, win the meed
O' the great Matilda, — soon they over-
bore

The rest of Lombardy, — not as before
By an instinctive truculence, but patched

40 The Kaiser's strategy until it matched The Pontiff's, sought old ends by novel
means.

"Only, why is it Salinguerra screens
"Himself behind Romano? — him we bade

"Enjoy our shine i' the front, not seek the shade!"

— Asked Heinrich, somewhat of the tar-diest

To comprehend. Nor Philip acquiesced
At once in the arrangement; reasoned,
plied

His friend with offers of another bride,
A statelier function — fruitlessly: 'twas
plain

Taurello through some weakness must 50
remain

Obscure. And Otho, free to judge of both — Ecelin the unready, harsh and loth,
And this more plausible and facile wight
With every point a-sparkle — chose the
right,

Admiring how his predecessors harped
On the wrong man: "thus," quoth he,
"wits are warped

"By outsiders!" Carelessly, meanwhile,
his life

Suffered its many turns of peace and strife
In many lands — you hardly could surprise
The man; who shamed Sordello (recog- 60 nise!)

In this as much beside, that, unconcerned
What qualities were natural or earned,
With no ideal of graces, as they came
He took them, singularly well the same — Speaking the Greek's own language, just because

Your Greek eludes you, leave the least of flaws

In contracts with him; while, since Arab lore

Holds the stars' secret — take one trouble
more

And master it! 'Tis done, and now deter
Who may the Tuscan, once Jove trined 70
for her,

From Friedrich's path! — Friedrich, whose pilgrimage

The same man puts aside, whom he'll engage

To leave next year John Brienne in the lurch,

Come to Bassano, see Saint Francis'
church

And judge of Guido the Bolognian's piece
Which, — lend Taurello credit, — rivals Greece —

Angels, with aureoles like golden quoits Pitched home, applauding Ecelin's exploits.

For elegance, he strung the angelot,¹
Made rhymes thereto; for prowess, clove 80
he not

Tiso, last siege, from crest to crupper?
Why

Detail you thus a varied mastery
But to show how Taurello, on the watch
For men, to read their hearts and thereby catch

Their capabilities and purposes,
Displayed himself so far as displayed
these:

While our Sordello only cared to know
About men as a means whereby he'd show

Himself, and men had much or little worth
According as they kept in or drew forth
That self; the other's choicest instruments
Surmised him shallow.

Meantime, malcontents
Dropped off, town after town grew wiser.

"How
"Change the world's face?" asked people;
"as 'tis now

"It has been, will be ever: very fine
"Subjecting things profane to things
divine,

20 "In talk! This contumacy will fatigue
"The vigilance of Este and the League!
"The Ghibellins gain on us!" — as it happened.

Old Azzo and old Boniface, entrapped
By Ponte Alto, both in one month's space
Slept at Verona: either left a brace Of sons — but, three years after, either's pair

Lost Guglielm and Aldobrand its heir:
Azzo remained and Richard — all the stay
Of Este and Saint Boniface, at bay
As 'twere. Then, either Ecelin grew old

20 Or his brain altered — not o' the proper mould

For new appliances — his old palm-stock
Endured no influx of strange strengths.
He'd rock

As in a drunkenness, or chuckle low
As proud of the completeness of his woe, Then weep real tears; — now make some mad onslaught

On Este, heedless of the lesson taught
So painfully, — now cringe for peace, sue
peace

At price of past gain, bar of fresh increase
To the fortunes of Romano. Up at last 30 Rose Este, down Romano sank as fast.
And men remarked these freaks of peace and war

Happened while Salinguerra was afar:
Whence every friend besought him, all in
vain,

To use his old adherent's wits again.
Not he! — "who had advisers in his sons,
"Could plot himself, nor needed any one's "Advice." 'Twas Adclaide's remaining
staunch

Prevented his destruction root and branch
Forthwith; but when she died, doom fell, for gay

40 He made alliances, gave lands away
To whom it pleased accept them, and withdrew

For ever from the world. Taurello, who Was summoned to the convent, then refused

A word at the wicket, patience thus abused,
Promptly threw off alike his imbecile Ally's yoke, and his own frank, foolish
smile.

Soon a few movements of the happier sort

Changed matters, put himself in men's report

As heretofore; he had to fight, beside,
And that became him ever. So, in pride
And flushing of this kind of second youth,
He dealt a good-will blow. Este in truth Lay prone — and men remembered,
somewhat late,

A laughing old outrageous stifled hate
He bore to Este — how it would outbreak
At times spite of disguise, like an earthquake

In sunny weather — as that noted day
When with his hundred friends he tried to slay

Azzo before the Kaiser's face: and how,
On Azzo's calm refusal to allow A liegeman's challenge, straight he too was calmed:

As if his hate could bear to lie embalmed, Bricked up, the moody Pharaoh, and survive

All intermediate crumbling, to arrive
At earth's catastrophe — 'twas Este's
crash

Not Azzo's he demanded, so, no rash Procedure! Este's true antagonist
Rose out of Ecelin: all voices whist,
All eyes were sharpened, wits predicted.
He

'Twas, leaned in the embrasure absently, 70
Amused with his own efforts, now, to trace
With his steel-seathed forefinger Friedrich's face

I' the dust: but as the trees waved sere, his smile

Deepened, and words expressed its thought crewhile.

"Ay, fairly housed at last, my old compeer?

"That we should stick together, all the
year

"I kept Vicenza! — How old Boniface,
"Old Azzo caught us in its market-place,

"He by that pillar, I at this, — caught each
"In mid swing, more than fury of his 80
speech,

"Egging the rabble on to disavow
"Allegiance to their Marquis — Bacchus,
how

"They boasted! Ecelin must turn their drudge,

"Nor, if released, will Salinguerra grudge
"Paying arrears of tribute due long
since —

"Bacchus! My man could promise then,
nor wince:

"The bones-and-muscles! Sound of wind and limb,

"Spoke he the set excuse I framed for him:
"And now he sits me, slaving and mute,

"Intent on chafing each starved purple foot 90
"Benumbed past aching with the alta slab:

"Will no vein throb there when some monk shall blab
"Spitefully to the circle of bald scalps,
"Friedrich's affirmed to be our side the Alps?
"—Eh, brother Lactance, brother Ana-clet?
"Sworn to abjure the world, its fume and
fret,
"God's own now? Drop the dormitory bar,
"Enfold the scanty grey serge scapular!
"Twice o'er the cowl to muffle memories
out!
"Sol! But the midnight whisper turns a shout,
10 "Eyes wink, mouths open, pulses circulate
"In the stone walls: the past, the world you hate
"Is with you, ambush, open field — or see "The surging flame — we fire Vicenza — glee!
"Follow, let Pilio and Bernardo chafe!
"Bring up the Mantuans — through San Biagio — safe!
"Ah, the mad people waken? Ah, they writhe
"And reach us? If they block the gate?
(No tithe
"Can pass — keep back, you Bassanese!
The edge,
"Use the edge — shear, thrust, hew, melt down the wedge, 20 "Let out the black of those black upturned
eyes!
"Hell — are they sprinkling fire too?
The blood fries
"And hisses on your brass gloves as they tear
"Those upturned faces choking with despair.
"Brave! Slidder through the reeking gate! 'How now?
"You six had charge of her?' And then the vow
"Com's, and the foam spirts, hair's plucked, till one shriek
"(I hear it) and you fling — you cannot
speak —
"Your gold-flowered basnet to a man who haled
"The Adelaide he dared scarce view unveiled 30 "This morn, naked across the fire: how crown
"The archer that exhausted lays you down
"Your infant, smiling at the flame, and dies?
"While one, while mine . . .
"Bacchus! I think there lies "More than one corpse there" (and he paced the room)

* A loose sleeveless vestment.

"— Another cinder somewhere: 'twas my doom
"Beside, my doom! If Adelaide is dead,
"I live the same, this Azzo lives instead
"Of that to me, and we pull, any how,
"Este into a heap: the matter's now
"At the true juncture slipping us so oft. 40
"Ay, Heinrich died and Otho, please you, doffed
"His crown at such a juncture! Still, if holds
"Our Friedrich's purpose, if this chain enfolds
"The neck of . . . who but this same Ecelin
"That must recoil when the best days
begin!
"Recoil? that's nought; if the recoiler
leaves
"His name for me to fight with, no one grieves:
"But he must interfere, forsooth, unlock
"His cloister to become my stumbling-block
"Just as of old! Ay, ay, there 'tis again — 50
"The land's inevitable Head — explain
"The reverences that subject us! Count
"These Ecelins now! Not to say as fount, "Originating power of thought, — from twelve
"That drop i' the trenches they joined hands to delve,
"Six shall surpass him, but . . . why men must twine
"Somehow with something! Ecelin's a
fine
"Clear name! 'Twere simpler, doubtless, twine with me
"At once: our cloistered friend's capacity
"Was of a sort! I had to share myself 60
"In fifty portions, like an o'ertasked elf
"That's forced illume in fifty points the vast
"Rare vapour he's environed by. At last
"My strengths, though sorely frittered, e'en converge
"And crown . . . no, Bacchus, they have yet to urge
"The man be crowned!
"That aloe, an he durst,
"Would climb! Just such a bloated sprawler first
"I noted in Messina's castle-court
"The day I came, when Heinrich asked in sport
"If I would pledge my faith to win him 70
back
"His right in Lombardy: 'for, once bid pack
"Marauders,' he continued, 'in my stead
"You rule, Taurello!' and upon this head
"Laid the silk glove of Constance — I see
her
"Too, mantled head to foot in miniver,

"Retrude following!

"I am absolved

"From further toil: the empery devolved

"On me, 'twas Tito's word: I have to lay

"For once my plan, pursue my plan my way,

"Prompt nobody, and render an account

"Taurello to Taurello! Nay, I mount

"To Friedrich: he conceives the post I kept,

"— Who did true service, able or inept,

"Who's worthy guerdon, Ecelin or I.

10 "Me guerdoned, counsel follows: would he vie

"With the Pope really? Azzo, Boniface

"Compose a right-arm Hohenstauffen's race

"Must break ere govern Lombardy. I point

"How easy 'twere to twist, once out of joint,

"The socket from the bone: my Azzo's stare

"Meanwhile! for I, this idle strap to wear,

"Shall — fret myself abundantly, what end

"To serve? There's left me twenty years to spend

"— How better than my old way? Had I one 20 "Who laboured to o'erthrow my work — a son

"Hatching with Azzo superb treachery,

"To root my pines up and then poison me,

"Suppose — 'twere worth while frustrate that! Beside

"Another life's ordained me: the world's tide

"Rolls, and what hope of parting from the press

"Of waves, a single wave though weariness

"Gently lifted aside, laid upon shore?

"My life must be lived out in foam and roar,

"No question. Fifty years the province held 30 "Taurello; troubles raised, and troubles quelled,

"He in the midst — who leaves this quaint stone place,

"These trees a year or two, then not a trace

"Of him! How obtain hold, fetter men's tongues

"Like this poor minstrel with the foolish songs —

"To which, despite our bustle, he is linked?

"— Flowers one may teaze, that never grow extinct.

"Ay, that patch, surely, green as ever, where

"I set Her Moorish lentisk, by the stair,

"To overawe the aloes; and we trod

"Those flowers, how call you such? — 4
into the sod;

"A stately foreigner — a world of pain

"To make it thrive, arrest rough winds — all vain!

"It would decline; these would not be destroyed:

"And now, where is it? where can you avoid

"The flowers? I frighten children twenty years

"Longer! — which way, too, Ecelin appears "To thwart me, for his son's besotted youth

"Gives promise of the proper tiger-tooth:

"They feel it at Vicenza! Fate, fate, fate, 50
My fine Taurello! Go you, promulgate

"Friedrich's decree, and here's shall aggrandise

"Young Ecelin — your Prefect's badge! a prize

"Too precious, certainly.

"How now? Compete

"With my old comrade? shuffle from their seat

"His children? Paltry dealing! Don't I know

"Ecelin? now, I think, and years ago!

"What's changed — the weakness? did not I compound

"For that, and undertake to keep him sound

"Despite it? Here's Taurello hankering 60
After a boy's preferment — this plaything

"To carry, Bacchus!" And he laughed. Remark

Why schemes wherein cold-blooded men embark

Prosper, when your enthusiastic sort

Fail: while these last are ever stopping short —

(So much they should — so little they can do!)

The careless tribe see nothing to pursue

If they desist; meantime their scheme succeeds.

Thoughts were caprices in the course of deeds

Methodic with Taurello; so, he turned, —

Enough amused by fancies fairly earned 70
Of Este's horror-struck submitted neck,

And Richard, the cowed braggart, at his beck, —

To his own petty but immediate doubt

If he could pacify the League without

Conceding Richard; just to this was brought

That interval of vain discursive thought!

As, shall I say, some Ethiop, past pursuit

Of all enslavers, dips a shackled foot

Burnt to the blood, into the drowsy black

Enormous watercourse which guides him 80
back

To his own tribe again, where he is king;

And laughs because he guesses, numbering
 The yellower poison-wattles on the pouch
 Of the first lizard wrested from its couch
 Under the slime (whose skin, the while, he strips
 To cure his nostril with, and festered lips
 And eyeballs bloodshot through the desert-blast)
 That he has reached its boundary, at last May breathe; — thinks o'er enchantments
 of the South
 Sovereign to plague his enemies, their
 mouth,
 Eyes, nails, and hair; but, these enchantments tried
 In fancy, puts them soberly aside For truth, projects a cool return with
 friends,
 The likelihood of winning mere amends
 Ere long; thinks that, takes comfort silently,
 Then, from the river's brink, his wrongs and he,
 Hugging revenge close to their hearts, are
 soon
 Off-striding for the Mountains of the Moon.
 Midnight: the watcher nodded on his spear,
 Since clouds dispersing left a passage clear
 For any meagre and discoloured moon
 To venture forth; and such was peering
 soon
 Above the harassed city — her close lanes
 Closer, not half so tapering her fanes,
 As though she shrunk into herself to keep
 What little life was saved, more safely.
 Heap
 By heap the watch-fires mouldered, and
 beside
 The blackest spoke Sordello and replied Palma with none to listen. "'Tis your
 cause:
 "What makes a Ghibellin? There should be laws — go " (Remember how my youth escaped! I
 trust
 "To you for manhood, Palma! tell me
 just
 "As any child) — there must be laws at
 work
 "Explaining this. Assure me, good may
 lurk
 "Under the bad, — my multitude has part
 "In your designs, their welfare is at heart
 "With Salinguerra, to their interest
 "Refer the deeds he dwelt on, — so divest
 "Our conference of much that scared me.
 Why
 "Affect that heartless tone to Tito? I go "Esteemed myself, yes, in my inmost
 mind
 "This morn, a recreant to my race — mankind

"O'erlooked till now: why boast my spirit's
 force,
 "— Such force denied its object? why divorce
 "These, then admire my spirit's flight the
 same
 "As though it bore up, helped some halforbed flame
 "Else quenched in the dead void, to living space?
 "That orb cast off to chaos and disgrace,
 "Why vaunt so much my unencumbered
 dance,
 "Making a feat's facilities enhance
 "Its marvel? But I front Taurello, one 54
 "Of happier fate, and all I should have
 done,
 "He does; the people's good being paramount
 "With him, their progress may perhaps account
 "For his abiding still; whereas you heard
 "The talk with Tito — the excuse preferred
 "For burning those five hostages, — and broached
 "By way of blind, as you and I approached,
 "I do believe."
 She spoke: then he, "My thought
 "Plainlier expressed! All to your profit —
 nought
 "Meantime of these, of conquests to achieve 60
 "For them, of wretchedness he might relieve
 "While profiting your party. Azzo, too, "Supports a cause: what cause? Do Guelfs pursue
 "Their ends by means like yours, or better?"
 When
 The Guelfs were proved alike, men weighed with men,
 And deed with deed, blaze, blood, with blood and blaze,
 Morn broke: "Once more, Sordello, meet its gaze
 "Proudly — the people's charge against thee fails
 "In every point, while either party quails!
 "These are the busy ones: be silent thou! 70
 "Two parties take the world up, and allow
 "No third, yet have one principle, subside
 "By the same injustice; whoso shall enlist
 "With either, ranks with man's inveterate foes.
 "So there is one less quarrel to compose:
 "The Guelf, the Ghibellin may be to curse —
 "I have done nothing, but both sides do
 worse
 "Than nothing. Nay, to me, forgotten,
 left
 "Of insight, lapped by trees and flowers, was left

"The notion of a service — ha? What lured
 "Me here, what mighty aim was I assured
 "Must move Taurello? What if there remained "A cause, intact, distinct from these, ordained
 "For me, its true discoverer?"

Some one pressed
 Before them here, a watcher, to suggest
 The subject for a ballad: "They must know

"The tale of the dead worthy, long ago
 "Consul of Rome — that's long ago for us,

10 "Minstrels' and bowmen, idly squabbling thus

"In the world's corner — but too late no doubt,

"For the brave time he sought to bring about.

"— Not know Crescentius Nomentanus?"
 Then

He cast about for terms to tell him, when Sordello disavowed it, how they used Whenever their Superior introduced A novice to the Brotherhood — ("for I

"Was just a brown-sleeve brother, merrily
 "Appointed too," quoth he, "till Innocent

20 "Bade me relinquish, to my small content,
 "My wife or my brown sleeves") — some brother spoke

Ere nocturns of Crescentius, to revoke
 The edict issued, after his demise,

Which blotted fame alike and effigies,
 All out except a floating power, a name

Including, tending to produce the same Great act. Rome, dead, forgotten, lived

at least

Within that brain, though to a vulgar priest
 And a vile stranger, — two not worth a slave

30 Of Rome's, Pope John, King Otho, — fortune gave

The rule there: so, Crescentius, haply dressed

In white, called Roman Consul for a jest,
 Taking the people at their word, forth stepped

As upon Brutus' heel, nor ever kept Rome waiting, — stood erect, and from his brain

Gave Rome out on its ancient place again,
 Ay, bade proceed with Brutus' Rome, Kings styled

Themselves mere citizens of, and, beguiled
 Into great thoughts thereby, would choose the gem

40 Out of a lapfull, spoil their diadem
 — The Senate's cypher was so hard to scratch!

He flashes like a phanal, all men catch
 The flame, Rome's just accomplished!

when returned

Otho, with John, the Consul's step had spurned,

And Hugo Lord of Este, to redress
 The wrongs of each. Crescentius in the stress

Of adverse fortune bent. "They crucified

"Their Consul in the Forum; and abide "E'er since such slaves at Rome, that I — (for I

"Was once a brown-sleeve brother merrily 54
 "Appointed) — I had option to keep wife

"Or keep brown sleeves, and managed in the strife

"Lose both. A song of Rome!"

And Rome, indeed,
 Robed at Goito in fantastic weed,

The Mother-City of his Mantuan days, Looked an established point of light whence rays

Traversed the world; for, all the clustered homes

Beside of men, seemed bent on being Rome's

In their degree; the question was, how each

Should most resemble Rome, clean out of 60 reach.

Nor, of the Two, did either principle Struggle to change, but to possess Rome, — still

Guelf Rome or Ghibellin Rome.

Let Rome advance!
 Rome, as she struck Sordello's ignorance —

How could he doubt one moment? Rome's the Cause!

Rome of the Pandects, all the world's new laws —

Of the Capitol, of Castle Angelo;
 New structures, that inordinately glow,

Subdued, brought back to harmony, made ripe

By many a relic of the archetype 70
 Extant for wonder; every upstart church

That hoped to leave old temples in the lurch,

Corrected by the Theatre forlorn
 That, — as a mundane shell, its world late

born, —

Lay and o'ershadowed it. These hints combined,

Rome typifies the scheme to put mankind
 Once more in full possession of their rights.

"Let us have Rome again! On me it lights

"To build up Rome — on me, the first and last:

"For such a future was endured the past!" 84
 And thus, in the grey twilight, forth he sprung

To give his thought consistency among
 The very People — let their facts avail

Finish the dream grown from the archer's tale.

BOOK THE FIFTH.

Is it the same Sordello in the dusk
As at the dawn? — merely a perished husk

Now, that arose a power fit to build Up Rome again? The proud conception chilled

So soon? Ay, watch that latest dream of thine

— A Rome indebted to no Palatine — Drop arch by arch, Sordello! Art possessed

Of thy wish now, rewarded for thy quest
To-day among Ferrara's squalid sons?

to Are this and this and this the shining ones Meet for the Shining City? Sooth to say,
Your favoured tenantry pursue their way
After a fashion! This companion slips
On the smooth causey, t'other blinkard trips

At his mooned sandal. "Leave to lead the brawls

"Here i' the atria?" No, friend! He that sprawls

On aught but a stibadium¹ . . . what his dues

Who puts the lustral vase to such an use?
Oh, huddle up the day's disasters!
March,

to Ye runagates, and drop thou, arch by arch, Rome!

Yet before they quite disband — a whim —

Study mere shelter, now, for him, and him,
Nay, even the worst, — just house them!
Any cave

Suffices: throw out earth! A loophole?
Brave!

They ask to feel the sun shine, see the grass

Grow, hear the larks sing? Dead art thou, alas,

And I am dead! But here's our son excels
At hurdle-weaving any Scythian, fells Oak and devises rafters, dreams and shapes

30 His dream into a door-post, just escapes
The mystery of hinges. Lie we both Perdue another age. The goodly growth Of brick and stone! Our building-pelt was rough,

But that descendant's garb suits well
enough

A portico-contriver. Speed the years —
What's time to us? At last, a city rears Itself! nay, enter — what's the grave to
us?

Lo, our forlorn acquaintance carry thus
The head! Successively sewer, forum, cirque —

Last age, an aqueduct was counted work, 40
But now they tire the artificer upon Blank alabaster, black obsidian,
— Careful, Jove's face be duly fulgorant,
And mother Venus' kiss-creased nipples pant

Back into pristine pulpiness, ere fixed Above the baths. What difference betwixt This Rome and ours — resemblance what, between

That scurvy dumb-show and this pageant sheen —

These Romans and our rabble? Use thy wit!

The work marched: step by step, — a 50
workman fit

Took each, nor too fit, — to one task, one
time, —

No leaping o'er the petty to the prime,
When just the substituting osier lithe
For brittle bulrush, sound wood for soft withe,

To further loam-and-roughcast-work a stage, —

Exacts an architect, exacts an age
No tables of the Mauritanian tree
For men whose maple log's their luxury!
That way was Rome built. "Better" (say you) "merge

"At once all workmen in the demiurge, 60
"All epochs in a lifetime, every task

"In one!" So should the sudden city bask
I' the day — while those we'd feast there, want the knack

Of keeping fresh-chalked gowns from speck and brack,

Distinguish not rare peacock from vile swan,

Nor Mareotic juice from Cæcuban.

"Enough of Rome! 'Twas happy to conceive

"Rome on a sudden, nor shall fate bereave
"Me of that credit: for the rest, her spite

"Is an old story — serves my folly right 70
"By adding yet another to the dull

"List of abortions — things proved beautiful

"Could they be done, Sordello cannot do."
He sat upon the terrace, plucked and threw

The powdery aloe-cusps away, saw shift
Rome's walls, and drop arch after arch, and drift

Mist-like afar those pillars of all stripe, Mounds of all majesty. "Thou archetype,

"Last of my dreams and loveliest, depart!" And then a low voice wound into his 80
heart:

"Sordello!" (low as some old Pythoness
Conceding to a Lydian King's distress
The cause of his long error — one mistake

² A kind of glass (volcanic).

- Of her past oracle) "Sordello, wake!
 "God has conceded two sights to a man —
 "One, of men's whole work, time's completed plan,
 "The other, of the minute's work, man's first
 "Step to the plan's completeness: what's dispersed
 "Save hope of that supreme step which, desecrated
 "Earliest, was meant still to remain untried
 "Only to give you heart to take your own
 "Step, and there stay, leaving the rest alone?
 10 "Where is the vanity? Why count as one
 "The first step, with the last step? What is gone
 "Except Rome's æry magnificence,
 "That last step you'd take first? — an evidence
 "You were God: be man now! Let those glances fall!
 "The basis, the beginning step of all,
 "Which proves you just a man — is that gone too?
 "Pity to disconcert one versed as you
 "In fate's ill-nature! but its full extent
 "Eludes Sordello, even: the veil rent, 20 "Read the black writing — that collective man "Outstrips the individual. Who began "The acknowledged greatnesses? Ay, your own art
 "Shall serve us: put the poet's mimes apart —
 "Close with the poet's self, and lo, a dim
 "Yet too plain form divides itself from him!
 "Alcamo's song enmeshes the lulled Isle,
 "Woven into the echoes left erewhile
 "By Nina, one soft web of song: no more
 "Turning his name, then, flower-like o'er and o'er!
 30 "An elder poet in the younger's place;
 "Nina's strength, but Alcamo's the grace:
 "Each neutralises each then! Search your fill;
 "You get no whole and perfect Poet — still
 "New Ninas, Alcamos, till time's mid-night
 "Shrouds all — or better say, the shutting light
 "Of a forgotten yesterday. Dissect "Every ideal workman — (to reject
 "In favour of your fearful ignorance
 "The thousand phantasms eager to advance, 40 "And point you but to those within your reach) —
 "Were you the first who brought — (in modern speech)
- "The Multitude to be materialised?
 "That loose eternal unrest — who devised
 "An apparition i' the midst? The rout
 "Was checked, a breathless ring was formed about "That sudden flower: get round at any risk
 "The gold-rough pointel, silver-blazing disk
 "O' the lily! Swords across it! Reign thy reign
 "And serve thy frolic service, Charlemagne!
 "— The very child of over-joyousness, 5
 "Unfeeling thence, strong therefore: Strength by stress
 "Of strength comes of that forehead confident,
 "Those widened eyes expecting heart's content,
 "A calm as out of just-quelled noise; nor swerves
 "For doubt, the ample cheek in gracious curves
 "Abutting on the upthrust nether lip:
 "He wills, how should he doubt then? Ages slip:
 "Was it Sordello pried into the work
 "So far accomplished, and discovered lurk 6
 "A company amid the other clans,
 "Only distinct in priests for castellans
 "And popes for suzerains (their rule confessed
 "Its rule, their interest its interest,
 "Living for sake of living — there an end —
 "Wrapt in itself, no energy to spend
 "In making adversaries or allies) —
 "Dived you into its capabilities
 "And dared create, out of that sect, a soul
 "Should turn a multitude, already whole,
 "Into its body? Speak plainer! Is't so 7
 "sure
 "God's church lives by a King's investiture?
 "Look to last step! A staggering — a shock —
 "What's mere sand is demolished, while the rock
 "Endures: a column of black fiery dust
 "Blots heaven — that help was prematurely thrust
 "Aside, perchance! — but air clears, nought's erased
 "Of the true outline. Thus much being firm based,
 "The other was a scaffold. See him stand
 "Buttressed upon his mattock, Hildebrand
 "Of the huge brain-mask welded ply o'er 8
 "ply
 "As in a forge; it buries either eye
 "White and extinct, that stupid brow; teeth clenched,

"The neck tight-corded, too, the chin deep-trenched,
 "As if a cloud enveloped him while fought
 "Under its shade, grim prizers, thought with thought
 "At dead-lock, agonising he, until "The victor thought leap radiant up, and Will,
 "The slave with folded arms and drooping lids
 "They fought for, lean forth flame-like as it bids.
 "Call him no flower — a mandrake of the earth,
 "Thwarted and dwarfed and blasted in its birth, 10 "Rather, — a fruit of suffering's excess,
 "Thence feeling, therefore stronger: still by stress
 "Of Strength, work Knowledge! Full three hundred years "Have men to wear away in smiles and tears
 "Between the two that nearly seemed to touch,
 "Observe you! quit one workman and you clutch
 "Another, letting both their trains go by "The actors-out of either's policy,
 "Heinrich, on this hand, Otho, Barbaross,
 "Carry the three Imperial crowns across, 20 "Aix' Iron, Milan's Silver, and Rome's Gold —
 "While Alexander, Innocent uphold
 "On that, each Papal key — but, link on link,
 "Why is it neither chain betrays a chink?
 "How coalesce the small and great? Alack,
 "For one thrust forward, fifty such fall back!
 "Do the popes coupled there help Gregory
 "Alone? Hark — from the hermit Peter's cry
 "At Claremont, down to the first serf that says
 "Friedrich's no liege of his while he delays 30 "Getting the Pope's curse off him! The Crusade —
 "Or trick of breeding Strength by other aid
 "Than Strength, is safe. Hark — from the wild harangue
 "Of Vimmercato, to the carroch's clang
 "Yonder! The League — or trick of turning Strength
 "Against Pernicious Strength, is safe at length.
 "Yet hark — from Mantuan Albert making cease
 "The fierce ones, to Saint Francis preaching peace

"Yonder! God's Truce — or trick to supersede
 "The very Use of Strength, is safe. In deed
 "We trench upon the future. Who is 40 found "To take next step, next age — trail o'er the ground —
 "Shall I say, gourd-like? — not the flower's display
 "Nor the root's prowess, but the plenteous way
 "O' the plant — produced by joy and sorrow, whence
 "Unfeeling and yet feeling, strongest thence?
 "Knowledge by stress of merely Knowledge? No —
 "E'en were Sordello ready to forego
 "His life for this, 'twere overleaping work
 "Some one has first to do, howe'er it irk,
 "Nor stray a foot's breadth from the beaten 50 road.
 "Who means to help must still support the load
 "Hildebrand lifted — 'why hast Thou,' he groaned,
 "Imposed on me a burthen, Paul had moaned,
 "And Moses dropped beneath?' Much done — and yet
 "Doubtless that grandest task God over set
 "On man, left much to do: at his arm's wrench,
 "Charlemagne's scaffold fell; but pillars blench
 "Merely, start back again — perchance have been "Taken for buttresses: crash every screen,
 "Hammer the tenons¹ better, and engage 60
 "A gang about your work, for the next age
 "Or two, of Knowledge, part by Strength and part
 "By Knowledge! Then, indeed, perchance may start
 "Sordello on his race — would time divulge
 "Such secrets! If one step's awry, one bulge
 "Calls for correction by a step we thought
 "Got over long since, why, till that is wrought,
 "No progress! And the scaffold in its turn
 "Becomes, its service o'er, a thing to spurn.
 "Meanwhile, if your half-dozen years of 70 life
 "In store dispose you to forego the strife,

¹ A word of carpentry — the projecting piece of wood fitting into framework.

- "Who takes exception? Only bear in mind
 "Ferrara's reached, Goito's left behind:
 "As you then were, as half yourself, desist!
 "— The warrior-part of you may, an it list,
 "Finding real faulchions difficult to poise,
 "Fling them afar and taste the cream of joys
 "By wielding such in fancy, — what is bard
 "Of you may spurn the vehicle that marred
 "Elys so much, and in free fancy glut 10 "His sense, yet write no verses — you have but "To please yourself for law, and once could please
 "What once appeared yourself, by dreaming these
 "Rather than doing these, in days gone by.
 "But all is changed the moment you descry
 "Mankind as half yourself, — then, fancy's trade
 "Ends once and always: how many half evade
 "The other half? men are found half of you.
 "Out of a thousand helps, just one or two
 "Can be accomplished presently: but flinch 20 "From these (as from the faulchion, raised an inch,
 "Elys, described a couplet) and make proof
 "Of fancy, — then, while one half lolls aloof
 "I' the vines, completing Rome to the tip-top —
 "See if, for that, your other half will stop
 "A tear, begin a smile! The rabble's woes,
 "Ludicrous in their patience as they chose "To sit about their town and quietly
 "Be slaughtered, — the poor reckless soldiery,
 "With their ignoble rhymes on Richard, how 30 "'Polt-foot,' sang they, 'was in a pitfall now,'
 "Cheering each other from the engine-mounts, —
 "That crippled spawling idiot who recounts
 "How, lopped of limbs, he lay, stupid as stone,
 "Till the pains crept from out him one by one,
 "And wriggles round the archers on his head
 "To earn a morsel of their chestnut bread, —
 "And Cino, always in the self-same place
- "Weeping; beside that other wretch's case,
 "Eyepits to ear, one gangrene since he plied
 "The engine in his coat of raw sheep's hide 41
 "A double watch in the noon sun; and see
 "Lucchino, beauty, with the favours free,
 "Trim hacqueton,¹ spruce beard and scented hair,
 "Campaigning it for the first time — cut there
 "In two already, boy enough to crawl
 "For latter orpine round the southern wall,
 "Tomà, where Richard's kept, because that whore
 "Marfisa, the fool never saw before,
 "Sickened for flowers this wearisomest siege:
 "And Tiso's wife — men liked their pretty 50
 "liege,
 "Cared for her least of whims once, — Berta, wed
 "A twelvemonth gone, and, now poor Tiso's dead,
 "Delivering herself of his first child
 "On that chance heap of wet filth, reconciled
 "To fifty gazers!" — (Here a wind below
 "Made moody music augural of woe
 "From the pine barrier) — "What if, now the scene
 "Draws to a close, yourself have really been
 "— You, plucking purples in Goito's moss
 "Like edges of a trabea² (not to cross 60
 "Your consul-humour) or dry aloë-shafts
 "For fasces, at Ferrara — he, fate wafts,
 "This very age, her whole inheritance
 "Of opportunities? Yet you advance
 "Upon the last! Since talking is your trade,
 "There's Salinguerra left you to persuade:
 "Fail! then" —
 "No — no — which latest chance secure!"
 "Leaped up and cried Sordello: "this made sure,
 "The past were yet redeemable; its work
 "Was — help the Gueffs, whom I, how'er 70
 "it irk,
 "Thus help!" He shook the foolish aloc-haulm
 "Out of his doublet; paused, proceeded calm
 "To the appointed presence. The large head "Turned on its socket; "And your spokes-man," said
 "The large voice, "is Elcorte's happy sprout?
 "Few such" — (so finishing a speech no doubt

Addressed to Palma, silent at his side)
 "— My sober councils have diversified.
 "Elcorte's son! good: forward as you may,
 "Our lady's minstrel with so much to say!"

The hesitating sunset floated back,
 Rosily traversed in the wonted track
 The chamber, from the lattice o'er the girth
 Of pines, to the huge eagle blacked in earth
 Opposite, — outlined sudden, spur to crest,
 10 That solid Salinguerra, and carressed Palma's contour; 'twas day looped back night's pall;
 Sordello had a chance left spite of all.
 And much he made of the convincing
 speech
 Meant to compensate for the past and
 reach
 Through his youth's daybreak of unprofit,
 quite
 To his noon's labour, so proceed till night
 Leisurely! The great argument to bind Taurello with the Guelf Cause, body and
 mind,
 — Came the consummate rhetoric to that?
 20 Yet most Sordello's argument dropped flat Through his accustomed fault of breaking
 yoke, Disjoining him who felt from him who spoke.
 Was't not a touching incident — so prompt
 A rendering the world its just account, Once proved its debtor? Who'd suppose,
 before
 This proof, that he, Goito's god of yore,
 At duty's instance could demean himself
 So memorably, dwindle to a Guelf?
 Be sure, in such delicious flattery steeped,
 30 His inmost self at the out-portion peeped, Thus occupied; then stole a glance at those Appealed to, curious if her colour rose
 Or his lip moved, while he discreetly urged
 The need of Lombardy becoming purged
 At soonest of her barons; the poor part Abandoned thus, missing the blood at heart
 And spirit in brain, unseasonably off Elsewhere! But, though his speech was worthy scoff,
 Good-humoured Salinguerra, famed for tact
 40 And tongue, who, careless of his phrase, ne'er lacked
 The right phrase, and harangued Honorius
 dumb
 At his accession, — looked as all fell plumb
 To purpose and himself found interest
 In every point his new instructor pressed — Left playing with the rescript's white wax seal
 To scrutinise Sordello head and heel.
 He means to yield assent sure? No, alas!
 All he replied was, "What, it comes to pass
 "That poesy, sooner than politics

"Makes fade young hair?" To think so such speck could fix Taurello!

Then a flash of bitter truth:
 So fantasies could break and fritter youth
 That he had long ago lost earnestness, Lost will to work, lost power to even express
 The need of working! Earth was turned a grave:
 No more occasions now, though he should crave
 Just one, in right of superhuman toil,
 To do what was undone, repair such
 spoil,
 Alter the past — nothing would give the
 chance!
 Not that he was to die; he saw askance 60
 Protract the ignominious years beyond
 To dream in — time to hope and time
 despond,
 Remember and forget, be sad, rejoice
 As saved a trouble; he might, at his choice,
 One way or other, idle life out, drop No few smooth verses by the way — for prop,
 A thyrsus, these sad people, all the same,
 Should pick up, and set store by, — far from blame,
 Plant o'er his hearse, convinced his better
 part Survived him. "Rather tear men out the 70
 heart
 "O' the truth!" — Sordello muttered, and renewed
 His propositions for the Multitude.
 But Salinguerra, who at this attack
 Had thrown great breast and ruffling corslet back
 To hear the better, smilingly resumed
 His task; beneath, the carroch's warning boomed;
 He must decide with Tito; courteously
 He turned then, even seeming to agree With his admonisher — "Assist the Pope,
 "Extend Guelf domination, fill the scope 80
 "O' the Church, thus based on All, by All,
 for All —
 "Change Secular to Evangelical" —
 Echoing his very sentence: all seemed lost,
 When suddenly he looked up, laughingly almost,
 To Palma: "This opinion of your
 friend's —
 "For instance, would it answer Palma's
 ends?
 "Best, were it not, turn Guelf, submit our Strength" —
 (Here he drew out his baldric to its length) — "To the Pope's Knowledge — let our captive slip,
 "Wide to the walls throw ope our gates, 90 equip

- "Azzo with . . . what I hold here!
Who'll subscribe
"To a trite censure of the minstrel tribe
"Henceforward? or pronounce, as Heinrich used,
"Spear-heads for battle, burr-heads for the joust!"
"— When Constance, for his couplets, would promote
"Alcamo, from a parti-coloured coat,
"To holding her lord's stirrup in the wars.
"Not that I see where couplet-making jars
"With common sense: at Mantua I had borne—
10 "This chanted, better than their most forlorn
"Of bull-baits, — that's indisputable!"
Brave!
Whom vanity nigh slew, contempt shall
save!
All's at an end: a Troubadour suppose Mankind will class him with their friends or foes?
A puny uncouth ailing vassal think
The world and him bound in some special link?
Abrupt the visionary tether burst.
What were rewarded here, or what amerced
If a poor drudge, solicitous to dream
20 Deservingly, got tangled by his theme
So far as to conceit the knack or gift
Or whatsoever it be, of verse, might lift
The globe, a lever like the hand and
head
Of — "Men of Action," as the Jongleurs
said,
— "The Great Men," in the people's dialect?
And not a moment did this scorn affect Sordello: scorn the poet? They, for
once,
Asking "what was," obtained a full response.
Bid Naddo think at Mantua — he had but 30 To look into his promptuary, put Finger on a set thought in a set speech:
But was Sordello fitted thus for each Conjecture? Nowise; since within his
soul,
Perception brooded unexpressed and whole.
A healthy spirit like a healthy frame
Craves aliment in plenty — all the same,
Changes, assimilates its aliment.
Perceived Sordello, on a truth intent?
Next day no formularies more you saw 40 Next figs or olives in a sated maw.
'Tis Knowledge, whither such perceptions tend;
They lose themselves in that, means to
an end,
The many old producing some one new,
A last unlike the first. If lies are true,
- The Caliph's wheel-work man¹ of brass receives
A meal, munched millet grains and lettuce
leaves
Together in his stomach rattle loose;
You find them perfect next day to 'produce:
But ne'er expect the man, on strength of
that,
Can roll an iron camel-collar flat 5 Like Haroun's self! I tell you, what was stored
Bit by bit through Sordello's life, outpoured
That eve, was, for that age, a novel thing:
And round those three the People formed a ring,
Of visionary judges whose award
He recognised in full — faces that barred Henceforth return to the old careless life,
In whose great presence, therefore, his first strife
For their sake must not be ignobly fought;
All these, for once, approved of him, he 60
thought,
Suspended their own vengeance, chose await
The issue of this strife to reinstate
Them in the right of taking it — in fact He must be proved king ere they could exact
Vengeance for such king's defalcation.
Last,
A reason why the phrases flowed so fast
Was in his quite forgetting for a time
Himself in his amazement that the rhyme
Disguised the royalty so much: he there — 7 And Salinguerra yet all-unaware Who was the lord, who liegeman!
"Thus I lay
"On thine my spirit and compel obey
"His lord, — my liegeman, — impotent to build
"Another Rome, but hardly so unskilled
"In what such builder should have been,
as brook
"One shame beyond the charge that I forsook
"His function! Free me from that shame,
I bend
"A brow before, suppose new years to spend, —
"Allow each chance, nor fruitlessly, recur —
"Measure thee with the Minstrel, then, 8 demur
"At any crowd he claims! That I must cede
"Shamed now, my right to my especial
need —
"Confess thee fitter help the world than I
"Ordained its champion from eternity,

- "Is much: but to behold thee scorn the post
 "I quit in thy behalf - to hear thee boast
 "What makes my own despair!" And while he rung
 The changes on this theme, the roof up-sprung,
 The sad walls of the presence-chamber died
 Into the distance, or embowering vied
 With far-away Goito's vine-frontier;
 And crowds of faces — (only keeping clear
 The rose-light in the midst, his vantage-ground
 To fight their battle from) — deep clustered round
 Sordello, with good wishes no mere breath,
 Kind prayers for him no vapour, since, come death
 Come life, he was fresh-sinewed every joint,
 Each bone new-marrowed as whom gods anoint
 Though mortal to their rescue. Now let sprawl
 The snaky volumes hither! Is Typhon all
 For Hercules to trample — good report
 From Salanguerra only to extort?
 "So was I" (closed he his inculcating
 A poet must be earth's essential king)
 "So was I, royal so, and if I fail,
 "'Tis not the royalty, ye witness quail,
 "But one deposed who, caring not exert
 "Its proper essence, trifled malapert
 "With accidents instead — good things assigned "As heralds of a better thing behind —
 "And, worthy through display of these, put forth
 "Never the inmost all-surpassing worth
 "That constitutes him king precisely since
 "As yet no other spirit may evince
 "Its like: the power he took most pride to test,
 "Whereby all forms of life had been professed
 "At pleasure, forms already on the earth,
 "Was but a means to power beyond, whose birth
 "Should, in its novelty, be kingship's proof.
 "Now, whether he came near or kept aloof
 "The several forms he longed to imitate,
 "Not there the kingship lay, he sees too late.
 "Those forms, unalterable first as last,
 "Proved him her copier, not the protoplast
 "Of nature: what would come of being free,
 "By action to exhibit tree for tree,
 "Bird, beast, for beast and bird, or prove earth bore
 "One veritable man or woman more?
- "Means to an end, such proofs are: what the end?
 "Let essence, whatsoe'er it be, extend —
 "Never contract. Already you include
 "The multitude; then let the multitude
 "Include yourself; and the result were new:
 "Themselves before, the multitude turn 50
 you.
 "This were to live and move and have, in them,
 "Your being, and secure a diadem
 "You should transmit (because no cycle
 years
 beyond itself, but on itself returns)
 "When, the full sphere in wane, the world o'erlaid
 "Long since with you, shall have in turn obeyed
 "Some orb still prouder, some displayer, still "More potent than the last, of human will,
 "And some new king depose the old. Of such "Am I — whom pride of this elates too 60
 much?
 "Safe, rather say, 'mid troops of peers again;
 "I, with my words, hailed brother of the train
 "Deeds once sufficed: for, let the world roll back,
 "Who fails, through deeds howe'er diverse, retrack
 "My purpose still, my task? A teeming crust —
 "Air, flame, earth, wave at conflict! then, needs must "Emerge some Calm embodied, these refer
 "The brawl to — yellow-bearded Jupiter?
 "No! Saturn; some existence like a pact
 "And protest against Chaos, some first fact 70
 "I' the faint of time. My deep of life, I know,
 "Is unavailing e'en to poorly show" . . .
 (For here the Chief immeasurably yawned)
 . . . "Deeds in their due gradation till Song dawned —
 "The fullest effluence of the finest mind,
 "All in degree, no way diverse in kind
 "From minds about it, minds which, more or less,
 "Lofty or low, move seeking to impress
 "Themselves on somewhat; but one mind has climbed
 "Step after step, by just ascent sublimed. 80
 "Thought is the soul of act, and, stage by stage,
 "Soul is from body still to disengage
 "As tending to a freedom which rejects
 "Such help and incorporeally affects
 "The world, producing deeds but not by deeds,
 "Swaying, in others, frames itself exceeds,

- "Assigning them the simpler tasks it used
 "To patiently perform till Song produced
 "Acts, by thoughts only, for the mind:
 divest
 "Mind of e'en Thought, and, lo, God's un-expressed
 "Will draws above us! All then is to win
 "Save that. How much for me, then?
 where begin
 "My work? About me, faces! and they
 flock,
 "The earnest faces. What shall I unlock
 "By song? behold me prompt, whate'er it
 be,
 10 "To minister: how much can mortals see "Of Life? No more than so? I take the task
 "And marshal you Life's elemental masque,
 "Show Men, on evil or on good lay stress,
 "This light, this shade make prominent, suppress
 "All ordinary hues that softening blend
 "Such natures with the level. Apprehend
 "Which sinner is, which saint, if I allot
 "Hell, Purgatory, Heaven, a blaze or blot,
 "To those you doubt concerning! I en-
 womb
 20 "Some wretched Friedrich with his red-hot tomb;
 "Some dubious spirit, Lombard Agilulph
 "With the black chastening river I engulph!
 "Some unapproached Matilda I enshrine
 "With languors of the planet of decline —
 "These, fail to recognise, to arbitrate
 "Between henceforth, to rightly estimate
 "Thus marshalled in the masque! Myself, the while,
 "As one of you, am witness, shrink or smile
 "At my own showing! Next age — what's to do?
 30 "The men and women stationed hitherto "Will I unstation, good and bad, conduct
 "Each nature to its farthest, or obstruct
 "At soonest, in the world: light, thwarted, breaks
 "A limpid purity to rainbow flakes,
 "Or shadow, massed, freezes to gloom:
 behold
 "How such, with fit assistance to unfold,
 "Or obstacles to crush them, disengage
 "Their forms, love, hate, hope, fear, peace make, war wage,
 "In presence of you all! Myself, implied 40 "Superior now, as, by the platform's side,
 "I bade them do and suffer, — would last content
 "The world . . . no — that's too far! I circumvent
 "A few, my masque contented, and to these "Offer unveil the last of mysteries —
 "Man's inmost life shall have yet freer
 play:
- "Once more I cast external things away,
 "And natures composite, so decompose
 "That" . . . Why, he writes Sordello!
 "How I rose,
 "And how have you advanced! since ever-
 more
 "Yourselves effect what I was fain before 50
 "Effect, what I supplied yourselves suggest,
 "What I leave bare yourselves can now invest.
 "How we attain to talk as brothers talk,
 "In half-words, call things by half-names,
 no balk
 "From discontinuing old aids. To-day
 "Takes in account the work of Yesterday:
 "Has not the world a Past now, its adept
 "Consults ere he dispense with or accept
 "New aids? a single touch more may enhance,
 "A touch less turn to insignificance 60
 "Those structures' symmetry the past has strewn
 "The world with, once so bare. Leave the mere rude
 "Explicit details! 'tis but brother's speech
 "We need, speech where an accent's change gives each
 "The other's soul — no speech to understand
 "By former audience: need was then to expand,
 "Expatriate — hardly were we brothers!
 true —
 "Nor I lament my small remove from you,
 "Nor reconstruct what stands already.
 Ends
 "Accomplished turn to means: my art 70 intends
 "New structure from the ancient: as they changed
 "The spoils of every clime at Venice, ranged
 "The horned and snouted Libyan god, upright
 "As in his desert, by some simple bright
 "Clay cinerary pitcher — Thebes as Rome,
 "Athens as Byzant rifled, till their Dome
 "From earth's reputed consummations razed
 "A seal, the all-transmuting Triad blazed "Above. Ah, whose that fortune? Ne'ertheless
 "E'en he must stoop contented to express 80
 "No tithe of what's to say — the vehicle
 "Never sufficient: but his work is still "For faces like the faces that select "The single service I am bound effect, —
 "That bid me cast aside such fancies, bow
 "Taurello to the Guelf cause, disallow
 "The Kaiser's coming — which with heart, soul, strength,
 "I labour for, this eve, who feel at length
 "My past career's outrageous vanity,

"And would, as its amends, die, even die
 "Now I first estimate the boon of life,
 "If death might win compliance — sure,
 this strife
 "Is right for once — the People my support."
 My poor Sordello! what may we extort
 By this, I wonder? Palma's lighted eyes Turned to Taurello who, long past surprise, Began, "You love him — what you'd say at large
 "Let me say briefly. First, your father's charge
 10 "To me, his friend, peruse: I guessed
 indeed
 "You were no stranger to the course decreed
 "He bids me leave his children to the saints:
 "As for a certain project, he acquaints
 "The Pope with that, and offers him the
 best
 "Of your possessions to permit the rest
 "Go peaceably — to Ecelin, a stripe
 "Of soil the cursed Vicentines will gripe,
 "— To Alberic, a patch the Trevisan
 "Clutches already; extricate, who can, 20 "Treville, Villarazzi, Puissolo,
 "Loria and Cartiglione! — all must go,
 "And with them go my hopes. 'Tis lost, then! Lost
 "This eve, our crisis, and some pains it cost
 "Procuring; thirty years — as good I'd spent
 "Like our admonisher! But each his bent
 "Pursues: no question, one might live absurd
 "Oneself this while, by deed as he by word
 "Persisting to obtrude an influence where
 "'Tis made account of, much as . . . nay, you fare
 30 "With twice the fortune, youngster! — I submit,
 "Happy to parallel my waste of wit
 "With the renowned Sordello's: you decide
 "A course for me. Romano may abide "Romano, — Bacchus! After all, what dearth
 "Of Ecelins and Alberics on earth?
 "Say there's a prize in prospect, must dis-
 grace
 "Betide competitors, unless they style
 "Themselves Romano? Were it worth my while
 "To try my own luck! But an obscure
 place 40 "Suits me — there wants a youth to bustle, stalk
 "And attitudinise — some fight, more talk,
 "Most flaunting badges — how, I might make clear

"Since Friedrich's very purposes lie here
 "— Here, pity they are like to lie! For
 me,
 "With station fixed unceremoniously
 "Long since, small use contesting; I am but
 "The liegeman — you are born the lieges:
 shut
 "That gentle mouth now! or resume your kin
 "In your sweet self; were Palma Ecelin
 "For me to work with! Could that neck 50 endure
 "This bauble for a cumbrous garniture,
 "She should . . . or might one bear it for her? Stay —
 "I have not been so flattered many a day
 "As by your pale friend — Bacchus! The least help
 "Would lick the hind's fawn to a lion's whelp:
 "His neck is broad enough — a ready
 tongue
 "Beside: too writhled — but, the main thing, young —
 "I could . . . why, look ye!"
 And the badge was thrown Across Sordello's neck: "This badge alone "Makes you Romano's Head — becomes 60 superb
 "On your bare neck, which would, on mine, disturb
 "The pauldron," said Taurello. A mad act,
 Nor even dreamed about before — in fact,
 Not when his sportive arm rose for the nonce —
 But he had dallied overmuch, this once,
 With power: the thing was done, and he,
 aware
 The thing was done, proceeded to declare —
 (So like a nature made to serve, excel In serving, only feel by service well!) — That he would make Sordello that and 70
 more.
 "As good a scheme as any. What's to pore
 "At in my face?" he asked — "ponder instead
 "This piece of news; you are Romano's
 Head!
 "One cannot slacken pace so near the goal,
 "Suffer my Azzo to escape heart-whole "This time! For you there's Palma to espouse —
 "For me, one crowning trouble ere I house
 "Like my compeer."
 On which ensued a strange
 And solemn visitation; there came change O'er every one of them; each looked on 80
 each:
 Up in the midst a truth grew, without
 speech.
 And when the giddiness sank and the haze

Subsided, they were sitting, no amaze,
Sordello with the baldric on, his sire Silent, though his proportions seemed aspire

Momently; and, interpreting the thrill, —
Night at its ebb, — Palma was found there
still

Relating somewhat Adelaide confessed
A year ago, while dying on her breast, —
Of a contrivance, that Vicenza night
When Ecelin had birth. "Their convoy's flight

10 "Cut off a moment, coiled inside the flame "That wallowed like a dragon at his game

"The toppling city through — San Biagio
rocks!

"And wounded lies in her delicious locks
"Retrude, the frail mother, on her face,
"None of her wasted, just in one embrace
"Covering her child: when, as they lifted
her,

"Cleaving the tumult, mighty, mightier
"And mightiest Taurello's cry outbroke,
"Leapt like a tongue of fire that cleaves
the smoke,

20 "Midmost to cheer his Mantuans onward — drown

"His colleague Ecelin's clamour, up and
down

"The disarray: failed Adelaide see then
"Who was the natural chief, the man of
men?

"Outstripping time, her infant there burst
swathe,

"Stood up with eyes haggard beyond the scathe

"From wandering after his heritage

"Lost once and lost for aye: and why that rage,

"That deprecating glance? A new shape
leant

"On a familiar shape — gloatingly bent

30 "O'er his discomfiture; 'mid wreaths it wore,

"Still one outflamed the rest — her child's
before

"'Twas Salinguerra's for his child: scorn,
hate,

"Rage now might startle her when all too
late!

"Then was the moment! — rival's foot had spurned

"Never that House to earth else! Sense returned —

"The act conceived, adventured and complete,

"They bore away to an obscure retreat

"Mother and child — Retrude's self not slain"

(Nor even here Taurello moved) "though pain

40 "Was fled; and what assured them most
'twas fled,

"All pain, was, if they raised the pale hushed head

"'Twould turn this way and that, waver awhile,

"And only settle into its old smile —

"(Graceful as the disquieted water-flag
"Steadying itself, remarked they, in the quag

"On either side their path) — when suffered look

"Down on her child. They marched: no sign once shook

"The company's close litter of crossed spears

"Till, as they reached Goito, a few tears
"Slipped in the sunset from her long black lash,

"And she was gone. So far the action rash;

"No crime. They laid Retrude in the font,

"Taurello's very gift, her child was wont

"To sit beneath — constant as eve he came "To sit by its attendant girls the same "As one of them. For Palma, she would blend

"With this magnific spirit to the end,

"That ruled her first; but scarcely had she dared

"To disobey the Adelaide who scared

"Her into vowing never to disclose

"A secret to her husband, which so froze

"His blood at half-recital, she contrived

"To hide from him Taurello's infant lived,

"Lest, by revealing that, himself should mar

"Romano's fortunes. And, a crime so far,

"Palma received that action: she was told

"Of Salinguerra's nature, of his cold

"Calm acquiescence in his lot! But free

"To impart the secret to Romano, she "Engaged to repossess Sordello of "His heritage, and hers, and that way doff

"The mask, but after years, long years:
while now,

"Was not Romano's sign-mark on that
brow?"

Across Taurello's heart his arms were locked:

And when he did speak 'twas as if he mocked

The minstrel, "who had not to move," he
said,

"Nor stir — should fate defraud him of a shred

"Of his son's infancy? much less his youth!"

(Laughingly all this) — "which to aid, in
truth,

"Himself, reserved on purpose, had not grown

"Old, not too old — 'twas best they kept
alone

"Till now, and never idly met till now;"

— Then, in the same breath, told Sordello
 how
 All intimations of this eve's event
 Were lies, for Friedrich must advance to Trent,
 Thence to Verona, then to Rome, there stop,
 Tumble the Church down, institute a-top
 The Alps a Prefecture of Lombardy:
 — "That's now! — no prophesying what may be
 "Anon, with a new monarch of the clime,
 "Native of Gesi, passing his youth's prime "At Naples. Tito bids my choice decide "On whom . . ."
 "Embrace him, madman!" Palma cried, Who through the laugh saw sweat-drops burst apace,
 And his lips blanching: he did not embrace Sordello, but he laid Sordello's hand
 On his own eyes, mouth, forehead.
 Understand,
 This while Sordello was becoming flushed
 Out of his whiteness; thoughts rushed,
 fancies rushed;
 He pressed his hand upon his head and signed
 Both should forbear him. "Nay, the best's behind!"
 Taurello laughed — not quite with the same laugh:
 "The truth is, thus we scatter, ay, like chaff
 "These Guelfs, a despicable monk recoils
 "From: nor expect a fickle Kaiser spoils
 "Our triumph! — Friedrich? Think you,
 I intend
 "Friedrich shall reap the fruits of blood I spend
 "And brain I waste? Think you, the people clap
 "Their hands at my out-hewing this wild gap
 "For any Friedrich to fill up? 'Tis
 mine —
 "That's yours: I tell you, towards some such design
 "Have I worked blindly, yes, and idly, yes,
 "And for another, yes — but worked no
 less
 "With instinct at my heart; I else had swerved,
 "While now — look round! My cunning has preserved
 "Samminiato — that's a central place
 "Secures us Florence, boy, — in Pisa's case.
 "By land as she by sea; with Pisa ours,
 "And Florence, and Pistoia, one devours
 "The land at leisure! Gloriously dispersed —
 "Brescia, observe, Milan, Piacenza first "That flanked us (ah, you know not!) in the March;

"On these we pile, as keystone of our arch,
 "Romagna and Bologna, whose first span
 "Covered the Trentine and the Valsugan;
 "Sofia's Egna by Bolgiano's sure!" . . .
 So he proceeded: half of all this, pure
 Delusion, doubtless, nor the rest too true,
 But what was undone he felt sure to do,
 As ring by ring he wrung off, flung away
 The pauldron-rings to give his sword-arm
 play —
 Need of the sword now! That would 54 soon adjust Aught wrong at present; to the sword intrust Sordello's whiteness, undersize: 'twas
 plain
 He hardly rendered right to his own
 brain —
 Like a brave hound, men educate to pride
 Himself on speed or scent nor aught beside,
 As though he could not, gift by gift, match
 men!
 Palma had listened patiently: but when
 'Twas time expostulate, attempt withdraw Taurello from his child, she, without awe
 Took off his iron arms from, one by one, 60 Sordello's shrinking shoulders, and, that
 done,
 Made him avert his visage and relieve Sordello (you might see his corslet heave
 The while) who, loose, rose — tried to speak, then sank:
 They left him in the chamber. All was blank.
 And even reeling down the narrow stair Taurello kept up, as though unaware Palma was by to guide him, the old device — Something of Milan — "how we muster thrice
 "The Torriani's strength there; all along 70
 "Our own Visconti cowed them" — thus the song
 Continued even while she bade him stoop, Thrid somehow, by some glimpse of arrowloop,
 The turnings to the gallery below,
 Where he stopped short as Palma let him
 go.
 When he had sat in silence long enough Splintering the stone bench, braving a rebuff
 She stopped the truncheon; only to commence
 One of Sordello's poems, a pretence
 For speaking, some poor rhyme of "Elys" 84
 hair
 "And head that's sharp and perfect like
 a pear,
 "So smooth and close are laid the few fine
 locks
 "Stained like pale honey oozed from topmost rocks
 "Sun-blanch'd the livelong summer" —
 from his worst

Performance, the Goito, as his first:
 And that at end, conceiving from the brow
 And open mouth no sience would serve
 now,
 Went on to say the whole world loved that
 man
 And, for that matter, thought his face,
 tho' wan,
 Eclipsed the Count's — he sucking in each phrase
 As if an angel spoke. The foolish praise Ended, he drew her on his mailed knees,
 made
 Her face a framework with his hands, a
 shade,
 10 A crown, an aureole: there must she remain
 (Her little mouth compressed with smiling pain
 As in his gloves she felt her tresses twitch)
 To get the best look at, in fittest niche Dispose his saint. That done, he kissed her brow,
 — "Lauded her father for his treason
 now,"
 He told her, "only, how could one suspect
 "The wit in him? — whose clansman,
 recollect,
 "Was ever Salinguerra — she, the same,
 "Romano and his lady — so, might claim 20 "To know all, as she should" — and thus begun
 Schemes with a vengeance, schemes on schemes, "not one
 "Fit to be told that foolish boy," he said,
 "But only let Sordello Palma wed,
 "— Then!"
 'Twas a dim long narrow place at best:
 Midway a sole grate showed the fiery West,
 As shows its corpse the world's end some split tomb —
 A gloom, a rift of fire, another gloom,
 Faced Palma — but at length Taurello set
 Her free; the grating held one ragged jet 30 Of fierce gold fire: he lifted her within
 The hollow underneath — how else begin Fate's second marvellous cycle, else renew
 The ages than with Palma plain in view?
 Then paced the passage, hands clenched,
 head erect,
 Pursuing his discourse; a grand unchecked
 Monotony made out from his quick talk
 And the recurring noises of his walk;
 — Somewhat too much like the o'er-charged assent
 Of two resolved friends in one danger
 blent,
 40 Who hearten each the other against heart;
 Boasting there's nought to care for, when,
 apart
 The boaster, all's to care for. He, beside
 Some shape not visible, in power and pride Approached, out of the dark, ginglyly
 near,

Nearer, passed close in the broad light, his
 ear
 Crimson, eyeballs suffused, temples full-
 fraught,
 Just a snatch of the rapid speech you caught,
 And on he strode into the opposite dark,
 Till presently the harsh heel's turn, a spark 1' the stone, and whirl of some loose embossed thong
 That crashed against the angle aye so long After the last, punctual to an amount Of mailed great paces you could not but count, —
 Prepared you for the pacing back again.
 And by the snatches you might ascertain That, Friedrich's Prefecture surmounted,
 left
 By this alone in Italy, they cleft
 Asunder, crushed together, at command Of none, were free to break up Hilde-
 brand,
 Rebuild, he and Sordello, Charlemagne — 6
 But garnished, Strength with Knowledge,
 "if we deign
 "Accept that compromise and stoop to give
 "Rome law, the Caesar's Representative."
 Enough, that the illimitable flood
 Of triumphs after triumphs, understood
 In its faint reflux (you shall hear) sufficed
 Young Ecelin for appanage, enticed Him on till, these long quiet in their graves,
 He found 'twas looked for that a whole life's braves
 Should somehow be made good; so, weak 7
 and worn,
 Must stagger up at Milan, one grey morn
 Of the to-come, and fight his latest fight.
 But, Salinguerra's prophecy at height —
 He voluble with a raised arm and stiff,
 A blaring voice, a blazing eye, as if He had our very Italy to keep
 Or cast away, or gather in a heap
 To garrison the better — ay, his word
 Was, "run the cucumber into a gourd,
 "Drive Trent upon Apulia" — at their 8 pitch
 Who spied the continents and islands which Grew mulberry leaves and sickles, in the map — (Strange that three such confessions so should hap
 To Palma, Dante spoke with in the clear
 Amorous silence of the Swooning-sphere, — Cunizza, as he called her! Never ask Of Palma more! She sat, knowing her task
 Was done, the labour of it, — for, success Concerned not Palma, passion's votaress.) Triumph at height, and thus Sordello 9
 crowned —
 Above the passage suddenly a sound

Stops speech, stops walk: back shrinks
 Taurello, bids
 With large involuntary asking lids, Palma interpret. "Tis his own foot-
 stamp —
 "Your hand! His summons! Nay, this idle damp
 "Befits not!" Out they two reeled dizzily.
 "Visconti's strong at Milan," resumed he,
 In the old, somewhat insignificant way —
 (Was Palma wort, years afterward, to say)
 As though the spirit's flight, sustained thus far,
 Dropped at that very instant.
 Gone they are —
 Palma, Taurello; Eglamor anon, Ecelin, — only Naddo's never gone!
 — Labours, this moonrise, what the Master meant:
 "Ts Squarciauppo speckled? — purulent,
 "I'd say, but when was Providence put out?
 "He carries somehow handily about "His spite nor fouls himself." Goito's
 vines
 Stand like a cheat detected — stark rough lines,
 The moon breaks through, a grey mean scale against
 The vault where, this eve's Maiden, thou remain'st
 Like some fresh martyr, eyes fixed — who can tell?
 As Heaven, now all's at end, did not so
 well,
 Spite of the faith and victory, to leave
 Its virgin quite to death in the lone eve.
 While the persisting hermit-bee . . . ha!
 wait
 No longer: these in compass, forward fate

BOOK THE SIXTH.

THE thought of Eglamor's least like a
 thought,
 And yet a false one, was, "Man shrinks to
 nought
 "If matched with symbols of immensity;
 "Must quail, forsooth, before a quiet sky
 "Or sea, too little for their quietude:"
 And, truly, somewhat in Sordello's mood Confirmed its speciousness, while eve slow sank
 Down the near terrace to the farther bank,
 And only one spot left from out the night
 Glimmered upon the river opposite —
 A breadth of watery heaven like a bay,
 A sky-like space of water, ray for ray,
 And star for star, one richness where they
 mixed
 As this and that wing of an angel, fixed,
 Tumultuary splendours folded in

To die. Nor turned he till Ferrara's din (Say, the monotonous speech from a man's lip
 Who lets some first and eager purpose slip
 In a new fancy's birth — the speech keeps
 on Though elsewhere its informing soul be
 gone)
 — Aroused him, surely offered succour.
 Fate
 Paused with this eve; ere she precipitate Herself, — best put off new strange thoughts awhile,
 That voice, those large hands, that por- 50
 tentous smile, —
 What help to pierce the future as the past
 Lay in the plaining city?
 And at last
 The main discovery and prime concern,
 All that just now imported him to learn, Truth's self, like yonder slow moon to complete
 Heaven, rose again, and, naked at his feet, Lighted his old life's every shift and
 change,
 Effort with counter-effort; nor the range
 Of each looked wrong except wherein it checked,
 Some other — which of these could he 60
 suspect,
 Prying into them by the sudden blaze?
 The real way seemed made up of all the ways —
 Mood after mood of the one mind in him;
 Tokens of the existence, bright or dim,
 Of a transcendent all-embracing sense
 Demanding only outward influence,
 A soul, in Palma's phrase, above his soul,
 Power to uplift his power, — such moon's control
 Over such sea-depths, — and their mass had swept Onward from the beginning and still kept 70 its course: but years and years the sky
 above
 Held none, and so, untasked of any love,
 His sensitiveness idled, now amorphous,
 Alive now, and, to sullenness or sport
 Given wholly up, disposed itself anew
 At every passing instigation, grew
 And dwindled at caprice, in foam-showers split,
 Wedge-like insisting, quivered now a gilt Shield in the sunshine, now a blinding race
 Of whitest ripples o'er the reef — found 80
 place
 For much display; not gathered up and,
 hurled
 Right from its heart, encompassing the
 world.
 So had Sordello been, by consequence,
 Without a function: others made pretence
 To strength not half his own, yet had some core

Within, submitted to some moon, before Them still, superior still whate'er their force, —
 Were able therefore to fulfil a course,
 Nor missed life's crown, authentic attribute.
 To each who lives must be a certain fruit
 Of having lived in his degree, — a stage,
 Earlier or later in men's pilgrimage,
 To stop at; and to this the spirits tend
 Who, still discovering beauty without end, 10 Amass the scintillations, make one star
 — Something unlike them, self-sustained, afar, —
 And meanwhile nurse the dream of being blest
 By winning it to notice and invest
 Their souls with alien glory, some one day When'er the nucleus, gathering shape
 alway,
 Round to the perfect circle — soon or late,
 According as themselves are formed to
 wait;
 Whether mere human beauty will suffice
 The yellow hair and the luxurious eyes,
 20 Or human intellect seem best, or each Combine in some ideal form past reach On earth, or else some shade of these, some
 aim,
 Some love, hate even, take their place, the
 same,
 So to be served — all this they do not lose,
 Waiting for death to live, nor idly choose What must be Hell — a progress thus pursued
 Through all existence, still above the food
 That's offered them, still fain to reach beyond
 The widened range, in virtue of their bond 30 Of sovereignty. Not that a Palma's Love,
 A Salinguerra's Hate, would equal prove
 To swaying all Sordello: but why doubt Some love meet for such strength, some moon without
 Would match his sea? — or fear, Good manifest,
 Only the Best breaks faith? — Ah but the
 Best
 Somehow eludes us ever, still might be
 And is not! Crave we gems? No penury
 Of their material round us! Pliant earth
 And plastic flame — what baulks the mage his birth 40 — Jacinth in balls or lodestone by the block?
 Flinders enrich the strand, veins swell the rock;
 Nought more! Seek creatures? Life's i'
 the tempest, thought Clothes the keen hill-top, mid-day woods are fraught
 With fervours: human forms are well
 enough!
 But we had hoped, encouraged by the stuff
 Profuse at nature's pleasure, men beyond These actual men! — and thus are over-
 fond
 In arguing, from Good — the Best, from
 force
 Divided — force combined, an ocean's
 course
 From this our sea whose mere intestine 50 pants
 Might seem at times sufficient to our wants.
 External power! If none be adequate,
 And he stand forth ordained (a prouder
 fate)
 Himself a law to his own sphere? "Remove
 "All incompleteness!" for that law, that
 love?
 Nay, if all other laws be feints, — truth
 veiled
 Helpfully to weak vision that had failed To grasp aught but its special want, — for lure,
 Embodied? Stronger vision could endure
 The unbodied want: no part — the whole 60 of truth!
 The People were himself; nor, by the ruth
 At their condition, was he less impelled
 To alter the discrepancy beheld,
 Than if, from the sound whole, a sickly
 part Subtracted were transformed, decked out with art,
 Then palmed on him as alien woe — the Gulf
 To succour, proud that he forsook himself.
 All is himself; all service, therefore, rates
 Alike, nor serving one part, immolates
 The rest: but all in time! "That lance of 70
 yours
 "Makes havoc soon with Malek and his Moors,
 "That buckler's lined with many a giant's beard
 "Ere long, our champion, be the lance,
 upreared,
 "The buckler wielded handsomely as now!
 "But view your escort, bear in mind your vow,
 "Count the pale tracts of sand to pass ere
 that,
 "And, if you hope we struggle through the flat,
 "Put lance and buckler by! Next half-month lacks
 "Mere sturdy exercise of mace and axe
 "To cleave this dismal brake of prickly- 80 pear
 "Which bristling holds Cydippe by the
 hair,
 "Lames barefoot Agathon: this felled,
 we'll try
 "The picturesque achievements by and by —
 "Next life!"

Ay, rally, mock, O People, urge Your claims! — for thus he ventured, to
 the verge,
 Push a vain mummery which perchance distrust
 Of his fast-slipping resolution thrust Likewise: accordingly the Crowd — (as
 yet
 He had unconsciously contrived forget
 I' the whole, to dwell o' the points . . .
 one might assuage
 The signal horrors easier than engage
 With a dim vulgar vast unobvious grief
 Not to be fancied off, nor gained relief
 In brilliant fits, cured by a happy quirk,
 But by dim vulgar vast unobvious work
 To correspond . . .) this Crowd then, forth they stood.
 "And now content thy stronger vision,
 brood
 "On thy bare want; uncovered, turf by turf,
 "Study the corpse-face thro' the taint-worms' scurf!"
 Down sank the People's Then; uprose their Now.
 These sad ones render service to! And how Piteously little must that service prove — Had surely proved in any case! for,
 move
 Each other obstacle away, let youth Become aware it had surprised a truth
 'Twere service to impart — can truth be seized,
 Settled forthwith, and, of the captive eased,
 Its captor find fresh prey, since this alit
 So happily, no gesture luring it,
 The earnest of a flock to follow? Vain, Most vain! a life to spend ere this he chain
 To the poor crowd's complacence: ere
 the crowd
 Pronounce it captured, he describes a cloud
 Its kin of twice the plume; which he, in
 turn,
 If he shall live as many lives, may learn How to secure: not else. Then Mantua called Back to his mind how certain bards were thrall'd
 — Buds blasted, but of breath more like perfume
 Than Naddo's staring nosegay's carrion
 bloom;
 Some insane rose that burnt heart out in sweets,
 A spendthrift in the spring, no summer
 greets;
 Some Dularete, drunk with truths and
 wine,
 Grown bestial, dreaming how become divine.
 Yet to surmount this obstacle, commence

With the commencement, merits crowning!
 Hence
 Must truth be casual truth, elicited
 In sparks so mean, at intervals dispread
 So rarely, that 'tis like at no one time
 Of the world's story has not truth, the prime
 Of truth, the very truth which, loosed, had hurled
 The world's course right, been really in
 the world
 — Content the while with some mean spark by dint
 Of some chance-blow, the solitary hint 54
 Of buried fire, which, rip earth's breast, would stream
 Sky-ward!
 Sordello's miserable gleam
 Was looked for at the moment: he would dash
 This badge, and all it brought, to earth, —
 abash
 Taurello thus, perhaps persuade him wrest
 The Kaiser from his purpose, — would attest
 His own belief, in any case. Before
 He dashes it, however, think once more!
 For, were that little, truly service? "Ay,
 "I' the end, no doubt; but meantime? 60
 Plain you spy
 "Its ultimate effect, but many flaws
 "Of vision blur each intervening cause.
 "Were the day's fraction clear as the life's sum
 "Of service, Now as filled as teems To-
 come
 "With evidence of good — nor too minute
 "A share to vie with evil! No dispute, "'Twere fittest maintain the Guelfs in
 rule:
 "That makes your life's work: but you have to school
 "Your day's work on these natures cir-cumstanced
 "Thus variously, which yet, as each ad- 70
 vanced
 "Or might impede the Guelf rule, must be moved
 "Now, for the Then's sake, — hating what you loved,
 "Loving old hatreds! Nor if one man
 bore
 "Brand upon temples while his fellow wore
 "The aureole, would it task you to decide:
 "But, portioned duly out, the future vied
 "Never with the unparcelled present!
 Smite
 "Or spare so much on warrant all so slight?
 "The present's complete sympathies to
 break,
 "Aversions bear with, for a future's sake 84

 His time of action for, against, or with Our world (I labour to extract the pith Of this his problem) grew, that even-tide, Gigantic with its power of joy, beside The world's eternity of impotence To profit though at his whole joy's expense.

 "But long ere then Sordello will have slept
 "Away; you teach him at Goito's crypt,
 "There's a blank issue to that fiery thrill.
 "Stirring, the few cope with the many, still:
 "So much of sand as, quiet, makes a mass

 "At last, stains ruddily the dull red cape,
 "And, kindling orbs grey as the unripe grape
 "Before, avails forthwith to disentrance
 "The portent, soon to lead a mystic dance
 "Among you! For, who sits alone in Rome?
 "Have those great hands indeed hewn out a home,
 "And set me there to live? Oh life, life-breath,
 "Life-blood, — ere sleep, come travail, life 60 ere death!
 "This life stream on my soul, direct, oblique,
 "But always streaming! Hindrances? They pique:
 "Helps? such . . . but why repeat, my soul o'ertops
 "Each height, then every depth profound-lier drops?
 "Enough that I can live, and would live! Wait "For some transcendent life reserved by Fate
 "To follow this? Oh, never! Fate, I trust
 "The same, my soul to; for, as who flings dust,
 "Perchance (so facile was the deed) she chequed
 "The void with these materials to affect 70
 "My soul diversely: these consigned anew
 "To nought by death, what marvel if she threw
 "A second and superber spectacle
 "Before me? What may serve for sun, what still

"Bless me! Give firmer arm and fleetier

"These limbs of mine — our greensward was so soft!
"Nor camp I on the thunder-cloud aloft:
"We feel the bliss distinctlier, having thus "Engines subservient, not mixed up with us.
"Better move palpably through heaven:
nor, freed
"Of flesh, forsooth, from space to space proceed
"Mid flying synods of worlds! No: in heaven's marge
"Show Titan still, recumbent o'er his targe
"Solid with stars — the Centaur at his
game,
"Made tremulously out in hoary flame!
"Life! Yet the very cup whose extreme dull
"Dregs, even, I would quaff, was dashed,
at full,
"Aside so oft; the death I fly, revealed
"So oft a better life this life concealed,
"And which sage, champion, martyr, through each path
"Have hunted fearlessly — the horrid bath,
"The crippling-irons and the fiery chair.
"Twas well for them; let me become aware
"As they, and I relinquish life, too! Let "What masters life disclose itself! Forget
"Vain ordinances, I have one appeal —
"I feel, am what I feel, know what I feel;
"So much is truth to me. What is, then?
Since
"One object, viewed diversely, may evince
"Beauty and ugliness — this way attract,
"That way repel, — why gloze upon the fact?
"Why must a single of the sides be right?
"What bids choose this and leave the opposite?
"Where's abstract Right for me? — in youth endured
"With Right still present, still to be pursued,
"Thro' all the interchange of circles, rife
"Each with its proper law and mode of life,
"Each to be dwelt at ease in: where, to sway
"Absolute with the Kaiser, or obey
"Implicit with his serf of fluttering heart,
"Or, like a sudden thought of God's, to start

* Under-petticoats.

* Red bronze.

"Up, Brutus in the presence, then go shout
That some should pick the unstrung jewels out —

"Each, well!"

And, as in moments when the past
Gave partially enfranchisement, he cast Himself quite through mere secondary states

Of his soul's essence, little loves and hates,
Into the mid deep yearnings overlaid
By these; as who should pierce hill, plain,
grove, glade,

And on into the very nucleus probe
That first determined there exist a globe.
As that were easiest, half the globe dissolved,

So seemed Sordello's closing-truth evolved
By his flesh-half's break-up; the sudden swell

Of his expanding soul showed Ill and Well,
Sorrow and Joy, Beauty and Ugliness,
Virtue and Vice, the Larger and the Less,
All qualities, in fine, recorded here,
Might be but modes of Time and this one
sphere,

Urgent on these, but not of force to bind
Eternity, as Time — as Matter — Mind,
If Mind, Eternity, should choose assert
Their attributes within a Life: thus girt
With circumstance, next change beholds them cinct

Quite otherwise — with Good and Ill distinct,

Joys, sorrows, tending to a like result —
Contrived to render easy, difficult,
This or the other course of . . . what new bond

In place of flesh may stop their flight beyond

Its new sphere, as that course does harm or
good

To its arrangements. Once this understood,

As suddenly he felt himself alone,
Quite out of Time and this world: all was known.

What made the secret of his past despair?
— Most imminent when he seemed most aware

Of his own self-sufficiency: made mad
By craving to expand the power he had,
And not new power to be expanded? —
just

This made it; Soul on Matter being thrust, Joy comes when so much Soul is wrecked
in Time

On Matter: let the Soul's attempt sublime Matter beyond the scheme and so prevent
By more or less that deed's accomplish-
ment,

And Sorrow follows: Sorrow how avoid?
Let the employer match the thing employed,

Fit to the finite his infinity.

And thus proceed for ever, in degree
Changed but in kind the same, still limited
To the appointed circumstance and dead
To all beyond. A sphere is but a sphere;
Small, Great, are merely terms we bandy 50
here;

Since to the spirit's absoluteness all Are like. Now, of the present sphere we call

Life, are conditions; take but this among Many; the body was to be so long Youthful, no longer: but, since no control
Tied to that body's purposes his soul,
She chose to understand the body's trade
More than the body's self — had fain conveyed

Her boundless to the body's bounded lot.
Hence, the soul permanent, the body not, — 60
Scarcely its minute for enjoying here, —
The soul must needs instruct her weak
compeer,

Run o'er its capabilities and wring
A joy thence, she held worth experiencing:
Which, far from half discovered even, — lo,

The minute gone, the body's power let go
Apportioned to that joy's acquirement!
Broke

Morning o'er earth, he yearned for all it woke —

From the volcano's vapour-flag, winds hoist

Black o'er the spread of sea, — down to the 70 moist

Dale's silken barley-spikes sullied with rain,

Swayed earthwards, heavily to rise again —
The Small, a sphere as perfect as the Great
To the soul's absoluteness. Meditate

Too long on such a morning's cluster-chord
And the whole music it was framed afford, —

The chord's might half discovered, what should pluck

One string, his finger, was found palsystruck.

And then no marvel if the spirit, shown
A saddest sight — the body lost alone 80
Through her officious proffered help, deprived

Of this and that enjoyment Fate contrived, —

Virtue, Good, Beauty, each allowed slip
hence, —

Vain-gloriously were fain, for recompense,
To stem the ruin even yet, protract

The body's term, supply the power it lacked

From her infinity, compel it learn
These qualities were only Time's concern,
And body may, with spirit helping,
barred —

Advance the same, vanquished — obtain 90
reward,

- Reap joy where sorrow was intended grow,
Of Wrong make Right, and turn Ill Good
below.
And the result is, the poor body soon
Sinks under what was meant a wondrous boon,
Leaving its bright accomplice all aghast.
So much was plain then, proper in the
past;
To be complete for, satisfy the whole
Series of spheres — Eternity, his soul Needs must exceed, prove incomplete for,
each 10 Single sphere — Time. But does our knowledge reach
No farther? Is the cloud of hindrance broke
But by the failing of the fleshly yoke,
Its loves and hates, as now when death lets soar
Sordello, self-sufficient as before, Though during the mere space that shall elapse
'Twixt his enthrallment in new bonds
perhaps?
Must life be ever just escaped, which should Have been enjoyed? — nay, might have been and would,
Each purpose ordered right — the soul's
no whit
20 Beyond the body's purpose under it.
Like yonder breadth of watery heaven, a bay,
And that sky-space of water, ray for ray
And star for star, one richness where they
mixed
As this and that wing of an angel, fixed,
Tumultuary splendours folded in
To die — would soul, proportioned thus,
begin
Exciting discontent, or surelier quell
The body if, aspiring, it rebel?
But how so order life? Still brutalise 30 The soul, the sad world's way, with muffled
eyes
To all that was before, all that shall be
After this sphere — all and each quality
Save some sole and immutable Great,
Good
And Beauteous whither fate has loosed its hood
To follow? Never may some soul see All — The Great Before and After, and the Small
Now, yet be saved by this the simplest
lore
And take the single course prescribed
before,
As the king-bird with ages on his plumes
40 Travels to die in his ancestral glooms?
But where descry the Love that shall select That course? Here is a soul whom, to affect,
Nature has plied with all her means, from
trees
And flowers e'en to the Multitude! — and
these,
Decides he save or no? One word to end!
Ah my Sordello, I this once befriend
And speak for you. Of a Power above you
still
Which, utterly incomprehensible,
Is out of rivalry, which thus you can Love, tho' unloving all conceived by man —
What need! And of — none the minutest duct
To that out-nature, nought that would instruct
And so let rivalry begin to live —
But of a Power its representative
Who, being for authority the same,
Communication different, should claim
A course, the first chose but this last revealed —
This Human clear, as that Divine concealed —
What utter need!
What has Sordello found?
Or can his spirit go the mighty round, End where poor Eglamor begun? So,
says
Old fable, the two eagles went two ways
About the world: where, in the midst,
they met,
Though on a shifting waste of sand, men set Jove's temple. Quick, what has Sordello
found?
For they approach — approach — that foot's rebound
Palma? No, Salinguerra though in mail;
They mount, have reached the threshold,
dash the veil
Aside — and you divine who sat there
dead,
Under his foot the badge: still, Palma said,
A triumph lingering in the wide eyes, Wider than some spent swimmer's if he spies
Help from above in his extreme despair,
And, head far back on shoulder thrust, turns there
With short quick passionate cry: as Palma
pressed
In one great kiss, her lips upon his breast,
It beat.
By this, the hermit-bee has stopped
His day's toil at Goito: the new-cropped Dead vine-leaf answers, now 'tis eve, he bit,
Twirled so, and filed all day: the mansion's lit,
God counselled for. As easy guess the
word
That passed betwixt them, and become the third
To the soft small unfrighted bee, as tax

- More years passed, and that sire had dwindled down
 To a mere showy turbulent soldier, grown
 Better through age, his parts still in repute,
 Subtle — how else? — but hardly so astute
 As his contemporaneous friends professed;
 Undoubtedly a brawler: for the rest,
 Known by each neighbour, and allowed for, let Keep his incorrigible ways, nor fret
 Men who would miss their boyhood's bugbear: "trap"
- 10 "The ostrich, suffer our bald osprey flap
 "A battered pinion!" — was the word.
 In fine,
 One flap too much and Venice's marine
 Was meddled with; no overlooking that!
 She captured him in his Ferrara, fat
 And florid at a banquet, more by fraud
 Than force, to speak the truth; there's slender laud Ascribed you for assisting eighty years
 To pull his death on such a man; fate shears
 The life-cord prompt enough whose last fine thread
- 20 You fritter: so, presiding his board-head,
 The old-smite, your assurance all went well
 With Friedrich (as if he were like to tell!)
 In rushed (a plan contrived before) our friends,
 Made some pretence at fighting, some amends
 For the shame done his eighty years — (apart
 The principle, none found it in his heart
 To be much angry with Taurello) — gained
 Their galleys with the prize, and what remained
 But carry him to Venice for a show?
- 30 — Set him, as 'twere, down gently — free to go
 His gait, inspect our square, pretend observe
 The swallows soaring their eternal curve
 'Twixt Theodore and Mark, if citizens
 Gathered importunately, fives and tens,
 To point their children the Magnifico,
 All but a monarch once in firm-land, go
 His gait among them now — "it took, indeed,
 "Fully this Ecelin to supersede
 "That man," remarked the seniors.
 Singular!
- 40 Sordello's inability to bar
 Rivals the stage, that evening, mainly brought About by his strange disbelief that aught
 Was ever to be done, — this thrust the Twain
 Under Taurello's tutelage, — whom, brain
 And heart and hand, he forthwith in one rod
- Indissolubly bound to baffle God
 Who loves the world — and thus allowed the thin
 Grey wizened dwarfish devil Ecelin,
 And massy-muscl'd big-boned Alberic (Mere man, alas!) to put his problem quick
 To demonstration — prove wherever's will
 To do, there's plenty to be done, or ill
 Or good. Anointed, then, to rend and rip —
 Kings of the gag and flesh-hook, screw and whip,
 They plagued the world: a touch of Hildebrand
 (So far from obsolete!) made Lombards band Together, cross their coats as for Christ's cause,
 And saving Milan win the world's applause.
 Ecelin perished: and I think grass grew Never so pleasant as in Valley Rù
 By San Zenon where Alberic in turn Saw his exasperated captors burn
 Seven children and their mother; then, regaled
 So far, tied on to a wild horse, was trailed To death through raunce and bramble-bush. I take God's part and testify that 'mid the brake
 Wild o'er his castle on the pleasant knoll,
 You hear its one tower left, a belfry, toll —
 The earthquake spared it last year, laying flat
 The modern church beneath, — no harm in that!
- Chirrup the contumacious grasshopper,
 Rustles the lizard and the cushats chirre
 Above the ravage: there, at deep of day
 A week since, heard I the old Canon say
 He saw with his own eyes a barrow burst
 And Alberic's huge skeleton unheard Only five years ago. He added, "June's
 "The month for carding off our first cocoons
 "The silkworms fabricate" — a double news,
 Nor he nor I could tell the worthier. 80
 Choose!
 And Naddo gone, all's gone; not Eglamor!
 Believe, I knew the face I waited for,
 A guest my spirit of the golden courts!
 Oh strange to see how, despite ill-reports,
 Disuse, some wear of years, that face retained
 Its joyous look of love! Suns waxed and waned,
 And still my spirit held an upward flight,
 Spiral on spiral, gyres of life and light
 More and more gorgeous — ever that face there
 The last admitted! crossed, too, with some care

As perfect triumph were not sure for all,
But, on a few, enduring damp must fall,
— A transient struggle, haply a painful sense

Of the inferior nature's clinging — whence
Slight starting tears easily wiped away,
Fine jealousies soon stifled in the play
Of irrepressible admiration — not Aspiring, all considered, to their lot
Who ever, just as they prepare ascend Spiral on spiral, wish thee well, impend
Thy frank delight at their exclusive track,
That upturned fervid face and hair put
back!

Is there no more to say? He of the rhymes —

Many a tale, of this retreat betimes,
Was born: Sordello die at once for men?
The Chroniclers of Mantua tired their pen
Telling how Sordello Prince Visconti saved
Mantua, and elsewhere notably behaved —
Who thus, by fortune ordering events,
Passed with posterity, to all intents,
For just the god he never could become.
As Knight, Bard, Gallant, men were never
dumb

In praise of him: while what he should have been,

Could be, and was not — the one step too
mean

For him to take, — we suffer at this day
Because of: Ecelin had pushed away
Its chance ere Dante could arrive and take That step Sordello spurned, for the world's
sake:

He did much — but Sordello's chance was
gone.

Thus, had Sordello dared that step alone,
Apollo had been compassed: 'twas a fit
He wished should go to him, not he to it — As one content to merely be supposed Singing or fighting elsewhere, while he dozed

Really at home — one who was chiefly glad To have achieved the few real deeds he had,

Because that way assured they were not
worth

Doing, so spared from doing them hence-
forth —

A tree that covets fruitage and yet tastes Never itself, itself. Had he embraced

Their cause then, men had plucked Hesperian fruit

And, praising that, just thrown him in to boot

All he was anxious to appear, but scarce
Solicitous to be. A sorry farce

Such life is, after all! Cannot I say He lived for some one better thing? this

way. —

Lo, on a heathy brown and nameless hill
By sparkling Asolo, in mist and chill,

Morning just up, higher and higher runs
A child barefoot and rosy. See! the sun's 50

On the square castle's inner-court's low
wall

Like the chine of some extinct animal Half turned to earth and flowers; and through the haze (Save where some slender patches of grey maize

Are to be overleaped) that boy has crossed
The whole hill-side of dew and powder-

frost

Matting the balm and mountain camomile.
Up and up goes he, singing all the while

Some unintelligible words to beat
The lark, God's poet, swooning at his feet, 60

So worsted is he at "the few fine locks
"Stained like pale honey oozed from top-

most rocks

"Sun-blanced the livelong summer," —
all that's left

Of the Goito lay! And thus bereft, Sleep and forget, Sordello! In effect

He sleeps, the feverish poet — I suspect
Not utterly companionless; but, friends,

Wake up! The ghost's gone, and the story ends

I'd fain hope, sweetly; seeing, peri or ghoul,

That spirits are conjectured fair or foul, 70

Evil or good, judicious authors think,
According as they vanish in a stink

Or in a perfume. Friends, be frank! ye snuff

Civet, I warrant. Really? Like enough!
Merely the savour's rareness; any nose

May ravage with impunity a rose:
Rife a musk-pod and 'twill ache like yours!

I'd tell you that same pungency ensures
An after-gust, but that were overbold.

Who would has heard Sordello's story told. 80

PIPPA PASSES;

A DRAMA.

1841.

[This drama is hinged on the chance appearance of Pippa, a poor child, at work all the year round (save one day) at the silk-mills at Asolo, in Northern Italy, at critical moments in the spiritual life history of the leading characters in the play. Just when their emotions, passions, motives are swinging backwards and forwards Pippa passes by singing some refrain, and her voice determines the actions and fashions the destinies of men and women to whom she was unknown. It is a play of much simplicity, as well as rare charm and beauty.]

INTRODUCTION.

NEW YEAR'S DAY AT ASOLO IN THE TREVISAN.

SCENE. — A large mean airy chamber. A girl, PIPPA, from the Silk-mills, springing out of bed.

DAY!

Faster and more fast,
O'er night's brim, day boils at last:
Boils, pure gold, o'er the cloud-cup's brim
Where spurning and suppressed it lay,
For not a froth-flake touched the rim
Of yonder gap in the solid gray

Of the eastern cloud, an hour away;
But forth one wavelet, then another, curled,
Till the whole sunrise, not to be suppressed,
Rose, reddened, and its seething breast
Flickered in bounds, grew gold, then overflowed the world.

Oh, Day, if I squander a wavelet of thee,
A mite of my twelve hours' treasure,
The least of thy gazes or glances,
(Be they grants thou art bound to or gifts above measure)
One of thy choices or one of thy chances, (Be they tasks God imposed thee or freaks at thy pleasure)
— My Day, if I squander such labour or leisure,
Then shame fall on Asolo, mischief on me!

Thy long blue solemn hours serenely flowing,
Whence earth, we feel, gets steady help and good — Thy fitful sunshine-minutes, coming, going,
As if earth turned from work in gamesome mood —
All shall be mine! But thou must treat me not
As prosperous ones are treated, those who live
At hand here, and enjoy the higher lot,
In readiness to take what thou wilt give,

And free to let alone what thou refusest;
 For, Day, my holiday, if thou ill-usest Me, who am only Pippa, — old-year's sorrow,
 Cast off last night, will come again tomorrow:
 Whereas, if thou prove gentle, I shall borrow
 Sufficient strength of thee for new-year's sorrow.
 All other men and women that this earth
 Belongs to, who all days alike possess,
 Make general plenty cure particular dearth,
 Get more joy one way, if another, less:
 Thou art my single day, God lends to
 heaven
 What were all earth else, with a feel of
 heaven, —
 Sole light that helps me through the year, thy sun's!
 Try now! Take Asolo's Four Happiest
 Ones —
 And let thy morning rain on that superb
 Great haughty Ottima; can rain disturb Her Sebald's homage? All the while thy rain
 Beats fiercest on her shrub-house window-pane,
 He will but press the closer, breathe more warm
 Against her cheek; how should she mind
 the storm?
 And, morning past, if mid-day shed a gloom
 O'er Jules and Phene, — what care bride and groom
 Save for their dear selves? 'Tis their marriage-day;
 And while they leave church and go home
 their way,
 Hand clasping hand, within each breast would be Sunbeams and pleasant weather spite of
 thee.
 Then, for another trial, obscure thy eve
 With mist, — will Luigi and his mother
 grieve —
 The lady and her child, unmatched, forsooth,
 She in her age, as Luigi in his youth,
 For true content? The cheerful town, warm, close
 And safe, the sooner that thou art morose, Receives them. And yet once again, outbreak
 In storm at night on Monsignor, they make Such stir about, — whom they expect from Rome
 To visit Asolo, his brothers' home,
 And say here masses proper to release
 A soul from pain, — what storm dares hurt his peace?
 Calm would he pray, with his own thoughts to ward

Thy thunder off, nor want the angels' 40
 guard.
 But Pippa — just one such mischance would spoil
 Her day that lightens the next twelve-month's toil
 At wearisome silk-winding, coil on coil!
 And here I let time slip for nought!
 Aha, you foolhardy sunbeam, caught
 With a single splash from my ewer!
 You that would mock the best pursuer,
 Was my basin over-deep?
 One splash of water ruins you asleep,
 And up, up, fleet your brilliant bits 50
 Wheeling and counterwheeling,
 Reeling, broken beyond healing:
 Now grow together on the ceiling!
 That will task your wits.
 Whoever it was quenched fire first, hoped to see
 Morsel after morsel flee
 As merrily, as giddily . . .
 Meantime, what lights my sunbeam on,
 Where settles by degrees the radiant cripple?
 Oh, is it surely blown, my martagon? 60
 New-blown and ruddy as St. Agnes' nipple, Plump as the flesh-bunch on some Foul bird's poit!
 Be sure if corals, branching 'neath the ripple
 Of ocean, bud there, — fairies watch un-roll
 Such turban-flowers; I say, such lamps disperse
 Thick red flame through that dusk green universe!
 I am queen of thee, floweret!
 And each fleshy blossom Preserve I not — (safer
 Than leaves that embower it, 70
 Or shells that embosom)
 From weevil and chafer?
 Laugh through my pane then; solicit the bee;
 Gibe him, be sure; and, in midst of thy
 glee,
 Love thy queen, worship me!
 — Worship whom else? For am I not,
 this day,
 Whate'er I please? What shall I please
 to-day?
 My morn, noon, eve and night — how spend my day?
 To-morrow I must be Pippa who winds silk,
 The whole year round, to earn just bread 80
 and milk:
 But, this one day, I have leave to go.
 And play out my fancy's fullest games;
 I may fancy all day — and it shall be so —

• A Lily with purple flowers.

That I taste of the pleasures, am called by the names
Of the Happiest Four in our Asolo!

See! Up the hill-side yonder, through the morning,
Some one shall love me, as the world calls
love:

I am no less than Ottima, take warning!
The gardens, and the great stone house
above,

And other house for shrubs, all glass in
front,
Are mine; where Sebald steals, as he is wont,

To court me, while old Luca yet reposes:
And therefore, till the shrub-house door
uncloses,

I . . . what now? — give abundant cause for prate

About me — Ottima, I mean — of late, Too bold, too confident she'll still face
down

The spitefullest of talkers in our town.
How we talk in the little town below!

But love, love, love — there's better love,
I know!

This foolish love was only day's first offer:
I choose my next love to defy the scoffer:
For do not our Bride and Bridegroom sally

20 Out of Possagno church at noon?

Their house looks over Orcana valley:

Why should not I be the bride as soon

As Ottima? For I saw, beside,

Arrive last night that little bride —

Saw, if you call it seeing her, one flash

Of the pale snow-pure cheek and black bright tresses,

Blacker than all except the black eyelash;
I wonder she contrives those lids no dresses!

— So strict was she, the veil

30 Should cover close her pale

Pure cheeks — a bride to look at and scarce
touch,

Scarce touch, remember, Jules! For are not such

Used to be tended, flower-like, every feature,

As if one's breath would fray the lily of a creature?

A soft and easy life these ladies lead:

Whiteness in us were wonderful indeed.

Oh, save that brow its virgin dimness,

Keep that foot its lady primness,

Let those ankles never swerve

40 From their exquisite reserve,

Yet have to trip along the streets like me,

All but naked to the knee!

How will she ever grant her Jules a bliss

So startling as her real first infant kiss?

Oh, no — not envy, this!

— Not envy, sure! — for if you gave me
Leave to take or to refuse,

In earnest, do you think I'd choose
That sort of new love to enslave me?

Mine should have lapped me round from the beginning;

As little fear of losing it as winning:

Lovers grow cold, men learn to hate their wives,

And only parents' love can last our lives.

At eve the Son and Mother, gentle pair, Commune inside our turret: what prevents

My being Luigi? While that mossy lair
Of lizards through the winter-time is stirred
With each to each imparting sweet intents For this new-year, as brooding bird to
bird —

(For I observe of late, the evening walk
Of Luigi and his mother, always ends
Inside our ruined turret, where they talk, Calmer than lovers, yet more kind than
friends)

— Let me be cared about, kept out of harm,

And schemed for, safe in love as with a charm;

Let me be Luigi! If I only knew
What was my mother's face — my father,
too!

Nay, if you come to that, best love of all
Is God's; then why not have God's love befall

Myself as, in the palace by the Dome, Monsignor? — who to-night will bless the
home

Of his dead brother; and God bless in turn That heart which beats, those eyes which mildly burn

With love for all men! I, to-right at least,
Would be that holy and beloved priest.

Now wait! — even I already seem to share In God's love: what does New-year's hymn declare?

What other meaning do these verses bear?

All service ranks the same with God:

If now, as formerly he trod

Paradise, his presence fills

Our earth, each only as God wills

Can work — God's puppets, best and worst,

Are we; there is no last nor first.

Say not "a small event!" Why "small"?
Costs it more pain that this, ye call

A "great event," should come to pass,

Than that? Untwine me from the mass

Of deeds which make up life, one deed

Power shall fall short in or exceed!

And more of it, and more of it! — oh yes —
I will pass each, and see their happiness,
And envy none — being just as great, no
doubt,

Useful to men, and dear to God, as they!

A pretty thing to care about
So mightily, this single holiday!
But let the sun shine! Wherefore repine?
— With thee to lead me, O Day of mine,
Down the grass path grey with dew,
Under the pine-wood, blind with boughs,
Where the swallow never flew
Nor yet cicala dared carouse —
No, dared carouse! [She enters the street.]

I. — MORNING.

SCENE. — Up the Hill-side, inside the Shrub-house. LUCA's wife, OTTIMA, and her paramour, the German SEBALD.

Sebald [sings].

*Let the watching lids wink!
Day's a-blaze with eyes, think!
Deep into the night, drink!*

Ottima. Night? Such may be your Rhineland nights perhaps;
But this blood-red beam through the shutter's chink
— We call such light, the morning: let us see!
How these tall
Naked geraniums straggle! Push the lattice Behind that frame! — Nay, do I bid you?
— Sebald,
It shakes the dust down on me! Why, of course
The slide-bolt catches. Well, are you content,
Or must I find you something else to spoil?
Miss and be friends, my Sebald! Is't full morning?
Oh, don't speak then!

Sebald. Ay, thus it used to be.
Ever your house was, I remember, shut
Till mid-day; I observed that, as I strolled
In mornings through the vale here; country girls Were noisy, washing garments in the brook,
And drove the slow white oxen up the hills:
But no, your house was mute, would open no eye.
And wisely: you were plotting one thing
there,
Future, another outside. I looked up —
Through white wood shutters, rusty iron bars,
Sent as death, blind in a flood of light.
Ah, I remember! — and the peasants laughed
And said, "The old man sleeps with the young wife."

This house was his, this chair, this window
— his.

Ottima. Ah, the clear morning! I can see St. Mark's;

That black streak is the belfry. Stop:
Vicenza

Should lie . . . there's Padua, plain enough, that blue!

Look o'er my shoulder, follow my finger!
Sebald. Morning?

It seems to me a night with a sun added.
Where's dew, where's freshness? That bruised plant, I bruised

In getting through the lattice yestereve, 40
Droops as it did. See, here's my elbow's mark

I' the dust o' the sill.

Ottima. Oh, shut the lattice, pray!

Sebald. Let me lean out. I cannot scent blood here,

Foul as the morn may be.

There, shut the world out!
How do you feel now, Ottima? There,
curse

The world and all outside! Let us throw
off

This mask: how do you bear yourself?
Let's out

With all of it.

Ottima. Best never speak of it.

Sebald. Best speak again and yet again
of it,

Till words cease to be more than words. 50
"His blood,"

For instance — let those two words mean
"His blood"

And nothing more. Notice, I'll say them
now,

"His blood."

Ottima. Assuredly if I repented

The deed —

Sebald. Repent? Who should repent, or why?

What puts that in your head? Did I once
say

That I repented?

Ottima. No, I said the deed . . .

Sebald. "The deed" and "the event"
— just now it was

"Our passion's fruit" — the devil take such cant!

Say, once and always, Luca was a wittol,
I am his cut-throat, you are . . . 60

Ottima. Here's the wine;

I brought it when we left the house above,
And glasses too — wine of both sorts.

Black? White then?

Sebald. But am not I his cut-throat?
What are you?

Ottima. There trudges on his business from the Duomo

Benet the Capuchin, with his brown hood
And bare feet; always in one place at
church,

Close under the stone wall by the south
entry

I used to take him for a brown cold piece
Of the wall's self, as out of it he rose
To let me pass — at first, I say, I used:
Now, so has that dumb figure fastened on
me,

I rather should account the plastered wall
A piece of him, so chillily does it strike.
This, Sebald?

Sebald. No, the white wine — the white wine!

Well, Ottima, I promised no new year
10 Should rise on us the ancient shameful way; Nor does it rise. Pour on! To your black eyes!

Do you remember last damned New Year's
day?

Ottima. You brought those foreign prints. We looked at them Over the wine and fruit. I had to scheme To get him from the fire. Nothing but saying

His own set wants the proof-mark, roused him up

To hunt them out.

Sebald. 'Faith, he is not alive
To fondle you before my face.

Ottima. Do you Fondle me then! Who means to take your life

20 For that, my Sebald?

Sebald. Hark you, Ottima!
One thing to guard against. We'll not make much

One of the other — that is, not make more
Parade of warmth, childish officious coil,
Than yesterday: as if, sweet, I supposed Proof upon proof were needed now, now
first,

To show I love you — yes, still love you — love you

In spite of Luca and what's come to him — Sure sign we had him ever in our
thoughts,

White sneering old reproachful face and all!

30 We'll even quarrel, love, at times, as if We still could lose each other, were not tied
By this: conceive you?

Ottima. Love!

Sebald. Not tied so sure.
Because though I was wrought upon, have struck

His insolence back into him — am I
So surely yours? — therefore for ever yours?

Ottima. Love, to be wise, (one counsel pays another)

Should we have — months ago, when first we loved,

For instance that May morning we two stole

40 Under the green ascent of sycamores —
If we had come upon a thing like that Suddenly . . .

Sebald. "A thing" there again —
"a thing!"

Ottima. Then, Venus' body, had we come upon

My husband Luca Gaddi's murdered corpse

Within there, at his couch-foot, covered close —

Would you have pored upon it? Why persist

In poring now upon it? For 'tis here
As much as there in the deserted house:

You cannot rid your eyes of it. For me,
Now he is dead I hate him worse: I hate . . .

Dare you stay here? I would go back and —
hold

His two dead hands, and say, "I hate you
worse,

"Luca, than . . ."

Sebald. Off, off — take your hands off mine,

'Tis the hot evening — off! oh, morning
is it?

Ottima. There's one thing must be done; you know what thing.

Come in and help to carry. We may sleep Anywhere in the whole wide house tonight.

Sebald. What would come, think you,
if we let him lie

Just as he is? Let him lie there until The angels take him! He is turned by this

Off from his face beside, as you will see.

Ottima. This dusty pane might serve for looking glass.

Three, four — four grey hairs! Is it so you said

A plait of hair should wave across my neck?
No — this way.

Sebald. Ottima, I would give your neck,
Each splendid shoulder, both those breasts of yours,

That this were undone! Killing! Kill
the world

So Luca lives again! — ay, lives to sputter
His fulsome dotage on you — yes, and feign

Surprise that I return at eve to sup,
When all the morning I was loitering here

Bid me dispatch my business and begone.
I would . . .

Ottima. See!

Sebald. No, I'll finish. Do
you think

I fear to speak the bare truth once for all?
All we have talked of, is, at bottom, fine

To suffer; there's a recompense in guilt;
One must be venturous and fortunate:

What is one young for, else? In age we'll sigh

O'er the wild reckless wicked days flown
over;

Still, we have lived: the vice was in its
place.

But to have eaten Luca's bread, have word

His clothes, have felt his money swell my purse —

Do lovers in romances sin that way?
Why, I was starving when I used to call
And teach you music, starving while you plucked me

These flowers to smell!

Ottima. My poor lost friend!

Sebald. He gave me life, nothing less: what if he did reproach
My perfidy, and threaten, and do more —
Had he no right? What was to wonder at?
He sat by us at table quietly:

Why must you lean across till our cheeks touched?

Could he do less than make pretence to strike?

'Tis not the crime's sake — I'd commit ten crimes

Greater, to have this crime wiped out, undone!

And you — O how feel you? Feel you for me?

Ottima. Well then, I love you better now than ever,

And best (look at me while I speak to you)
Best for the crime; nor do I grieve, in truth,

This mask, this simulated ignorance,
This affectation of simplicity,

Falls off our crime; this naked crime of ours

May not now be looked over: look it down!

Great? let it be great; but the joys it brought,

Pay they or no its price? Come: they or it!

Speak not! The past, would you give up the past

Such as it is, pleasure and crime together?
Give up that noon I owned my love for you?

The garden's silence: even the single bee
Persisting in his toil, suddenly stopped,

And where he hid you only could surmise
By some campanula chalice set a-swing.

Who stammered — "Yes, I love you?"

Sebald. And I drew back; put far back your face with both my hands

Lest you should grow too full of me — your face

So seemed athirst for my whole soul and body!

Ottima. And when I ventured to receive you here,

Made you steal hither in the mornings —

Sebald. When I used to look up 'neath the shrub-house here,

Till the red fire on its glazed windows spread

To a yellow haze?

Ottima. Ah — my sign was, the sun

Inflamed the sere side of yon chestnut-tree 40
Nipped by the first frost.

Sebald. You would always laugh
At my wet boots: I had to stride thro' grass
Over my ankles.

Ottima. Then our crowning night!

Sebald. The July night?

Ottima. The day of it too, Sebald!

When heaven's pillars seemed o'erbowed with heat,

Its black-blue canopy suffered descend Close on us both, to weigh down each to

each,

And smother up all life except our life.

So lay we till the storm came.

Sebald. How it came!

Ottima. Buried in woods we lay, you 50
recollect;

Swift ran the searching tempest overhead;
And ever and anon some bright white shaft

Burned thro' the pine-tree roof, here burned and there,

As if God's messenger thro' the close wood screen

Plunged and replunged his weapon at a venture,

Feeling for guilty thee and me: then broke
The thunder like a whole sea overhead —

Sebald. Yes!

Ottima. — While I stretched myself
upon you, hands

To hands, my mouth to your hot mouth, and shook

All my locks loose, and covered you with 60
them —

You, Sebald, the same you!

Sebald. Slower, Ottima!

Ottima. And as we lay —

Sebald. Less vehemently! Love me!
Forgive me! Take not words, mere words, to heart!

Your breath is worse than wine! Breathe slow, speak slow!

Do not lean on me!

Ottima. Sebald, as we lay,
Rising and falling only with our pants,

Who said, "Let death come now! 'Tis right to die!

"Right to be punished! Nought completes such bliss

"But woe!" Who said that?

Sebald. How did we ever rise?
Wasn't that we slept? Why did it end? 70

Ottima. I felt you
Taper into a point the ruffled ends

Of my loose locks 'twixt both your humid lips.

My hair is fallen now: knot it again!

Sebald. I kiss you now, dear Ottima, now and now!

This way? Will you forgive me — be once more

My great queen?

Ottima. Bind it thrice about my brow;

Crown me your queen, your spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent in sin. Say that!

Sebald. I crown you
My great white queen, my spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent . . .

[From without is heard the voice
of PIPPA, singing—

*The year's at the spring
And day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hill-side's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn:
God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world!*

[PIPPA passes.

Sebald. God's in his heaven! Do you hear that? Who spoke?

You, you spoke!

Ottima. Oh—that little ragged girl!
She must have rested on the step: we give
them

But this one holiday the whole year round.
Did you ever see our silk-mills—their in-
side?

There are ten silk-mills now belong to you.
to She stoops to pick my double heartsease . . . Sh!

She does not hear: call you out louder!

Sebald. Leave me!
Go, get your clothes on—dress those shoulders!

Ottima. Sebald?
Sebald. Wipe off that paint! I hate
you.

Ottima. Miserable!
Sebald. My God, and she is emptied of it now!

Outright now!—how miraculously gone
All of the grace—had she not strange grace once?

Why, the blank cheek hangs listless as it likes,

No purpose holds the features up together,
Only the cloven brow and puckered chin
to Stay in their places: and the very hair.
That seemed to have a sort of life in it,
Drops, a dead web!

Ottima. Speak to me—not of me.
Sebald. That round great full-orbed face, where not an angle

Broke the delicious indolence—all broken!

Ottima. To me—not of me! Ungrateful, perjured cheat!

A coward too: but ingrate's worse than all.
Beggar—my slave—a fawning, cringing
lie!

Leave me! Betray me! I can see your drift!

A lie that walks and eats and drinks?

Sebald. My God!
Those morbid olive faultless shoulder-blades—

I should have known there was no blood
beneath!

Ottima. You hate me then? You hate me then?

Sebald. To think
She would succeed in her absurd attempt,
And fascinate by sinning, show herself
Superior—guilt from its excess superior
To innocence! That little peasant's voice
Has righted all again. Though I be lost,
I know which is the better, never fear,
Of vice or virtue, purity or lust,
Nature or trick! I see what I have done, 40
Entirely now! Oh I am proud to feel Such torments—let the world take credit
thence—

I, having done my deed, pay too its price!
I hate, hate—curse you! God's in his
heaven!

Ottima. —Me!
Me! no, no, Sebald, not yourself—kill
me!

Mine is the whole crime. Do but kill me
—then

Yourself—then—presently—first hear me speak!

I always meant to kill myself—wait, you!
Lean on my breast—not as a breast;
don't love me

The more because you lean on me, my 50
own

Heart's Sebald! There, there, both deaths
presently!

Sebald. My brain is drowned now—quite drowned: all I feel

Is . . . is, at swift-recurring intervals,
A hurry-down within me, as of waters
Loosened to smother up some ghastly pit:
There they go—whirls from a black fiery
sea!

Ottima. Not me—to him, O God, be merciful!

*Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the hill-side to Orcana. Foreign Students of painting and sculpture, from Venice, assembled opposite the house of JULES, a young French
statuary, at Possagno.*

1st Student. Attention! My own post is beneath this window, but the pomegranate clump yonder will hide three or four of you with a little squeezing, and Schramm and his pipe must lie flat in the balcony.
Four, five—who's a defaulter? We want everybody, for Jules must not be suffered to hurt his bride when the jest's found out.

2nd Student. All here! Only our poet's away—never having much meant to be present, moonstrike him! The airs of that fellow, that Giovacchino! He was in violent love with himself, and had a fair prospect of thriving in his suit, so unmolested was it, — when suddenly a woman falls in love with him, too; and out of pure jealousy he takes himself off to Trieste, immortal poem and all: whereto is this prophetic epitaph appended already, as Bluphocks assures me, — “Here a mammoth-poem lies, Fowled to death by butterflies.” His own fault, the simpleton! Instead of cramp couplets, each like a knife in your entrails, he should write, says Bluphocks, both classically and intelligibly. — Asculapius, an Epic. Catalogue of the drugs: Hebe’s plaster — One strip Cools your lip. Phæbus’ emulsion — One bottle Clears your throttle. Mercury’s bolus — One box Cures . . .

3rd Student. Subside, my fine fellow! If the marriage was over by ten o’clock, Jules will certainly be here in a minute with his bride.

2nd Student. Good! — only, so should the poet’s muse have been universally acceptable, says Bluphocks, et canibus nostris . . . and Delia not better known to our literary dogs than the boy Giovacchino!

1st Student. To the point now. Where’s Gottlieb, the new-comer? Oh, — listen, Gottlieb, to what has called down this piece of friendly vengeance on Jules, of which we now assemble to witness the winding-up. We are all agreed, all in a tale, observe, when Jules shall burst out on us in a fury by and by: I am spokesman — the verses that are to undeceive Jules bear my name of Lutwyche — but each professes himself alike insulted by this strutting stone-squarer, who came alone from Paris to Munich, and thence with a crowd of us to Venice and Possagno here, but proceeds in a day or two alone again — oh, alone indubitably! — to Rome and Florence. He, forsooth, take up his portion with these dissolute, brutalised, heartless bunglers! — so he was heard to call us all: now, is Schramm brutalised, I should like to know? Am I heartless?

Gottlieb. Why, somewhat heartless; for, suppose Jules a coxcomb as much as you choose, still, for this mere coxcombry, you will have brushed off — what do folks style it? — the bloom of his life.

Is it too late to alter? These love-letters now, you call his — I can’t laugh at them.

4th Student. Because you never read the sham letters of our inditing which drew forth these.

Gottlieb. His discovery of the truth will be frightful.

4th Student. That’s the joke. But you should have joined us at the beginning:

there’s no doubt he loves the girl — loves a model he might hire by the hour!

Gottlieb. See here! “He has been accused,” he writes, “to have Canova’s women about him, in stone, and the world’s women beside him, in flesh; these 70 “being as much below, as those above, his soul’s aspiration: but now he is to have “the reality.” There you laugh again! I say, you wipe off the very dew of his youth.

1st Student. Schramm! (Take the pipe out of his mouth, somebody!) Will Jules lose the bloom of his youth?

Schramm. Nothing worth keeping is ever lost in this world: look at a blossom — it drops presently, having done its service 80 and lasted its time; but fruits succeed, and where would be the blossom’s place could it continue? As well affirm that your eye is no longer in your body, because its earliest favourite, whatever it may have first loved to look on, is dead and done with — as that any affection is lost to the soul when its first object, whatever happened first to satisfy it, is superseded in due course. Keep but ever looking, whether with the body’s eye 90 or the mind’s, and you will soon find something to look on! Has a man done wondering at women? — there follow men, dead and alive, to wonder at. Has he done wondering at men? — there’s God to wonder at: and the faculty of wonder may be, at the same time, old and tired enough with respect to its first object, and yet young and fresh sufficiently, so far as concerns its novel one. Thus . . . 100

1st Student. Put Schramm’s pipe into his mouth again! There, you see! Well, this Jules . . . a wretched fribble — oh, I watched his disportings at Possagno, the other day! Canova’s gallery — you know: there he marches first resolvedly past great works by the dozen without vouchsafing an eye: all at once he stops full at the Psiche-fanciulla — cannot pass that old acquaintance without a nod of encouragement — “In your new place, beauty? Then behave yourself as well here as at Munich — I see you!” Next he posts himself deliberately before the unfinished Pietà for half an hour without moving, till up he starts of a sudden, and thrusts his very nose into — I say, into — the group; by which gesture you are informed that precisely the sole point he had not fully mastered in Canova’s practice was a certain method of 110 using the drill in the articulation of the knee-joint — and that, likewise, has he mastered at length! Good-bye, therefore, to poor Canova — whose gallery no longer needs detain his successor Jules, the predestinated novel thinker in marble!

5th Student. Tell him about the women: go on to the women!

- 1st Student. Why, on that matter he could never be supercilious enough. How should we be other (he said) than the poor devils you see, with those debasing habits we cherish? He was not to wallow in that mire, at least: he would wait, and love only at the proper time, and meanwhile put up with the Psiche-fanciulla. Now, I happened to hear of a young Greek — real
- 10 Greek girl at Malamocco; a true Islander, do you see, with Alciphron's "hair like sea-moss" — Schramm knows! — white and quiet as an apparition, and fourteen years old at farthest, — a daughter of Natalia, so she swears, — that hag Natalia, who helps us to models at three lire an hour. We selected this girl for the heroine of our jest. So first, Jules received a scented letter — somebody had seen his
- 20 Tydeus at the Academy, and my picture was nothing to it: a profound admirer bade him persevere — would make herself known to him ere long. (Paolina, my little friend of the Venice, transcribes divinely.) And in due time, the mysterious correspondent gave certain hints of her peculiar charms — the pale cheeks, the black hair — whatever, in short, had struck us in our Malamocco model: we retained
- 30 her name, too — Phene, which is, by interpretation, sea-eagle. Now, think of Jules finding himself distinguished from the herd of us by such a creature! In his very first answer he proposed marrying his mistress: and fancy us over these letters, two, three times a day, to receive and dispatch! I concocted the main of it: relations were in the way — secrecy must be observed — in fine, would he wed her on trust, and only
- 40 speak to her when they were indissolubly united? St — st — Here they come!
- 6th Student. Both of them! Heaven's love, speak softly, speak within yourselves!
- 5th Student. Look at the bridegroom! Half his hair in storm and half in calm, — patted down over the left temple, — like a frothy cup one blows on to cool it: and the same old blouse that he murders the
- 50 marble in.
- 2nd Student. Not a rich vest like yours, Hannibal Scratchy! — rich, that your face may the better set it off.
- 6th Student. And the bride! Yes, sure enough, our Phene! Should you have known her in her clothes? How magnificently pale!
- Gottlieb. She does not also take it for earnest, I hope?
- 1st Student. Oh, Natalia's concern, that is! We settle with Natalia.
- 60 6th Student. She does not speak — has evidently let out no word. The only thing is, will she equally remember the rest of her lesson, and repeat correctly all those verses which are to break the secret to Jules?

Gottlieb. How he gazes on her! Pity — pity!

1st Student. They go in: now, silence! You three, — not nearer the window, mind, 70 than that pomegranate: just where the little girl, who a few minutes ago passed us singing, is seated!

II. — NOON.

SCENE. — Over Orcana. The house of JULES, who crosses its threshold with PHENE: she is silent, on which JULES begins —

Do not die, Phene! I am yours now, you are mine now; let fate reach me how she likes,
If you'll not die: so, never die! Sit here — My work-room's single seat. I over-lean This length of hair and lustrous front; they turn
Like an entire flower upward: eyes, lips, last Your chin — no, last your throat turns: 'tis 80 their scent Pulls down my face upon you. Nay, look
ever
This one way till I change, grow you — I could Change into you, beloved!

You by me,
And I by you; this is your hand in mine,
And side by side we sit: all's true. Thank
God!
I have spoken: speak you!

O my life to come!
My Tydeus must be carved that's there in clay;
Yet how be carved, with you about the room?
Where must I place you? When I think that once
This room-full of rough block-work 90 seemed my heaven
Without you! Shall I ever work again,
Get fairly into my old ways again,
Bid each conception stand while, trait by trait,
My hand transfers its lineaments to stone?
Will my mere fancies live near you, their
truth —
The live truth, passing and repassing me,
Sitting beside me?

Now speak!

Only first,
See, all your letters! Was't not well contrived?
Their hiding-place is Psyche's robe; she keeps Your letters next her skin: which drops 100 out foremost?

Ah, — this that swam down like a first moonbeam
Into my world!

Again those eyes complete
Their melancholy survey, sweet and slow,
Of all my room holds; to return and rest
On me, with pity; yet some wonder too:
As if God bade some spirit plague a world,
And this were the one moment of surprise
And sorrow while she took her station, pausing O'er what she sees, finds good, and must destroy!

What gaze you at? Those? Books, I told you of;

Let your first word to me rejoice them, too:
This minion, a Coluthus, writ in red Bistre and azure by Bessarion's scribe —
Read this line . . . no, shame — Homer's be the Greek

First breathed me from the lips of my Greek girl!

This Odyssey in coarse black vivid type With faded yellow blossoms 'twixt page and page,

To mark great places with due gratitude;
"He said, and on Antinous directed
"A bitter shaft" . . . a flower blots out
the rest!

Again upon your search? My statues,
then!

— Ah, do not mind that — better that will
look

When cast in bronze — an Almaign Kaiser,
that,

Swart-green and gold, with truncheon based on hip.

This, rather, turn to! What, unrecognised?

I thought you would have seen that here you sit

As I imagined you, — Hippolyta,
Naked upon her bright Numidian horse.
Recall you this then? "Carve in bold
relief" —

So you commanded — "carve, against I
come,

"A Greek, in Athens, as our fashion was,
"Feasting, bay-filleted and thunder-free,
"Who rises 'neath the lifted myrtle-branch.

"Praise those who slew Hipparchus!
cry the guests,

"While o'er thy head the singer's myrtle waves

"As erst above our champion: stand up,
all!"

See, I have laboured to express your
thought.

Quite round, a cluster of mere hands and
arms,

(Thrust in all senses, all ways, from all sides,

Only consenting at the branch's end

They strain toward) serves for frame to a sole face,

The Praiser's, in the centre: who with eyes
Sightless, so bend they back to light inside
His brain where visionary forms throng up,
Sings, minding not that palpitating arch
Of hands and arms, nor the quick drip of wine

From the drenched leaves o'erhead, nor crowns cast off,

Violet and parsley crowns to trample on — Sings, pausing as the patron-ghosts approve,

Devoutly their unconquerable hymn. 50
But you must say a "well" to that — say
"well!"

Because you gaze — am I fantastic,
sweet?

Gaze like my very life's-stuff, marble — marbly

Even to the silence! Why, before I found
The real flesh Phene, I inured myself

To see, throughout all nature, varied stuff
For better nature's birth by means of art:

With me, each substance tended to one
form

Of beauty — to the human archetype.
On every side occurred suggestive germs 60
Of that — the tree, the flower — or take the fruit, —

Some rosy shape, continuing the peach, Curved beewise o'er its bough; as rosy
limbs,

Depending, nestled in the leaves; and just
From a cleft rose-peach the whole Dryad
sprang.

But of the stuffs one can be master of,
How I divined their capabilities!

From the soft-rinded smoothening facile chalk

That yields your outline to the air's
embrace,

Half-softened by a halo's pearly gloom; 70
Down to the crisp imperious steel, so sure
To cut its one confided thought clean out Of all the world. But marble! — 'neath my tools

More pliable than jelly — as it were Some clear primordial creature dug from depths

In the earth's heart, where itself breeds
itself,

And whence all baser substance may be worked;

Refine it off to air, you may, — condense it Down to the diamond; — is not metal
there,

When o'er the sudden speck my chisel 80
trips?

— Not flesh, as flake off flake I scale,
approach,

Lay bare those bluish veins of blood asleep?
Lurks flame in no strange windings where,

surprised

By the swift implement sent home at once,
Flushes and glowings radiate and hover
About its track?

Phene? what — why is this?
That whitening cheek, those still dilating
eyes!
Ah, you will die — I knew that you would
die!

PHENE begins, on his having long remained silent.

Now the end's coming; to be sure, it must Have ended sometime! Tush, why need
I speak

Their foolish speech? I cannot bring to
mind

One-half of it, beside; and do not care
10 For old Natalia now, nor any of them.
Oh, you — what are you? — if I do not try
To say the words Natalia made me learn,
To please your friends, — it is to keep
myself

Where your voice lifted me, by letting that Proceed: but can it? Even you, perhaps,
Cannot take up, now you have once let fall,
The music's life, and me along with that — No, or you would! We'll stay, then, as we are:

Above the world.

You creature with the eyes!

20 If I could look for ever up to them,
As now you let me, — I believe, all sin,
All memory of wrong done, suffering borne,
Would drop down, low and lower, to the
earth

Whence all that's low comes, and there touch and stay

— Never to overtake the rest of me,
All that, unspotted, reaches up to you, Drawn by those eyes! What rises is
myself,

Not me the shame and suffering; but they
sink,

Are left, I rise above them. Keep me so,
30 Above the world!

But you sink, for your eyes
Are altering — altered! Stay — "I love you, love" . . .

I could prevent it if I understood:
More of your words to me: was't in the tone

Or the words, your power?

Or stay — I will repeat Their speech, if that contents you! Only
change

No more, and I shall find it presently Far back here, in the brain yourself filled
up.

Natalia threatened me that harm should follow

Unless I spoke their lesson to the end,

40 But harm to me, I thought she meant, not
you.

Your friends, — Natalia said they were your friends

And meant you well, — because, I doubted
it,

Observing (what was very strange to see)
On every face, so different in all else,
The same smile girls like me are used to bear,

But never men, men cannot stoop so low;
Yet your friends, speaking of you, used that smile,

That hateful smirk of boundless self-conceit

Which seems to take possession of the
world

And make of God a tame confederate, 50
Purveyor to their appetites . . . you
know!

But still Natalia said they were your
friends,

And they assented though they smiled the
more,

And all came round me, — that thin Englishman

With light lank hair seemed leader of the
rest;

He held a paper — "What we want," said
he,

Ending some explanation to his friends —
"Is something slow, involved and mystical,
"To hold Jules long in doubt, yet take his taste

"And lure him on until, at innermost 60
"Where he seeks sweetness' soul, he may find — this!

"— As in the apple's core, the noisome fly:
"For insects on the rind are seen at once,
"And brushed aside as soon, but this is
found

"Only when on the lips or loathing
tongue."

And so he read what I have got by heart:
I'll speak it, — "Do not die, love! I am
yours."

No — is not that, or like that, part of words Yourself began by speaking? Strange to lose

What cost such pains to learn! Is this 70 more right?

*I am a painter who cannot paint;
In my life, a devil rather than saint;
In my brain, as poor a creature too:
No end to all I cannot do!
Yet do one thing at least I can —
Love a man or hate a man
Supremely: thus my lore began.
Through the Valley of Love I went,
In the loveliest spot to abide,
And just on the verge where I pitched 80
my tent,*

*I found Hate dwelling beside.
(Let the Bridegroom ask what the painter meant,*

Of his Bride, of the peerless Bride!)
And further, I traversed Hate's grove,
In the hatefullest nook to dwell;
But lo, where I flung myself prone,
couched Love
Where the shadow threecfold fell.
(The meaning — those black bride's-eyes above,
Not a painter's lip should tell!)

"And here," said he, "Jules probably will ask,

"You have black eyes, Love, — you are, sure enough,

"My peerless bride, — then do you tell indeed

"What needs some explanation! What means this?"

— And I am to go on, without a word —

So, I grew wise in Love and Hate,
From simple that I was of late.
Once, when I loved, I would entace Breast, eyelids, hands, feet, form and
face

Of her I loved, in one embrace —
As if by mere love I could love immensely!

Once, when I hated, I would plunge
My sword, and wipe with the first lunge

My Joe's whole life out like a sponge —
As if by mere hate I could hate intensely!

But now I am wiser, know better the fashion

How passion seeks aid from its opposite passion:

And if I see cause to love more, hate
more

Than ever man loved, ever hated
before —

And seek in the Valley of Love,
The nest, or the nook in Hate's Grove,
Where my soul may surely reach
The essence, nought less, of each,
The Heat of all Hates, the Love
Of all Loves, in the Valley or Grove, —
I find them the very warders
Each of the other's borders.

When I Love most, Love is disguised
In Hate; and when Hate is surprised
In Love, then I hate most: ask How Love smiles through Hate's iron casque,

Hate grins through Love's rosebraided mask, —

And how, having hated thee,
I sought long and painfully
To reach thy heart, nor prick
The skin but pierce to the quick — Ask this, my Jules, and be answered straight

By thy bride — how the painter
Lutwyche can hate!

JULES interposes.

Lutwyche! Who else? But all of them, no doubt,

Hated me: they at Venice — presently Their turn, however! You I shall not meet:

If I dreamed, saying this would wake me.

Keep
 What's here, the gold — we cannot meet so again,

Consider! and the money was but meant For two years' travel, which is over now, All chance or hope or care or need of it.

This — and what comes from selling these, my casts

And books and medals, except . . . let them go

Together, so the produce keeps you safe Out of Natalia's clutches! If by chance (For all's chance here) I should survive the gang

At Venice, root out all fifteen of them, We might meet somewhere, since the world 60 is wide.

[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —

Give her but a least excuse to love me!
When — where —

How — can this arm establish her above me,

If fortune fixed her as my lady there,
There already, to externally reprove
me?

("Hist!" — said Kate the Queen;
 But "Oh!" — cried the maiden,
 binding her tresses,

"'Tis only a page that carols unseen,
 "Crumbling your hounds their messes!")

Is she wronged? — To the rescue of 70
her honour,

My heart!
Is she poor? — What costs it to be-styled a donor?

Merely an earth to cleave, a sea to part.
But that fortune should have thrust all this upon her!

("Nay, list!" — bade Kate the Queen;

And still cried the maiden, binding her tresses,

"'Tis only a page that carols unseen
 "Fitting your hawks their jesses!")

[PIPPA passes

JULES resumes.

What name was that the little girl sang forth?

Kate? The Cornaro, doubtless, who re- 80 nounced

Crown me your queen, your spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent in sin. Say that!
Sebald. I crown you
My great white queen, my spirit's arbitress,
Magnificent . . .

*[From without is heard the voice
of PIPPA, singing —*

*The year's at the spring
And day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hill-side's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn:
God's in his heaven —
All's right with the world!*

[PIPPA passes.

Sebald. God's in his heaven! Do you hear that? Who spoke?

You, you spoke!

Ottima. Oh — that little ragged girl! She must have rested on the step: we give them

But this one holiday the whole year round. Did you ever see our silk-mills — their inside?

There are ten silk-mills now belong to you.
to She stoops to pick my double heartsease . . . Sh!

She does not hear: call you out louder!

Sebald. Leave me!
Go, get your clothes on — dress those shoulders!

Ottima. Sebald?

Sebald. Wipe off that paint! I hate you.

Ottima. Miserable!

Sebald. My God, and she is emptied of it now!

Outright now! — how miraculously gone All of the grace — had she not strange grace once?

Why, the blank cheek hangs listless as it likes,

No purpose holds the features up together,
Only the cloven brow and puckered chin
to Stay in their places: and the very hair
That seemed to have a sort of life in it,
Drops, a dead web!

Ottima. Speak to me — not of me.

Sebald. That round great full-orbed face, where not an angle Broke the delicious indolence — all broken!

Ottima. To me — not of me! Ungrateful, perjured cheat!

A coward too: but ingrate's worse than all.
Beggar — my slave — a fawning, cringing lie!

Leave me! Betray me! I can see your drift!

A lie that walks and eats and drinks?

Sebald. My God!
Those morbid olive faultless shoulder-blades —

I should have known there was no blood beneath!

Ottima. You hate me then? You hate me then?

Sebald. To think
She would succeed in her absurd attempt,
And fascinate by sinning, show herself
Superior — guilt from its excess superior
To innocence! That little peasant's voice
Has righted all again. Though I be lost,
I know which is the better, never fear,
Of vice or virtue, purity or lust,
Nature or trick! I see what I have done,
Entirely now! Oh I am proud to feel
Such torments — let the world take credit
thence —

I, having done my deed, pay too its price!
I hate, hate — curse you! God's in his heaven!

Ottima. — Me!

Me! no, no, Sebald, not yourself — kill me!

Mine is the whole crime. Do but kill me — then

Yourself — then — presently — first hear me speak!

I always meant to kill myself — wait, you!
Lean on my breast — not as a breast;
don't love me

The more because you lean on me, my own

Heart's Sebald! There, there, both deaths presently!

Sebald. My brain is drowned now — quite drowned: all I feel

Is . . . is, at swift-recurring intervals,
A hurry-down within me, as of waters
Loosened to smother up some ghastly pit:
There they go — whirls from a black fiery sea!

Ottima. Not me — to him, O God, be merciful!

*Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the hill-side to Orcana. Foreign Students of painting and sculpture, from Venice, assembled opposite
statuary, at Possagno.*

1st Student. Attention! My own post is beneath this window, but the pomegranate clump yonder will hide three or four of you with a little squeezing, and Schramm and his pipe must lie flat in the balcony. Four, five — who's a defaulter? We want everybody, for Jules must not be suffered to hurt his bride when the jest's found out.

2nd Student. All here! Only our poet's away — never having much meant to be present, moonstrike him! The airs of that Pur-cha-ser and Ex-chan-ger of — Stolen Goods! So, talk to me of the religion of a bishop! I have renounced all bishops save Bishop Beveridge — mean to live so — and die — As some Greek dog-sage, dead and merry, Helward bound in Charon's wherry, With food for both worlds, under and upper, Lupine-seed and Hecate's supper, And never an obolus . . . (Though thanks to you, or this Intendant through you, or this Bishop through his Intendant — I possess a burning pocketful of swanzigers) . . . To pay the Stygian Ferry!

1st Policeman. There is the girl, then; go and deserve them the moment you have pointed out to us Signor Luigi and his mother. [To the rest.] I have been noticing a house yonder, this long while: not a shutter unclosed since morning!

2nd Policeman. Old Luca Gaddi's, that owns the silk-mills here: he dozes by the hour, wakes up, sighs deeply, says he should like to be Prince Metternich, and then dozes again, after having bidden young Sebald, the foreigner, set his wife to playing draughts. Never molest such a household, they mean well.

Bluphocks. Only, cannot you tell me something of this little Pippa, I must have to do with? One could make something of that name. Pippa — that is, short for Felippa — rhyming to Panurge consults Hertrippa — Believest thou, King Agrippa? Something might be done with that name.

2nd Policeman. Put into rhyme that your head and a ripe musk-melon would not be dear at half a swanziger! Leave this fooling, and look out; the afternoon's over or nearly so.

3rd Policeman. Where in this passport of Signor Luigi does our Principal instruct you to watch him so narrowly? There? What's there beside a simple signature? (That English fool's busy watching.)

2nd Policeman. Flourish all round — "Put all possible obstacles in his way;" oblong dot at the end — "Detain him till further advices reach you;" scratch at bottom — "Send him back on pretence of some informality in the above;" ink-spirt on right-hand side (which is the case here) — "Arrest him at once." Why and wherefore, I don't concern myself, but my instructions amount to this: if Signor Luigi leaves home to-night for Vienna — well and good, the passport deposed with us for our visa is really for his own use, they have misinformed the Office, and he means well; but let him stay over to-night — there has been the pretence we suspect, the accounts of his corresponding and holding intelligence with the Carbonari are correct, we arrest him at once, to-morrow comes Venice, and presently Spielberg. Bluphocks makes the signal, sure enough! That is he, entering the turret with his mother, no doubt.

III. — EVENING.

SCENE. — Inside the Turret on the Hill above Asolo. LUIGI and his Mother entering.

Mother. If there blew wind, you'd hear 70 a long sigh, easing

The utmost heaviness of music's heart.

Luigi. Here in the archway?

Mother. Oh no, no — in farther,
Where the echo is made, on the ridge.

Luigi. Here surely, then.
How plain the tap of my neel as I leaped
up!

Hark — "Lucius Junius!" The very ghost of a voice

Whose body is caught and kept by . . .
what are those?

Mere withered wallflowers, waving over-
head?

They seem an elvish group with thin bleached hair

That lean out of their topmost fortress. —
look

And listen, mountain men, to what we say, 80
Hand under chin of each grave earthy face.
Up and show faces all of you! — "All of
you!"

That's the king dwarf with the scarlet comb; old Franz,

Come down and meet your fate? Hark —
"Meet your fate!"

Mother. Let him not meet it, my Luigi — do not

Go to his City! Putting crime aside,
Half of these ills of Italy are feigned:

Your Pellicos and writers for effect,
Write for effect.

Luigi. Hush! Say A. writes, and B.

Mother. These A.s and B.s write for 90 effect, I say.

Then, evil is in its nature loud, while good
Is silent; you hear each petty injury,
None of his virtues; he is old beside,
Quiet and kind, and densely stupid. Why Do A. and B. not kill him themselves?

Luigi. They teach
Others to kill him — me — and, if I fail, Others to succeed; now, if A. tried and failed,

I could not teach that: mine's the lesser
task.

Mother. They visit night by night . . .

Mother. — You, Luigi?

Ah, will you let me tell you what you are? 100

- Luigi.* Why not? Oh, the one thing you fear to hint,
You may assure yourself I say and say Ever to myself! At times — nay, even as
now
We sit — I think my mind is touched,
suspect
All is not sound: but is not knowing that,
What constitutes one sane or otherwise?
I know I am thus — so, all is right again.
I laugh at myself as through the town I walk,
And see men merry as if no Italy
10 Were suffering; then I ponder — “I am rich, “Young, healthy; why should this fact trouble me,
“More than it troubles these?” But it does trouble.
No, trouble’s a bad word: for as I walk There’s springing and melody and giddi-
ness,
And old quaint turns and passages of my
youth,
Dreams long forgotten, little in themselves,
Return to me — whatever may amuse me:
And earth seems in a truce with me, and
heaven
Accords with me, all things suspend their strife,
20 The very cicala laughs “There goes he,
and there!
“Feast him, the time is short; he is on his
way
“For the world’s sake: feast him this once, our friend!”
And in return for all this, I can trip Cheerfully up the scaffold-steps. I go
This evening, mother!
Mother. But mistrust yourself — Mistrust the judgment you pronounce on
him!
Luigi. Oh, there I feel — am sure that I am right!
Mother. Mistrust your judgment then,
of the mere means
To this wild enterprise. Say, you are
right, —
30 How should one in your state e’er bring to pass
What would require a cool head, a cold
heart,
And a calm hand? You never will escape.
Luigi. Escape? To even wish that, would spoil all.
The dying is best part of it. Too much
Have I enjoyed these fifteen years of mine,
To leave myself excuse for longer life:
Was not life pressed down, running o’er with joy,
That I might finish with it ere my fellows
Who, sparerlier feasted, make a longer stay?
40 I was put at the board-head, helped to all
At first; I rise up happy and content.
- God must be glad one loves his world so
much.
I can give news of earth to all the dead
Who ask me: — last year’s sunsets, and great stars
Which had a right to come first and see ebb
The crimson wave that drifts the sun
away —
Those crescent moons with notched and burning rims
That strengthened into sharp fire, and there stood,
Impatient of the azure — and that day
In March, a double rainbow stopped the storm — May’s warm slow yellow moonlit summer
nights —
Gone are they, but I have them in my soul!
Mother. (He will not go!)
Luigi. You smile at me?
’Tis true, —
Voluptuousness, grotesqueness, ghastliness,
Environ my devotedness as quaintly
As round about some antique altar wreath
The rose festoons, goats’ horns, and oxen’s skulls.
Mother. See now: you reach the city, you must cross
His threshold — how?
Luigi. Oh, that’s if we conspired!
Then would come pains in plenty, as you guess —
But guess not how the qualities most fit
For such an office, qualities I have,
Would little stead me, otherwise employed,
Yet prove of rarest merit only here.
Every one knows for what his excellence
Will serve, but no one ever will consider For what his worst defect might serve: and
yet
Have you not seen me range our coppice yonder
In search of a distorted ash? — I find
The wry spoilt branch a natural perfect bow.
Fancy the thrice-sage, thrice-precautioned
man
Arriving at the palace on my errand!
No, no! I have a handsome dress packed
up —
White satin here, to set off my black hair;
In I shall march — for you may watch your life out
Behind thick walls, make friends there to betray you;
More than one man spoils everything.
March straight —
Only, no clumsy knife to fumble for.
Take the great gate and walk (not saunter)
on Thro’ guards and guards — I have rehearsed it all
Inside the turret here a hundred times.

Don't ask the way of whom you meet, observe!
But where they cluster thickest is the door
Of doors; they'll let you pass — they'll never blab
Each to the other, he knows not the favourite,
Whence he is bound and what's his business now.
Walk in — straight up to him; you have no knife:
Be prompt, how should he scream? Then,
out with you!
Italy, Italy, my Italy!
You're free, you're free! Oh mother, I could dream
o They got about me — Andrea from his exile,
Pier from his dungeon, Gualtier from his grave!
Mother. Well, you shall go. Yet seems this patriotism
The easiest virtue for a selfish man
To acquire: he loves himself — and next,
the world —
If he must love beyond, — but nought
between:
As a short-sighted man sees nought mid-
way
His body and the sun above. But you Are my adored Luigi, ever obedient To my least wish, and running o'er with
love:
o I could not call you cruel or unkind.
Once more, your ground for killing him! —
then go!
Luigi. Now do you try me, or make sport of me?
How first the Austrians got these provinces . . .
(If that is all, I'll satisfy you soon) — Never by conquest but by cunning, for That treaty whereby . . .
Mother. Well?
Luigi. (Sure, he's arrived,
The tell-tale cuckoo: spring's his confidant,
And he lets out her April purposes!)
Or . . . better go at once to modern time, o He has . . . they have . . . in fact, I understand
But can't restate the matter; that's my boast:
Others could reason it out to you, and
prove
Things they have made me feel.
Mother. Why go to-night?
Morn's for adventure. Jupiter is now
A morning-star. I cannot hear you, Luigi!
Luigi. "I am the bright and morningstar," saith God —
And, "to such an one I give the morning-
star."

The gift of the morning-star! Have I God's gift
Of the morning-star?
Mother. Chiara will love to see
That Jupiter an evening-star next June. 40 Luigi. True, mother. Well for those who live through June!
Great noontides, thunder-storms, all glaring pomps
That triumph at the heels of June the god
Leading his revel through our leafy world.
Yes, Chiara will be here.
Mother. In June: remember, Yourself appointed that month for her coming.
Luigi. Was that low noise the echo?
Mother. The night-wind.
She must be grown — with her blue eyes upturned
As if life were one long and sweet surprise:
In June she comes. 50
Luigi. We were to see together
The Titian at Treviso. There, again!
[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —
*A king lived long ago,
In the morning of the world,
When earth was nigher heaven than
now.
And the king's locks curled,
Disparting o'er a forehead full
As the milk-white space 'twixt horn and horn
Of some sacrificial bull —
Only calm as a babe new-born:
For he was got to a sleepy mood, 60
So safe from all decrepitude,
Age with its bane, so sure gone by,
(The gods so loved him while he dreamed)
That, having lived thus long, there seemed
No need the king should ever die.
Luigi. No need that sort of king should ever die!
*Among the rocks his city was:
Before his palace, in the sun,
He sat to see his people pass,
And judge them every one 70
From its threshold of smooth stone.
They haled him many a valley-thief
Caught in the sheep-pens, robber-chief Swarthy and shameless, beggar-cheat,
Spy-prowler, or rough pirate found
On the sea-sand left aground;
And sometimes hung about his feet,
With bleeding lip and burning cheek,
A woman, bitterest wrong to speak
Of one with sullen thickset brows: 80
And sometimes from the prison-house
The angry priests a pale wretch brought,

Who through some chink had pushed and pressed

*On knees and elbows, belly and breast, Worm-like into the temple, — caught
He was by the very god,
Who ever in the darkness strode
Backward and forward, keeping watch O'er his brazen bowls, such rogues to catch!*

*These, all and every one,
The king judged, sitting in the sun.*

10 Luigi. That king should still judge sitting in the sun!

*His councillors, on left and right,
Looked anxious up, — but no surprise
Disturbed the king's old smiling eyes
Where the very blue had turned to white.
'Tis said, a Python scared one day
The breathless city, till he came,
With forked tongue and eyes on flame,
Where the old king sat to judge away;
But when he saw the sweepy hair*

20 *Girl with a crown of berries rare
Which the god will hardly give to wear
To the maiden who singeth, dancing
bare*

*In the altar-smoke by the pine-torch
lights,*

*At his wondrous forest rites, —
Seeing this, he did not dare
Approach that threshold in the sun,
Assault the old king smiling there.
Such grace had kings when the world began!* [PIPPA passes.

Luigi. And such grace have they, now that the world ends!

30 *The Python at the city, on the throne,
And brave men, God would crown for slaying him,*

*Lurk in bye-corners lest they fall his prey.
Are crowns yet to be won in this late time,
Which weakness makes me hesitate to
reach?*

*'Tis God's voice calls: how could I stay?
Farewell!*

Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the Turret to the Bishop's Brother's House, close to the Duomo S. Maria. Poor Girls sitting on the steps.

*1st Girl. There goes a swallow to Venice
— the stout seafarer!*

Seeing those birds fly, makes one wish for wings.

Let us all wish; you wish first!

2nd Girl. I? This sunset

To finish.

3rd Girl. That old — somebody I know,

40 Greyer and older than my grandfather,

To give me the same treat he gave last week —

Feeding me on his knee with fig-peckers, Lampreys and red Breganze-wine, and mumbling

*The while some folly about how well I fare,
Let sit and eat my supper quietly:*

Since had he not himself been late this morning

Detained at — never mind where, — had he not . . .

"Eh, baggage, had I not!" —

2nd Girl. How she can lie!

3rd Girl. Look there — by the nails!

2nd Girl. What makes your fingers red!

3rd Girl. Dipping them into wine to write bad words with

On the bright table: how he laughed!

1st Girl. My turn.

Spring's come and summer's coming. I would wear

*A long loose gown, down to the feet and
hands,*

*With plaits here, close about the throat,
all day;*

And all night lie, the cool long nights, in bed;

And have new milk to drink, apples to eat, Deuzans and junetings, leather-coats . . .

ah, I should say,

This is away in the fields — miles!

3rd Girl. Say at once

*You'd be at home: she'd always be at
home!*

Now comes the story of the farm among The cherry orchards, and how April snowed

*White blossoms on her as she ran. Why,
fool,*

They've rubbed the chalk-mark out, how tall you were,

Twisted your starling's neck, broken his cage,

Made a dung-hill of your garden!

1st Girl.

They, destroy

*My garden since I left them? well —
perhaps!*

*I would have done so: so I hope they have!
A fig-tree curled out of our cottage wall;*

*They called it mine, I have forgotten why,
It must have been there long ere I was
born:*

Cric — cric — I think I hear the wasps o'erhead

*Pricking the papers strung to flutter there
And keep off birds in fruit-time — coarse*

long papers,

And the wasps eat them, prick them through and through.

3rd Girl. How her mouth twitches!

Where was I? — before

She broke in with her wishes and long gowns

And wasps — would I be such a fool! —
Oh, here!

This is my way: I answer every one Who asks me why I make so much of
him —

(If you say, "you love him" — straight "he'll not be gulled!")

"He that seduced me when I was a girl
"Thus high — had eyes like yours, or hair like yours,

"Brown, red, white," — as the case may be: that pleases!

See how that beetle burnishes in the path!
There sparkles he along the dust: and,
there —

Your journey to that maize-tuft spoiled at least!

1st Girl. When I was young, they said if you killed one

Of those sunshiny beetles, that his friend
Up there, would shine no more that day nor next.

2nd Girl. When you were young? Nor are you young, that's true.

How your plump arms, that were, have dropped away!

Why, I can span them. Cecco beats you
still?

No matter, so you keep your curious hair.
I wish they'd find a way to dye our hair
Your colour — any lighter tint, indeed,

Than black: the men say they are sick of black,

Black eyes, black hair!

4th Girl. Sick of yours, like enough.

Do you pretend you ever tasted lampreys
And ortolans? Giovita, of the palace, Engaged (but there's no trusting him) to slice me

Polenta with a knife that had cut up
An ortolan.

2nd Girl. Why, there! Is not that Pippa

We are to talk to, under the window, —
quick, —

Where the lights are?

1st Girl. That she? No, or she would sing,

For the Intendant said . . .

3rd Girl. Oh, you sing first!

Then, if she listens and comes close . . .
I'll tell you, —

Sing that song the young English noble
made,

Who took you for the purest of the pure,
And meant to leave the world for you — what fun!

2nd Girl [sings].

You'll love me yet! — and I can tarry

Your love's protracted growing:

June reared that bunch of flowers you carry,

From seeds of April's sowing.

I plant a heartfelt now: some seed

At least is sure to strike,

And yield — what you'll not pluck in- 40
deed,

Not love, but, may be, like.

You'll look at least on love's remains,

A grave's one violet:

Your look? — that pays a thousand pains.

What's death? You'll love me yet!

3rd Girl [to PIPPA who approaches]. Oh, you may come closer — we shall not eat you! Why, you seem the very person that the great rich handsome Englishman has fallen so violently in love with. I'll tell 50 you all about it.

IV. — NIGHT.

SCENE. — Inside the Palace by the Duomo.
MONSIGNOR, dismissing his Attendants.

Monsignor. Thanks, friends, many thanks! I chiefly desire life now, that I may recompense every one of you. Most I know something of already. What, a repat prepared? Benedicto benedicatur
. . . ugh, ugh! Where was I? Oh, as you were remarking, Ugo, the weather is mild, very unlike winter-weather: but I am a Sicilian, you know, and shiver in your 60 Julys here. To be sure, when 'twas full summer at Messina, as we priests used to cross in procession the great square on Assumption Day, you might see our thickest yellow tapers twist suddenly in two, each like a falling star, or sink down on themselves in a gore of wax. But go, my friends, but go! [To the Intendant.] Not you, Ugo! [The others leave the apartment.] I have long wanted to converse 70 with you, Ugo.

Intendant. Uguccio —

Monsignor. . . . 'guccio Stefani, man! of Ascoli, Fermo and Fossombruno; — what I do need instructing about, are these accounts of your administration of my poor brother's affairs. Ugh! I shall never get through a third part of your accounts:
take some of these dainties before we attempt it, however. Are you bashful 84 to that degree? For me, a crust and water suffice.

Intendant. Do you choose this especial night to question me?

Monsignor. This night, Ugo. You have managed my late brother's affairs since the death of our elder brother:
fourteen years and a month, all but three days. On the Third of December, I find
him . . .

Intendant. If you have so intimate an acquaintance with your brother's affairs, you will be tender of turning so far back: they will hardly bear looking into, so far back.

Monsignor. Ay, ay, ugh, ugh, — nothing but disappointments here below! I remark a considerable payment made to yourself on this Third of December. Talk 10 of disappointments! There was a young fellow here, Jules, a foreign sculptor I did my utmost to advance, that the Church might be a gainer by us both: he was going on hopefully enough, and of a sudden he notifies to me some marvellous change that has happened in his notions of Art. Here's his letter, "He never had a clearly conceived Ideal within his brain till to-day. Yet since his hand could manage a 10 chisel, he has practised expressing other men's Ideals; and, in the very perfection he has attained to, he foresees an ultimate failure: his unconscious hand will pursue its prescribed course of old years, and will reproduce with a fatal expertness the ancient types, let the novel one appear never so palpably to his spirit. There is but one method of escape: confiding the virgin type to as chaste a hand, he will turn 30 painter instead of sculptor, and paint, not carve, its characteristics," — strike out, I dare say, a school like Correggio: how think you, Ugo?

Intendant. Is Correggio a painter?

Monsignor. Foolish Jules! and yet, after all, why foolish? He may — probably will — fail egregiously; but if there should arise a new painter, will it not be in some such way, by a poet now, or a 40 musician (spirits who have conceived and perfected an Ideal through some other channel), transferring it to this, and escaping our conventional roads by pure ignorance of them; eh, Ugo? If you have no appetite, talk at least, Ugo!

Intendant. Sir, I can submit no longer to this course of yours. First, you select the group of which I formed one, — next 50 you thin it gradually, — always retaining me with your smile, — and so do you proceed till you have fairly got me alone with you between four stone walls. And now then? Let this farce, this chatter, end now: what is it you want with me?

Monsignor. Ugo!

Intendant. From the instant you arrived, I felt your smile on me as you questioned me about this and the other article in those papers — why your brother should 60 have given me this villa, that podere, and your nod at the end meant, — what?

Monsignor. Possibly that I wished for no loud talk here. If once you set me coughing, Ugo! —

Intendant. I have your brother's hand and seal to all I possess: now ask me what for! what service I did him — ask me!

Monsignor. I would better not: I should rip up old disgraces, let out my poor brother's weaknesses. By the way, Maffeo 70 of Forli (which, I forgot to observe, is your true name), was the interdict ever taken off you, for robbing that church at Cesena?

Intendant. No, nor needs be: for when I murdered your brother's friend, Pasquale, for him . . .

Monsignor. Ah, he employed you in that business, did he? Well, I must let you keep, as you say, this villa and that podere, for fear the world should find out 80 my relations were of so indifferent a stamp? Maffeo, my family is the oldest in Messina, and century after century have my progenitors gone on polluting themselves with every wickedness under heaven: my own father . . . rest his soul! — I have, I know, a chapel to support that it may rest: my dear two dead brothers were, — what you know tolerably well; I, the youngest, might have rivalled 90 them in vice, if not in wealth: but from my boyhood I came out from among them, and so am not partaker of their plagues. My glory springs from another source; or if from this, by contrast only, — for I, the bishop, am the brother of your employers, Ugo. I hope to repair some of their wrong, however; so far as my brother's ill-gotten treasure reverts to me, I can stop the consequences of his crime: and not 10 one soldo shall escape me. Maffeo, the sword we quiet men spurn away, you shrewd knaves pick up and commit murders with; what opportunities the virtuous forego, the villainous seize. Because, to pleasure myself apart from other considerations, my food would be millet-cake, my dress sackcloth, and my couch straw, — am I therefore to let you, the 110 offscouring of the earth, seduce the poor and ignorant by appropriating a pomp these will be sure to think lessens the abominations so unaccountably and exclusively associated with it? Must I let villas and podere go to you, a murderer and thief, that you may beget by means of them other murderers and thieves? No — if my cough would but allow me to speak!

Intendant. What am I to expect? You are going to punish me? 12

Monsignor. — Must punish you, Maffeo. I cannot afford to cast away a chance. I have whole centuries of sin to redeem, and only a month or two of life to do it in. How should I dare to say . . .

Intendant. "Forgive us our trespasses?"

Monsignor. My friend, it is because I avow myself a very worm, sinful beyond measure, that I reject a line of conduct you would applaud perhaps. Shall I proceed, as it were, a-pardoning? — I? — who have no symptom of reason to assume that aught less than my strenuous efforts will keep myself out of mortal sin, much less keep others out. No: I do trespass, but will not double that by allowing you to trespass.

Intendant. And suppose the villas are not your brother's to give, nor yours to take? Oh, you are hasty enough just now!

Monsignor. 1, 2 — No. 3! — ay, can you read the substance of a letter, No. 3, I have received from Rome? It is precisely on the ground there mentioned, of the suspicion I have that a certain child of my late elder brother, who would have succeeded to his estates, was murdered in infancy by you, Maffeo, at the instigation of my late younger brother — that the Pontiff enjoins on me not merely the bringing that Maffeo to condign punishment, but the taking all pains, as guardian of the infant's heritage for the Church, to recover it parcel by parcel, howsoever, whensoever, and wheresoever. While you are now gnawing those fingers, the police are engaged in sealing up your papers, Maffeo, and the mere raising my voice brings my people from the next room to dispose of yourself. But I want you to confess quietly, and save me raising my voice. Why, man, do I not know the old story? The heir between the succeeding heir, and this heir's ruffianly instrument, and their complot's effect, and the life of fear and bribes and ominous smiling silence? Did you throttle or stab my brother's infant? Come now!

Intendant. So old a story, and tell it no better? When did such an instrument ever produce such an effect? Either the child smiles in his face; or, most likely, he is not fool enough to put himself in the employer's power so thoroughly: the child is always ready to produce — as you say — howsoever, wheresoever, and whensoever.

Monsignor. Liar!

Intendant. Strike me? Ah, so might a father chastise! I shall sleep soundly to-night at least, though the gallows await me to-morrow; for what a life did I lead! Carlo of Cesena reminds me of his convivance, every time I pay his annuity; which happens commonly thrice a year. If I remonstrate, he will confess all to the good bishop — you!

Monsignor. I see through the trick, caitiff! I would you spoke truth for once. All shall be sifted, however — seven times sifted.

Intendant. And how my absurd riches encumbered me! I dared not lay claim to above half my possessions. Let me but once unbosom myself, glorify Heaven, and die!

Sir, you are no brutal dastardly idiot like your brother I frightened to death: let us understand one another. Sir, I will make away with her for you — the girl — here close at hand; not the stupid obvious kind of killing; do not speak — know nothing of her nor of me! I see her every day — saw her this morning: of course there is to be no killing; but at Rome the courtesans perish off every three years, and I can entice her thither — have indeed begun operations already. There's a certain lusty blue-eyed florid-complexioned English knave, I and the Police employ occasionally. You assent, I perceive — no, that's not it — assent I do not say — but you will let me convert my present havings and holdings into cash, and give me time to cross the Alps? 'Tis but a little black-eyed pretty singing Felippa, gay silk-winding girl. I have kept her out of harm's way up to this present; for I always intended to make your life a plague for you with her. 'Tis as well settled once and for ever. Some women I have procured will pass Bluphocks, my handsome scoundrel, off for somebody; and once Pippa entangled! — you conceive? Through her singing? Is it a bargain?

[From without is heard the voice of PIPPA, singing —

*Overhead the tree-tops meet,
Flowers and grass spring 'neath one's feet;*

There was nought above me, nought below;

*My childhood had not learned to know:
For, what are the voices of birds
— Ay, and of beasts, — but words, our words,*

*Only so much more sweet?
The knowledge of that with my life begun.*

*But I had so near made out the sun,
And counted your stars, the seven and one,*

*Like the fingers of my hand:
Nay, I could all but understand
Wherefore through heaven the white moon ranges;*

And just when out of her soft fifty changes

No unfamiliar face might overlook me —

Suddenly God took me.

[PIPPA passes.]

Monsignor [springing up]. My people — one and all — all — within there! Gag this villain — tie him hand and foot! He dares . . . I know not half he dares — but remove him — quick! Miserere mei, Domine! Quick, I say!

SCENE. — PIPPA'S chamber again. She enters it.

The bee with his comb,
The mouse at her dray,
The grub in his tomb,
Wile winter away;
But the fire-fly and hedge-shrew and lob-worm, I pray,
10 How fare they?
Ha, ha, thanks for your counsel, my Zanze!
"Feast upon lampreys, quaff Breganze" —
The summer of life so easy to spend,
And care for to-morrow so soon put away!
But winter hastens at summer's end,
And fire-fly, hedge-shrew, lob-worm, pray,
How fare they?
No bidding me then to . . . what did Zanze say?
"Pare your nails pearlwise, get your small feet shoes 20 "More like" . . . (what said she?) —
"and less like canoes!"
How pert that girl was! — would I be those pert
Impudent staring women! It had done
me,
However, surely no such mighty hurt
To learn his name who passed that jest
upon me:
No foreigner, that I can recollect,
Came, as she says, a month since, to inspect Our silk-mills — none with blue eyes and thick rings
Of raw-silk-coloured hair, at all events.
Well, if old Luca keep his good intents, 30 We shall do better, see what next year
brings.
I may buy shoes, my Zanze, not appear More destitute than you perhaps next
year!
Bluph . . . something! I had caught the uncouth name
But for Monsignor's people's sudden clatter
Above us — bound to spoil such idle chatter
As ours: it were indeed a serious matter
If silly talk like ours should put to shame
The pious man, the man devoid of blame,
The . . . ah but — ah but, all the same,
40 No mere mortal has a right
To carry that exalted air;
Best people are not angels quite:
While — not the worst of people's doings scare
The devil; so there's that proud look to spare!

Which is mere counsel to myself, mind!
for

I have just been the holy Monsignor:
And I was you too, Luigi's gentle mother,
And you too, Luigi! — how that Luigi started

Out of the turret — doubtlessly departed
On some good errand or another, 50
For he passed just now in a traveller's trim,
And the sullen company that prowled
About his path, I noticed, scowled
As if they had lost a prey in him.
And I was Jules the sculptor's bride,
And I was Ottima beside,
And now what am I? — tired of fooling.
Day for folly, night for schooling!
New Year's day is over and spent,
Ill or well, I must be content. 60

Even my lily's asleep, I vow:
Wake up — here's a friend I've plucked
you:

Call this flower a heart's-ease now!
Something rare, let me instruct you,
Is this, with petals triply swollen,
Three times spotted, thrice the pollen;
While the leaves and parts that witness
Old proportions and their fitness,
Here remain unchanged, unmoved now;
Call this pampered thing improved now! 70
Suppose there's a king of the flowers
And a girl-show held in his bowers —
"Look ye, buds, this growth of ours," Says he, "Zanze from the Brenta,
"I have made her gorge polenta
"Till both cheeks are near as bouncing
"As her . . . name there's no pronounc-
ing!
"See this heightened colour too,
"For she swilled Breganze wine
"Till her nose turned deep carmine; 80
"Twas but white when wild she grew.
"And only by this Zanze's eyes
"Of which we could not change the size,
"The magnitude of all achieved
"Otherwise, may be perceived."

Oh what a drear dark close to my poor day!
How could that red sun drop in that black cloud?

Ah Pippa, morning's rule is moved away,
Dispensed with, never more to be allowed!
Day's turn is over, now arrives the night's. 90
Oh lark, be day's apostle
To mavis, merle and throstle,
Bid them their betters jostle
From day and its delights!
But at night, brother howlet, over the woods,
Toll the world to thy chantry;
Sing to the bats' sleek sisterhoods
Full complines with gallantry:
Then, owls and bats,
Cows and twats, 100
Monks and nuns, in a cloister's moods,

Adjourn to the oak-stump pantry!

[After she has begun to undress herself.]

Now, one thing I should like to really know:

How near I ever might approach all these I only fancied being, this long day:

— Approach, I mean, so as to touch them,
so

As to . . . in some way . . . move them
— if you please,

Do good or evil to them some slight way.

For instance, if I wind

Silk to-morrow, my silk may bind

[Sitting on the bedside.]

o And border Ottima's cloak's hem.

Ah me, and my important part with them,
This morning's hymn half promised when I rose!

True in some sense or other, I suppose.

[As she lies down.]

God bless me! I can pray no more to-
night.

No doubt, some way or other, hymns say
right.

All service ranks the same with God —

*With God, whose puppets, best and
worst,*

Are we: there is no last nor first.

[She sleeps.]

KING VICTOR AND KING CHARLES;

A TRAGEDY.

1842.

[Victor Amadeus II., originally Duke of Savoy, obtained the title of King of Sardinia in 1720. He was a powerful and self-willed man, and a sagacious sovereign. Saddened by the death of his eldest and favourite son, and of his daughter, the Queen of Spain, he began to meditate abdication in favour of his son Charles. In 1728, after the death of his first wife, and upon his marriage with a second, he carried out his design and withdrew with his lady to his castle at Chambéry, where they both soon began to repent their conduct and to be sick of ennui. In 1731 King Charles was told that his father was on his way to Turin to take up his old post as king; but when father and son met, the former repudiated the notion, and alleged health as the sole ground of his return to the capital. King Charles placed the castle of Moncalieri at his father's disposal, where, however, King Victor resumed his intrigues, and at last demanded that his deed of resignation should be delivered up to be cancelled. King Charles felt the position very keenly, and vacillated a good deal; but finally he concurred in the opinion of his Council that there was nothing for it but to put the old king under arrest, which was done under the direction of the Marquis D'Ormea. King Victor died shortly afterwards, namely, in October 1732.]

NOTE.

So far as I know, this Tragedy is the first artistic consequence of what Voltaire termed "a terrible event without consequences;" and although it professes to be historical, I have taken more pains to arrive at the history than most readers would thank me for particularising: since acquainted, as I will hope them to be, with the chief circumstances of Victor's remarkable European career — nor quite ignorant of the sad and surprising facts I am about to reproduce (a tolerable account of which is to be found, for instance, in Abbé Roman's Récit, or even the fifth of Lord Orrery's Letters from Italy) — I cannot expect them to be versed, nor desirous of becoming so, in all the detail of the memoirs, correspondence, and relations of the time. From these only may be obtained a knowledge of the fiery and audacious temper, unscrupulous selfishness, profound dissimulation, and singular fertility in resources, of Victor — the extreme and painful sensibility, prolonged immaturity of powers, earnest good purpose and vacillating will of Charles — the noble and right woman's manliness of his wife — and the ill-considered rascality and subsequent better-advised rectitude of D'Ormea. When I say, therefore, that I cannot but believe my statement (combining as it does what appears correct in Voltaire and plausible in Condorcet) more true to person and thing than any it has hitherto been my fortune to meet with, no doubt my word will be taken, and my evidence spared as readily. R. B.

LONDON: 1842.

KING VICTOR AND KING CHARLES.

PERSONS.

VICTOR AMADEUS, first King of Sardinia.
CHARLES EMMANUEL, his son, Prince of Piedmont.

POLYXENA, wife of Charles.

D'ORMEA, minister.

SCENE. The Council Chamber of Rivoli Palace, near Turin, communicating with a Hall at the back, an Apartment to the left, and another to the right of the stage.

TIME, 1730-1731.

FIRST YEAR, 1730. — KING VICTOR.

PART I.

CHARLES, POLYXENA.

Charles. You think so? Well, I do not.
Polyxena. My beloved,
All must clear up; we shall be happy yet.
This cannot last for ever — oh, may
change

To-day or any day!

Charles. — May change? Ah yes —
May change!

Polyxena. Endure it, then.

Charles. No doubt, a life Like this drags on, now better and now
worse.

My father may . . . may take to loving
me;

And he may take D'Ormea closer yet
To counsel him; — may even cast off her — That bad Sebastian; but he also may . . . Or no, Polyxena, my only friend,
He may not force you from me?

Polyxena. Now, force me
From you! — me, close by you as if there gloomed

No Sebastians, no D'Ormeas on our path —

At Rivoli or Turin, still at hand, Arch-counsellor, prime confidant . . .
force me!

Charles. Because I felt as sure, as I feel
sure

We clasp hands now, of being happy once.
Young was I, quite neglected, nor concerned

By the world's business that engrossed so
much

My father and my brother: if I peered
From out my privacy, — amid the crash
And blaze of nations, domineered those two.

'Twas war, peace — France our foe, now
— England, friend —

In love with Spain — at feud with Austria!
Well —

I wondered, laughed a moment's laugh for
pride

In the chivalrous couple, then let drop
My curtain — "I am out of it," I said —
When . . .

Polyxena. You have told me, Charles.

Charles. Polyxena —
When suddenly, — a warm March day,
just that!

Just so much sunshine as the cottage child
Basks in delighted, while the cottager
Takes off his bonnet, as he ceases work,
To catch the more of it — and it must fall Heavily on my brother! Had you seen Philip — the lion-featured! not like me!

Polyxena. I know —

Charles. And Philip's mouth
yet fast to mine,

His dead cheek on my cheek, his arm still
round

My neck, — they bade me rise, "for I was heir

"To the Duke," they said, "the right hand of the Duke:"

Till then he was my father, not the Duke.
So . . . let me finish . . . the whole intricate

World's-business their dead boy was born 40 to, I

Must conquer, — ay, the brilliant thing he
was,

I, of a sudden must be: my faults, my follies,

— All bitter truths were told me, all at
once,

To end the sooner. What I simply styled
Their overlooking me, had been contempt:

How should the Duke employ himself,
forsooth,

With such an one, while lordly Philip rode By him their Turin through? But he was punished,

And must put up with — me! 'Twas sad
enough

To learn my future portion and submit. 50
And then the wear and worry, blame on blame!

For, spring-sounds in my ears, spring-smells about,

How could I but grow dizzy in their pent Dim palace-rooms at first? My mother's
look

As they discussed my insignificance,
She and my father, and I sitting by, —

I bore; I knew how brave a son they missed:
Philip had gaily run state-papers through,

While Charles was spelling at them painfully!

But Victor was my father spite of that. 60
"Duke Victor's entire life has been," I
said,

"Innumerable efforts to one end;
"And on the point now of that end's success,

"Our Ducal turning to a Kingly crown,
"Where's time to be reminded 'tis his child

"He spurns?" And so I suffered — scarcely suffered,

Since I had you at length!

Polyxena. — To serve in place
Of monarch, minister, and mistress,

Charles.

Charles. But, once that crown obtained, then wasn't not like

Our lot would alter? "When he rests, 70
takes breath,

"Glances around, sees who there's left to
love —

"Now that my mother's dead, sees I am
left —

"Is it not like he'll love me at the last?"
Well, Savoy turns Sardinia; the Duke's
King:

Could I — precisely then — could you expect

His harshness to redouble? These few months

Have been . . . have been . . . Polyx-ena, do you

And God conduct me, or I lose myself!

What would he have? What list they want with me?

Him with this mistress and this minister,
— You see me now, you bear hence forth
us both!

Pronounce what I should do, Polyxena!
Polyxena Endure, endure, beloved!

Say you not

He is your father? All's so incident To novel sway! Beside, our life must
change:

Or you'll acquire his knighthood, or he'll
And

Harshness a sorry way of teaching it.

10 I bear this — not that there's so much to bear.

Charles. You bear? Do not I know that you, tho' bound

To silence for my sake, are perishing

Polyxena. Charles! And that otherwise

When every crevice from the hideous
Court

Is stopped: the Minister to dog me, here —
The Mistress posted to entrap you, there!
And thus shall we grow old in such a life;
Not careless, never estranged, — but old:
to alter

Our life, there is so much to alter!

Polyxena. Come —

20 Is it agreed that we forego complaint
Even at Turin, yet complain we here
At Rivoli? 'Twere wiser you announced
Our presence to the King. What's now afoot

I wonder? Not that any more's to dread Than every day's embarrassment: but guess

For me, why train so fast succeeded train
On the high-road, each gayer still than can.

I noticed your Archbishop's pursuivant,
The sable cloak and silver cross; such pomp

30 Bodes . . . what now, Charles? Can you conceive?

Charles. Not I.

Polyxena. A matter of some moment.

Charles. There's our life!

Which of the group of loiterers that stare
From the lime-avenue, divines that I —
About to figure presently, he thinks,
In face of all assembled — am the one
Who knows precisely least about it?

Polyxena. Tush!

D'Ormea's contrivance!

Charles. Ay, how otherwise

Should the young Prince serve for the old King's fun?

— So that the simplest courtier may remark

40 'Twere idle raising parties for a Prince Content to linger the Court's laughingstock.

Something, to live, about that weary business

Polyxena is Charles! But Charles Charles, and which POLYXENA examines.

— Not that I comprehend three words of
yours.

After all last night's study.

Polyxena. The faint heart!

Why, as we rode and you rehearsed just
now

Its substance . . . (that's the folded speech I mean,

Concerning the Reduction of the Fields)

— What would you have? — I fancied while you spoke,

Some tones were just your father's.

Charles. Flattery!

Polyxena. I fancied so: — and here 50
lurks, sure enough,

My note upon the Spanish Cuirass! You've mastered

The fief-speech thoroughly: this other,
faint,

Is an opinion you deliver, — stay,
Don't read it slowly over once to me:

Read — there's bare time; you read it firmly — loud

— Rather loud, looking in his face, —
don't sink

Your eye once — ay, thus! "If Spain claims . . ." begin

— Just as you look at me!

Charles. At you! Oh truly,

You have I seen, say, marshalling your troops,

Dismissing councils, or, through doors 60
open,

Head sunk on hand, devoured by slow chagrins

— Then radiant, for a crown had all at
once

Seemed positive again! I can behold
Him, whose least whisper ties my spirit fast.

In this sweet note, Charles, divert me from

Save defects like Sebastian's shameless do.

Or worse, the dappled grey hair and dead
white face

And down eye as if it ached with galle, D'Ormea wears . . .

[As he kisses her, enter from the KING's apartment D'ORMEA.

My kisses from your brow
D'Ormea travels. Here! So, King

Victor

Spoke truth for once: and who's ordained,
but I

To make that memorable? Back in call.
As he desires. Were't better gnash the teeth,

Or laugh outright now?

Charles [to Polyxena]. What's his will for?

D'Ormea [aside]. I question if they even speak to me.

Polyxena [to CHARLES]. Face the man! He'll suppose you fear him, else.

[Aloud.] The Marquis bears the King's command, no doubt?

D'Ormea [aside]. Precisely! — If I threatened him, perhaps?

Well, this at least is punishment enough!

Men used to promise punishment would come.

Charles. Deliver the King's message, Marquis!

D'Ormea [aside]. Ah

So anxious for his fate? [Aloud.] A word, my Prince,

Before you see your father — just one word
Of counsel!

Charles. Oh, your counsel certainly! Polyxena, the Marquis counsels us!

Well, sir? Be brief, however!

D'Ormea. What? You know As much as I? — preceded me, most like,

In knowledge! So! ('Tis in his eye, be-side —

His voice: he knows it, and his heart's on flame

Already.) You surmise why you, myself, Del Borgo, Spava, fifty nobles more,

Are summoned thus?

Charles. Is the Prince used to know, At any time, the pleasure of the King,

Before his minister? — Polyxena, Stay here till I conclude my task: I feel

Your presence (smile not) through the walls, and take

Fresh heart. The King's within that chamber?

D'Ormea [passing the table whereon a paper lies, exclaims, as he glances at it]. "Spain!"

Polyxena [aside to CHARLES]. Tarry awhile: what ails the minister?

D'Ormea. Madam, I do not often trouble you.

The Prince loathes, and you scorn me — let that pass!

But since it touches him and you, not me, Bid the Prince listen!

Polyxena [to CHARLES]. Surely you will listen!

— Deceit? — those fingers crumpling up his vest?

Charles. Deceitful to the very fingers' ends!

D'Ormea [who has approached them, overlooks the other paper CHARLES continues to hold]. My project for the Fiefs! As I supposed!

Sir, I must give you light upon those measures — For this is mine, and that I spied of Spain,

Mine too!

Charles. Release me! Do you gloze on me

Who bear in the world's face (that is, the world

You make for me at Turin) your contempt? — Your measures? — When was not a hateful task

D'Ormea's imposition? Leave my robe! What post can I bestow, what grant concede?

Or do you take me for the King? 40

D'Ormea. Not I! Not yet for King, — not for, as yet, thank God, One who in . . . shall I say a year, a month? Ay! — shall be wretcheder than e'er was slave In his Sardinia. — Europe's spectacle

And the world's bye-word! What? The Prince aggrieved

That I excluded him our counsels? Here [Touching the paper in CHARLES's hand].

Accept a method of extorting gold From Savoy's nobles, who must wring its

worth

In silver first from tillers of the soil, 50 Whose hinds again have to contribute brass

To make up the amount: there's counsel, sir,

My counsel, one year old; and the fruit, this —

Savoy's become a mass of misery And wrath, which one man has to meet —

the King:

You're not the King! Another counsel, sir!

Spain entertains a project (here it lies) Which, guessed, makes Austria offer that same King

Thus much to baffle Spain; he promises; Then comes Spain, breathless lest she be 60

forestalled,

Her offer follows; and he promises . . . Charles. — Promises, sir, when he has just agreed

To Austria's offer? D'Ormea. That's a counsel, Prince!

But past our foresight, Spain and Austria (choosing

To make their quarrel up between themselves

Without the intervention of a friend) Produce both treaties, and both promises . . .

Charles. How? D'Ormea. Prince, a counsel! And the fruit of that?

Both parties covenant afresh, to fall Together on their friend, blot out his name, 70

Abolish him from Europe. So, take note, Here's Austria and here's Spain to fight against:

And what sustains the King but Savoy here,

A miserable people mad with wrongs?
You're not the King!

Charles. Polyxena, you said
All would clear up: all does clear up to me.

D'Ormea. Clear up! 'Tis no such thing to envy, then?

You see the King's state in its length and breadth?

You blame me now for keeping you aloof
From counsels and the fruit of counsels?

Wait

Till I explain this morning's business!

Charles [aside]. No —
Stoop to my father, yes, — D'Ormea, no:

10 — The King's son, not to the King's counsellor!

I will do something, but at least retain
The credit of my deed. [Aloud.] Then it is this

You now expressly come to tell me?

D'Ormea. This
To tell! You apprehend me?

Charles. Perfectly.
Further, D'Ormea, you have shown your-
self,

For the first time these many weeks and months,

Disposed to do my bidding?

D'Ormea. From the heart!

Charles. Acquaint my father, first, I wait his pleasure:

Next . . . or, I'll tell you at a fitter time.

20 Charles acquit the King!

D'Ormea [aside]. If I 'scape Victor yet!
First, to prevent this stroke at me: if not, —

Then, to avenge it! [To CHARLES.] Gracious sir, I go. [Goes.]

Charles. God, I forbore! Which more offends, that man

Or that man's master? Is it come to this?
Have they supposed (the sharpest insult

yet)
I needed e'en his intervention? No!

No — dull am I, conceded, — but so dull,
Scarcely! Their step decides me.

Polyxena. How decides?
Charles. You would be freed D'Ormea's eye and hers?

30 — Could fly the court with me and live
content?

So, this it is for which the knights assemble!

The whispers and the closeting of late,
The savageness and insolence of old,

— For this!
Polyxena. What mean you?

Charles. How? You fail to catch Their clever plot? I missed it, but could

you?
These last two months of care to inculcate

How dull I am, — D'Ormea's present visit
To prove that, being dull, I might be worse

Were I a King — as wretched as now
dull —

You recognise in it no winding up
Of a long plot?

Polyxena. Why should there be a plot?

Charles. The crown's secure now; I should shame the crown —

An old complaint; the point is, how to
gain

My place for one, more fit in Victor's eyes,
His mistress the Sebastian's child.

Polyxena. In truth?
Charles. They dare not quite dethrone

Sardinia's Prince:
But they may descant on my dulness till

They sting me into even praying them Grant leave to hide my head, resign my

state,
And end the coil. Not see now? In a 50

word,
They'd have me tender them myself my rights

As one incapable; — some cause for that,

Since I delayed thus long to see their drift!
I shall apprise the King he may resume

My rights this moment.
Polyxena. Pause! I dare not think

So ill of Victor.
Charles. Think no ill of him!

Polyxena. — Nor think him, then, so shallow as to suffer

His purpose be divined thus easily.
And yet — you are the last of a great line;

There's a great heritage at stake; new days 60
Seemed to await this newest of the realms

Of Europe: — Charles, you must withstand this!

Charles. Ah —
You dare not then renounce the splendid

Court
For one whom all the world despises?

Speak!
Polyxena. My gentle husband, speak I will, and truth.

Were this as you believe, and I once sure

Your duty lay in so renouncing rule,
I could . . . could? Oh what happiness

it were —
To live, my Charles, and die, alone with

you!
Charles. I grieve I asked you. To the 70

presence, then!
By this, D'Ormea acquaints the King, no

doubt,
He fears I am too simple for mere hints,

And that no less will serve than Victor's
mouth

Demonstrating in council what I am.
I have not breathed, I think, these many years!

Polyxena. Why, it may be! — if he desire to wed

That woman, call legitimate her child.

Charles. You see as much? Oh, let his will have way!

You'll not repent confiding in me, love?

There's many a brighter spot in Piedmont,
 far,
 Than Rivoli. I'll seek him: or, suppose You hear first how I mean to speak my
 mind?
 — Loudly and firmly both, this time, be
 sure!
 I yet may see your Rhine-land, who can
 tell?
 Once away, ever then away! I breathe.
Polyxena. And I too breathe.
Charles. Come, my Polyxena!

KING VICTOR.

PART II.

Enter King VICTOR, bearing the Regalia on a cushion, from his apartment. He calls loudly.

Victor. D'Ormea! — for patience fails me, treading thus Among the obscure trains I have laid, — my knights
 Safe in the hall here — in that anteroom,
 My son, — D'Ormea, where? Of this,
 one touch — [Laying down the crown.]
 This fireball to these mute black cold trains — then
 Outbreak enough!
 [Contemplating it.] To lose all, after all!
 This, glancing o'er my house for ages — shaped,
 Brave meteor, like the crown of Cyprus
 now,
 Jerusalem, Spain, England, every change
 The braver, — and when I have clutched a prize
 My ancestry died wan with watching for,
 To lose it! — by a slip, a fault, a trick Learnt to advantage once and not un-
 learned
 When past the use, — “just this once more” (I thought)
 “Use it with Spain and Austria happily, “And then away with trick!” An oversight
 I'd have repaired thrice over, any time
 These fifty years, must happen now!
 There's peace
 At length; and I, to make the most of
 peace,
 Ventured my project on our people here,
 As needing not their help: which Europe
 knows,
 And means, cold-blooded, to dispose her-
 self
 30 (Apart from plausibilities of war)
 To crush the new-made King — who ne'er till now Feared her. As Duke, I lost each foot of
 earth

And laughed at her: my name was left,
 my sword
 Left, all was left! But she can take, she knows,
 This crown, herself conceded . . . That's to try,
 Kind Europe! My career's not closed as
 yet!
 This boy was ever subject to my will,
 Timid and tame — the fitter! D'Ormea,
 too —
 What if the sovereign also rid himself
 Of thee, his prime of parasites? — I delay! 40
 D'Ormea! . . . [As D'ORMEA enters, the KING seats himself.]

My son, the Prince — attends he?
D'Ormea. Sir,
 He does attend. The crown prepared! — it seems
 That you persist in your resolve.
Victor. Who's come?
 The chancellor and the chamberlain? My knights?
D'Ormea. The whole Annunziata. If,
 my liege,
 Your fortune had not tottered worse than
 now . . .
Victor. Del Borgo has drawn up the schedules? mine —
 My son's, too? Excellent! Only, beware
 Of the least blunder, or we look but fools.
 First, you read the Annulment of the 50
 Oaths;
 Del Borgo follows . . . no, the Prince shall sign;
 Then let Del Borgo read the Instrument:
 On which, I enter.
D'Ormea. Sir, this may be truth;
 You, sir, may do as you affect — may
 break
 Your engine, me, to pieces: try at least
 If not a spring remain worth saving! Take My counsel as I've counselled many times!
 What if the Spaniard and the Austrian threat?
 There's England, Holland, Venice — which ally
 Select you?
Victor. Ah! Come, D'Ormea, —
 “truth”
 Was on your lip a minute since. Allies?
 I've broken faith with Venice, Holland, England
 — As who knows if not you?
D'Ormea. But why with me Break faith — with one ally, your best, break faith?
Victor. When first I stumbled on you,
 Marquis — 'twas
 At Mondovi — a little lawyer's clerk . . .
D'Ormea. Therefore your soul's ally! — who brought you through Your quarrel with the Pope, at pains
 enough —

Who simply echoed you in these affairs —
On whom you cannot therefore visit these Affairs' ill-fortune — whom you trust to guide

You safe (yes, on my soul) through these affairs!

Victor. I was about to notice, had you
not

Prevented me, that since that great town kept

With its chicane D'Ormea's satchel stuffed
And D'Ormea's self sufficiently recluse,

He missed a sight, — my naval armament
10 When I burned Toulon. How the skiff exults

Upon the galliot's¹ wave! — rises its height,

O'ertops it even; but the great wave bursts,
And hell-deep in the horrible profound Buries itself the galliot: shall the skiff Think to escape the sea's black trough in turn?

Apply this: you have been my minister
— Next me, above me possibly; — sad post,
Huge care, abundant lack of peace of mind;
Who would desiderate the eminence?

20 You gave your soul to get it; you'd yet give Your soul to keep it, as I mean you shall, D'Ormea! What if the wave ebbed with
me?

Whereas it cants you to another crest;
I toss you to my son; ride out your ride!

D'Ormea. Ah, you so much despise me?
Victor. You, D'Ormea?

Nowise: and I'll inform you why. A king
Must in his time have many ministers,
And I've been rash enough to part with
mine

When I thought proper. Of the tribe, not
one

30 (. . . Or wait, did Pianezze? — ah, just the same!)

Not one of them, ere his remonstrance
reached

The length of yours, but has assured me (commonly

Standing much as you stand, — or nearer,
say,

The door to make his exit on his speech)
— I should repent of what I did. D'Or-mea,

Be candid, you approached it when I bade
you

Prepare the schedules! But you stopped
in time,

You have not so assured me: how should I Despise you then?

Enter CHARLES.

Victor [changing his tone]. Are you instructed? Do

for speed.

My order, point by point! About it, sir!

D'Ormea. You so despise me! [Aside.]

One last stay remains —

The boy's discretion there.

[To CHARLES.] For your sake, Prince,
I pleaded, wholly in your interest,

To save you from this fate!

Charles [aside]. Must I be told
The Prince was supplicated for — by him?

Victor [to D'ORMEA]. Apprise Del
Borgo, Spava, and the rest,

Our son attends them; then return.

D'Ormea. One word!

Charles [aside]. A moment's pause and they would drive me hence,

I do believe!

D'Ormea [aside]. Let but the boy be firm!

Victor. You disobey?

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. You do not disobey

Me, at least? Did you promise that or no?

D'Ormea. Sir, I am yours: what would you? Yours am I!

Charles. When I have said what I shall say, 'tis like

Your face will ne'er again disgust me. Go!

Through you, as through a breast of glass,
I see.

And for your conduct, from my youth till
now,

Take my contempt! You might have spared me much,

Secured me somewhat, nor so harmed your-
self:

That's over now. Go, ne'er to come again!

D'Ormea. As son, the father — father as, the son!

My wits! My wits! [Goes.]

Victor [seated]. And you, what meant you, pray,

Speaking thus to D'Ormea?

Charles. Let us not Waste words upon D'Ormea! Those I spent

Have half unsettled what I came to say.
His presence vexes to my very soul.

Victor. One called to manage a kingdom, Charles, needs heart

To bear up under worse annoyances
Than seems D'Ormea — to me, at least.

Charles [aside]. Ah, good!
He keeps me to the point. Then be it so.

[Aloud.] Last night, sir, brought me certain papers — these —

To be reported on, — your way of late.
Is it last night's result that you demand?

Victor. For God's sake, what has night brought forth? Pronounce

The . . . what's your word? — result!

Charles. Sir, that had proved Quite worthy of your sneer, no doubt: — a few

Lame thoughts, regard for you alone could wring,

Lame as they are, from brains like mine,
believe!

As 'tis, sir, I am spared both toil and sneer.
These are the papers.

Victor. Well, sir? I suppose You hardly burned them. Now for your result!

Charles. I never should have done great things of course,

But . . . oh my father, had you loved me
more!

Victor. Loved? [Aside.] Has D'Ormea played me false, I wonder?

[Aloud.] Why, Charles, a king's love is diffused — yourself

May overlook, perchance, your part in it.

o Our monarchy is absolutest now
In Europe, or my trouble's thrown away.
I love, my mode, that subjects each and all May have the power of loving, all and
each,

Their mode: I doubt not, many have their sons

To trifle with, talk soft to, all day long:

I have that crown, this chair, D'Ormea,
Charles!

Charles. 'Tis well I am a subject then,
not you.

Victor [aside]. D'Ormea has told him everything.

[Aloud.] Aha!

I apprehend you: when all's said, you take

o Your private station to be prized beyond

My own, for instance?

Charles. — Do and ever did

So take it: 'tis the method you pursue

That grieves . . .

Victor. These words! Let me express, my friend,

Your thoughts. You penetrate what I

supposed

Secret. D'Ormea plies his trade betimes!

I purpose to resign my crown to you.

Charles. To me?

Victor. Now, — in that chamber.

Charles. You resign

The crown to me?

Victor. And time enough, Charles,

sure?

Confess with me, at four-and-sixty years

30 A crown's a load. I covet quiet once

Before I die, and summoned you for that.

Charles. 'Tis I will speak: you ever hated me.

I bore it, — have insulted me, borne too —

Now you insult yourself; and I remember

What I believed you, what you really are,

And cannot bear it. What! My life has passed

Under your eye, tormented as you know, —

Your whole sagacities, one after one,

At leisure brought to play on me — to 40 A fool, I thought and I submitted; now

You'd prove . . . what would you prove
me?

Victor. This to me?

I hardly know you!

Charles. Know me? Oh indeed

You do not! Wait till I complain next

time

Of my simplicity! — for here's a sage

Knows the world well, is not to be de-

ceived,

And his experience and his Macchiavels,

D'Ormeas, teach him — what? — that I

this while

Have envied him his crown! He has not

smiled,

I warrant, — has not eaten, drunk, nor

slept,

For I was plotting with my Princess 54

yonder!

Who knows what we might do or might not

do?

Go now, be politic, astound the world!

That sentry in the antechamber — nay,

The varlet who disposed this precious trap

[Pointing to the crown.]

That was to take me — ask them if they

think

Their own sons envy them their posts! —

Know me!

Victor. But you know me, it seems: so,

learn in brief,

My pleasure. This assembly is convened . . .

Charles. Tell me, that woman put it in your head!

You were not sole contriver of the scheme, 60

My father!

Victor. Now observe me, sir! I jest

Seldom — on these points, never. Here, I

say,

The knights assemble to see me concede,

And you accept, Sardinia's crown.

Charles. Farewell!

'Twere vain to hope to change this: I can end it.

Not that I cease from being yours, when sunk

Into obscurity: I'll die for you,

But not annoy you with my presence. Sir,

Farewell! Farewell!

Enter D'ORMEA.

D'Ormea [aside]. Ha, sure he's changed

again —

Means not to fall into the cunning trap! 70

Then Victor, I shall yet escape you, Victor!

Victor [suddenly placing the crown upon the head of CHARLES]. D'Ormea, your King!

[To CHARLES.] My son, obey me!

Charles,

Your father, clearer-sighted than yourself,

Decides it must be so. 'Faith, this looks real!

My reasons after; reason upon reason
 After: but now, obey me! Trust in me!
 By this, you save Sardinia, you save me!
 Why, the boy swoons! [To D'ORMEA.]
 Come this side!

D'Ormea [as CHARLES turns from him to VICTOR]. You persist?

Victor. Yes, I conceive the gesture's meaning. Faith,

He almost seems to hate you: how is that?
 Be re-assured, my Charles! Is't over now?
 Then, Marquis, tell the new King what remains

To do! A moment's work. Del Borgo reads

10 The Act of Abdication out, you sign it,
 Then I sign; after that, come back to me.
D'Ormea. Sir, for the last time, pause!

Victor. Five minutes longer
 I am your sovereign, Marquis. Hesitate —
 And I'll so turn those minutes to account
 That . . . Ay, you recollect me! [Aside.]

Could I bring
 My foolish mind to undergo the reading
 That Act of Abdication!

[AS CHARLES motions D'ORMEA to precede him.]

Thanks, dear Charles!

[CHARLES and D'ORMEA retire.]

Victor. A novel feature in the boy, —
 indeed

Just what I feared he wanted most. Quite
 right,

20 This earnest tone: your truth, now, for effect!

It answers every purpose: with that look,
 That voice, — I hear him: "I began no treaty,"

(He speaks to Spain), "nor ever dreamed of this

"You show me; this I from my soul regret;
 "But if my father signed it, bid not me
 "Dishonour him—who gave me all,
 beside:"

And, "True," says Spain, "'twere harsh to visit that

"Upon the Prince." Then come the nobles trooping:

"I grieve at these exactions — I had cut 30 "This hand off ere impose them; but shall I "Undo my father's deed?" — and they confer:

"Doubtless he was no party after all;

"Give the Prince time!"

Ay, give us time, but time!
 Only, he must not, when the dark day comes,

Refer our friends to me and frustrate all.
 We'll have no child's play, no desponding fits,

No Charles at each cross turn entreating
 Victor

To take his crown again. Guard against
 that!

Enter D'ORMEA.

Long live King Charles!

No — Charles's counsellor!

Well, is it over, Marquis? Did I jest? 44 D'Ormea. "King Charles!" What then may you be?

Victor. Anything!

A country gentleman that, cured of bustle,
 Now beats a quick retreat toward Cham-bery,

Would hunt and hawk and leave you noisy folk

To drive your trade without him. I'm Count Remont —

Count Tende — any little place's Count!

D'Ormea. Then Victor, Captain against Catinat

At Staffarde, where the French beat you;
 and Duke

At Turin, where you beat the French;
 King late

Of Savoy, Piedmont, Montferrat, Sardinia, 50
 — Now, "any little place's Count" —

Victor. Proceed!

D'Ormea. Breaker of vows to God, who crowned you first;

Breaker of vows to man, who kept you
 since;

Most profligate to me who outraged God
 And man to serve you, and am made pay crimes

I was but privy to, by passing thus
 To your imbecile son — who, well you
 know,

Must — (when the people here, and nations there,

Clamour for you the main delinquent, slipped

From King to — "Count of any little 60
 place")

Must needs surrender me, all in his reach, —

I, sir, forgive you: for I see the end —
 See you on your return — (you will return) —

To him you trust, a moment . . .

Victor. Trust him? How?

My poor man, merely a prime-minister,
 Make me know where my trust errs!

D'Ormea. In his fear,
 His love, his — but discover for yourself
 What you are weakest, trusting in!

Victor. Aha,

D'Ormea, not a shrewder scheme than this
 In your repertory? You know old 76

Victor — Vain, choleric, inconstant, rash — (I've heard

Talkers who little thought the King so close)

Felicitous now, were't not, to provoke him
 To clean forget, one minute afterward,
 His solemn act, and call the nobles back

And pray them give again the very power
He has abjured? — for the dear sake of
what?

Vengeance on you, D'Ormea! No: such am I,

Count Tende or Count anything you please — Only, the same that did the things you
say,

And, among other things you say not,
used

Your finest fibre, meanest muscle, — you
I used, and now, since you will have it so, Leave to your fate — mere lumber in the midst,

You and your works. Why, what on earth
beside

Are you made for, you sort of ministers?

D'Ormea. Not left, though, to my fate!
Your witless son

Has more wit than to load himself with lumber:

He foils you that way, and I follow you.

Victor. Stay with my son — protect the weaker side!

D'Ormea. Ay, to be tossed the people like a rag,

And flung by them for Spain and Austria's
sport,

Abolishing the record of your part
In all this perfidy!

Victor. Prevent, beside,

My own return!

D'Ormea. That's half prevented now

'Twill go hard but you find a wondrous charm

In exile, to discredit me. The Alps, Silk-mills to watch, vines asking vigilance —

Hounds open for the stag, your hawk's a-wing —

Brave days that wait the Louis of the South,

Italy's Janus!

Victor. So, the lawyer's clerk
Won't tell me that I shall repent!

D'Ormea. You give me
Full leave to ask if you repent?

Victor. Whene'er
Sufficient time's elapsed for that, you judge!

[Shouts inside "King CHARLES!"

D'Ormea. Do you repent?

Victor [after a slight pause]. . . I've kept them waiting? Yes!

Come in, complete the Abdication, sir!

[They go out.]

Enter POLYXENA.

Polyxena. A shout! The sycophants are free of Charles!

Oh is not this like Italy? No fruit
Of his or my distempered fancy, this,

But just an ordinary fact! Beside,

Here they've set forms for such proceedings; Victor

Imprisoned his own mother: he should
know,

If any, how a son's to be deprived
Of a son's right. Our duty's palpable.

Ne'er was my husband for the wily king 46

And the unworthy subjects: be it so!

Come you safe out of them, my Charles!
Our life

Grows not the broad and dazzling life, I dreamed

Might prove your lot; for strength was shut in you

None guessed but I — strength which, untrammelled once,

Had little shamed your vaunted ancestry —
Patience and self-devotion, fortitude,

Simplicity and utter truthfulness
— All which, they shout to lose!

So, now my work
Begins — to save him from regret. Save 50

Charles
Regret? — the noble nature! He's not
made

Like these Italians: 'tis a German soul.

CHARLES enters crowned.

Oh, where's the King's heir? Gone! — the Crown Prince? Gone! —

Where's Savoy? Gone! — Sardinia?
Gone! But Charles

Is left! And when my Rhine-land bowers
arrive,

If he looked almost handsome yestertwilight

As his grey eyes seemed widening into black Because I praised him, then how will he
look?

Farewell, you stripped and whited mulberry-trees

Bound each to each by lazy ropes of vine! 60

Now I'll teach you my language: I'm not forced

To speak Italian now, Charles?

[She sees the crown.] What is this?
Answer me — who has done this? Answer!

Charles. He!

I am King now.

Polyxena. Oh worst, worst, worst of all!
Tell me! What, Victor? He has made you King?

What's he then? What's to follow this?
You, King?

Charles. Have I done wrong? Yes, for you were not by!

Polyxena. Tell me from first to last.
Charles. Hush — a new world

Brightens before me; he is moved away
— The dark form that eclipsed it, he sub- 70

sides
Into a shape supporting me like you,

And I, alone, tend upward, more and more Tend upward: I am grown Sardinia's
King.

Polyxena. Now stop: was not this Victor, Duke of Savoy
At ten years old?

Charles. He was.

Polyxena. And the Duke spent
Since then, just four-and-fifty years in toil
To be — what?

Charles. King.

Polyxena. Then why unking himself?

Charles. Those years are cause enough.

Polyxena. The only cause?

Charles. Some new perplexities.

Polyxena. Which you can solve Although he cannot?

Charles. He assures me so.

Polyxena. And this he means shall last — how long?

Charles. How long?

Think you I fear the perils I confront?
He's praising me before the people's face —
My people!

Polyxena. Then he's changed — grown kind, the King?

Where can the trap be?

Charles. Heart and soul I pledge!
My father, could I guard the crown you gained,

Transmit as I received it, — all good else
Would I surrender!

Polyxena. Ah, it opens then
Before you, all you dreaded formerly?
You are rejoiced to be a king, my Charles?

Charles. So much to dare? The better;
— much to dread?

The better. I'll adventure though alone.
Triumph or die, there's Victor still to witness

Who dies or triumphs — either way, alone!

Polyxena. Once I had found my share in triumph, Charles,

Or death.

Charles. But you are I! But you I call
To take, Heaven's proxy, vows I tendered
Heaven

A moment since. I will deserve the crown.

Polyxena. You will. [Aside.] No doubt it were a glorious thing

For any people, if a heart like his 30 Ruled over it. I would I saw the trap.

Enter VICTOR.

'Tis he must show me.

Victor. So, the mask falls off
An old man's foolish love at last. Spare
thanks!

I know you, and Polyxena I know.

Here's Charles — I am his guest now — does he bid me

Be seated? And my light-haired blue-eyed child

Must not forget the old man far away
At Chambery, who dozes while she reigns.

Polyxena. Most grateful shall we now be, talking least

Of gratitude — indeed of anything That hinders what yourself must need to
say

To Charles.

Charles. Pray speak, sir!

Victor. 'Faith, not much to say:
Only what shows itself, you once i' the point

Of sight. You're now the King: you'll comprehend

Much you may oft have wondered at — the shifts,

Dissimulation, wiliness I showed.

For what's our post? Here's Savoy and here's Piedmont,

Here's Montferrat — a breadth here, a space there —

To o'ersweep all these, what's one weapon
worth?

I often think of how they fought in Greece:
(Or Rome, which was it? You're the scholar, Charles!)

You made a front-thrust? But if your shield too

Were not adroitly planted, some shrewd
knave

Reached you behind; and him foiled, straight if thong

And handle of that shield were not cast
loose,

And you enabled to outstrip the wind,
Fresh foes assailed you, either side; 'scape
these,

And reach your place of refuge — e'en
then, odds

If the gate opened unless breath enough
Were left in you to make its lord a speech.

Oh, you will see!

Charles. No: straight on shall I go,
Truth helping; win with it or die with it.

Victor. 'Faith, Charles, you're not made Europe's fighting-man!

The barrier-guarder, if you please. You clutch

Hold and consolidate, with envious France
This side, with Austria that, the territory

I held — ay, and will hold . . . which you shall hold

Despite the couple! But I've surely earned

Exemption from these weary politics,
— The privilege to prattle with my son

And daughter here, though Europe wait the
while.

Polyxena. Nay, sir, — at Chambery, away for ever,

As soon you will be, 'tis farewell we bid
you:

Turn these few fleeting moments to account!

'Tis just as though it were a death.

Victor. Indeed!

Polyxena [aside]. Is the trap there?

Charles. Ay, call this parting — death!

The sacredd your memory becomes.

If I misrule Sardinia, how bring back

My father?

Victor. I mean . . .

Polyxena [who watches VICTOR narrowly this while]. Your father does not mean

You should be ruling for your father's sake:

It is your people must concern you wholly Instead of him. You mean this, sir?

(He drops

My hand!)

Charles. That people is now part of me.

Victor. About the people! I took certain measures

Some short time since . . . Oh, I know well, you know

But little of my measures! These affect The nobles; we've resumed some grants, imposed

A tax or two; prepare yourself, in short, For clamour on that score. Mark me: you yield

No jot of aught entrusted you!

Polyxena. No jot

You yield!

Charles. My father, when I took the oath,

Although my eye might stray in search of yours,

I heard it, understood it, promised God

What you require. Till from this eminence

He move me, here I keep, nor shall concede The meaneast of my rights.

Victor [aside]. The boy's a fool!

— Or rather, I'm a fool: for, what's wrong here?

To-day the sweets of reigning; let to-morrow

Be ready with its bitters.

Enter D'ORMEA.

There's beside smewhat to press upon your notice first.

Charles. Then why delay it for an instant, sir?

That Spanish claim perchance? And, now you speak,

— This morning, my opinion was mature, Which, boy-like, I was bashful in producing

To one I ne'er am like to fear in future! My thought is formed upon that Spanish claim.

Victor. Betimes indeed. Not now,

Charles! You require

A host of papers on it.

D'Ormea [coming forward]. Here they are.

[To CHARLES.] I, sir, was minister and much beside

Of the late monarch; to say little, him I served: on you I have, to say e'en less, No claim. This case contains those papers: with them

I tender you my office.

Victor [hastily]. Keep him, Charles! There's reason for it — many reasons: you Distrust him, nor are so far wrong there, — but He's mixed up in this matter — he'll desire To quit you, for occasions known to me: Do not accept those reasons: have him stay!

Polyxena [aside]. His minister thrust on us!

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. Sir, believe, In justice to myself, you do not need E'en this commending: howsoe'er might seem

My feelings toward you, as a private man, They quit me in the vast and untried field Of action. Though I shall myself (as late In your own hearing I engaged to do) Preside o'er my Sardinia, yet your help Is necessary. Think the past forgotten And serve me now!

D'Ormea. I did not offer you My service — would that I could serve you, sir!

As for the Spanish matter . . .

Victor. But dispatch At least the dead, in my good daughter's phrase,

Before the living! Help to house me safe Ere with D'Ormea you set the world a-gape!

Here is a paper — will you overlook What I propose reserving for my needs? I get as far from you as possible;

Here's what I reckon my expenditure.

Charles [reading]. A miserable fifty thousand crowns —

Victor. Oh, quite enough for country gentlemen!

Beside the exchequer happens . . . but find out

All that, yourself!

Charles [still reading]. "Count Tende" — what means this?

Victor. Me: you were but an infant when I burst

Through the defile of Tende upon France. Had only my allies kept true to me!

No matter. Tende's, then, a name I take Just as . . .

D'Ormea. — The Marchioness Sebastian takes

The name of Spigno.

Charles. How, sir?

Victor [to D'ORMEA]. Fool! All that

Was for my own detailing. [To CHARLES.]

That anon!

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. Explain what you have said, sir!

D'Ormea.

I supposed

'The marriage of the King to her I named, Profoundly kept a secret these few weeks, Was not to be one, now he's Count.

Polyxena [aside]. With us The minister — with him the mistress!

Charles [to VICTOR]. No — Tell me you have not taken her — that woman

To live with, past recall!

Victor. And where's the crime . . .

Polyxena [to CHARLES]. True, sir, this is a matter past recall

And past your cognisance. A day before, And you had been compelled to note this: now, —

Why note it? The King saved his House from shame:

What the Count did, is no concern of yours.

Charles [after a pause]. The Spanish claim, D'Ormea!

Victor.

Why, my son,

I took some ill-advised . . . one's age, in fact,

Spoils everything: though I was over reached,

A younger brain, we'll trust, may extricate Sardinia readily. To-morrow, D'Ormea, Inform the King!

D'Ormea [without regarding VICTOR, and leisurely]. Thus stands the case with Spain:

When first 'lie Infant Carlos claimed his proper

Succession to the throne of Tuscany . . .

Victor. I tell you, that stands over!

Let that rest!

There is the policy!

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. Thus much I know,

And more — too much: the remedy?

D'Ormea.

Of course!

No glimpse of one.

Victor.

No remedy at all!

It makes the remedy itself — time makes it.

D'Ormea [to CHARLES]. But if . . .

Victor [still more hastily]. In fine, I shall take care of that:

And, with another project that I have . . .

D'Ormea [turning on him]. Oh, since

Count Tende means to take again

King Victor's crown! —

Polyxena [throwing herself at VICTOR'S feet]. E'en now retake it, sir!

Oh speak! We are your subjects both, once more!

Say it — a word effects it! You meant not,

Nor do mean now, to take it: but you must!

'Tis in you — in your nature — and the shame's

Not half the shame 'twould grow to afterwards!

Charles. Polyxena!

Polyxena. A word recalls the knights — Say it! What's promising and what's the past?

Say you are still King Victor?

D'Ormea.

Better say

The Count repents, in brief! [VICTOR rises.]

Charles.

With such a crime

I have not charged you, sir!

Polyxena. (Charles turns from me!)

SECOND YEAR, 1731. — KING CHARLES.

PART I.

Enter Queen POLYXENA and D'ORMEA. — A pause.

Polyxena. And now, sir, what have you to say?

D'Ormea.

Count Tende . . .

Polyxena. Affirm not I betrayed you; you resolve

On uttering this strange intelligence

— Nay, post yourself to find me ere I reach

The capital, because you know King Charles

Tarries a day or two at Evian baths

Behind me: — but take warning, — here and thus

[Seating herself in the royal seat.]

I listen, if I listen — not your friend.

Explicitly the statement, if you still

Persist to urge it on me, must proceed: —

I am not made for aught else.

D'Ormea. Good! Count Tende . . .

Polyxena. I, who mistrust you, shall acquaint King Charles

Who even more mistrusts you.

D'Ormea.

Does he so?

Polyxena. Why should he not?

D'Ormea.

Ay, why not?

Motives, seek

You virtuous people, motives! Say, I serve

God at the devil's bidding — will that do?

I'm proud: our people have been pacified,

Really I know not how —

Polyxena.

By truthfulness.

D'Ormea. Exactly; that shows I had nought to do

With pacifying them. Our foreign perils

Also exceed my means to stay: but here 'Tis otherwise, and my pride's piqued.

Count Tende

Completes a full year's absence: would you, madam,

Have the old monarch back, his mistress
back,
His measures back? I pray you, act upon My counsel, or they will be.

Polyxena. When?

D'Ormea. Let's think.

Home-matters settled — Victor's coming
now;

Let foreign matters settle — Victor's here
Unless I stop him; as I will, this way.

Polyxena [reading the papers he presents]. If this should prove a plot
'twixt you and Victor?

You seek annoyances to give the pretext
For what you say you fear.

D'Ormea. Oh, possibly!

o I go for nothing. Only show King Charles That thus Count Tende purposes return,
And style me his inviter, if you please!

Polyxena. Half of your tale is true;
most like, the Count

Seeks to return: but why stay you with us?
To aid in such emergencies.

D'Ormea. Keep safe

These papers: or, to serve me, leave no
proof

I thus have counselled! When the Count returns,

And the King abdicates, 'twill stead me
little

To have thus counselled.

Polyxena. The King abdicate!

o D'Ormea. He's good, we knew long since — wise, we discover —

Firm, let us hope: — but I'd have gone to
work

With him away. Well!

[CHARLES without]. In the Council
Chamber?

D'Ormea. All's lost!

Polyxena. Oh, surely not King

Charles! He's changed —

That's not this year's care-burthened voice and step:

'Tis last year's step, the Prince's voice!

D'Ormea. I know.

[Enter CHARLES: — D'ORMEA retiring a little.]

Charles. Now wish me joy, Polyxena!

Wish it me

The old way! [She embraces him.]

There was too much cause for that!

But I have found myself again. What news
At Turin? Oh, if you but felt the load o I'm free of — free! I said this year would

end

Or it, or me — but I am free, thank God!

Polyxena. How, Charles?

Charles. You do not guess? The day I found

Sardinia's hideous coil, at home, abroad

And how my father was involved in it, —

Of course, I vowed to rest and smile no
more

Until I cleared his name from obloquy.

We did the people right — 'twas much to
gain

That point, redress our nobles' grievance,
too —

But that took place here, was no crying
shame:

All must be done abroad, — if I abroad 40

Appeased the justly-angered Powers, destroyed

The scandal, took down Victor's name at
last

From a bad eminence, I then might breathe And rest! No moment was to lose. Behold

The proud result — a Treaty, Austria, Spain

Agree to —

D'Ormea [aside]. I shall merely stipulate

For an experienced headsman.

Charles. Not a soul

Is compromised: the blotted past's a blank:

Even D'Ormea escapes unquestioned.
See!

It reached me from Vienna; I remained 50

At Evian to dispatch the Count his news;

'Tis gone to Chambery a week ago —

And here am I: do I deserve to feel

Your warm white arms around me?

D'Ormea [coming forward]. He knows
that?

Charles. What, in Heaven's name, means this?

D'Ormea. He knows that matters

Are settled at Vienna? Not too late!

Plainly, unless you post this very hour

Some man you trust (say, me) to Chambery

And take precautions I acquaint you with,

Your father will return here. 60

Charles. Are you crazed,

D'Ormea? Here? For what? As well
return

To take his crown!

D'Ormea. He will return for that.

Charles [to POLYXENA]. You have not listened to this man?

Polyxena. He spoke
About your safety — and I listened.

[He disengages himself from her arms.]

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. What

Apprised you of the Count's intentions?

D'Ormea. Me?

His heart, sir; you may not be used to read

Such evidence however; therefore read

[Pointing to POLYXENA'S papers.]

My evidence.

Charles [to POLYXENA]. Oh, worthy this of you!

And of your speech I never have forgotten,
Though I professed forgetfulness; which 70

haunts me

As if I did not know how false it was;
Which made me toil unconsciously thus
long
That there might be no least occasion
left

For aught of its prediction coming true!
And now, when there is left no least occasion

To instigate my father to such crime —
When I might venture to forget (I hoped)
That speech and recognise Polyxena —
Oh worthy, to revive, and tenfold worse, 10 That plague! D'Ormea at your ear, his slanders

Still in your hand! Silent?

Polyxena. As the wronged are.

Charles. And you, D'Ormea, since when have you presumed To spy upon my father? I conceive
What that wise paper shows, and easily.
Since when?

D'Ormea. The when and where and how belong

To me. 'Tis sad work, but I deal in such.
You oftimes serve yourself; I'd serve you
here:

Use makes me not so squeamish. In a
word,

Since the first hour he went to Chambery,
20 Of his seven servants, five have I suborned.

Charles. You hate my father?

D'Ormea. Oh, just as you will!

[Looking at POLYXENA.]

A minute since, I loved him — hate him,
now!

What matter? — if you ponder just one
thing:

Has he that treaty? — he is setting forward
Already. Are your guards here?

Charles. Well for you
They are not! [To POLYXENA.] Him I knew of old, but you —

To hear that pickthank, further his designs! [To D'ORMEA.]

Guards? — were they here, I'd bid them,
for your trouble,

Arrest you.

D'Ormea. Guards you shall not want.
I lived

30 The servant of your choice, not of your need.

You never greatly needed me till now
That you discard me. This is my arrest.
Again I tender you my charge — its duty
Would bid me press you read those documents.

Here, sir! [Offering his badge of office.]

Charles [taking it]. The papers also!

Do you think

I dare not read them?

Polyxena. Read them, sir!

Charles. They prove,

My father, still a month within the year

Since he so solemnly consigned it me,

Means to resume his crown? They shall prove that,

Or my best dungeon . . . 46

D'Ormea. Even say, Chambery!

'Tis vacant, I surmise, by this.

Charles. You prove

Your words or pay their forfeit, sir. Go

there!

Polyxena, one chance to rend the veil

Thickening and blackening 'twixt us two!

Do say,

You'll see the falsehood of the charges

proved!

Do say, at least, you wish to see them

proved

False charges — my heart's love of other times!

Polyxena. Ah, Charles!

Charles [to D'ORMEA]. Precede me, sir!

D'Ormea. And I'm at length

A martyr for the truth! No end, they say,

Of miracles. My conscious innocence! 56

As they go out, enter — by the middle door at which he pauses — VICTOR.

Victor. Sure I heard voices? No. Well,

I do best

To make at once for this, the heart o' the

place.

The old room! Nothing changed! So near my seat,

D'Ormea?

[Pushing away the stool which is

by the KING's chair.]

I want that meeting over first,

I know not why. Tush, he, D'Ormea,

slow

To hearten me, the supple knave? That

burst

Of spite so eased him! He'll inform me . . .

What?

Why come I hither? All's in rough: let

all

Remain rough. There's full time to draw back — nay,

There's nought to draw back from, as yet; 60

whereas,

If reason should be, to arrest a course

Of error — reason good, to interpose

And save, as I have saved so many times,

Our House, admonish my son's giddy

youth,

Relieve him of a weight that proves too

much —

Now is the time, — or now, or never.

'Faith,

This kind of step is pitiful, not due

To Charles, this stealing back — hither,

because

He's from his capital! Oh Victor! Victor!

But thus it is. The age of crafty men 70

Is loathsome; youth contrives to carry off

Dissimulation; we may intersperse

Extenuating passages of strength,

Ardour, vivacity, and wit — may turn
E'en guile into a voluntary grace:
But one's old age, when graces drop away
And leave guile the pure staple of our lives —
Ah, loathsome!

Not so — or why pause I? Turin
Is mine to have, were I so minded, for The asking; all the army's mine — I've witnessed
Each private fight beneath me; all the Court's

Mine too; and, best of all, D'Ormea's still to D'Ormea and mine. There's some grace clinging yet.

Had I decided on this step, ere midnight
I'd take the crown.

No. Just this step to rise
Exhausts me. Here am I arrived: the rest Must be done for me. Would I could sit
here

And let things right themselves, the masque unmasque

Of the old King, crownless, grey hair and hot blood, —

The young King, crowned, but calm before his time,

They say, — the eager mistress with her taunts, —

And the sad earnest wife who motions me to Away — ay, there she knelt to me! E'en
yet

I can return and sleep at Chambery
A dream out.

Rather shake it off at Turin,
King Victor! Say: to Turin — yes, or no?
'Tis this relentless noonday-lighted
chamber,

Lighted like life but silent as the grave,
That disconcerts me. That's the change must strike.

No silence last year! Some one flung doors wide

(Those two great doors which scrutinise me now)

And out I went 'mid crowds of men — men talking,

to Men watching if my lip fell or brow knit,
Men saw me safe forth, put me on my road:
That makes the misery of this return.

Oh had a battle done it! Had I dropped,
Haling some battle, three entire days old, Hither and thither by the forehead —
dropped

In Spain, in Austria, best of all, in France —

Spurned on its horns or underneath its hooves,

When the spent monster went upon its knees

To pad and pash the prostrate wretch — I,
Victor,

to Sole to have stood up against France, beat
down

By inches, brayed to pieces finally
In some vast unimaginable charge,
A flying hell of horse and foot and guns
Over me, and all's lost, for ever lost, There's no more Victor when the world wakes up!

Then silence, as of a raw battle-field, Throughout the world. Then after (as whole days

After, you catch at intervals faint noise Through the stiff crust of frozen blood) — there creeps

A rumour forth, so faint, no noise at all, 50
That a strange old man, with face outworn for wounds,

Is stumbling on from frontier town to town,
Beggings a pittance that may help him find His Turin out; what scorn and laughter
follow

The coin you fling into his cap! And last,
Some bright morn, how men crowd about the midst

O' the market-place, where takes the old king breath

Ere with his crutch he strike the palace-gate

Wide ope!

To Turin, yes or no — or no?

Re-enter CHARLES with papers.

Charles. Just as I thought! A miser- 60 able falsehood

Of hirelings discontented with their pay
And longing for enfranchisement! A few Testy expressions of old age that thinks
To keep alive its dignity o'er slaves
By means that suit their natures!

[Tearing them.] Thus they shake
My faith in Victor!

[Turning, he discovers VICTOR.
Victor [after a pause]. Not at Evian,
Charles?

What's this? Why do you run to close the doors?

No welcome for your father?

Charles [aside]. Not his voice!
What would I give for one imperious tone
Of the old sort! That's gone for ever. 70

Victor. Must
I ask once more . . .

Charles. No — I concede it, sir!
You are returned for . . . true, your health declines;

True, Chambery's a bleak unkindly spot;
You'd choose one fitter for your final lodge —

Veneria, or Moncagliar — ay, that's close
And I concede it.

Victor. I received advices
Of the conclusion of the Spanish matter,
Dated from Evian baths . . .

Charles. And you forbore
To visit me at Evian, satisfied

The work I had to do would fully task
The little wit I have, and that your presence

Would only disconcert me —

Victor.

Charles?

Charles. — Me, set

For ever in a foreign course to yours,

And . . .

Sir, this way of wile were good to catch,
But I have not the sleight of it. The truth!

Though I sink under it! What brings you here?

Victor. Not hope of this reception, certainly,

From one who'd scarce assume a stranger mode

10 Of speech, did I return to bring about
Some awfulest calamity!

Charles.

— You mean,

Did you require your crown again! Oh yes,

I should speak otherwise! But turn not that

To jesting! Sir, the truth! Your health declines?

Is aught deficient in your equipage?

Wisely you seek myself to make complaint,
And foil the malice of the world which laughs

At petty discontents; but I shall care
That not a soul knows of this visit. Speak!

20 Victor [aside]. Here is the grateful much-professing son

Prepared to worship me, for whose sole sake

I think to waive my plans of public good!
[Aloud.] Nay, Charles, if I did seek to take once more

My crown, were so disposed to plague myself,

What would be warrant for this bitterness?
I gave it — grant I would resume it —

well?

Charles. I should say simply — leaving out the why

And how — you made me swear to keep that crown:

And as you then intended . . .

Victor.

Fool! What way

30 Could I intend or not intend? As man,
With a man's will, when I say "I intend,"

I can intend up to a certain point,
No farther. I intended to preserve

The crown of Savoy and Sardinia whole:
And if events arise demonstrating

The way, I hoped should guard it, rather like

To lose it . . .

Charles.

Keep within your sphere and mine!

It is God's province we usurp on, else.
Here, blindfold through the maze of things we walk

By a slight clue of false, true, right and wrong;

All else is rambling and presumption. I Have sworn to keep this kingdom: there's my truth.

Victor. Truth, boy, is here, within my breast; and in

Your recognition of it, truth is, too;

And in the effect of all this tortuous dealing With falsehood, used to carry out the truth,

— In its success, this falsehood turns, again,

Truth for the world. But you are right: these themes

Are over-subtle. I should rather say
In such a case, frankly, — it fails, my 50

scheme:

I hope to see you bring about, yourself,
What I must bring about. I interpose

On your behalf — with my son's good in sight —

To hold what he is nearly letting go,
Confirm his title, add a grace perhaps.

There's Sicily, for instance, — granted me
And taken back, some years since: till I

give
That island with the rest, my work's half done.

For his sake, therefore, as of those he rules . . .

Charles. Our sakes are one; and that, 60
you could not say,

Because my answer would present itself
Forthwith: — a year has wrought an age's

change.

This people's not the people now, you once
Could benefit; nor is my policy

Your policy.

Victor [with an outburst]. I know it!
You undo

All I have done — my life of toil and care!
I left you this the absolute rule

In Europe: do you think I sit and smile,
Bid you throw power to the populace —

See my Sardinia, that has kept apart, 70
Join in the mad and democratic whirl

Whereto I see all Europe haste full tide?
England casts off her kings; France

mimics England:
This realm I hoped was safe. Yet here I

talk,
When I can save it, not by force alone,

But bidding plagues, which follow sons
like you,

Fasten upon my disobedient . . .

[Recollecting himself.] Surely
I could say this — if minded so — my son?

Charles. You could not. Bitterer curses than your curse

Have I long since denounced upon myself 80
If I misused my power. In fear of these

I entered on those measures — will abide
By them: so, I should say, Count

Tende . . .

Victor. No!
But no! But if, my Charles, your — more than old —
Half-foolish father urged these arguments,
And then confessed them futile, but said plainly
That he forgot his promise, found his
strength
Fail him, had thought at savage Cham-
bery
Too much of brilliant Turin, Rivoli here,
And Susa, and Veneria, and Superga —
Pined for the pleasant places he had built 10 When he was fortunate and young Charles. My father!
Victor. Stay yet! — and if he said he could not die
Deprived of baubles he had put aside,
He deemed, for ever — of the Crown that binds
Your brain up, whole, sound and impregnable,
Creating kingliness — the Sceptre too,
Whose mere wind, should you wave it, back would beat Invaders — and the golden Ball which throbs
As if you grasped the palpitating heart Indeed o' the realm, to mould as choose you may!
20 — If I must totter up and down the streets
My sires built, where myself have introduced
And fostered laws and letters, sciences,
The civil and the military arts!
Stay, Charles! I see you letting me pretend
To live my former self once more — King
Victor,
The venturous yet politic: they style me Again, the Father of the Prince: friends
wink
Good-humouredly at the delusion you
So sedulously guard from all rough truths 30 That else would break upon my dotage! —
You —
Whom now I see preventing my old
shame —
I tell not, point by cruel point, my tale —
For is't not in your breast my brow is hid?
Is not your hand extended? Say you
not . . .

Enter D'ORMEA, leading in POLYXENA.

Polyxena [advancing and withdrawing CHARLES — to VICTOR]. In this conjuncture even, he would say (Though with a moistened eye and quivering lip)
The suppliant is my father. I must save A great man from himself, nor see him fling

His well-earned fame away: there must not follow
Ruin so utter, a break-down of worth 40
So absolute: no enemy shall learn,
He thrust his child 'twixt danger and
himself,
And, when that child somehow stood danger out,
Stole back with serpent wiles to ruin
Charles
— Body, that's much, — and soul, that's more — and realm, That's most of all! No enemy shall
say . . .
D'Ormea. Do you repent, sir?
Victor [resuming himself]. D'Ormea?
This is well!
Worthily done, King Charles, craftily
done!
Judiciously you post these, to o'erhear
The little your importunate father thrusts 50 Himself on you to say! — Ah, they'll correct
The amiable blind facility
You show in answering his peevish suit.
What can he need to sue for? Thanks,
D'Ormea!
You have fulfilled your office: but for you,
The old Count might have drawn some few more livres
To swell his income! Had you, lady,
missed
The moment, a permission might be granted
To buttress up my ruinous old pile!
But you remember properly the list 60
Of wise precautions I took when I gave Nearly as much away — to reap the fruits
I should have looked for!
Charles. Thanks, sir: degrade me,
So you remain yourself! Adieu!
Victor. I'll not Forget it for the future, nor presume
Next time to slight such mediators! Nay —
Had I first moved them both to intercede,
I might secure a chamber in Moncaglior
— Who knows?
Charles. Adieu!
Victor. You bid me this adieu 70
With the old spirit?
Charles. Adieu!
Victor. Charles — Charles!
Charles. Adieu!
[VICTOR goes.]
Charles. You were mistaken, Marquis, as you hear.
'Twas for another purpose the Count
came.
The Count desires Moncaglior. Give the order!
D'Ormea [leisurely]. Your minister has lost your confidence,
Asserting late, for his own purposes,
Count Tende would . . .

Charles [flinging his badge back]. Be still the minister!
And give a loose to your insulting joy;
It irks me more thus stifled than expressed:
Loose it!

D'Ormea. There's none to loose, alas!
I see
I never am to die a martyr.

Polyxena. Charles!

Charles. No praise, at least, Polyxena — no praise!

KING CHARLES.

PART II.

D'ORMEA, seated, folding papers he has been examining.

This at the last effects it: now, King
Charles
Or else King Victor — that's a balance:
but now,

D'Ormea the arch-culprit, either turn 10 O' the scale, — that's sure enough. A point to solve,

My masters, moralists, whate'er your style!
When you discover why I push myself
Into a pitfall you'd pass safely by, Impart to me among the rest! No matter.

Prompt are the righteous ever with their rede

To us the wrongful; lesson them this once!
For safe among the wicked are you set,
D'Ormea! We lament life's brevity, Yet quarter e'en the threescore years and ten,

20 Nor stick to call the quarter roundly "life."
D'Ormea was wicked, say, some twenty
years;

A tree so long was stunted; afterward,
What if it grew, continued growing, till
No fellow of the forest equalled it?

'Twas a stump then; a stump it still must
be:

While forward saplings, at the outset
checked,

In virtue of that first sprout keep their style
Amid the forests' green fraternity.

Thus I shoot up to surely get lopped down 30 And bound up for the burning. Now for
it!

Enter CHARLES and POLYXENA with Attendants.

D'Ormea [*ris*es]. Sir, in the due discharge of this my office —

This enforced summons of yourself from Turin,

And the disclosure I am bound to make
To-night, — there must already be, I feel,
So much that wounds . . .

Charles. Well, sir?

D'Ormea. — That I, perchance,
May utter also what, another time,
Would irk much, — it may prove less irksome now.

Charles. What would you utter?

D'Ormea. That I from my soul
Grieve at to-night's event: for you I grieve, E'en grieve for . . .

Charles. Tush, another time for talk!
My kingdom is in imminent danger?

D'Ormea. Let
The Count communicate with France — its King,

His grandson, will have Fleury's aid for
this,

Though for no other war.

Charles. First for the levies:
What forces can I muster presently?

[D'ORMEA delivers papers which CHARLES inspects.

Charles. Good — very good. Mon-torio . . . how is this?

— Equips me double the old complement
Of soldiers?

D'Ormea. Since his land has been relieved

From double imposts, this he manages.
But under the late monarch . . .

Charles. Peace! I know.
Count Spava has omitted mentioning

What proxy is to head these troops of his.

D'Ormea. Count Spava means to head his troops himself.

Something to fight for now; "Whereas,"
says he,

"Under the sovereign's father" . . .

Charles. It would seem
That all my people love me.

D'Ormea. Yes.

[To POLYXENA while, CHARLES continues to inspect the papers.

A temper
Like Victor's may avail to keep a state;
He terrifies men and they fall not off;

Good to restrain: best, if restraint were all.
But, with the silent circle round him, ends

60 Such sway: our King's begins precisely
there.

For to suggest, impel and set at work,
Is quite another function. Men may slight,

In time of peace, the King who brought them peace:

In war, — his voice, his eyes, help more than fear.

They love you, sir!

Charles [to Attendants]. Bring the regalia forth!

Quit the room! And now, Marquis,
answer me!

Why should the King of France invade my realm?

D'Ormea. Why? Did I not acquaint your Majesty

An hour ago?

Charles. I choose to hear again
What then I heard.

D'Ormea. Because, sir, as I said,
Your father is resolved to have his crown
At any risk; and, as I judge, calls in The foreigner to aid him.

Charles. And your reason
For saying this?

D'Ormea [aside]. Ay, just his father's
way!

[TO CHARLES.] The Count wrote yesterday to your forces' Chief,

Rhebinder — made demand of help —

Charles. To try Rhebinder — he's of alien blood: aught
else?

D'Ormea. Receiving a refusal, — some hours after,

The Count called on Del Borgo to deliver
The Act of Abdication: he refusing,
Or hesitating, rather —

Charles. What ensued?

D'Ormea. At midnight, only two hours
since, at Turin,

He rode in person to the citadel
With one attendant, to Soccorso gate,
And bade the governor, San Remi, open — Admit him.

Charles. For a purpose I divine.
These three were faithful, then?

D'Ormea. They told it me.
And I —

Charles. Most faithful —

D'Ormea. Tell it you — with this
Moreover of my own: if, an hour hence,
You have not interposed, the Count will be
O' the road to France for succour.

Charles. Very good!
You do your duty now to me your monarch Fully, I warrant? — have, that is, your project

For saving both of us disgrace, no doubt?
D'Ormea. I give my counsel, — and the only one.

A month since, I besought you to employ Restraints which had prevented many a pang:

30 But now the harsher course must be pursued.

These papers, made for the emergency,
Will pain you to subscribe: this is a list Of those suspected merely — men to
watch;

This — of the few of the Count's very household

You must, however reluctantly, arrest;
While here's a method of remonstrance —
sure

Not stronger than the case demands — to
take

With the Count's self.

Charles. Deliver those three papers.

Polyxena [while CHARLES inspects them — to D'ORMEA]. Your measures are not over-harsh, sir: France

Will hardly be deterred from her intents 40
By these.

D'Ormea. If who proposes might dis-
pose,

I could soon satisfy you. Even these,
Hear what he'll say at my presenting!

Charles [who has signed them]. There!
About the warrants! You've my signature

What turns you pale? I do my duty by
you

In acting boldly thus on your advice.

D'Ormea [reading them separately].

Arrest the people I suspected merely?

Charles. Did you suspect them?

D'Ormea. Doubtless: but — but — sir,

This Forquieri's governor of Turin,

And Rivarol and he have influence over 50

Half of the capital! Rabella, too?

Why, sir —

Charles. Oh, leave the fear to me!

D'Ormea [still reading]. You bid me
Incarcerate the people on this list?

Sir

Charles. But you never bade arrest
those men,

So close related to my father too,

On trifling grounds?

D'Ormea. Oh, as for that, St. George,
President of Chambery's senators,

Is hatching treason! still —

[More troubled.] Sir, Count Cumiane Is brother to your father's wife! What's
here?

Arrest the wife herself? 60

Charles. You seem to think
A venial crime this plot against me. Well?

D'Ormea [who has read the last paper].
Wherefore am I thus ruined? Why not take

My life at once? This poor formality
Is, let me say, unworthy you! Prevent it You, madam! I have served you, am prepared

For all disgraces: only, let disgrace

Be plain, be proper — proper for the world
To pass its judgment on 'twixt you and
me!

Take back your warrant, I will none of it!

Charles. Here is a man to talk of fickle- 70
ness!

He stakes his life upon my father's falsehood;

I bid him . . .

D'Ormea. Not you! Were he trebly
false,

You do not bid me . . .

Charles. Is't not written there?
I thought so: give — I'll set it right.

D'Ormea. Is it there?

Oh yes, and plain — arrest him now — drag here

Your father! And were all six times as plain,

Do you suppose I trust it?

Charles. Just one word!
You bring him, taken in the act of flight,
Or else your life is forfeit.

D'Ormea. Ay, to Turin
I bring him, and to-morrow?

Charles. Here and now!
The whole thing is a lie, a hateful lie,
As I believed and as my father said.
I knew it from the first, but was compelled
To circumvent you; and the great D'Ormea,

10 That baffled Alberoni and tricked Coscia,
The miserable sower of such discord
'Twixt sire and son, is in the toils at last,
Oh I see! you arrive — this plan of yours,
Weak as it is, torments sufficiently
A sick old peevish man — wrings hasty
speech,
An ill-considered threat from him; that's noted;

Then out you ferret papers, his amusement
In lonely hours of lassitude — examine
The day-by-day report of your paid spies — 20 And back you come: all was not ripe, you
find,

And, as you hope, may keep from ripening
yet,
But you were in bare time! Only, 'twere
best

I never saw my father — these old men
Are potent in excuses: and meanwhile, D'Ormea's the man I cannot do without!
Polyxena. Charles —

Charles. Ah, no question!
You against me too!
You'd have me eat and drink and sleep,
live, die

With this lie coiled about me, choking me!
No, no, D'Ormea! You venture life, you
say,

30 Upon my father's perfidy: and I Have, on the whole, no right to disregard
The chains of testimony you thus wind
About me; though I do — do from my soul
Discredit them: still I must authorise
These measures, and I will. Perugia!

[Many Officers enter.] Count —
You and Solar, with all the force you
have,
Stand at the Marquis' orders: what he bids,

Implicitly perform! You are to bring
A traitor here; the man that's likeliest one

40 At present, fronts me; you are at his beck
For a full hour! he undertakes to show
A fouler than himself, — but, failing that,
Return with him, and, as my father lives,
He dies this night! The clemency you
blame

So oft, shall be revoked — rights exercised,
Too long abjured.

[To D'ORMEA.] Now sir, about the
work!

To save your king and country! Take the warrant!

D'Ormea. You hear the sovereign's mandate, Count Perugia?

Obeys me! As your diligence, expect Reward! All follow to Moncagliere!

Charles [in great anguish.] D'Ormea!
[D'ORMEA goes.]

He goes, lit up with that appalling smile!
[To POLYXENA, after a pause.]

At least you understand all this?
Polyxena. These means

Of our defence — these measures of precaution?

Charles. It must be the best way; I should have else

Withered beneath his scorn.

Polyxena. What would you say?

Charles. Why, do you think I mean to keep the crown,

Polyxena?
Polyxena. You then believe the story

In spite of all — that Victor comes?
Charles. Believe it?

I know that he is coming — feel the
strength

That has upheld me leave me at his 60
coming!

'Twas mine, and now he takes his own
again.

Some kinds of strength are well enough to have;

But who's to have that strength? Let my crown go!

I meant to keep it; but I cannot — cannot!
Only, he shall not taunt me — he, the
first . . .

See if he would not be the first to taunt me
With having left his kingdom at a word.
With letting it be conquered without stroke,
With . . . no — no — 'tis no worse than when he left!

I've just to bid him take it, and, that over, 70
We'll fly away — fly, for I loathe this

Turin,
This Rivoli, all titles loathe, all state.

We'd best go to your country — unless God
Send I die now!

Polyxena. Charles, hear me!

Charles. And again
Shall you be my Polyxena — you'll take
me

Out of this woe! Yes, do speak, and keep speaking!

I would not let you speak just now, for fear
You'd counsel me against him: but talk,
now,

As we two used to talk in blessed times
Bid me endure all his caprices; take me &
From this mad post above him!

Polyxena. I believe

We are undone, but from a different cause.

All your resources, down to the least guard,
Are at D'Ormea's beck. What if, the
while,

He act in concert with your father? We Indeed were lost. This lonely Rivoli —
Where find a better place for them?

Charles [pacing the room]. And why Does Victor come? To undo all that's
done,

Restore the past, prevent the future! Seat
His mistress in your seat, and place in mine
. . . Oh, my own people, whom will you find there,

o To ask of, to consult with, to care for,
To hold up with your hands? Whom?
One that's false —

False — from the head's crown to the foot's sole, false!

The best is, that I knew it in my heart
From the beginning, and expected this,
And hated you, Polyxena, because You saw thro' him, though I too saw thro'
him,

Saw that he meant this while he crowned me, while

He prayed for me, — nay, while he kissed my brow,

I saw —

Polyxena. But if your measures take effect,

o D'Ormea true to you?

Charles. Then worst of all!
I shall have loosed that callous wretch on
him!

Well may the woman taunt him with his
child —

I, eating here his bread, clothed in his clothes,

Seated upon his seat, let slip D'Ormea
To outrage him! We talk — perchance he tears

My father from his bed; the old hands feel
For one who is not, but who should be
there,

He finds D'Ormea! D'Ormea too finds
him!

The crowded chamber when the lights go
out —

o Closed doors — the horrid scuffle in the dark —

The accursed prompting of the minute!
My guards!

To horse — and after, with me — and prevent!

Polyxena [seizing his hand]. King Charles! Pause here upon this strip of time

Allotted you out of eternity!

Crowns are from God: you in his name hold yours.

Your life's no least thing, were it fit your
life

Should be abjured along with rule; but
now,

Keep both! Your duty is to live and rule —
You, who would vulgarly look fine enough
In the world's eye, deserting your soul's 4c
charge, —

Ay, you would have men's praise, this Rivoli

Would be illumined! While, as 'tis, no
doubt,

Something of stain will ever rest on you;
No one will rightly know why you refused To abdicate; they'll talk of deeds you could

Have done, no doubt, — nor do I much expect

Future achievement will blot out the past,
Envelope it in haze — nor shall we two

Live happy any more. 'Twill be, I feel,
Only in moments that the duty's seen 5c

As palpably as now: the months, the years
Of painful indistinctness are to come, While daily must we tread these palace-rooms

Pregnant with memories of the past: your eye

May turn to mine and find no comfort
there,

Through fancies that beset me, as yourself,
Of other courses, with far other issues,

We might have taken this great night: such
bear,

As I will bear! What matters happiness?
Duty! There's man's one moment: this is 6c
yours!

[Putting the crown on his head, and the sceptre in his hand, she places him on his seat: a long pause and silence.]

Enter D'ORMEA and VICTOR, with Guards.

Victor. At last I speak; but once — that once, to you!

'Tis you I ask, not these your varletry,
Who's King of us?

Charles [from his seat]. Count Tende . . .
Victor. What your spies

Assert I ponder in my soul, I say — Here to your face, amid your guards! I

choose
To take again the crown whose shadow I gave —

For still its potency surrounds the weak

White locks their felon hands have discomposed.

Or I'll not ask who's King, but simply,
who

Withholds the crown I claim? Deliver it! 7c
I have no friend in the wide world: nor

France
Nor England cares for me: you see the sum

Of what I can avail. Deliver it!
Charles. Take it, my father!

And now say in turn,
Was it done well, my father — sure not

well,

- To try me thus! I might have seen much
cause
For keeping it — too easily seen cause!
But, from that moment, e'en more woefully
My life had pined away, than pine it will.
Already you have much to answer for.
My life to pine is nothing, — her sunk eyes Were happy once! No doubt, my people
think
I am their King still . . . but I cannot strive!
Take it!
Victor [one hand on the crown CHARLES offers, the other on his neck]. So few years give it quietly.
- 10 My son! It will drop from me. See you
not?
A crown's unlike a sword to give away —
That, let a strong hand to a weak hand
give!
But crowns should slip from palsied brows to heads
Young as this head: yet mine is weak
enough,
E'en weaker than I knew. I seek for phrases
To vindicate my right. 'Tis of a piece!
All is alike gone by with me — who beat Once D'Orleans in his lines — his very lines!
To have been Eugene's comrade, Louis's rival,
- 20 And now . . .
Charles [putting the crown on him, to the rest]. The King speaks, yet none kneels, I think!
Victor. I am then King! As I became a King
Despite the nations, kept myself a King,
So I die King, with Kingship dying too
Around me. I have lasted Europe's time.
What wants my story of completion?
Where
Must needs the damning break show?
Who mistrusts
My children here — tell they of any break
'Twixt my day's sunrise and its fiery fall?
And who were by me when I died but they?
- 30 D'Ormea there!
Charles. What means he?
Victor. Ever there!
Charles — how to save your story!
Mine must go.
Say — say that you refused the crown to
me!
Charles, yours shall be my story! You immured
- Me, say, at Rivoli. A single year
I spend without a sight of you, then die.
That will serve every purpose — tell that tale
The world!
Charles. Mistrust me? Help!
Victor. Past help, past reach!
'Tis in the heart — you cannot reach the
heart:
This broke mine, that I did believe, you,
Charles,
Would have denied me and disgraced me. 40
Polyxena. Charles
Has never ceased to be your subject, sir!
He reigned at first through setting up
yourself
As pattern: if he e'er seemed harsh to
you,
'Twas from a too intense appreciation
Of your own character: he acted you —
Ne'er for an instant did I think it real,
Nor look for any other than this end.
I hold him worlds the worse on that account;
But so it was.
Charles [to POLYXENA]. I love you now
indeed.
[To VICTOR.] You never knew me. 50
Victor. Hardly till this moment,
When I seem learning many other things
Because the time for using them is past.
If 'twere to do again! That's idly wished.
Truthfulness might prove policy as good
As guile. Is this my daughter's forehead?
Yes:
I've made it fitter now to be a queen's Than formerly: I've ploughed the deep lines there
Which keep too well a crown from slipping
off.
No matter. Guile has made me King
again.
Louis — 'twas in King Victor's time: — 60
long since,
When Louis reigned and, also, Victor reigned.
How the world talks already of us two!
God of eclipse and each discoloured star,
Why do I linger then?
Ha! Where lurks he?
D'Ormea! Nearer to your King! Now
stand!
[Collecting his strength as D'ORMEA approaches.
You lied, D'Ormea! I do not repent.
[Dies.

DRAMATIC LYRICS.

184- TO 185-.

CAVALIER TUNES.

I. MARCHING ALONG.

I.

KENTISH Sir Byng stood for his King, Bidding the crop-headed Parliament swing:

And, pressing a troop unable to stoop
And see the rogues flourish and honest folk droop,

Marched them along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song.

II.

God for King Charles! Pym and such carles

To the Devil that prompts 'em their treasonous parles!

Cavaliers, up! Lips from the cup,

Hands from the pasty, nor bite take nor sup Till you're —

CHORUS. — *Marching along, fifty-
score strong,*

*Great-hearted gentlemen,
singing this song.*

III.

Hampden to hell, and his obsequies' knell Serve Hazelrig, Fiennes, and young Harry as well!

England, good cheer! Rupert is near!
Kentish and loyalists, keep we not here

CHORUS. — *Marching along, fifty-
score strong,*

*Great-hearted gentlemen,
singing this song?*

IV.

Then, God for King Charles! Pym and his snarls

To the Devil that pricks on such pestilent
carles!

Hold by the right, you double your might;
So, onward to Nottingham, fresh for the fight,

CHORUS. — *March we along, fifty-
score strong,*

*Great-hearted gentlemen,
singing this song!*

II. GIVE A ROUSE.

I.

King Charles, and who'll do him right
now?

King Charles, and who's ripe for fight
now?

Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

II.

Who gave me the goods that went since? 30

Who raised me the house that sank once?

Who helped me to gold I spent since?

Who found me in wine you drank once?

CHORUS. — *King Charles, and who'll
do him right now?*

King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?

Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,

King Charles!

III.

To whom used my boy George quaff else,
By the old fool's side that begot him?

For whom did he cheer and laugh else, 40

While Noll's damned troopers shot him?

CHORUS. — *King Charles, and who'll
do him right now?*

King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?

Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,

King Charles!

III. BOOT AND SADDLE.

I.

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

Rescue my castle before the hot day

Brightens to blue from its silvery grey,

CHORUS. — *Boot, saddle, to horse, and
away!*

II.

Ride past the suburbs, asleep as you'd say; 50

Many's the friend there, will listen and pray

"God's luck to gallants that strike up the lay —

CHORUS. — "Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

III.

Forty miles off, like a roebuck at bay,
Flouts Castle Brancepeth the Round-heads' array:

Who laughs, "Good fellows ere this, by my fay,

CHORUS. — "Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

IV.

Who? My wife Gertrude; that, honest and gay,
Laughs when you talk of surrendering,
"Nay!

"I've better counsellors; what counsel they?

10 CHORUS. — "Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

THE LOST LEADER.

I.

JUST for a handful of silver he left us,
Just for a riband to stick in his coat —
Found the one gift of which fortune bereft us,

Lost all the others she lets us devote;
They, with the gold to give, doled him out silver,

So much was theirs who so little allowed:
How all our copper had gone for his service!

Rags — were they purple, his heart had been proud!

We that had loved him so, followed him, honoured him,

20 Lived in his mild and magnificent eye,
Learned his great language, caught his clear accents,

Made him our pattern to live and to die!
Shakespeare was of us, Milton was for us,
Burns, Shelley, were with us, — they watch from their graves!

He alone breaks from the van and the freemen,

— He alone sinks to the rear and the slaves!

II.

We shall march prospering, — not thro' his presence;

Songs may inspirit us, — not from his lyre;

Deeds will be done, — while he boasts his quiescence,

30 Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire:

Blot out his name, then, record one lost soul more,

One task more declined, one more foot-path untrod,

One more devils' triumph and sorrow for angels,

One wrong more to man, one more insult to God!

Life's night begins: let him never come back to us!

There would be doubt, hesitation and pain,

Forced praise on our part — the glimmer of twilight,

Never glad confident morning again!

Best fight on well, for we taught him — strike gallantly,

Menace our heart ere we master his 40 own;

Then let him receive the new knowledge and wait us,

Pardoned in heaven, the first by the throne!

"HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX."

[16—.]

I.

I SPRANG to the stirrup, and Joris, and he;
I galloped, Dirck galloped, we galloped all three;

"Good speed!" cried the watch, as the gatebolts undrew;

"Speed!" echoed the wall to us galloping through;

Behind shut the postern, the lights sank to rest,

And into the midnight we galloped abreast.

II.

Not a word to each other; we kept the great pace

Neck by neck, stride by stride, never 50 changing our place;

I turned in my saddle and made its girths tight,

Then shortened each stirrup, and set the pique right,

Rebuckled the cheek-strap, chained slacker the bit,

Nor galloped less steadily Roland a whit.

III.

'Twas moonset at starting; but while we drew near

Lokeren, the cocks crew and twilight dawned clear;

At Boom, a great yellow star came out to see;

At Düffeld, 'twas morning as plain as could
be;
And from Mecheln church-steeple we heard the half-chime,
So, Joris broke silence with, "Yet there is time!"

IV.

At Aershot, up leaped of a sudden the sun,
And against him the cattle stood black every one,
To stare thro' the mist at us galloping
past,
And I saw my stout galloper Roland at
last,
With resolute shoulders, each butting away
The haze, as some bluff river headland its spray:

V.

And his low head and crest, just one sharp ear bent back
For my voice, and the other pricked out on his track;
And one eye's black intelligence, — ever that glance
O'er its white edge at me, his own master,
askance!
And the thick heavy spume-flakes which aye and anon
His fierce lips shook upwards in galloping on.

VI.

By Hasselt, Dirck groaned; and cried Joris, "Stay spur!
"Your Roos galloped bravely, the fault's not in her,
"We'll remember at Aix" — for one heard the quick wheeze
Of her chest, saw the stretched neck and staggering knees,
And sunk tail, and horrible heave of the flank,
As down on her haunches she shuddered and sank.

VII.

So, we were left galloping, Joris and I, Past Looz and past Tongres, no cloud in the sky;
The broad sun above laughed a pitiless
laugh,
'Neath our feet broke the brittle bright stubble like chaff;
Till over by Dalhem a dome-spire sprang
white,
And "Gallop," gasped Joris, "for Aix is in sight!"

VIII.

"How they'll greet us!" — and all in a moment his roan
Rolled neck and croup over, lay dead as a stone;

And there was my Roland to bear the 30
whole weight
Of the news which alone could save Aix
from her fate,
With his nostrils like pits full of blood to the brim,
And with circles of red for his eye-sockets'
rim.

IX.

Then I cast loose my buffcoat, each holster
let fall,
Shook off both my jack-boots, let go belt
and all,
Stood up in the stirrup, leaned, patted his
ear,
Called my Roland his pet-name, my horse without peer;
Clapped my hands, laughed and sang, any noise, bad or good,
Till at length into Aix Roland galloped and stood.

X.

And all I remember is — friends flocking 40
round
As I sat with his head 'twixt my knees on
the ground;
And no voice but was praising this Roland
of mine,
As I poured down his throat our last measure of wine,
Which (the burgesses voted by common consent)
Was no more than his due who brought good news from Ghent.

THROUGH THE METIDJA TO ABD-EL-KADR.

[Abd-el-Kadr was an Arab Chief of Algiers who resisted the French in 1833.]

I.

As I ride, as I ride,
With a full heart for my guide,
So its tide rocks my side,
As I ride, as I ride,
That, as I were double-eyed, 50
He in whom our Tribes confide,
Is descried, ways untried
As I ride, as I ride.

II.

As I ride, as I ride
To our Chief and his Allied,
Who dares chide my heart's pride
As I ride, as I ride?
Or are witnesses denied —
Through the desert waste and wide
Do I glide unspied 60
As I ride, as I ride?

III.

As I ride, as I ride,
When an inner voice has cried,
The sands slide, nor abide
(As I ride, as I ride)
O'er each visioned homicide
That came vaunting (has he lied?)
To reside — where he died,
As I ride, as I ride.

IV.

As I ride, as I ride,
Ne'er has spur my swift horse plied,
Yet his hide, streaked and pied,
As I ride, as I ride,
Shows where sweat has sprung and dried,
— Zebra-footed, ostrich-thighed —
How has viad stride with stride
As I ride, as I ride!

V.

As I ride, as I ride,
Could I loose what Fate has tied,
Ere I pried, she should hied
(As I ride, as I ride)
All that's meant me — satisfied
When the Prophet and the Bride
Stop veins I'd have subside
As I ride, as I ride!

NATIONALITY IN DRINKS.

I.

My heart sank with our Claret-flask,
Just now, beneath the heavy sedges
That serve this pond's black face for mask
And still at yonder broken edges
O' the hole, where up the bubbles glisten,
After my heart I look and listen.

II.

Our laughing little flask, compelled Thro' depth to depth more bleak and shady;
As when, both arms beside her held,
Feet straightened out, some gay French
lady
Is caught up from life's light and motion,
And dropped into death's silent ocean!

Up jumped Tokay on our table,
Like a pygmy castle-warder, Dwarfish to see, but stout and able,
Arms and accoutrements all in order;
And fierce he looked North, then, wheeling
South,
Blew with his bugle a challenge to Drouth,

Cocked his flap-hat with the tosspotfeather,
Twisted his thumb in his red moustache,
Jingled his huge brass spurs together,
Tightened his waist with its Buda sash,
And then, with an impudence nought could
abash,
Shrugged his hump-shoulder, to all the beholder,
For twenty such knaves he should laugh
but the bolder:
And so, with his sword-hilt gallantly jutting,
And dexter-hand on his haunch abutting,
Went the little man, Sir Ausbruch, strutting!

Here's to Nelson's memory!
'Tis the second time that I, at sea,
Right off Cape Trafalgar here,
Have drunk it deep in British Beer.
Nelson for ever — any time
Am I his to command in prose or rhyme!
Give me of Nelson only a touch,
And I save it, be it little or much:
Here's one our Captain gives, and so Down at the word, by George, shall it
go!
He says that at Greenwich they point the beholder
To Nelson's coat, "still with tar on the shoulder:
"For he used to lean with one shoulder digging,
"Jigging, as it were, and zig zag-zigging
"Up against the mizen-rigging!"

GARDEN FANCIES.

I. THE FLOWER'S NAME.

Here's the garden she walked across,
Arm in my arm, such a short while since:
Hark, now I push its wicket, the moss Hinders the hinges and makes them
wince!
She must have reached this shrub ere she
turned,
As back with that murmur the wicket swung;
For she laid the poor snail, my chance foot
spurned,
To feed and forget it the leaves among.

II.

Down this side of the gravel-walk
She went while her robe's edge brushed the box:
And here she paused in her gracious talk
To point me a moth on the milk-white phlox.

Roses, ranged in valiant row,
I will never think that she passed you by!
She loves you noble roses, I know;
But yonder, see, where the rock-plants lie!

III.

This flower she stopped at, finger on lip, Stooped over, in doubt, as settling its
claim;
Till she gave me, with pride to make no slip,
Its soft meandering Spanish name:
What a name! Was it love or praise?
Speech half-asleep or song half-awake?
I must learn Spanish, one of these days,
Only for that slow sweet name's sake.

IV.

Roses, if I live and do well,
I may bring her, one of these days,
To fix you fast with as fine a spell,
Fit you each with his Spanish phrase;
But do not detain me now; for she lingers
There, like sunshine over the ground,
And ever I see her soft white fingers
Searching after the bud she found.

V.

Flower, you Spaniard, look that you grow
not,
Stay as you are and be loved for ever!
Bud, if I kiss you 'tis that you blow not:
Mind, the shut pink mouth opens never!
For while it pouts, her fingers wrestle,
Twinkling the audacious leaves between,
Till round they turn and down they nestle —
Is not the dear mark still to be seen?

VI.

Where I find her not, beauties vanish;
Whither I follow her, beauties flee;
Is there no method to tell her in Spanish June's twice June since she breathed it
with me?
Come, bud, show me the least of her traces,
Treasure my lady's lightest footfall!
— Ah, you may flout and turn up your faces —
Roses, you are not so fair after all!

II. SIBRANDUS SCHAFNABURGENSIS.

Plague take all your pedants, say I!
He who wrote what I hold in my hand,
Centuries back was so good as to die,
Leaving this rubbish to cumber the land;
This, that was a book in his time,
Printed on paper and bound in leather,
Last month in the white of a matin-prime
Just when the birds sang all together.

II.

Into the garden I brought it to read,
And under the arbutue and laurustine
Read it, so help me grace in my need,
From title-page to closing line.
Chapter on chapter did I count,
As a curious traveller counts Stonehenge; 50
Added up the mortal amount;
And then proceeded to my revenge.

III.

Yonder's a plum-tree with a crevice
An owl would build in, were he but sage;
For a lap of moss, like a fine pont-levis
In a castle of the Middle Age,
Joins to a lip of gum, pure amber;
When he'd be private, there might he spend
Hours alone in his lady's chamber:
Into this crevice I dropped our friend. 60

IV.

Splash, went he, as under he ducked,
— At the bottom, I knew, rain-drippings stagnate:
Next, a handful of blossoms I plucked To bury him with, my bookshelf's magnate;
Then I went in-doors, brought out a loaf,
Half a cheese, and a bottle of Chablis:
Lay on the grass and forgot the oaf
Over a jolly chapter of Rabelais.

V.

Now, this morning, betwixt the moss
And gum that locked our friend in 70
limbo,
A spider had spun his web across,
And sat in the midst with arms akimbo:
So, I took pity, for learning's sake,
And, de profundis, accentibus latis,
Cantate! quoth I, as I got a rake;
And up I fished his delectable treatise.

VI.

Here you have it, dry in the sun,
With all the binding all of a blister,
And great blue spots where the ink has run,
And reddish streaks that wink and 80
glister
O'er the page so beautifully yellow:
Oh, well have the droppings played their tricks!
Did he guess how toadstools grow, this fellow?
Here's one stuck in his chapter six!

VII.

How did he like it when the live creatures
Tickled and toused and browsed him all
over,

And worm, slug, eft, with serious features, Came in, each one, for his right of trover?
 — When the water-beetle with great blind deaf face
 Made of her eggs the stately deposit,
 And the newt borrowed just so much of the preface
 As tiled in the top of his black wife's closet?

VIII.

All that life and fun and romping,
 All that frisking and twisting and coupling,
 While slowly our poor friend's leaves were swamping
 And clasps were cracking and covers suppling!
 As if you had carried sour John Knox
 To the play-house at Paris, Vienna or Munich,
 Fastened him into a front-row box,
 And danced off the ballet with trousers and tunic.

IX.

Come, old martyr! What, torment enough
 is it?
 Back to my room shall you take your sweet self.
 Good-bye, mother-beetle; husband-eft, sufficit!
 See the snug niche I have made on my shelf!
 A.'s book shall prop you up, B.'s shall cover you,
 Here's C. to be grave with, or D. to be gay,
 And with E. on each side, and F. right over
 you,
 Dry-rot at ease till the Judgment-day!

SOLILOQUY OF THE SPANISH CLOISTER.

I.

GR-R-R — there go, my heart's abhorrence!
 Water your damned flower-pots, do!
 If hate killed men, Brother Lawrence, God's blood, would not mine kill
 you!
 What? your myrtle-bush wants trimming?
 Oh, that rose has prior claims —
 Needs its leaden vase filled brimming?
 Hell dry you up with its flames!

II.

At the meal we sit together:
Salve tibi! I must hear
 Wise talk of the-kind of weather,
 Sort of season, time of year:

*Not a plenteous-cork-crop: scarcely Dare we hope oak-galls, I doubt:
 What's the Latin name for "parsley"?
 What's the Greek name for Swine's Snout?*

III.

Whew! We'll have our platter burnished,
 Laid with care on our own shelf!
 With a fire-new spoon we're furnished,
 And a goblet for ourself,
 Rinsed like something sacrificial
 Ere 'tis fit to touch our chaps —
 Marked with L. for our initial!
 (He-he! There his lily snaps!)

IV.

Saint, forsooth! While brown Dolores Squats outside the Convent bank
 With Sanchicha, telling stories,
 Steeping tresses in the tank,
 Blue-black, lustrous, thick like horsehairs,
 — Can't I see his dead eye glow,
 Bright as 'twere a Barbary corsair's?
 (That is, if he'd let it show!)

V.

When he finishes refection,
 Knife and fork he never lays Cross-wise, to my recollection,
 As do I, in Jesu's praise.
 I the Trinity illustrate,
 Drinking watered orange-pulp —
 In three sips the Arian frustrate;
 While he drains his at one gulp.

VI.

Oh, those melons? If he's able
 We're to have a feast! so nice!
 One goes to the Abbot's table,
 All of us get each a slice.
 How go on your flowers? None double
 Not one fruit-sort can you spy?
 Strange! — And I, too, at such trouble,
 Keep them close-nipped on the sly!

VII.

There's a great text in Galatians,
 Once you trip on it, entails
 Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
 One sure, if another fails:
 If I trip him just a-dying,
 Sure of heaven as sure can be,
 Spin him round and send him flying
 Off to hell, a Manichee?

VIII.

Or, my scrofulous French novel
 On grey paper with blunt type!
 Simply glance at it, you grovel
 Hand and foot in Belial's gripe:

If I double down its pages
At the woeful sixteenth print,
When he gathers his greengages,
Ope a sieve and slip it in't?

IX.

Or, there's Satan! — one might venture
Pledge one's soul to him, yet leave
Such a flaw in the indenture
As he'd miss till, past retrieve,
Blasted lay that rose-acacia
We're so proud of! Hy, Zy, Hine . . .
'St, there's Vespers! Plena gratiâ
Ave, Virgo! Gr-r-r — you swine!

THE LABORATORY.

ANCIEN RÉGIME.

I.

Now that I, tying thy glass mask tightly,
May gaze thro' these faint smokes curling whitely,
As thou pliest thy trade in this devil's-smithy —
Which is the poison to poison her, prithee?

II.

He is with her, and they know that I know Where they are, what they do: they believe my tears flow
While they laugh, laugh at me, at me fled to the drear
Empty church, to pray God in, for them! —
I am here.

III.

Grind away, moisten and mash up thy paste,
Pound at thy powder, — I am not in haste!
Better sit thus, and observe thy strange
things,
Than go where men wait me and dance at the King's.

IV.

That in the mortar — you call it a gum?
Ah, the brave tree whence such gold oozings come!
And yonder soft phial, the exquisite blue,
Sure to taste sweetly, — is that poison too?

V.

Had I but all of them, thee and thy treasures,
What a wild crowd of invisible pleasures!
To carry pure death in an earring, a casket,
A signet, a fan-mount, a filigree basket!

VI.

Soon, at the King's, a mere lozenge to give,
And Pauline should have just thirty minutes to live!
But to light a pastile, and Elise, with her
head
And her breast and her arms and her hands, should drop dead!

VII.

Quick — is it finished? The colour's too grim!
Why not soft like the phial's, enticing and
dim?
Let it brighten her drink, let her turn it and
stir,
And try it and taste, ere she fix and prefer! 40

VIII.

What a drop! She's not little, no minion like me!
That's why she ensnared him: this never will free
The soul from those masculine eyes, — say, "no!"
To that pulse's magnificent come-and-go.

IX.

For only last night, as they whispered, I brought
My own eyes to bear on her so, that I
thought
Could I keep them one half minute fixed she would fall
Shrivelled; she fell not; yet this does it
all!

X.

Not that I bid you spare her the pain;
Let death be felt and the proof remain: 50
Brand, burn up, bite into its grace —
He is sure to remember her dying face!

XI.

Is it done? Take my mask off! Nay, be not morose;
It kills her, and this prevents seeing it close:
The delicate droplet, my whole fortune's fee!
If it hurts her, beside, can it ever hurt me?

XII.

Now, take all my jewels, gorge gold to your fill,
You may kiss me, old man, on my mouth
if you will!
But brush this dust off me, lest horror it brings Ere I know it — next moment I dance at 60
the King's!

THE CONFESSIONAL.

[SPAIN.]

I.

It is a lie — their Priests, their Pope,
 Their Saints, their . . . all they fear or
 hope
 Are lies, and lies — there! through my door
 And ceiling, there! and walls and floor,
 There, lies, they lie — shall still be hurled
 Till spite of them I reach the world!

II.

You think Priests just and holy men!
 Before, they put me in this den
 I was a human creature too,
 10 With flesh and blood like one of you,
 A girl that laughed in beauty's pride
 Like lilies in your world outside.

III.

I had a lover — shame avaunt!
 This poor wrenched body, grim and gaunt,
 Was kissed all over till it burned,
 By lips the truest, love e'er turned His heart's own tint: one night they kissed
 My soul out in a burning mist.

IV.

So, next day when the accustomed train 20 Of things grew round my sense again,
 "That is a sin," I said: and slow
 With downcast eyes to church I go,
 And pass to the confession-chair,
 And tell the old mild father there.

V.

But when I falter Beltran's name,
 "Ha?" quoth the father; "much I blame
 "The sin; yet wherefore idly grieve?
 "Despair not — strenuously retrieve!
 30 "Nay, I will turn this love of thine
 "To lawful love, almost divine;

VI.

"For he is young, and led astray,
 "This Beltran, and he schemes, men say,
 "To change the laws of church and state;
 "So, thine shall be an angel's fate,
 "Who, ere the thunder breaks, should roll
 "Its cloud away and save his soul.

VII.

"For, when he lies upon thy breast,
 "Thou mayst demand and be possessed
 "Of all his plans, and next day steal 40 "To me, and all those plans reveal,
 "That I and every priest, to purge
 "His soul, may fast and use the scourge."

VIII.

That father's beard was long and white,
 With love and truth his brow seemed
 bright;
 I went back, all on fire with joy,
 And, that same evening, bade the boy
 Tell me, as lovers should, heart-free,
 Something to prove his love of me.

IX.

He told me what he would not tell
 For hope of heaven or fear of hell;
 And I lay listening in such pride!
 50 And, soon as he had left my side,
 Tripped to the church by morning-light
 To save his soul in his despite.

X.

I told the father all his schemes,
 Who were his comrades, what their
 dreams;
 "And now make haste," I said, "to pray
 "The one spot from his soul away;
 "To-night he comes, but not the same 60 "Will look!" At night he never came.

XI.

Nor next night: on the after-morn,
 I went forth with a strength new-born.
 The church was empty; something drew
 My steps into the street; I knew
 It led me to the market-place:
 Where, lo, on high, the father's face!

XII.

That horrible black scaffold dressed,
 That stapled block . . . God sink the rest!
 That head strapped back, that blinding
 vest,
 Those knotted hands and naked breast, 70
 Till near one busy hangman pressed,
 And, on the neck these arms caressed . . .

XIII.

No part in aught they hope or fear!
 No heaven with them, no hell! — and here,
 No earth, not so much space as pens
 My body in their worst of dens
 But shall bear God and man my cry,
 Lies — lies, again — and still, they lie!

CRISTINA.

I.

SHE should never have looked at me
 If she meant I should not love her! 80
 There are plenty . . . men, you call such,
 I suppose . . . she may discover

All her soul to, if she pleases,
And yet leave much as she found them:
But I'm not so, and she knew it
When she fixed me, glancing round them.

II.

What? To fix me thus meant nothing?
But I can't tell (there's my weakness)
What her look said! — no vile cant, sure,
About "need to strew the bleakness
"Of some lone shore with its pearl seed.
"That the sea feels" — no "strange yearning
"That such souls have, most to lavish
"Where there's chance of least returning."

III.

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows!
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure tho' seldom, are denied us,
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And apprise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing.

IV.

There are flashes struck from midnights,
There are fire-flames noondays kindle,
Whereby piled-up honours perish,
Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle,
While just this or that poor impulse,
Which for once had play unstifled,
Seems the sole work of a life-time
That away the rest have trifled.

V.

Doubt you if, in some such moment,
As she fixed me, she felt clearly,
Ages past the soul existed,
Here an age 'tis resting merely,
And hence fleets again for ages,
While the true end, sole and single,
It stops here for is, this love-way,
With some other soul to mingle?

VI.

Else it loses what it lived for,
And eternally must lose it;
Better ends may be in prospect,
Deeper blisses (if you choose it),
But this life's end and this love-bliss
Have been lost here. Doubt you whether
This she felt as, looking at me,
◆ Mine and her souls rushed together?

VII.

Oh, observe! Of course, next moment,
The world's honours, in derision,
Trampled out the light for ever:
Never fear but there's provision

Of the devil's to quench knowledge
Lest we walk the earth in rapture! 54
— Making those who catch God's secret
Just so much more prize their capture!

VIII.

Such am I: the secret's mine now!
She has lost me, I have gained her;
Her soul's mine: and thus, grown perfect,
I shall pass my life's remainder.
Life will just hold out the proving Both our powers, alone and blended:
And then, come next life quickly!
This world's use will have been ended. 60

THE LOST MISTRESS.

I.

ALL's over, then: does truth sound bitter
As one at first believes?
Hark, 'tis the sparrows' good-night twitter
About your cottage eaves!

II.

And the leaf-buds on the vine are woolly,
I noticed that, to-day;
One day more bursts them open fully
— You know the red turns grey.

III.

To-morrow we meet the same then, dearest?
May I take your hand in mine? 70
Mere friends are we, — well, friends the merest
Keep much that I resign:

IV.

For each glance of the eye so bright and
black,
Though I keep with heart's endeavour, —
Your voice, when you wish the snowdrops
back,
Though it stay in my soul for ever! —

V.

Yet I will but say what mere friends say,
Or only a thought stronger;
I will hold your hand but as long as all may,
Or so very little longer! 80

EARTH'S IMMORTALITIES.

FAME.

SEE, as the prettiest graves will do in time,
Our poet's wants the freshness of its prime;
Spite of the sexton's browsing horse, the sods

Have struggled through its binding osier rods;
Headstone and half-sunk footstone lean
awry,
Wanting the brick-work promised by-and-
by;
How the minute grey lichens, plate o'er plate,
Have softened down the crisp-cut name and date!

LOVE.

So, the year's done with!
(Love me for ever!)
All March begun with,
April's endeavour;
10 May-wreaths that bound me
June needs must sever;
Now snows fall round me,
Quenching June's fever —
(Love me for ever!)

MEETING AT NIGHT.

I.

THE grey sea and the long black land;
And the yellow half-moon large and low;
And the startled little waves that leap
In fiery ringlets from their sleep,
As I gain the cove with pushing prow,
20 And quench its speed i' the slushy sand.

II.

Then a mile of warm sea-scented beach;
Three fields to cross till a farm appears;
A tap at the pane, the quick sharp scratch
And blue spurt of a lighted match,
And a voice less loud, thro' its joys and
fears,
Than the two hearts beating each to each!

PARTING AT MORNING.

ROUND the cape of a sudden came the sea,
And the sun looked over the mountain's
rim:

And straight was a path of gold for him,
30 And the need of a world of men for me.

SONG.

I.

NAY but you, who do not love her,
Is she not pure gold, my mistress?
Holds earth aught — speak truth — above
her?

Aught like this tress, see, and this tress,
And this last fairest tress of all,
So fair, see, ere I let it fall?

II.

Because, you spend your lives in praising;
To praise, you search the wide world
over:

Then why not witness, calmly gazing,
If earth holds aught — speak truth — 40 above her?

Above this tress, and this, I touch
But cannot praise, I love so much!

A WOMAN'S LAST WORD.

I.

LET's contend no more, Love,
Strive nor weep:
All be as before, Love,
— Only sleep!

II.

What so wild as words are?
I and thou
In debate, as birds are,
Hawk on bough!

III.

See the creature stalking
While we speak!
Hush and hide the talking,
Cheek on cheek!

IV.

What so false as truth is,
False to thee?
Where the serpent's tooth is Shun the tree —

V.

Where the apple reddens
Never pry —
Lest we lose our Edens,
Eve and I.

VI.

Be a god and hold me
With a charm!
Be a man and fold me
With thine arm!

VII.

Teach me, only teach, Love!
As I ought
I will speak thy speech, Love,
Think thy thought —

VIII.

Meet, if thou require it,
Both demands,
Laying flesh and spirit
In thy hands.

IX.

That shall be to-morrow
Not to-night:
I must bury sorrow
Out of sight:

x.

— Must a little weep, Love, (Foolish me!)
And so fall asleep, Love,
Loved by thee.

EVELYN HOPE.

I.

BEAUTIFUL Evelyn Hope is dead!
Sit and watch by her side an hour.
That is her book-shelf, this her bed;
She plucked that piece of geranium-
flower,
Beginning to die too, in the glass;
Little has yet been changed, I think:
The shutters are shut, no light may pass
Save two long rays thro' the hinge's chink.

II.

Sixteen years old when she died!
Perhaps she had scarcely heard my
name;
It was not her time to love; beside,
Her life had many a hope and aim,
Duties enough and little cares,
And now was quiet, now astir,
Till God's hand beckoned unawares, —
And the sweet white brow is all of her.

III.

Is it too late then, Evelyn Hope?
What, your soul was pure and true,
The good stars met in your horoscope,
Made you of spirit, fire and dew —
And, just because I was thrice as old
And our paths in the world diverged so wide,
Each was nought to each, must I be
told?
We were fellow mortals, nought beside?

IV.

No, indeed! for God above
Is great to grant, as mighty to make,
And creates the love to reward the love:
I claim you still, for my own love's
sake!
Delayed it may be for more lives yet,
Through worlds I shall traverse, not a few:
Much is to learn, much to forget
Ere the time be come for taking you.

V.

But the time will come, — at last it will,
When, Evelyn Hope, what meant (I shall say)
In the lower earth, in the years long still,
That body and soul so pure and gay?
Why your hair was amber, I shall divine,
And your mouth of your own geranium's red —
And what you would do with me, in fine,
In the new life come in the old one's stead.

VI.

I have lived (I shall say) so much since
then,
Given up myself so many times, 58
Gained me the gains of various men,
Ransacked the ages, spoiled the climes;
Yet one thing, one, in my soul's full scope,
Either I missed or itself missed me:
And I want and find you, Evelyn Hope!
What is the issue? let us see!

VII.

I loved you, Evelyn, all the while.
My heart seemed full as it could hold? —
There was place and to spare for the frank young smile,
And the red young mouth, and the hair's 60
young gold.
So, hush, — I will give you this leaf to keep:
See, I shut it inside the sweet cold hand!
There that is our secret: go to sleep!
You will wake, and remember, and understand.

LOVE AMONG THE RUINS.

I.

WHERE the quiet-coloured end of evening smiles,
Miles and miles
On the solitary pastures where our sheep
Half-asleep
Tinkle homeward thro' the twilight, stray or stop —
As they crop — 70
Was the site once of a city great and gay,
(So they say)
Of our country's very capital, its prince Ages since
Held his court in, gathered councils, wielding far
Peace or war.

II.

Now, — the country does not even boast a tree,
As you see,
To distinguish slopes of verdure, certain rills
From the hills 84

Intersect and give a name to, (else they run Into one)
Where the domed and daring palace shot its spires

Up like fires
O'er the hundred-gated circuit of a wall
Bounding all,
Made of marble, men might march on nor be pressed,
Twelve abreast.

III.

And such plenty and perfection, see, of grass

Never was!
Such a carpet as, this summer-time, o'er-spreads

And embeds
Every vestige of the city, guessed alone,
Stock or stone —
Where a multitude of men breathed joy and woe

Long ago;
Lust of glory pricked their hearts up, dread of shame

Struck them tame;
And that glory and that shame alike, the gold
Bought and sold.

IV.

Now, — the single little turret that remains
On the plains,
By the caper overrooted, by the gourd
Overscored,

While the patching houseleek's head of blossom winks

Through the chinks — Marks the basement whence a tower in ancient time

Sprang sublime,
And a burning ring, all round, the chariots traced

As they raced,
And the monarch and his minions and his dames

Viewed the games.

V.

And I know, while thus the quiet-coloured eve

Smiles to leave
To their folding, all our many-tinkling fleece

In such peace,
And the slopes and rills in undistinguished
grey

Melt away —
That a girl with eager eyes and yellow hair
Waits me there

In the turret whence the charioteers caught
soul

For the goal,

When the king looked, where she looks now, breathless, dumb
Till I come.

VI.

But he looked upon the city, every side,
Far and wide,
All the mountains topped with temples, all the glades'

Colonnades,
All the causeys, bridges, aqueducts, —
and then,

All the men!
When I do come, she will speak not, she will stand,

Either hand
On my shoulder, give her eyes the first embrace

Of my face,
Ere we rush, ere we extinguish sight and
speech

Each on each.

VII.

In one year they sent a million fighters
forth

South and North,
And they built their gods a brazen pillar high

As the sky,
Yet reserved a thousand chariots in full force —

Gold, of course.
Oh heart! oh blood that freezes, blood that burns!

Earth's returns
For whole centuries of folly, noise and sin!
Shut them in,

With their triumphs and their glories and
the rest!

Love is best.

A LOVERS' QUARREL.

I.

OH, what a dawn of day!
How the March sun feels like May!

All is blue again
After last night's rain,
And the South dries the hawthorn-spray.
Only, my Love's away!
I'd as lief that the blue were grey.

II.

Runnels, which rillelets swell,
Must be dancing down the dell,
With a foaming head
On the beryl bed

Paven smooth as a hermit's cell;
Each with a tale to tell,
Could my Love but attend as well.

III.

Dearest, three months ago!
 When we lived blocked up with snow, —
 When the wind would edge
 In and in his wedge,
 In, as far as the point could go —
 Not to our ingle, though,
 Where we loved each the other so!

IV.

Laughs with so little cause!
 We devised games out of straws.
 We would try and trace
 One another's face
 In the ash, as an artist draws;
 Free on each other's flaws,
 How we chattered like two church daws!

V.

What's in the "Times"? — a scold
 At the Emperor deep and cold;
 He has taken a bride
 To his gruesome side,
 That's as fair as himself is bold:
 There they sit ermine-stoled,
 And she powders her hair with gold.

VI.

Fancy the Pampas' sheen!
 Miles and miles of gold and green
 Where the sunflowers blow
 In a solid glow,
 And — to break now and then the screen —
 Black neck and eyeballs keen,
 Up a wild horse leaps between!

VII.

Try, will our table turn?
 Lay your hands there light, and yearn Till the yearning slips
 Thro' the finger-tips
 In a fire which a few discern,
 And a very few feel burn,
 And the rest, they may live and learn!

VIII.

Then we would up and pace,
 For a change, about the place,
 Each with arm o'er neck:
 'Tis our quarter-deck,
 We are seamen in woeful case.
 Help in the ocean-space!
 Or, if no help, we'll embrace.

IX.

See, how she looks now, dressed
 In a sledging-cap and vest!
 'Tis a huge fur cloak —
 Like a reindeer's yoke
 Falls the lappet along the breast:
 Sleeves for her arms to rest,
 Or to hang, as my Love likes best.

X.

Teach me to flirt a fan
 As the Spanish ladies can,
 Or I tint your lip
 With a burnt stick's tip
 And you turn into such a man!
 Just the two spots that span
 Half the bill of the young male swan.

XI.

Dearest, three months ago
 When the mesmeriser Snow
 With his hand's first sweep
 Put the earth to sleep:
 'Twas a time when the heart could show
 All — how was earth to know,
 'Neath the mute hand's to-and-fro?

XII.

Dearest, three months ago
 When we loved each other so,
 Lived and loved the same
 Till an evening came
 When a shaft from the devil's bow
 Pierced to our ingle-glow,
 And the friends were friend and foe!

XIII.

Not from the heart beneath —
 'Twas a bubble born of breath,
 Neither sneer nor vaunt,
 Nor reproach nor taunt.
 See a word, how it severeth!
 Oh, power of life and death
 In the tongue, as the Preacher saith!

XIV.

Woman, and will you cast
 For a word, quite off at last
 Me, your own, your You, —
 Since, as truth is true,
 I was You all the happy past —
 Me do you leave aghast
 With the memories We amassed?

XV.

Love, if you knew the light
 That your soul casts in my sight,
 How I look to you
 For the pure and true
 And the beauteous and the right, —
 Bear with a moment's spite
 When a mere mote threatens the white!

XVI.

What of a hasty word?
 Is the fleshly heart not stirred
 By a worm's pin-prick
 Where its roots are quick?
 See the eye, by a fly's foot blurred —
 Ear, when a straw is heard
 Scratch the brain's coat of curd!

XVII.

Foul be the world or fair
 More or less, how can I care?
 'Tis the world the same
 For my praise or blame,
 And endurance is easy there.
 Wrong in the one thing rare —
 Oh, it is hard to bear!

XVIII.

Here's the spring back or close,
 When the almond-blossom blows:
 10 We shall have the word
 In a minor third
 There is none but the cuckoo knows:
 Heaps of the guilder-rose!
 I must bear with it, I suppose.

XIX.

Could but November come,
 Were the noisy birds struck dumb
 At the warning slash
 Of his driver's-lash —
 I would laugh like the valiant Thumb
 20 Facing the castle glum
 And the giant's fee-faw-fum!

XX.

Then, were the world well stripped
 Of the gear wherein equipped
 We can stand apart,
 Heart dispense with heart
 In the sun, with the flowers unripped, —
 Oh, the world's hangings ripped,
 We were both in a bare-walled crypt!

XXI.

Each in the crypt would cry
 30 "But one freezes here! and why?"
 "When a heart, as chill,
 "At my own would thrill
 "Back to life, and its fires out-fly?
 "Heart, shall we live or die?
 "The rest, . . . settle by-and-by!"

XXII.

So, she'd efface the score,
 And forgive me as before.
 It is twelve o'clock:
 I shall hear her knock
 40 In the worst of a storm's uproar,
 I shall pull her through the door,
 I shall have her for evermore!

UP AT A VILLA — DOWN IN THE CITY.

(AS DISTINGUISHED BY AN ITALIAN PERSON OF QUALITY.)

I.

HAD I but plenty of money, money enough and to spare,

The house for me, no doubt, were a house in the city-square;
 Ah, such a life, such a life, as one leads at the window there!

II.

Something to see, by Bacchus, something to hear, at least!
 There, the whole day long, one's life is a perfect feast;
 While up at a villa one lives, I maintain it,
 no more than a beast.

III.

Well now, look at our villa! stuck like the horn of a bull
 Just on a mountain-edge as bare as the creature's skull,
 Save a mere shag of a bush with hardly a leaf to pull!
 — I scratch my own, sometimes, to see if the hair's turned wool.

IV.

But the city, oh the city — the square with the houses! Why?
 They are stone-faced, white as a curd,
 there's something to take the eye!
 Houses in four straight lines, not a single front awry;
 You watch who crosses and gossips, who saunters, who hurries by;
 Green blinds, as a matter of course, to draw when the sun gets high;
 And the shops with fanciful signs which are painted properly.

V.

What of a villa? Though winter be over in March by rights,
 'Tis May perhaps ere the snow shall have withered well off the heights:
 You've the brown ploughed land before,
 where the oxen steam and wheeze,
 And the hills over-smoked behind by the faint grey olive-trees.

VI.

Is it better in May, I ask you? You've summer all at once;
 In a day he leaps complete with a few strong April suns.
 'Mid the sharp short emerald wheat, scarce
 risen three fingers well,
 The wild tulip, at end of its tube, blows out its great red bell Like a thin clear bubble of blood, for the children to pick and sell.

VII.

Is it ever hot in the square? There's a fountain to spout and splash!
 In the shade it sings and springs; in the shine such foam-bows flash.

On the horses with curling fish-tails, that prance and paddle and pash Round the lady atop in her conch — fifty gazers do not abash,
Though all that she wears is some weeds round her waist is a sort of sash.

VIII.

All the year long at the villa, nothing to see though you linger,
Except yon cypress that points like death's lean lifted forefinger.
Some think fireflies pretty, when they mix
i' the corn and mingle,
Or thrid the stinking hemp till the stalks of it seem a-tingle.
Late August or early September, the stunning cicala is shrill,
And the bees keep their tiresome whine round the resinous firs on the hill.
Enough of the seasons, — I spare you the months of the fever and chill.

IX.

Ere you open your eyes in the city, the blessed church-bells begin:
No sooner the bells leave off than the diligence rattles in:
You get the pick of the news, and it costs
you never a pin.
By-and-by there's the travelling doctor gives pills, lets blood, draws teeth;
Or the Pulcinello-trumpet breaks up the market beneath.
At the post-office such a scene-picture — the new play, piping hot!
And a notice how, only this morning, three liberal thieves were shot.
Above it, behold the Archbishop's most fatherly of rebukes,
And beneath, with his crown and his lion, some little new law of the Duke's!
Or a sonnet with flowery marge, to the Reverend Don So-and-so
Who is Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarca, Saint
Jerome and Cicero,
"And moreover," (the sonnet goes rhyming,) "the skirts of Saint Paul has
reached,
"Having preached us those six Lent-lectures more unctuous than ever he preached."
Noon strikes, — here sweeps the procession! our Lady borne smiling and smart
With a pink gauze gown all spangles, and seven swords stuck in her heart!
Bang-whang-whang goes the drum, *tootle-
te-tootle* the fife;
No keeping one's haunches still: it's the greatest pleasure in life.

X.

But bless you, it's dear — it's dear! fowls,
wine, at double the rate.
They have clapped a new tax upon salt,
and what oil pays passing the gate
It's a horror to think of. And so, the villa 30 for me, not the city!
Beggars can scarcely be choosers: but still — ah, the pity, the pity!
Look, two and two go the priests, then the monks with cowls and sandals,
And the penitents dressed in white shirts,
a-holding the yellow candles;
One, he carries a flag up straight, and another a cross with handles,
And the Duke's guard brings up the rear,
for the better prevention of scandals:
Bang-whang-whang goes the drum, *tootle-
te-tootle* the fife.
Oh, a day in the city-square, there is no such pleasure in life!

A TOCCATA¹ OF GALUPPI'S.

[Galuppi was a famous Italian composer of the eighteenth century. He was in London from 1741 to 1744.]

I.

Oh Galuppi, Baldassaro, this is very sad to find!
I can hardly misconceive you; it would prove me deaf and blind;
But although I take your meaning, 'tis 40 with such a heavy mind!

II.

Here you come with your old music, and here's all the good it brings.
What, they lived once thus at Venice where the merchants were the kings,
Where Saint Mark's is, where the Doges used to wed the sea with rings?

III.

Ay, because the sea's the street there; and
'tis arched by . . . what you call
. . . Shylock's bridge with houses on it, where they kept the carnival:
I was never out of England — it's as if I saw it all.

IV.

Did young people take their pleasure when the sea was warm in May?
Balls and masks begun at midnight, burning ever to mid-day,
When they made up fresh adventures for the morrow, do you say?

¹ An overture — a touch piece.

v.

Was a lady such a lady, cheeks so round and lips so red, —
On her neck the small face buoyant, like a bell-flower on its bed, O'er the breast's superb abundance where a man might base his head?

vi.

Well, and it was graceful of them — they'd break talk off and afford — She, to bite her mask's black velvet —
he, to finger on his sword, While you sat and played Toccatas, stately at the clavichord?

vii.

What? Those lesser thirds so plaintive, sixths diminished, sigh on sigh,
Told them something? Those suspensions, those solutions — "Must we die?"
Those commiserating sevenths — "Life might last! we can but try!"

viii.

10 "Were you happy?" — "Yes." — "And are you still as happy?" — "Yes.
And you?"
— "Then, more kisses!" — "Did I stop them, when a million seemed so few?"
Hark, the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!

ix.

So, an octave struck the answer. Oh, they praised you, I dare say!
"Brave Galuppi! that was music! good alike at grave and gay!"
"I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play!"

x.

Then they left you for their pleasure: till in due time, one by one,
Some with lives that came to nothing, some with deeds as well undone, Death stepped tacitly and took them where they never see the sun.

xi.

But when I sit down to reason, think to take my stand nor swerve, 20 While I triumph o'er a secret wrung from nature's close reserve,
In you come with your cold music till I creep thro' every nerve.

xii.

Yes, you, like a ghostly cricket, creaking
where a house was burned:

"Dust and ashes, dead and done with,
Venice spent what Venice earned.
"The soul, doubtless, is immortal — where a soul can be discerned.

xiii.

"Yours for instance: you know physics,
something of geology,
"Mathematics are your pastime; souls shall rise in their degree;
"Butterflies may dread extinction, — you'll not die, it cannot be!

xiv.

"As for Venice and her people, merely born to bloom and drop,
"Here on earth they bore their fruitage,
mirth and folly were the crop:
"What of soul was left, I wonder, when the kissing had to stop?

xv.

"Dust and ashes!" So you creak it, and I want the heart to scold.
Dear dead women, with such hair, too — what's become of all the gold Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old.

OLD PICTURES IN FLORENCE.

i.

THE morn when first it thunders in March,
The eel in the pond gives a leap, they
say:
As I leaned and looked over the aloed arch
Of the villa-gate this warm March day,
No flash snapped, no dumb thunder rolled
In the valley beneath where, white and
wide
And washed by the morning water-gold,
Florence lay out on the mountain-side.

ii.

River and bridge and street and square
Lay mine, as much at my beck and call,
Through the live translucent bath of air,
As the sights in a magic crystal ball.
And of all I saw and of all I praised,
The most to praise and the best to see
Was the startling bell-tower Giotto raised:
But why did it more than startle me?

iii.

Giotto, how, with that soul of yours,
Could you play me false who loved you
so?
Some slights if a certain heart endures
Yet it feels, I would have your fellows
know!

I' faith, I perceive not why I should care
To break a silence that suits them best,
But the thing grows somewhat hard to bear
When I find a Giotto join the rest.

IV.

On the arch where olives overhead
Print the blue sky with twig and leaf, (That sharp-curved leaf which they never shed)
'Twixt the aloes, I used to lean in chief,
And mark through the winter afternoons,
By a gift God grants me now and then,
In the mild decline of those suns like moons,
Who walked in Florence, besides her
men.

V.

They might chirp and chaffer, come and go
For pleasure or profit, her men alive —
My business was hardly with them, I trow,
But with empty cells of the human hive;
— With the chapter-room, the cloister-porch,
The church's apsis, aisle or nave,
Its crypt, one fingers along with a torch,
Its face set full for the sun to shave.

VI.

Wherever a fresco peels and drops,
Wherever an outline weakens and wanes
Till the latest life in the painting stops, Stands One whom each fainter pulse-tick pains:
One, wishful each scrap should clutch the brick,
Each tinge not wholly escape the plaster,
— A lion who dies of an ass's kick,
The wronged great soul of an ancient Master.

VII.

For oh, this world and the wrong it does!
They are safe in heaven with their backs
to it,
The Michaels and Rafaels, you hum and buzz
Round the works of, you of the little wit!
Do their eyes contract to the earth's old
scope,
Now that they see God face to face,
And have all attained to be poets, I hope?
'Tis their holiday now, in any case.

VIII.

Much they reckon of your praise and you!
But the wronged great souls — can they be quit
Of a world where their work is all to do,
Where you style them, you of the little
wit,
Old Master This and Early the Other,

Not dreaming that Old and New are fellows:

A younger succeeds to an elder brother,
Da Vincis derive in good time from Dellos.

IX.

And here where your praise might yield
returns,
And a handsome word or two give help,
Here, after your kind, the mastiff gins
And the puppy pack of poodles yelp.
What, not a word for Stefano there,
Of brow once prominent and starry, 54 Called Nature's Ape and the world's despair
For his peerless painting? (See Vasari.)

X.

There stands the Master. Study, my
friends,
What a man's work comes to! So he plans it,
Performs it, perfects it, makes amends
For the toiling and moiling, and then,
sic transit!
Happier the thrifty blind-folk labour,
With upturned eye while the hand is busy, — Not sidling a glance at the coin of their neighbour!
'Tis looking downward that makes one 64
dizzy.

XI.

"If you knew their work you would deal your dole."
May I take upon me to instruct you?
When Greek Art ran and reached the goal, Thus much had the world to boast in fructu —
The Truth of Man, as by God first spoken,
Which the actual generations garble,
Was re-uttered, and Soul (which Limbs betoken)
And Limbs (Soul informers) made new in marble.

XII.

So, you saw yourself as you wished you
were,
As you might have been, as you cannot be; 76
Earth here, rebuked by Olympus there:
And grew content in your poor degree
With your little power, by those statues'
godhead,
And your little scope, by their eyes' full
sway,
And your little grace, by their grace embodied,
And your little date, by their forms that stay.

XIII.

You would fain be kinglier, say, than I am?
Even so, you will not sit like Theseus.

You would prove a model? The Son of Priam
Has yet the advantage in arms' and knees' use.
You're wroth — can you slay your snake like Apollo?
You're grieved — still Niobe's the grander!
You live — there's the Racers' frieze to
follow:
You die — there's the dying Alexander.

XIV.

So, testing your weakness by their strength,
Your meagre charms by their rounded beauty,
Measured by Art in your breadth and
length,
10 You learned — to submit is a mortal's duty.
— When I say "you" 'tis the common soul,
The collective, I mean: the race of Man
That receives life in parts to live in a
whole,
And grow here according to God's clear plan.

XV.

Growth came when, looking your last on them all,
You turned your eyes inwardly one fine
day
And cried with a start — What if we so small
Be greater and grander, the while than
they?
Are they perfect of lineament, perfect of stature?
20 In both, of such lower types are we Precisely because of our wider nature;
For time, theirs — ours, for eternity.

XVI.

To-day's brief passion limits their range;
It seethes with the morrow for us and
more.
They are perfect — how else? they shall never change:
We are faulty — why not? we have time
in store.
The Artificer's hand is not arrested
With us; we are rough-hewn, nowise
polished:
They stand for our copy, and, once invested 30 With all they can teach, we shall see them abolished.

XVII.

'Tis a life-long toil till our lump be leaven —
The better! What's come to perfection perishes.

Things learned on earth, we shall practise in heaven:
Works done least rapidly, Art most cherishes.
Thyself shalt afford the example, Giotto!
Thy one work, not to decrease or diminish,
Done at a stroke, was just (was it not?)
"O!"
Thy great Campanile is still to finish.

XVIII.

Is it true that we are now, and shall be hereafter,
But what and where depend on life's 40
minute?
Hails heavenly cheer or infernal laughter
Our first step out of the gulf or in it?
Shall Man, such step within his endeavour, Man's face, have no more play and action
Than joy which is crystallised for ever,
Or grief, an eternal petrification?

XIX.

On which I conclude, that the early
painters,
To cries of "Greek Art and what more wish you?" — Replied, "To become now self-acquainters,
"And paint man man, whatever the 50 issue!"
"Make new hopes shine through the flesh
they fray,
"New fears aggrandise the rags and tatters:
"To bring the invisible full into play!
"Let the visible go to the dogs — what matters?"

XX.

Give these, I exhort you, their guerdon and glory
For daring so much, before they well did it.
The first of the new, in our race's story,
Beats the last of the old; 'tis no idle quiddit.
The worthies began a revolution,
Which if on earth you intend to acknow- 60
ledge,
Why, honour them now! (ends my allocu-tion)
Nor confer your degree when the folk leave college.

XXI.

There's a fancy some lean to and others
hate —
That, when this life is ended, begins
New work for the soul in another state,
Where it strives and gets weary, loses and wins:
Where the strong and the weak this world's congeries,

Repeat in large what they practised in small,
Through life after life in unlimited series;
Only the scale's to be changed, that's all.

XXII.

Yet I hardly know. When a soul has seen
By the means of Evil that Good is best,
And, through earth and its noise, what is heaven's serene, —
When our faith in the same has stood the test —
Why, the child grown man, you burn the
rod,
The uses of labour are surely done;
There remaineth a rest for the people of
God:
And I have had troubles enough, for one.

XXIII.

But at any rate I have loved the season
Of Art's spring-birth so dim and dewy;
My sculptor is Nicolo¹ the Pisan,
My painter — who but Cimabue?
Nor ever was man of them all indeed,
From these to Ghiberti² and Ghirlandajo,³
Could say that he missed my critic-meed.
So, now to my special grievance — heigh ho!

XXIV.

heir ghosts still stand, as I said before,
Watching each fresco flaked and rasped, locked up, knocked out, or whitewashed
o'er:
— No getting again what the church has grasped!
he works on the wall must take their
chance;
"Works never conceded to England's thick clime!"
hope they prefer their inheritance Of a bucketful of Italian quick-lime.)

XXV.

hen they go at length, with such a shak-
ing
Of heads o'er the old delusion, sadly ach master his way through the black streets taking,
Where many a lost work breathes though badly —
hy don't they bethink them of who has merited?
Why not reveal, while their pictures dree ch doom, how a captive might be outferreted?
Why is it they never remember me?

² Died 1455. Designed the bronze gates of the Baptistery at Florence.
³ A painter, died 1498.

XXVI.

Not that I expect the great Bigordi,
Nor Sandro to hear me, chivalric, bellicose;
Nor the wronged Lippino;⁴ and not a word I Say of a scrap of Frà Angelico's:
But are you too fine, Taddeo Gaddi,⁵ 46
To grant me a taste of your intonaco,⁶
Some Jerome that seeks the heaven with a sad eye?
Not a churlish saint, Lorenzo Monaco?

XXVII.

Could not the ghost with the close red cap,
My Pollajolo,⁷ the twice a craftsman,
Save me a sample, give me the hap
Of a muscular Christ that shows the draughtsman?
No Virgin by him the somewhat petty,
Of finical touch and tempera⁸
crumbly —
Could not Alesso Baldovinetti 50
Contribute so much, I ask him humbly?

XXVIII.

Margheritone of Arezzo,⁹
With the grave-clothes garb and swaddling barret
(Why purse up mouth and beak in a pet so,
You bald old saturnine poll-clawed parrot?)
Not a poor glimmering Crucifixion, Where in the foreground kneels the donor?
If such remain, as is my conviction,
The hoarding it does you but little honour.

XXIX.

They pass; for them the panels may thrill, 60
The tempera grow alive and tinglish;
Their pictures are left to the mercies still
Of dealers and stealers, Jews and the English,
Who, seeing mere money's worth in their
prize,
Will sell it to somebody calm as Zeno
At naked High Art, and in ecstasies
Before some clay-cold vile Carlino!

XXX.

No matter for these! But Giotto, you,
Have you allowed, as the town tongues babble it, —

⁴ The son of Fra Lippo Lippi. Wronged, because some of his pictures have been attributed to others.

⁵ Died 1366. One of Giotto's pupils and assistants.

⁶ Rough cast.

⁷ Painter, sculptor, and goldsmith.

⁸ Distemper — mixture of water and egg yolk.

⁹ Sculptor and architect, died 1313.

Oh, never! it shall not be counted true —
 That a certain precious little tablet
 Which Buonarroti eyed like a lover, —
 Was buried so long in oblivion's womb
 And, left for another than I to discover, Turns up at last! and to whom? — to whom?

XXXI.

I, that have haunted the dim San Spirito,
 (Or was it rather the Ognissanti¹?)
 Patient on altar-step planting a weary toe!
 10 Nay, I shall have it yet! Detur amanti!
 My Koh-i-noor — or (if that's a platitude)
 Jewel of Giamschid, the Persian Sofi's
 eye;
 So, in anticipative gratitude,
 What if I take up my hope and prophesy?

XXXII.

When the hour grows ripe, and a certain dotard
 Is pitched, no parcel that needs invoic-
 ing,
 To the worse side of the Mont Saint Gothard,
 We shall begin by way of rejoicing;
 None of that shooting the sky (blank cartridge), 20 Nor a civic guard, all plumes and lacquer,
 Hunting Radetzky's soul like a partridge
 Over Morello with squib and cracker.

XXXIII.

This time we'll shoot better game and bag
 'em hot —
 No mere display at the stone of Dante,
 But a kind of sober Witanagemot
 (Ex: "Casa Guidi," quod videas ante) Shall ponder, once Freedom restored to Florence,
 How Art may return that departed
 with her.
 Go, hated house, go each trace of the Loraine's,
 30 And bring us the days of Orgagna² hither!

XXXIV.

How we shall prologise, how we shall perorate,
 Utter fit things upon art and history, Feel truth at blood-heat and falsehood at zero rate,
 Make of the want of the age no mystery;
 Contrast the fructuous and sterile eras,
 Show — monarchy ever its uncouth cub licks
 Out of the bear's shape into Chimæra's, While Pure Art's birth is still the republic's.

XXXV.

Then one shall propose in a speech (curt Tuscan,
 Expurgate and sober, with scarcely an
 "issimo,")
 To end now our half-told tale of Cam-buscan,³
 And turn the bell-tower's alt to altissimo:
 And fine as the beak of a young beccaccia⁴
 The Campanile, the Duomo's fit ally,
 Shall soar up in gold full fifty braccia, Completing Florence, as Florence Italy.

XXXVI.

Shall I be alive that morning the scaffold
 Is broken away, and the long-pent fire,
 Like the golden hope of the world, unbaffled Springs from its sleep, and up goes the spire
 While "God and the People" plain for its motto,
 Thence the new tricolour flaps at the sky?
 At least to foresee that glory of Giotto
 And Florence together, the first am I!

"DE GUSTIBUS——."

I.

YOUR ghost will walk, you lover of trees,
 (If our loves remain)
 In an English lane,
 By a cornfield-side a-flutter with poppies.
 Hark, those two in the hazel coppice —
 A boy and a girl, if the good fates please,
 Making love, say, —
 The happier they!
 Draw yourself up from the light of the moon,
 And let them pass, as they will too soon,
 With the bean-flowers' boon,
 And the blackbird's tune,
 And May, and June!

II.

What I love best in all the world
 Is a castle, precipice-encurled,
 In a gash of the wind-grieved Apennine
 Or look for me, old fellow of mine,
 (If I get my head from out the mouth
 O' the grave, and loose my spirit's bands,
 And come again to the land of lands) —
 In a sea-side house to the farther South,
 Where the baked cicala dies of drouth,
 And one sharp tree — 'tis a cypress —
 stands,
 By the many hundred years red-rusted,
 Rough iron-spiked, ripe fruit-o'er-crustured,
 My sentinel to guard the sands

³ Tartar king.⁴ A woodcock.

To the water's edge. For, what expands
Before the house, but the great opaque
Blue breadth of sea without a break?
While, in the house, for ever crumbles
Some fragment of the frescoed walls,
From blisters where a scorpion sprawls.
A girl bare-footed brings, and tumbles
Down on the pavement, green-flesh melons,
And says there's news to-day — the king
Was shot at, touched in the liver-wing,
Goes with his Bourbon arm in a sling:
— She hopes they have not caught the felons.

Italy, my Italy!

Queen Mary's saying serves for me —

(When fortune's malice Lost her — Calais) —

Open my heart and you will see

Graved inside of it, "Italy."

Such lovers old are I and she:

So it always was, so shall ever be!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM ABROAD.

I.

Oh, to be in England
Now that April's there,
And whoever wakes in England
Sees, some morning, unaware,
That the lowest boughs and the brushwood sheaf
Round the elm-tree bole are in tiny leaf, While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
In England — now!

II.

And after April, when May follows,
And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows!
Iark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
Leans to the field and scatters on the clover blossoms and dewdrops — at the bent spray's edge —
That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
Nest you should think he never could recapture
The first fine careless rapture!
And though the fields look rough with hoary dew,
It will be gay when noontide wakes anew
The buttercups, the little children's dower — Far brighter than this gaudy melon-
flower!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM THE SEA.

Oh, nobly Cape Saint Vincent to the North-west died away;

Sunset ran, one glorious blood-red, reeking into Cadiz Bay;
Bluish 'mid the burning water, full in face
Trafalgar lay;
In the dimmest North-east distance dawned Gibraltar grand and grey;
"Here and here did England help me: how can I help England?" — say, Whoso turns as I, this evening, turn to God to praise and pray, While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa.

SAUL.

I.

SAID Abner, "At last thou art come! Ere
I tell, ere thou speak,
"Kiss my cheek, wish me well!" Then I wished it, and did kiss his cheek.
And he, "Since the King, O my friend, for 50 thy countenance sent,
"Neither drunken nor eaten have we; nor until from his tent
"Thou return with the joyful assurance the King liveth yet,
"Shall our lip with the honey be bright,
with the water be wet.
"For out of the black mid-tent's silence, a space of three days,
"Not a sound hath escaped to thy servants,
of prayer nor of praise,
"To betoken that Saul and the Spirit have ended their strife,
"And that, faint in his triumph, the monarch sinks back upon life.

II.

"Yet now my heart leaps, O beloved!
God's child with his dew
"On thy gracious gold hair, and those lilies still living and blue
"Just broken to twine round thy harp- 60 strings, as if no wild heat
"Were now raging to torture the desert!"

III.

Then I, as was meet, Knelt down to the God of my fathers, and rose on my feet,
And ran o'er the sand burnt to powder.
The tent was unlooped;
I pulled up the spear that obstructed, and under I stooped;
Hands and knees on the slippery grass-patch, all withered and gone,
That extends to the second enclosure, I groped my way on Till I felt where the foldskirts fly open
Then once more I prayed,
And opened the foldskirts and entered, and was not afraid

But spoke, "Here is David, thy servant!"

And no voice replied.

At the first I saw nought but the blackness;
but soon I descried

A something more black than the blackness
— the vast, the upright

Main prop which sustains the pavilion:
and slow into sight

Grew a figure against it, gigantic and blackest of all.

Then a sunbeam, that burst thro' the tent-roof, showed Saul.

IV.

He stood as erect as that tent-prop, both arms stretched out wide

On the great cross-support in the centre,
that goes to each side;

He relaxed not a muscle, but hung there as,
caught in his pangs

10 And waiting his change, the king-serpent
all heavily hangs,

Far away from his kind, in the pine, till deliverance come

With the spring-time, — so agonised Saul, drear and stark, blind and dumb.

V.

Then I tuned my harp, — took off the lilies we twine round its chords

Lest they snap 'neath the stress of the noon-tide — those sunbeams like swords!

And I first played the tune all our sheep know, as, one after one,

So docile they come to the pen-door till folding be done.

They are white and untorn by the bushes,
for lo, they have fed

Where the long grasses stifle the water within the stream's bed;

And now one after one seeks its lodging, as star follows star

20 Into eve and the blue far above us, — so blue and so far!

VI.

— Then the tune, for which quails on the cornland will each leave his mate

To fly after the player; then, what makes the crickets elate

Till for boldness they fight one another:
and then, what has weight

To set the quick jerboa¹ a-musing outside his sand house —

There are none such as he for a wonder,
half bird and half mouse!

God made all the creatures and gave them
our love and our fear,

To give sign, we and they are his children,
one family here.

VII.

Then I played the help-tune of our reapers, their wine-song, when hand

Grasps at hand, eye lights eye in good friendship, and great hearts expand

And grow one in the sense of this world's life. — And then, the last song

When the dead man is praised on his journey — "Bear, bear him along "With his few faults shut up like dead flowerets! Are balm-seeds not here

"To console us? The land has none left such as he on the bier.

"Oh, would we might keep thee, my brother!" — And then, the glad chaunt

Of the marriage, — first go the young maidens, next, she whom we vaunt

As the beauty, the pride of our dwelling. —
And then, the great march

Wherein man runs to man to assist him and buttress an arch

Nought can break; who shall harm them, our friends? — Then, the chorus intoned

As the Levites go up to the altar in glory enthroned.

But I stopped here: for here in the darkness Saul groaned.

VIII.

And I paused, held my breath in such silence, and listened apart;

And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered: and sparkles 'gan dart

From the jewels that woke in his turban, at once with a start,

All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart.

So the head: but the body still moved not,
still hung there erect.

And I bent once again to my playing,
pursued it unchecked,

As I sang, —

IX.

"Oh, our manhood's prime vigour!
No spirit feels waste,

"Not a muscle is stopped in its playing nor sineu unbraced.

"Oh, the wild joys of living! the leaping from rock up to rock,

"The strong rending of boughs from the fir-tree, the cool silver shock

"Of the plunge in a pool's living water, the hunt of the bear,

"And the sultriness showing the lion is couched in his lair.

"And the meal, the rich dates yellowed over with gold dust divine,

"And the locust-flesh steeped in the pitcher
the full draught of wine,

"And the sleep in the dried river-channel where bulrushes tell
 "That the water was wont to go warbling so softly and well.
 "How good is man's life, the mere living!
 how fit to employ
 "All the heart and the soul and the senses for ever in joy!
 "Hast thou loved the white locks of thy father, whose sword thou didst guard
 "When he trusted thee forth with the armies, for glorious reward?
 "Didst thou see the thin hands of thy mother, held up as men sung
 "The low song of the nearly-departed, and hear her faint tongue
 "Joining in while it could to the witness,
 'Let one more attest,
 "'I have lived, seen God's hand thro' a lifetime, and all was for best?'
 "Then they sung thro' their tears in strong triumph, not much, but the rest.
 "And thy brothers, the help and the contest, the working whence grew
 "Such result as, from seething grape-bundles, the spirit strained true:
 "And the friends of thy boyhood — that boyhood of wonder and hope,
 "Present promise and wealth of the future beyond the eye's scope, —
 "Till lo, thou art grown to a monarch; a people is thine;
 "And all gifts, which the world offers singly, on one head combine!
 "On one head, all the beauty and strength, love and rage (like the throe
 "That, a-work in the rock, helps its labour and lets the gold go)
 "High ambition and deeds which surpass it, fame crowning them, — all
 "Brought to blaze on the head of one creature — King Saul!"

X.

And lo, with that leap of my spirit, —
 heart, hand, harp and voice,
 Each lifting Saul's name out of sorrow,
 each bidding rejoice
 Saul's fame in the light it was made for — as when, dare I say,
 The Lord's army, in rapture of service,
 strains through its array,
 And upsoareth the cherubim-chariot —
 "Saul!" cried I, and stopped,
 And waited the thing that should follow.
 Then Saul, who hung propped
 By the tent's cross-support in the centre, wast struck by his name.
 Have ye seen when Spring's arrowy summons goes right to the aim,
 And some mountain, the last to withstand her, that held (he alone,

While the vale laughed in freedom and flowers) on a broad bust of stone
 A year's snow bound about for a breast-plate, — leaves grasp of the sheet?
 Fold on fold all at once it crowds thunder-
 ously down to his feet,
 And there fronts you, stark, black, but alive yet, your mountain of old,
 With his rents, the successive bequeathings of ages untold —
 Yea, each harm got in fighting your battles, each furrow and scar
 Of his head thrust 'twixt you and the tempest — all hail, there they are!
 — Now again to be softened with verdure,
 again hold the nest
 Of the dove, tempt the goat and its young to the green on his crest
 For their food in the arduous of summer. 40
 One long shudder thrilled
 All the tent till the very air tingled, then sank and was stilled
 At the King's self left standing before me, released and aware.
 What was gone, what remained? All to traverse, 'twixt hope and despair; Death was past, life not come: so he waited. Awhile his right hand Held the brow, helped the eyes left too vacant forthwith to remand To their place what new objects should enter: 'twas Saul as before.
 I looked up and dared gaze at those eyes, nor was hurt any more Than by slow pallid sunsets in autumn, ye watch from the shore,
 At their sad level gaze o'er the ocean — a sun's slow decline
 Over hills which, resolved in stern silence, 50
 o'erlap and entwine Base with base to knit strength more intensely: so, arm folded arm
 O'er the chest whose slow heavings subsided.

XI.

What spell or what charm,
 (For, awhile there was trouble within me) what next should I urge To sustain him where song had restored him? — Song filled to the verge His cup with the wine of this life, pressing all that it yields
 Of mere fruitage, the strength and the beauty: beyond, on what fields, Glean a vintage more potent and perfect to brighten the eye
 And bring blood to the lip, and commend them the cup they put by?
 He saith, "It is good;" still he drinks not:
 he lets me praise life,
 Gives assent, yet would die for his own 60
 part.

XII.

Then fancies grew rife
Which had come long ago on the pasture, when round me the sheep Fed in silence — above, the one eagle wheeled slow as in sleep;
And I lay in my hollow and mused on the world that might lie
'Neath his kén, though I saw but the strip
'twixt the hill and the sky:
And I laughed — "Since my days are ordained to be passed with my flocks,
"Let me people at least, with my fancies,
the plains and the rocks,
"Dream the life I am never to mix with,
and image the show
"Of mankind as they live in those fashions
I hardly shall know!
10 "Schemes of life, its best rules and right uses, the courage that gains,
"And the prudence that keeps what men strive for." And now these old trains Of vague thought came again; I grew surer; so, once more the string Of my harp made response to my spirit, as
thus —

XIII.

"Yea, my King,"
I began — "thou dost well in rejecting mere comforts that spring
"From the mere mortal life held in common by man and by brute:
"In our flesh grows the branch of this life,
in our soul it bears fruit.
"Thou hast marked the slow rise of the tree, — how its stem trembled first "Till it passed the kid's lip, the stag's antler; then safely outburst
"The fan-branches all round; and thou mindest when these too, in turn 20 "Broke a-bloom and the palm-tree seemed perfect: yet more was to learn,
"E'en the good that comes in with the palm-fruit. Our dates shall we slight,
"When their juice brings a cure for all sorrow? or care for the plight
"Of the palm's self whose slow growth produced them? Not so! stem and branch
"Shall decay, nor be known in their place, while the palm-wine shall staunch "Every wound of man's spirit in winter. I pour thee such wine.
"Leave the flesh to the fate it was fit for!
the spirit be thine!
"By the spirit, when age shall o'ercome thee, thou still shalt enjoy
"More indeed, than at first when incon-scious, the life of a boy.
"Crush that life, and behold its wine running! Each deed thou hast done

"Dies, revives, goes to work in the world;
until e'en as the sun
"Looking down on the earth, though clouds spoil him, though tempests efface,
"Can find nothing his own deed produced not, must everywhere trace
"The results of his past summer-prime, — so, each ray of thy will,
"Every flash of thy passion and prowess, long over, shall thrill
"Thy whole people, the countless, with ardour, till they too give forth
"A like cheer to their sons, who in turn, fill the South and the North
"With the radiance thy deed was the germ of. Carouse in the past!
"But the license of age has its limit; thou diest at last:
"As the lion when age dims his eyeball, the rose at her height
"So with man — so his power and his beauty for ever take flight.
"No! Again a long draught of my soul-wine! Look forth o'er the years!
"Thou hast done now with eyes for the actual; begin with the seer's!
"Is Saul dead? In the depth of the vale make his tomb — bid arise
"A grey mountain of marble heaped foursquare, till, built to the skies,
"Let it mark where the great First King slumbers: whose fame would ye
know?
"Up above see the rock's naked face, where the record shall go
"In great characters cut by the scribe, —
Such was Saul, so he did;
"With the sages directing the work, by the populace chid, —
"For not half, they'll affirm, is comprised there! Which fault to amend,
"In the grove with his kind grows the cedar, whereon they shall spend
"(Sec, in tablets 'tis level before them) their praise, and record
"With the gold of the graver, Saul's story,
— the statesman's great word
"Side by side with the poet's sweet comment. The river's a-wave
"With smooth paper-reeds grazing each other when prophet-winds rave:
"So the pen gives unborn generations their due and their part
"In thy being! Then, first of the mighty, thank God that thou art!"

XIV.

And behold while I sang . . . but O Thou who didst grant me that day,
And before it not seldom hast granted thy help to essay,

Carry on and complete an adventure, —
 my shield and my sword
 In that act where my soul was thy servant,
 thy word was my word, —
 Still be with me, who then at the summit of human endeavour
 And scaling the highest, man's thought could, gazed hopeless as ever On the new stretch of heaven above me — till, mighty to save,
 Just one lift of thy hand cleared that distance — God's throne from man's grave!
 Let me tell out my tale to its ending — my voice to my heart
 Which can scarce dare believe in what marvels last night I took part,
 As this morning I gather the fragments,
 alone with my sheep,
 And still fear lest the terrible glory vanish like sleep!
 For I wake in the grey dewy covert, while Hebron¹ upheaves
 The dawn struggling with night on his shoulder, and Kidron² retrieves
 Slow the damage of yesterday's sunshine.

xv.

I say then, — my song
 While I sang thus, assuring the monarch, and ever more strong
 Made a proffer of good to console him — he slowly resumed
 His old motions and habitudes kingly. The right-hand replumed
 His black locks to their wonted composure, adjusted the swathes
 Of his turban, and see — the huge sweat that his countenance bathes,
 He wipes off with the robe; and he girds
 now his loins as of yore,
 And feels slow for the armlets of price, with the clasp set before.
 He is Saul, ye remember in glory, — ere error had bent
 The broad brow from the daily communion; and still, though much spent
 Be the life and the bearing that front you,
 the same, God did choose,
 To receive what a man may waste, desecrate, never quite lose.
 So sank he along by the tent-prop till,
 stayed by the pile
 Of his armour and war-cloak and garments,
 he leaned there awhile,
 And sat out my singing, — one arm round the tent-prop, to raise His bent head, and the other hung slack — till I touched on the praise
 I foresaw from all men in all time, to the man patient there;

* One of the six cities of refuge.

* A brook near Jerusalem.

And thus ended, the harp falling forward. 30
 Then first I was 'ware
 That he sat, as I say, with my head just above his vast knees
 Which were thrust out on each side around me, like oak-roots which please To encircle a lamb when it slumbers. I looked up to know
 If the best I could do had brought solace:
 he spoke not, but slow Lifted up the hand slack at his side, till he laid it with care
 Soft and grave, but in mild settled will, on my brow: thro' my hair
 The large fingers were pushed, and he bent back my head, with kind power, —
 All my face back, intent to peruse it, as men do a flower.
 Thus held he me there with his great eyes that scrutinised mine —
 And oh, all my heart how it loved him! 40
 but where was the sign?
 I yearned — "Could I help thee, my father,
 inventing a bliss,
 "I would add, to that life of the past, both the future and this;
 "I would give thee new life altogether, as good, ages hence,
 "As this moment, — had love but the warrant, love's heart to dispense!"

xvi.

Then the truth came upon me. No harp more — no song more! outbroke —

xvii.

"I have gone the whole round of creation:
 I saw and I spoke:
 "I, a work of God's hand for that purpose, received in my brain
 "And pronounced on the rest of his handwork — returned him again
 "His creation's approval or censure: I spoke as I saw:
 "I report, as a man may of God's work — 50
 all's love, yet all's law.
 "Now I lay down the judgeship he lent me.
 Each faculty tasked
 "To perceive him, has gained an abyss, where a dewdrop was asked.
 "Have I knowledge? confounded it shrivels at Wisdom laid bare.
 "Have I forethought? how purblind, how blank, to the Infinite Care!
 "Do I task any faculty highest, to image success?
 "I but open my eyes, — and perfection, no more and no less,
 "In the kind I imagined, full-fronts me,
 and God is seen God
 "In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod,

- "And thus looking within and around me,
I ever renew
"(With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)
"The submission of man's nothing-perfect
to God's all-complete,
"As by each new obeisance in spirit, I climb to his feet.
"Yet with all this abounding experience,
this deity known,
"I shall dare to discover some province,
some gift of my own.
"There's a faculty pleasant to exercise,
hard to hoodwink,
"I am fain to keep still in abeyance, (I laugh as I think)
"Lest, insisting to claim and parade in it,
wot ye, I worst 10 "E'en the Giver in one gift. — Behold, I could love if I durst!
"But I sink the pretension as fearing a man may o'ertake
"God's own speed in the one way of love:
I abstain for love's sake.
"— What, my soul? see thus far and no farther? when doors great and small,
"Nine-and-ninety flew ope at our touch, should the hundredth appal?
"In the least things have faith, yet distrust in the greatest of all?
"Do I find love so full in my nature, God's ultimate gift,
"That I doubt his own love can compete with it? Here, the parts shift?
"Here, the creature surpass the Creator, —
the end, what Began?
"Would I fain in my impotent yearning do all for this man, 20 "And dare doubt he alone shall not help him, who yet alone can?
"Would it ever have entered my mind, the bare will, much less power,
"To bestow on this Saul what I sang of,
the marvellous dower
"Of the life he was gifted and filled with?
to make such a soul,
"Such a body, and then such an earth for insphering the whole?
"And doth it not enter my mind (as my warm tears attest)
"These good things being given, to go on,
and give one more, the best?
"Ay, to save and redeem and restore him,
maintain at the height
"This perfection, — succeed with life's day-spring, death's minute of night?
"Interpose at the difficult minute, snatch
Saul the mistake,
30 "Saul the failure, the ruin he seems now, — and bid him awake
"From the dream, the probation, the prelude, to find himself set
"Clear and safe in new light and new life,
— a new harmony yet
- "To be run, and continued, and ended — who knows? — or endure!
"The man taught enough, by life's dream,
of the rest to make sure;
"By the pain-throb, triumphantly winning intensified bliss,
"And the next world's reward and repose,
by the struggles in this.
- XVIII.
- "I believe it! 'Tis thou, God, that givest,
'tis I who receive:
"In the first is the last, in thy will is my power to believe.
"All's one gift: thou canst grant it moreover, as prompt to my prayer
"As I breathe out this breath, as I open 49
these arms to the air.
"From thy will, stream the worlds, life and nature, thy dread Sabaoth:
"I will? — the mere atoms despise me!
Why am I not loth
"To look that, even that in the face too?
Why is it I dare
"Think but lightly of such impuissance?
What stops my despair?
"This; — 'tis not what man Does which exalts him, but what man Would do!
"See the King — I would help him but cannot, the wishes fall through.
"Could I wrestle to raise him from sorrow, grow poor to enrich,
"To fill up his life, starve my own out, I would — knowing which,
"I know that my service is perfect. Oh, speak through me now!
"Would I suffer for him that I love? So 50 wouldst thou — so wilt thou!
"So shall crown thee the topmost, ineffa-blest, uttermost crown —
"And thy love fill infinitude wholly, nor leave up nor down
"One spot for the creature to stand in! It is by no breath,
"Turn of eye, wave of hand, that salvation joins issue with death!
"As thy Love is discovered almighty, almighty be proved
"Thy power, that exists with and for it, of being Beloved!
"He who did most, shall bear most; the strongest shall stand the most weak.
"Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek
"In the Godhead! I seek and I find it.
O Saul, it shall be "A Face like my face that receives thee; a 60
Man like to me,
"Thou shalt love and be loved by, for ever:
a Hand like this hand
"Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!"

XIX.

I know not too well how I found my way home in the night.
 There were witnesses, cohorts about me, to left and to right, Angels, powers, the unuttered, unseen, the alive, the aware:
 I repressed, I got through them as hardly,
 as strugglingly there,
 As a runner beset by the populace famished for news —
 Life or death. The whole earth was awakened, hell loosed with her crews;
 And the stars of night beat with emotion,
 and tingled and shot
 Out in fire the strong pain of pent knowledge: but I fainted not,
 For the Hand still impelled me at once and supported, suppressed
 All the tumult, and quenched it with quiet, and holy behest,
 Till the rapture was shut in itself, and the earth sank to rest.
 Anon at the dawn, all that trouble had withered from earth —
 Not so much, but I saw it die out in the day's tender birth;
 In the gathered intensity brought to the grey of the hills;
 In the shuddering forests' held breath; in the sudden wind-thrills;
 In the startled wild beasts that bore off, each with eye sidling still Though averted with wonder and dread;
 in the birds stiff and chill
 That rose heavily, as I approached them, made stupid with awe:
 E'en the serpent that slid away silent, —
 he felt the new law.
 The same stared in the white humid faces
 upturned by the flowers;
 The same worked in the heart of the cedar and moved the vine-bowers:
 And the little brooks witnessing murmured,
 persistent and low,
 With their obstinate, all but hushed voices — "E'en so, it is so!"

MY STAR.

ALL that I know
 Of a certain star
 Is, it can throw
 (Like the angled spar)
 Now a dart of red,
 Now a dart of blue;
 Till my friends have said
 They would fain see, too,

My star that dartles the red and the blue!
 Then it stops like a bird; like a flower,
 hangs furled:

They must solace themselves with the Saturn above it.
 What matter to me if their star is a world?
 Mine has opened its soul to me; therefore I love it.

BY THE FIRE-SIDE.

I.

How well I know what I mean to do
 When the long dark autumn-evenings
 come:
 And where, my soul, is thy pleasant hue?
 With the music of all thy voices, dumb 40
 In life's November too!

II.

I shall be found by the fire, suppose,
 O'er a great wise book as besemeth age,
 While the shutters flap as the cross-wind
 blows
 And I turn the page, and I turn the page,
 Not verse now, only prose!

III.

Till the young ones whisper, finger on
 lip,
 "There he is at it, deep in Greek:
 "Now then, or never, out we slip
 "To cut from the hazels by the creek 50
 "A mainmast for our ship!"

IV.

I shall be at it indeed, my friends:
 Greek puts already on either side
 Such a branch-work forth as soon extends
 To a vista opening far and wide,
 And I pass out where it ends.

V.

The outside-frame, like your hazel-trees:
 But the inside-archway widens fast,
 And a rarer sort succeeds to these,
 And we slope to Italy at last 60
 And youth, by green degrees.

VI.

I follow wherever I am led,
 Knowing so well the leader's hand:
 Oh woman-country, wooed not wed,
 Loved all the more by earth's male-
 lands,
 Laid to their hearts instead!

VII.

Look at the ruined chapel again
 Half-way up in the Alpine gorge!
 Is that a tower, I point you plain,
 Or is it a mill, or an iron-forge 70
 Breaks solitude in vain?

VIII.

A turn, and we stand in the heart of things;
The woods are round us, heaped and dim;
From slab to slab how it slips and springs,
The thread of water single and slim,
Through the ravage some torrent brings!

IX.

Does it feed the little lake below?
That speck of white just on its marge
Is Pella; see, in the evening-glow,
How sharp the silver spear-heads charge
10 When Alp meets heaven in snow!

X.

On our other side is the straight-up rock;
And a path is kept 'twixt the gorge and it
By boulder-stones where lichens mock
The marks on a moth, and small ferns fit
Their teeth to the polished block.

XI.

Oh the sense of the yellow mountain-flowers,
And thorny balls, each three in one,
The chestnuts throw on our path in showers!
For the drop of the woodland fruit's
begun,
20 These early November hours,

XII.

That crimson the creeper's leaf across
Like a splash of blood; intense, abrupt,
O'er a shield else gold from rim to boss,
And lay it for show on the fairy-cupped
Elf-needed mat of moss,

XIII.

By the rose-flesh mushrooms, undivulged
Last evening — nay, in to-day's first dew
Yon sudden coral nipple bulged,
Where a freaked fawn-coloured flaky crew
30 Of toadstools peep indulged.

XIV.

And yonder, at foot of the fronting ridge
That takes the turn to a range beyond,
Is the chapel reached by the one-arched bridge
Where the water is stopped in a stagnant pond
Danced over by the midge.

XV.

The chapel and bridge are of stone alike,
Blackish-grey and mostly wet;

Cut hemp-stalks steep in the narrow dyke.
See here again, how the lichens fret
And the roots of the ivy strike!

46

XVI.

Poor little place, where its one priest comes
On a festa-day, if he comes at all,
To the dozen folk from their scattered homes,
Gathered within that precinct small
By the dozen ways one roams —

XVII.

To drop from the charcoal-burners' huts,
Or climb from the hemp-dressers' low
shed,
Leave the grange where the woodman
stores his nuts,
Or the wattled cote where the fowlers
spread
Their gear on the rock's bare juts.

56

XVIII.

It has some pretension too, this front,
With its bit of fresco half-moon-wise
Set over the porch, Art's early wont:
'Tis John in the Desert, I surmise,
But has borne the weather's brunt —

XIX.

Not from the fault of the builder, though,
For a pent-house properly projects
Where three carved beams make a certain
show,
Dating — good thought of our architect's —
'Five, six, nine, he lets you know.

60

XX.

And all day long a bird sings there,
And a stray sheep drinks at the pond at
times;
The place is silent and aware;
It has had its scenes, its joys and crimes,
But that is its own affair.

XXI.

My perfect wife, my Leonor,
Oh heart, my own, oh eyes, mine too,
Whom else could I dare look backward for,
With whom beside should I dare pursue
The path grey heads abhor?

70

XXII.

For it leads to a crag's sheer edge with
them;
Youth, flowery all the way, there stops —
Not they; age threatens and they contemn, Till they reach the gulf wherein youth
drops,
One inch from life's safe hem!

XXIII.

With me, youth led . . . I will speak
now,
No longer watch you as you sit
Reading by fire-light, that great brow
And the spirit-small hand propping it,
Mutely, my heart knows how —

XXIV.

When, if I think but deep enough,
You are wont to answer, prompt as rhyme;
And you, too, find without rebuff
Response your soul seeks many a time
Piercing its fine flesh-stuff.

XXV.

My own, confirm me! If I tread
This path back, is it not in pride
To think how little I dreamed it led To an age so blest that, by its side,
Youth seems the waste instead?

XXVI.

My own, see where the years conduct!
At first, 'twas something our two souls
Should mix as mists do; each is sucked
In each now: on, the new stream rolls,
Whatever rocks obstruct.

XXVII.

Think, when our one soul understands
The great Word which makes all things
new,
When earth breaks up and heaven expands,
How will the change strike me and you
In the house not made with hands?

XXVIII.

Oh I must feel your brain prompt mine,
Your heart anticipate my heart,
You must be just before, in fine,
See and make me see, for your part,
New depths of the divine!

XXIX.

But who could have expected this
When we two drew together first
Just for the obvious human bliss,
To satisfy life's daily thirst
With a thing men seldom miss?

XXX.

Come back with me to the first of all,
Let us lean and love it over again,
Let us now forget and now recall,
Break the rosary in a pearly rain,
And gather what we let fall!

XXXI.

What did I say? — that a small bird sings
All day long, save when a brown pair
Of hawks from the wood float with wide
wings
Strained to a bell: 'gainst noon-day
glare
You count the streaks and rings.

XXXII.

But at afternoon or almost eve
'Tis better; then the silence grows
To that degree, you half believe
It must get rid of what it knows,
Its bosom does so heave.

53

XXXIII.

Hither we walked then, side by side,
Arm in arm and cheek to cheek,
And still I questioned or replied,
While my heart, convulsed to really
speak,
Lay choking in its pride.

XXXIV.

Silent the crumbling bridge we cross,
And pity and praise the chapel sweet,
And care about the fresco's loss,
And wish for our souls a like retreat,
And wonder at the moss.

60

XXXV.

Stoop and kneel on the settle under,
Look through the window's grated
square:
Nothing to see! For fear of plunder,
The cross is down and the altar bare,
As if thieves don't fear thunder.

XXXVI.

We stoop and look in through the grate,
See the little porch and rustic door,
Read duly the dead builder's date;
Then cross the bridge that we crossed
before,
Take the path again — but wait!

70

XXXVII.

Oh moment, one and infinite!
The water slips o'er stock and stone;
The West is tender, hardly bright:
How grey at once is the evening grown —
One star, its chrysolite!

XXXVIII.

We two stood there with never a third,
But each by each, as each knew well:
The sights we saw and the sounds we
heard,

The lights and the shades made up a spell
Till the trouble grew and stirred.

XXXIX.

Oh, the little more, and how much it is!
And the little less, and what worlds
away!

How a sound shall quicken content to
bliss,

Or a breath suspend the blood's best
play,
And life be a proof of this!

XL.

Had she willed it, still had stood the screen
So slight, so sure, 'twixt my love and
her:

10 I could fix her face with a guard between,
And find her soul as when friends
confer,
Friends — lovers that might have been.

XLI.

For my heart had a touch of the woodland-
time,

Wanting to sleep now over its best.
Shake the whole tree in the summer-
prime,

But bring to the last leaf no such test!
"Hold the last fast!" runs the rhyme.

XLII.

For a chance to make your little much,
To gain a lover and lose a friend,

20 Venture the tree and a myriad such,
When nothing you mar but the year can mend:

But a last leaf — fear to touch!

XLIII.

Yet should it unfasten itself and fall
Eddying down till it find your face
At some slight wind — best chance of all!
Be your heart henceforth its dwelling-
place

You tremble to forestall!

XLIV.

Worth how well, those dark grey eyes,
That hair so dark and dear, how worth 30 That a man should strive and agonise,
And taste a veriest hell on earth
For the hope of such a prize!

XLV.

You might have turned and tried a man,
Set him a space to weary and wear,
And prove which suited more your plan,
His best of hope or his worst despair,
Yet end as he began.

XLVI.

But you spared me this, like the heart you
are,

And filled my empty heart at a word.

If two lives join, there is oft a scar, 40

They are one and one, with a shadowy
third;

One near one is too far.

XLVII.

A moment after, and hands unseen

Were hanging the night around us fast;

But we knew that a bar was broken between

Life and life: we were mixed at last

In spite of the mortal screen.

XLVIII.

The forests had done it; there they stood;

We caught for a moment the powers at
play:

They had mingled us so, for once and good, 50

Their work was done — we might go or
stay,

They relapsed to their ancient mood.

XLIX.

How the world is made for each of us!

How all we perceive and know in it

Tends to some moment's product thus,

When a soul declares itself — to wit,

By its fruit, the thing it does!

L.

Be hate that fruit or love that fruit,

It forwards the general deed of man,

And each of the Many helps to recruit 50

The life of the race by a general plan;

Each living his own, to boot.

LI.

I am named and known by that moment's
feat;

There took my station and degree;

So grew my own small life complete,

As nature obtained her best of me —

One born to love you, sweet!

LII.

And to watch you sink by the fire-side now

Back again, as you mutely sit

Musing by fire-light, that great brow 70

And the spirit-small hand propping it,

Yonder, my heart knows how!

LIII.

So, earth has gained by one man the more,

And the gain of earth must be heaven's gain too;

And the whole is well worth thinking o'er

When autumn comes: which I mean to do

— One day, as I said before.

ANY WIFE TO ANY HUSBAND.

I.

My love, this is the bitterest, that thou —
Who art all truth, and who dost love me
now
As thine eyes say, as thy voice breaks to say —
Shouldst love so truly, and couldst love me still
A whole long life through, had but love its
will,
Would death that leads me from thee brook delay.

II.

I have but to be by thee, and thy hand
Will never let mine go, nor heart withstand The beating of my heart to reach its
place.
When shall I look for thee and feel thee
gone?
When cry for the old comfort and find
none?
Never, I know! Thy soul is in thy face.

III.

Oh, I should fade — 'tis willed so! Might
I save,
Gladly I would, whatever beauty gave Joy to thy sense, for that was precious
too.
It is not to be granted. But the soul Whence the love comes, all ravage leaves that whole;
Vainly the flesh fades; soul makes all things new.

IV.

It would not be because my eye grew dim Thou couldst not find the love there, thanks to Him
Who never is dishonoured in the spark
He gave us from his fire of fires, and bade
Remember whence it sprang, nor be afraid
While that burns on, though all the rest grow dark.

V.

So, how thou wouldst be perfect, white and clean
Outside as inside, soul and soul's demesne Alike, this body given to show it by!
Oh, three-parts through the worst of life's abyss,
What plaudits from the next world after
this,
Couldst thou repeat a stroke and gain
the sky!

VI.

And is it not the bitterer to think That, disengage our hands and thou wilt sink

Although thy love was love in very deed?
I know that nature! Pass a festive day,
Thou dost not throw its relic-flower away
Nor bid its music's loitering echo speed.

VII.

Thou let'st the stranger's glove lie where it fell;
If old things remain old things all is well,
For thou art grateful as becomes man
best:
And hadst thou only heard me play one 40
tune,
Or viewed me from a window, not so soon
With thee would such things fade as with the rest.

VIII.

I seem to see! We meet and part; 'tis
brief;
The book I opened keeps a folded leaf,
The very chair I sat on, breaks the rank;
That is a portrait of me on the wall —
Three lines, my face comes at so slight a
call:
And for all this, one little hour to thank!

IX.

But now, because the hour through years
was fixed,
Because our inmost beings met and mixed, 50
Because thou once hast loved me — wilt thou dare
Say to thy soul and Who may list beside,
"Therefore she is immortally my bride;
"Chance cannot change my love, nor time impair.

X.

"So, what if in the dusk of life that's left,
"I, a tired traveller of my sun bereft,
"Look from my path when, mimicking
the same,
"The firefly glimpses past me, come and
gone?
"— Where was it till the sunset? where anon
"It will be at the sunrise! What's to 60 blame?"

XI.

Is it so helpful to thee? Canst thou take The mimic up, nor, for the true thing's
sake,
Put gently by such efforts at a beam?
Is the remainder of the way so long,
Thou need'st the little solace, thou the strong?
Watch out thy watch, let weak ones doze and dream!

XII.

— Ah, but the fresher faces! "Is it true," Thou'lt ask, "some eyes are beautiful and
new?"

"Some hair, — how can one choose but grasp such wealth?"

"And if a man would press his lips to lips
"Fresh as the wilding hedge-rose-cup there slips

"The dew-drop out of, must it be by stealth?"

XIII.

"It cannot change the love still kept for
Her,

"More than if such a picture I prefer "Passing a day with, to a room's bare
side:

"The painted form takes nothing she possessed,

10 "Yet, while the Titian's Venus lies at rest,
"A man looks. Once more, what is there to chide?"

XIV.

So must I see, from where I sit and watch,
My own self sell myself, my hand attach
Its warrant to the very thefts from me —
Thy singleness of soul that made me proud,
Thy purity of heart I loved aloud,
Thy man's-truth I was bold to bid God
see!

XV.

Love so, then, if thou wilt! Give all thou canst

Away to the new faces — disentranced,
(Say it and think it) obdurate no more:

20 Re-issue looks and words from the old mint,

Pass them afresh, no matter whose the print

Image and superscription once they bore!

XVI.

Re-coin thyself and give it them to spend, —
It all comes to the same thing at the end, Since mine thou wast, mine art and mine shalt be,

Faithful or faithless, sealing up the sum
Or lavish of my treasure, thou must come Back to the heart's place here I keep for thee!

XVII.

Only, why should it be with stain at all?
30 Why must I, 'twixt the leaves of coronal,
Put any kiss of pardon on thy brow?

Why need the other women know so much,
And talk together, "Such the look and such

"The smile he used to love with, then as now!"

XVIII.

Might I die last and show thee! Should I find

Such hardship in the few years left behind,
If free to take and light my lamp, and go Into thy tomb, and shut the door and sit,

Seeing thy face on those four sides of it
The better that they are so blank, I
know!

XIX.

Why, time was what I wanted, to turn o'er Within my mind each look, get more and
more

By heart each word, too much to learn at
first;

And join thee all the fitter for the pause
'Neath the low doorway's lintel. That were cause

For lingering, though thou calledst, if I durst!

XX.

And yet thou art the nobler of us two:
What dare I dream of, that thou canst not do, Outstripping my ten small steps with one stride?

I'll say then, here's a trial and a task —
Is it to bear? — if easy, I'll not ask:

Though love fail, I can trust on in thy pride.

XXI.

Pride? — when those eyes forestall the life behind

The death I have to go through! — when I
find,

Now that I want thy help most, all of
thee!

What did I fear? Thy love shall hold me
fast

Until the little minute's sleep is past
And I wake saved. — And yet it will not
be!

TWO IN THE CAMPAGNA.

I.

I WONDER do you feel to-day
As I have felt since, hand in hand,
We sat down on the grass, to stray
In spirit better through the land,
This morn of Rome and May?

II.

For me, I touched a thought, I know,
Has tantalised me many times,
(Like turns of thread the spiders throw Mocking across our path) for rhymes
To catch at and let go.

III.

Help me to hold it! First it left
The yellowing fennel,¹ run to seed
There, branching from the brickwork's
cleft,

Some old tomb's ruin: yonder weed
Took up the floating weft,

¹ Herb with yellow flowers and seeds supposed to be medicinal.

IV.

Where one small orange cup amassed Five beetles, — blind and green they grope
 Among the honey-meal: and last,
 Everywhere on the grassy slope
 I traced it. Hold it fast!

V.

The champaign with its endless fleece
 Of feathery grasses everywhere!
 Silence and passion, joy and peace,
 An everlasting wash of air —
 Rome's ghost since her decease.

VI.

Such life here, through such lengths of hours,
 Such miracles performed in play,
 Such primal naked forms of flowers,
 Such letting nature have her way
 While heaven looks from its towers!

VII.

How say you? Let us, O my dove,
 Let us be unashamed of soul,
 As earth lies bare to heaven above!
 How is it under our control
 To love or not to love?

VIII.

I would that you were all to me,
 You that are just so much, no more.
 Nor yours nor mine, nor slave nor free!
 Where does the fault lie? What the core O' the wound, since wound must be?

IX.

I would I could adopt your will,
 See with your eyes, and set my heart
 Beating by yours, and drink my fill At your soul's springs, — your part my
 part
 In life, for good and ill.

X.

No. I yearn upward, touch you close,
 Then stand away. I kiss your cheek, Catch your soul's warmth, — I pluck the rose
 And love it more than tongue can
 speak —
 Then the good minute goes.

XI.

Already how am I so far
 Out of that minute? Must I go
 Still like the thistle-ball, no bar,
 Onward, whenever light winds blow,
 Fixed by no friendly star?

XII.

Just when I seemed about to learn!
 Where is the thread now? Off again!
 The old trick! Only I discern — Infinite passion, and the pain
 Of finite hearts that yearn.

MISCONCEPTIONS.

I.

THIS is a spray the Bird clung to,
 Making it blossom with pleasure,
 Ere the high tree-top she sprung to,
 Fit for her nest and her treasure.
 Oh, what a hope beyond measure 50
 Was the poor spray's, which the flying feet hung to, —
 So to be singled out, built in, and sung to!

II.

This is a heart the Queen leant on,
 Thrilled in a minute erratic,
 Ere the true bosom she bent on,
 Meet for love's regal dalmatic.¹
 Oh, what a fancy ecstatic
 Was the poor heart's, ere the wanderer went on —
 Love to be saved for it, proffered to, spent on!

A SERENADE AT THE VILLA.

I.

THAT was I, you heard last night, 60
 When there rose no moon at all,
 Nor, to pierce the strained and tight
 Tent of heaven, a planet small:
 Life was dead and so was light.

II.

Not a twinkle from the fly,
 Not a glimmer from the worm;
 When the crickets stopped their cry,
 When the owls forbore a term,
 You heard music; that was I.

III.

Earth turned in her sleep with pain, 70
 Sultrily inspired for proof:
 In at heaven and out again,
 Lightning! — where it broke the roof,
 Bloodlike, some few drops of rain.

IV.

What they could my words expressed,
 O my love, my all, my one!

¹ A vestment used by ecclesiastics, and formerly by senators and persons of high rank.

Singing helped the verses best,
And when singing's best was done,
To my lute I left the rest.

V.

So wore night; the East was grey,
White the broad-faced hemlock-
flowers:

There would be another day;
Ere its first of heavy hours
Found me, I had passed away.

VI.

What became of all the hopes,
Words and song and lute as well?
Say, this struck you — "When life gropes
"Feebly for the path where fell
"Light last on the evening slopes,

VII.

"One friend in that path shall be,
"To secure my step from wrong;
"One to count night day for me,
"Patient through the watches long,
"Serving most with none to see."

VIII.

Never say — as something bodes —
"So, the worst has yet a worse!
"When life halts 'neath double loads,
"Better the taskmaster's curse
"Than such music on the roads!

IX.

"When no moon succeeds the sun,
"Nor can pierce the midnight's tent
"Any star, the smallest one,
"While some drops, where lightning rent,
"Show the final storm begun —

X.

"When the fire-fly hides its spot,
"When the garden-voices fail
"In the darkness thick and hot, —
"Shall another voice avail,
"That shape be where these are not?

XI.

"Has some plague a longer lease,
"Proffering its help, uncouth?
"Can't one even die in peace?
"As one shuts one's eyes on youth,
"Is that face the last one sees?"

XII.

Oh how dark your villa was,
Windows fast and obdurate!
How the garden grudged me grass
Where I stood — the iron gate
Ground its teeth to let me pass!

ONE WAY OF LOVE.

I.

ALL June I bound the rose in sheaves.
Now, rose by rose, I strip the leaves
And strew them where Pauline may pass.

She will not turn aside? Alas!
Let them lie. Suppose they die?
The chance was they might take her eye.

II.

How many a month I strove to suit
These stubborn fingers to the lute!
To-day I venture all I know.
She will not hear my music? So!
Break the string; fold music's wing:
Suppose Pauline had bade me sing!

III.

My whole life long I learned to love.
This hour my utmost art I prove
And speak my passion — heaven or hell?
She will not give me heaven? 'Tis
well!
Lose who may — I still can say,
Those who win heaven, blest are they!

ANOTHER WAY OF LOVE.

I.

JUNE was not over
Though past the full,
And the best of her roses
Had yet to blow,
When a man I know
(But shall not discover,
Since ears are dull,
And time discloses)
Turned him and said with a man's true
air,
Half sighing a smile in a yawn, as 'twere, —
"If I tire of your June, will she greatly care?"

II.

Well, dear, in-doors with you!
True! serene deadness
Tries a man's temper.
What's in the blossom
June wears on her bosom?
Can it clear scores with you?
Sweetness and redness.
Eadem semper!
Go, let me care for it greatly or slightly!
If June mend her bower now, your hand left unsightly
By plucking the roses, — my June will do rightly.

III.

And after, for pastime,
 If June be refulgent
 With flowers in completeness,
 All petals, no prickles,
 Delicious as trickles
 Of wine poured at mass-time, —
 And choose One indulgent
 To redness and sweetness:
 Or if, with experience of man and of spider,
 June use my June-lightning, the strong insect-ridder,
 And stop the fresh film-work, — why, June will consider.

A PRETTY WOMAN.

I.

THAT fawn-skin dappled hair of hers,
 And the blue eye
 Dear and dewy,
 And that infantine fresh air of hers!

II.

To think men cannot take you, Sweet,
 And enfold you,
 Ay, and hold you,
 And so keep you what they make you,
 Sweet!

III.

You like us for a glance, you know —
 For a word's sake
 Or a sword's sake,
 All's the same, whate'er the chance, you
 know.

IV.

And in turn we make you ours, we say —
 You and youth too,
 Eyes and mouth too,
 All the face composed of flowers, we say.

V.

All's our own, to make the most of, Sweet—Sing and say for,
 Watch and pray for,
 Keep a secret or go boast of, Sweet!

VI.

But for loving, why, you would not, Sweet,
 Though we prayed you,
 Paid you, brayed you
 In a mortar — for you could not, Sweet!

VII.

So, we leave the sweet face fondly there:
 Be its beauty
 Its sole duty!
 Let all hope of grace beyond, lie there!

VIII.

And while the face lies quiet there, 40
 Who shall wonder
 That I ponder
 A conclusion? I will try it there.

IX.

As, — why must one, for the love foregone,
 Scout mere liking?
 Thunder-striking Earth, — the heaven, we looked above for,
 gone!

X.

Why, with beauty, needs there money be,
 Love with liking?
 Crush the fly-king 50
 In his gauze, because no honey-bee?

XI.

May not liking be so simple-sweet,
 If love grew there
 'Twould undo there
 All that breaks the cheek to dimples sweet?

XII.

Is the creature too imperfect, say?
 Would you mend it
 And so end it?
 Since not all addition perfects aye!

XIII.

Or is it of its kind, perhaps, 60
 Just perfection —
 Whence, rejection
 Of a grace not to its mind, perhaps?

XIV.

Shall we burn up, tread that face at once
 Into tinder,
 And so hinder
 Sparks from kindling all the place at once?

XV.

Or else kiss away one's soul on her?
 Your love-fancies!
 — A sick man sees 70
 Truer, when his hot eyes roll on her!

XVI.

Thus the craftsman thinks to grace the rose, —
 Plucks a mould-flower
 For his gold flower,
 Uses fine things that efface the rose:

XVII.

Rosy rubies make its cup more rose,
 Precious metals
 Ape the petals, —
 Last, some old king locks it up, morose!

XVIII.

Then how grace a rose? I know a way!
 Leave it, rather.
 Must you gather?
 Smell, kiss, wear it — at last, throw away!

RESPECTABILITY.

I.

DEAR, had the world in its caprice Deigned to proclaim "I know you both,
 "Have recognised your plighted troth,
 "Am sponsor for you: live in peace!" —
 How many precious months and years
 10 Of youth had passed, that speed so fast,
 Before we found it out at last,
 The world, and what it fears?

II.

How much of priceless life were spent
 With men that every virtue decks,
 And women models of their sex,
 Society's true ornament, —
 Ere we dared wander, nights like this,
 Thro' wind and rain, and watch the Seine,
 And feel the Boulevart break again
 20 To warmth and light and bliss?

III.

I know! the world proscribes not love;
 Allows my finger to caress
 Your lips' contour and downiness,
 Provided it supply a glove.
 The world's good word! — the Institute!
 Guizot receives Montalembert!
 Eh? Down the court three lampions flare;
 Put forward your best foot!

LOVE IN A LIFE.

I.

ROOM after room,
 30 I hunt the house through
 We inhabit together.
 Heart, fear nothing, for, heart, thou shalt find her — Next time, herself! — not the trouble behind her
 Left in the curtain, the couch's perfume!
 As she brushed it, the cornice-wreath blossomed anew:
 Yon looking-glass gleamed at the wave of her feather.

II.

Yet the day wears,
 And door succeeds door;
 I try the fresh fortune —

Range the wide house from the wing to the 40 centre.
 Still the same chance! she goes out as I enter.
 Spend my whole day in the quest, — who
 cares?
 But 'tis twilight, you see, — with such suites to explore,
 Such closets to search, such alcoves to importune!

LIFE IN A LOVE.

ESCAPE me?
 Never —
 Beloved!
 While I am I, and you are you,
 So long as the world contains us both,
 Me the loving and you the loth, 50
 While the one eludes, must the other pursue.
 My life is a fault at last, I fear:
 It seems too much like a fate, indeed!
 Though I do my best I shall scarce
 succeed.
 But what if I fail of my purpose here?
 It is but to keep the nerves at strain,
 To dry one's eyes and laugh at a fall,
 And, baffled, get up and begin again, —
 So the chase takes up one's life, that's all.
 While, look but once from your farthest 60
 bound
 At me so deep in the dust and dark,
 No sooner the old hope goes to ground
 Than a new one, straight to the self-same mark,
 I shape me —
 Ever Removed!

IN THREE DAYS.

I.

So, I shall see her in three days
 And just one night, but nights are short
 Then two long hours, and that is morn.
 See how I come, unchanged, unworn! 70
 Feel, where my life broke off from thine,
 How fresh the splinters keep and fine, —
 Only a touch and we combine!

II.

Too long, this time of year, the days!
 But nights at least the nights are short.
 As night shows where her one moon is,
 A hand's-breadth of pure light and bliss,
 So life's night gives my lady birth
 And my eyes hold her! What is worth
 The rest of heaven, the rest of earth? 80

III.

O loaded curls, release your store
 Of warmth and scent, as once before

The tingling hair did, lights and darks
 Out breaking into fairy sparks,
 When under curl and curl I pried
 After the warmth and scent inside,
 Thro' lights and darks how manifold —
 The dark inspired, the light controlled!
 As early Art embrowns the gold.

IV.

What great fear, should one say, "Three days
 "That change the world might change as
 well
 "Your fortune; and if joy delays,
 "Be happy that no worse befell!"
 What small fear, if another says,
 "Three days and one short night beside
 "May throw no shadow on your ways;
 "But years must teem with change untried,
 "With chance not easily defied,
 "With an end somewhere undescried."
 No fear! — or if a fear be born
 This minute, it dies out in scorn.
 Fear? I shall see her in three days
 And one night, now the nights are short,
 Then just two hours, and that is morn.

IN A YEAR.

I.

NEVER any more,
 While I live,
 Need I hope to see his face
 As before.
 Once his love grown chill,
 Mine may strive:
 Bitterly we re-embrace,
 Single still.

II.

Was it something said,
 Something done,
 Vexed him? was it touch of hand,
 Turn of head?
 Strange! that very way
 Love begun:
 I as little understand
 Love's decay.

III.

When I sewed or drew,
 I recall
 How he looked as if I sung,
 — Sweetly too.
 If I spoke a word,
 First of all
 Up his cheek the colour sprung,
 Then he heard.

IV.

Sitting by my side,
 At my feet,
 So he breathed but air I breathed,
 Satisfied!
 I, too, at love's brim
 Touched the sweet:
 I would die if death bequeathed
 Sweet to him.

V.

"Speak, I love thee best!"
 He exclaimed:
 "Let thy love my own foretell!"
 I confessed:
 "Clasp my heart on thine
 "Now unblamed,
 "Since upon thy soul as well
 "Hangeth mine!"

VI.

Was it wrong to own,
 Being truth?
 Why should all the giving prove
 His alone?
 I had wealth and ease,
 Beauty, youth:
 Since my lover gave me love,
 I gave these.

VII.

That was all I meant,
 — To be just,
 And the passion I had raised,
 To content.
 Since he chose to change
 Gold for dust,
 If I gave him what he praised
 Was it strange?

VIII.

Would he loved me yet,
 On and on,
 While I found some way undreamed
 — Paid my debt!
 Gave more life and more,
 Till, all gone,
 He should smile "She never seemed
 "Mine before.

IX.

"What, she felt the while,
 "Must I think?
 "Love's so different with us men!"
 He should smile:
 "Dying for my sake —
 "White and pink!
 "Can't we touch these bubbles then
 "But they break?"

X.

Dear, the pang is brief,
Do thy part,
Have thy pleasure! How perplexed Grows belief!
Well, this cold clay clod
Was man's heart:
Crumble it, and what comes next?
Is it God?

WOMEN AND ROSES.

I.

I DREAM of a red-rose tree.
10 And which of its roses three
Is the dearest rose to me?

II.

Round and round, like a dance of snow
In a dazzling drift, as its guardians, go Floating the women faded for ages,
Sculptured in stone, on the poet's pages.
Then follow women fresh and gay,
Living and loving and loved to-day.
Last, in the rear, flee the multitude of maidens,
Beauties yet unborn. And all, to one cadence,
20 They circle their rose on my rose tree.

III.

Dear rose, thy term is reached,
Thy leaf hangs loose and bleached:
Bees pass it unimpeached.

IV.

Stay then, stoop, since I cannot climb,
You, great shapes of the antique time!
How shall I fix you, fire you, freeze you,
Break my heart at your feet to please you?
Oh, to possess and be possessed!
Hearts that beat 'neath each pallid breast!
30 Once but of love, the poesy, the passion, Drink but once and die! — In vain, the
* same fashion,
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

V.

Dear rose, thy joy's undimmed,
Thy cup is ruby-rimmed,
Thy cup's heart nectar-brimmed.

VI.

Deep, as drops from a statue's plinth
The bee sucked in by the hyacinth,
So will I bury me while burning,
Quench like him at a plunge my yearning.
40 Eyes in your eyes, lips on your lips!
Fold me fast where the cincture slips,

Prison all my soul in eternities of pleasure, Girdle me for once! But no — the old measure,
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

VII.

Dear rose without a thorn,
Thy bud's the babe unborn:
First streak of a new morn.

VIII.

Wings, lend wings for the cold, the clear!
What is far conquers what is near.
Roses will bloom nor want beholders, 50
Sprung from the dust where our flesh moulders.
What shall arrive with the cycle's change?
A novel grace and a beauty strange.
I will make an Eve, be the artist that began
her,
Shaped her to his mind! — Alas! in like manner
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

BEFORE.

I.

LET them fight it out, friend! things have gone too far.
God must judge the couple: leave them as they are — Whichever one's the guiltless, to his glory,
And whichever one the guilt's with, to my 60 story!

II.

Why, you would not bid men, sunk in such a slough,
Strike no arm out further, stick and stink
as now,
Leaving right and wrong to settle the embroilment,
Heaven with snaky hell, in torture and entailment?

III.

Who's the culprit of them? How must he conceive
God — the queen he caps to, laughing in his sleeve,
"Tis but decent to profess oneself beneath
her:
"Still, one must not be too much in earnest, either!"

IV.

Better sin the whole sin, sure that God observes;
Then go live his life out! Life will try his 70 nerves,

When the sky, which noticed all, makes no disclosure,
And the earth keeps up her terrible composure.

V.

Let him pace at pleasure, past the walls of rose,
Pluck their fruits when grape-trees graze him as he goes!
For he 'gins to guess the purpose of the garden,
With the sly mute thing, beside there, for a warden.

VI.

What's the leopard-dog-thing, constant at his side,
A leer and lie in every eye of its obsequious hide?
When will come an end to all the mock obeisance,
And the price appear that pays for the misfeasance?

VII.

So much for the culprit. Who's the martyred man?
Let him bear one stroke more, for be sure he can!
He that strove thus evil's lump with good to heaven,
Let him give his blood at last and get his heaven!

VIII.

All or nothing, stake it! Trusts he God or no?
Thus far and no farther? farther? be it so!
Now, enough of your chicane of prudent pauses,
Sage provisos, sub-intents and saving-clauses!

IX.

Ah, "forgive" you bid him? While God's champion lives,
Wrong shall be resisted: dead, why, he forgives.
But you must not end my friend ere you begin him;
Evil stands not crowned on earth, while breath is in him.

X.

Once more — Will the wronger, at this last of all,
Dare to say, "I did wrong," rising in his fall?
No? — Let go, then! Both the fighters to their places!
While I count three, step you back as many paces!

AFTER.

TAKE the cloak from his face, and at first
Let the corpse do its worst!

How he lies in his rights of a man!
Death has done all death can. 30
And, absorbed in the new life he leads,
He reck's not, he heeds
Nor his wrong nor my vengeance; both strike
On his senses alike,
And are lost in the solemn and strange
Surprise of the change.
Ha, what avails death to erase
His offence, my disgrace?
I would we were boys as of old
In the field, by the fold: 40
His outrage, God's patience, man's scorn
Were so easily borne!

I stand here now, he lies in his place:
Cover the face!

THE GUARDIAN-ANGEL.

A PICTURE AT FANO.

I.

DEAR and great Angel, wouldst thou only leave
That child, when thou hast done with him, for me!
Let me sit all the day here, that when eve
Shall find performed thy special ministry,
And time come for departure, thou, suspending Thy flight, mayst see another child for 50 tending,
Another still, to quiet and retrieve.

II.

Then I shall feel thee step one step, no more,
From where thou standest now, to where I gaze,
— And suddenly my head is covered o'er
With those wings, white above the child who prays
Now on that tomb — and I shall feel thee guarding Me, out of all the world; for me, discarding
ing
Yon heaven thy home, that waits and opes its door.

III.

I would not look up thither past thy head
Because the door opes, like that child, I 60
know,

For I should have thy gracious face instead, Thou bird of God! And wilt thou bend me low
 Like him, and lay, like his, my hands together,
 And lift them up to pray, and gently tether
 Me, as thy lamb there, with thy garment's spread?

IV.

*If this was ever granted, I would rest
 My head beneath thine, while thy healing hands
 Close-covered both my eyes beside thy breast,
 Pressing the brain, which too much thought expands,
 io Back to its proper size again, and smooth-
 ing
 Distortion down till every nerve had soothing,
 And all lay quiet, happy and suppressed.

V.

How soon all worldly wrong would be repaired!
 I think how I should view the earth and skies
 And sea, when once again my brow was bared
 After thy healing, with such different
 eyes.
 O world, as God has made it! All is beauty:
 And knowing this, is love, and love is duty.
 What further may be sought for or declared?

VI.

20 Guercino drew this angel I saw teach (Alfred, dear friend!) — that little child to pray,
 Holding the little hands up, each to each Pressed gently, — with his own head turned away
 Over the earth where so much lay before
 him
 Of work to do, though heaven was opening o'er him,
 And he was left at Fano by the beach.

VII.

We were at Fano, and three times we went
 To sit and see him in his chapel there,
 And drink his beauty to our soul's content 30 — My angel with me too: and since I
 care
 For dear Guercino's fame (to which in power
 And glory comes this picture for a dower, Fraught with a pathos so magnificent) —

VIII.

And since he did not work thus earnestly
 At all times, and has else endured some wrong —
 I took one thought his picture struck from
 me,
 And spread it out, translating it to song.
 My love is here. Where are you, dear old
 friend?
 How rolls the Wairoa at your world's far
 end?
 This is Ancona, yonder is the sea. 40

MEMORABILIA.

I.

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
 And did he stop and speak to you
 And did you speak to him again?
 How strange it seems and new!

II.

But you were living before that,
 And also you are living after;
 And the memory I started at —
 My starting moves your laughter.

III.

I crossed a moor, with a name of its own
 And a certain use in the world no doubt, 50
 Yet a hand's-breadth of it shines alone
 'Mid the blank miles round about:

IV.

For there I picked up on the heather
 And there I put inside my breast
 A moulted feather, an eagle-feather!
 Well, I forget the rest.

POPULARITY.

I.

STAND still, true poet that you are!
 I know you; let me try and draw you.
 Some night you'll fail us: when afar
 You rise, remember one man saw you, 60
 Knew you, and named a star!

II.

My star, God's glow-worm! Why extend
 That loving hand of his which leads you
 Yet locks you safe from end to end
 Of this dark world, unless he needs you,
 Just saves your light to spend?

III.

His clenched hand shall unclothe at last,
 I know, and let out all the beauty:

My poet holds the future fast,
Accepts the coming ages' duty,
Their present for this past.

IV.

That day, the earth's feast-master's brow
Shall clear, to God the chalice raising;
"Others give best at first, but thou
"Forever set'st our table praising,
"Keep'st the good wine till now!"

V.

Meantime, I'll draw you as you stand,
With few or none to watch and wonder:
I'll say — a fisher, on the sand
By Tyre the old, with ocean-plunder,
A netful, brought to land.

VI.

Who has not heard how Tyrian shells
Enclosed the blue, that dye of dyes
Whereof one drop worked miracles,
And coloured like Astarte's¹ eyes
Raw silk the merchant sells?

VII.

And each bystander of them all
Could criticize, and quote tradition
How depths of blue sublimed some pall — To get which, pricked a king's ambition;
Worth sceptre, crown and ball.

VIII.

Yet there's the dye, in that rough mesh,
The sea has only just o'erwhispered!..
Live whelks, each lip's beard dripping fresh,
As if they still the water's lisp heard
Through foam the rock-weeds thresh.

IX.

Enough to furnish Solomon
Such hangings for his cedar-house,
That, when gold-robed he took the throne
In that abyss of blue, the Spouse Might swear his presence shone

X.

Most like the centre-spike of gold Which burns deep in the blue-bell's
womb,
What time, with ardours manifold,
The bee goes singing to her groom,
Drunken and overbold.

XI.

Mere conchs! not fit for warp or woof!
Till cunning come to pound and squeeze

And clarify, — refine to proof
The liquor filtered by degrees,
While the world stands aloof.

XII.

And there's the extract, flasked and fine,
And priced and saleable at last!
And Hobbs, Nobbs, Stokes and Nokes combine
To paint the future from the past,
Put blue into their line.

XIII.

Hobbs hints blue, — straight he turtle eats:
Nobbs prints blue, — claret crowns his ⁵⁰
cup:
Nokes outdares Stokes in azure feats, — Both gorge. Who fished the murex²
up?
What porridge had John Keats?

MASTER HUGUES OF SAXE-GOTHA.

[An imaginary composer.]

I.

HIST, but a word, fair and soft!
Forth and be judged, Master Hugues!
Answer the question I've put you so oft:
What do you mean by your mountainous fugues?³
See, we're alone in the loft, —

II.

I, the poor organist here,
Hugues, the composer of note, ⁶⁰
Dead though, and done with, this many a
year:
Let's have a colloquy, something to quote,
Make the world prick up its ear!

III.

See, the church empties apace:
Fast they extinguish the lights.
Hallo there, sacristan! Five minutes'
grace!
Here's a crank pedal wants setting to
rights,
Baulks one of holding the base.

IV.

See, our huge house of the sounds,
Hushing its hundreds at once, ⁷⁰

² Molluscs from which the famous Tyrian purple dye was obtained.

³ A fugue is a short melody.

Beds the last intruder back to his bounds
— O you may challenge them, not a response.
Get the church-saints on their rounds!

VI.

Saints go their rounds, who shall doubt?
— March, with the moon to admire,
Up nave, down chancel, turn transept
about.
Supervise all betwixt pavement and spere,
Put rats and mice to the rout —

VII.

Alone and Justice and Just — Order things back to their place, to Have a sharp eye less the candlesticks rust.
Rub the church-plate, darn the sacrament lace,
Clear the dress-elver of dust.)

VIII.

Here's your book, younger folks shelve!
Played I not off-hand and cunningly,
Just now your masterpiece, hand number twelve?
Here's what should smite, could one handle it cunningly:
Help the axe, give it a helve!

VIII.

Page after page as I played,
Every bar's rest, where one wipes to Sweat from one's brow, I looked up and surveyed.
O'er my three claviers,¹ yon forest of pipes
Whence you still peeped in the shade.

IX.

Sure you were wished to speak?
I sat, with down upon side a score,
Yes, and eyes hunted to put on each cheek.
Like two great doves,² as they wrace them of pure,
Each side that bar, your straight beak!

X.

Sure you said — "Good, the mere notes;
"Still, couldn't they take my intent, to "Know what procured me our Company's notes —
"A master were lauded and scientists shent,
"Parted the sheep from the goats!"

² A note in music.

XI.

Well then, speak up, never flinch!
Quick, try my candle's a snuff!
Burn, do you see! to its uttermost
snuff —
I believe in you, but that's not enough:
Give my conviction a clench!

XII.

First you deliver your phrase
— Nothing propounded that I see.
Fit in itself for much blame or much
praise —
Answered no less, where no answer needs
be Off start the Two on their ways.

XIII.

Straight must a Third interpose,
Volunteer needlessly help.
In smokes a Fourth, a Fifth thrusts in his nose,
So the cry's open, the Kennel's a-yelp,
Argument's hot to the close.

XIV.

One disseminates, he is candid;
Two more interpose, — has distinguished;
Three helps the couple, if ever yet man
and,
Four protests; Five makes a dart at the wing washed;
Back to One, goes the case handled.

XV.

One says his say with a difference;
More of expounding, explaining!
All now is wrangle, abuse, and vocifer-ance;
Now there's a truce, all's subdued, self-restraining.
Five, though, stands out all the stuffer hence.

XVI.

One is incisive, copious;
Two returns, nettled, hurt, crispitant;
Three makes rejoinder, expansive, expensive;
Four overbears them all, strident and strepitant;
Five . . . O Danaides,¹ O Steve!

XVII.

Now, they ply axes and crowbars;
Now, they prick pins at a tissue
Fine as a stem of the vasist Esobar's²

¹ The daughters of Danaus, condemned to pour water into a sieve.

² The Spanish castor, so severely mangled by Fascia.

Worked on the bone of a lie. To what issue?
Where is our gain at the Two-bars?

XVIII.

Est fuga, volvitur rota.
On we drift: where looms the dim port?
One, Two, Three, Four, Five, contribute their quota;
Something is gained, if one caught but the import —
Show it us, Hugues of Saxe-Gotha!

XIX.

What with affirming, denying,
Holding, risposting,¹ subjoining, All's like . . . it's like . . . for an instance I'm trying . . .
There! See our roof, its gilt moulding and groining
Under those spider-webs lying!

XX.

So your fugue broadens and thickens,
Greatens and deepens and lengthens, Till we exclaim — "But where's music, the dickens?
"Blot ye the gold, while your spider-web strengthens
"— Blacked to the stoutest of tickens?"²

XXI.

I for man's effort am zealous:
Prove me such censure unfounded!
Seems it surprising a lover grows jealous — Hopes 'twas for something, his organ-pipes sounded,
Tiring three boys at the bellows?

XXII.

Is it your moral of Life?
Such a web, simple and subtle,
Weave we on earth here in impotent strife, Backward and forward each throwing his shuttle,
Death ending all with a knife?

XXIII.

Over our heads truth and nature —
Still our life's zigzags and dodges,
Ins and outs, weaving a new legislature — God's gold just shining its last where that lodges,
Palled beneath man's usurpature.

² A closely woven fabric.

XXIV.

So we o'ershroud stars and roses,
Cherub and trophy and garland;
Nothings grow something which quietly closes
Heaven's earnest eye: not a glimpse of the far land
Gets through our comments and glozes.

XXV.

Ah but traditions, inventions,
(Say we and make up a visage)
So many men with such various intentions, ⁴⁰ Down the past ages, must know more than this age!
Leave we the web its dimensions!

XXVI.

Who thinks Hugues wrote for the deaf,
Proved a mere mountain in labour?
Better submit; try again; what's the clef?
'Faith, 'tis no trifle for pipe and for tabor —
Four flats, the minor in F.

XXVII.

Friend, your fugue taxes the finger:
Learning it once, who would lose it?
Yet all the while a misgiving will linger, ⁵⁰ Truth's golden o'er us although we refuse it —
Nature, thro' cobwebs we string her.

XXVIII.

Hugues! I advise meâ pand
(Counterpoint glares like a Gorgon) Bid One, Two, Three, Four, Five, clear the arena!
Say the word, straight I unstop the full-organ,
Blare out the mode Palestrina.³

XXIX.

While in the roof, if I'm right there,
. . . Lo you, the wick-in the socket!
Hallo, you sacristan, show us a light there! ⁶⁰
Down it dips, gone like a rocket.
What, you want, do you, to come unawares, Sweeping the church up for first morning-prayers,
And find a poor devil has ended his cares
At the foot of your rotten-runged ratriddled stairs?
Do I carry the moon in my pocket?

cian (1524-1594).

THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES;

A TRAGEDY.

1843.

[The Druses still exist on Mount Lebanon, and entertain opinions said to have been first promulgated at the beginning of the eleventh century by an Egyptian caliph who styled himself Hakeem Biamrallah; that is, He who judges by the order of God. See Holland's "Stories from Browning," p. 172.]

THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES.

PERSONS.

The Grand-Master's Prefect.

The Patriarch's Nuncio.

The Republic's Admiral.

LOYS DE DREUX, Knight-Novice.

Initiated Druses — DJABAL, KHALIL,

ANAEL, MAANI, KARSHOOK, RAGHIB,

AYOOB, and others.

Uninitiated Druses.

Prefect's Guard. Nuncio's Attendants.

Admiral's Force.

TIME, 14—.

PLACE. — An Islet of the Southern Sporades, colonised by Druses of Lebanon, and garrisoned by the Knights-Hospitallers of Rhodes.

SCENE. — A Hall in the Prefect's Palace.

ACT I.

Enter stealthily KARSHOOK, RAGHIB, AYOOB, and other initiated Druses, each as he enters casting off a robe that conceals his distinctive black vest and white turban; then, as giving a loose to exultation, —

Karshook. The moon is carried off in purple fire:

Day breaks at last! Break glory, with the day,

On Djabal's dread incarnate mystery
Now ready to resume its pristine shape
Of Hakeem, as the Khalif vanished erst
In what seemed death to uninstructed eyes,
On red Mokattam's verge — our Founder's flesh,

As he resumes our Founder's function!

Raghib.

Sweep to the Christian Prefect that enslaved

So long us sad Druse exiles o'er the sea! 11

Ayooob. Most joy be thine, O Mother-mount! Thy brood

Returns to thee, no outcasts as we left,
But thus — but thus! Behind, our Prefect's corse;

Before, a presence like the morning — thine.

Absolute Djabal late, — God Hakeem now
That day breaks!

Karshook. Off, then, with disguise at last!

As from our forms this hateful garb we strip,

Lose every tongue its glozing accent too,
Discard each limb the ignoble gesture!

Cry,

'Tis the Druse Nation, warders on our Mount 20

Of the world's secret, since the birth of time,

— No kindred slips, no offsets from thy stock,

No spawn of Christians are we, Prefect, we

Who rise . . .

Ayooob.

Who shout . . .

Raghib. Who seize, a first-fruits, ha —
Spoil of the spoiler! Brave!

[They begin to tear down, and to dispute for, the decorations of the hall.

Karshook.

Hold!

Ayooob.

— Mine, I say;
And mine shall it continue!

Karshook.

Just this fringe!
Take anything beside! Lo, spire on spire,
Curl serpent wise wreathed columns to the top

O' the roof, and hide themselves mysteriously

Among the twinkling lights and darks that haunt 30

Yon cornice! Where the huge veil, they suspend

Before the Prefect's chamber of delight,

Floats wide, then falls again as if its slave,

The scented air, took heart now, and anon
Lost heart to buoy its breadths of gorgeous-
ness

Above the gloom they droop in — all the porch

Is jewelled o'er with frostwork charactery;
And, see, yon eight-point cross of white flame, winking

Hoar-silvery like some fresh-broke marble store:

Raze out the Rhodian cross there, so thou leav'st me

This single fringe!

Ayoub. Ha, wouldst thou, dog-fox? Help!

— Three hand-breadths of gold fringe, my son was set

To twist, the night he died!

Karshook. Nay, hear the knave!
And I could witness my one daughter
borne,

A week since, to the Prefect's couch, yet fold

These arms, be mute, lest word of mine should mar

Our Master's work, delay the Prefect here
A day, prevent his sailing hence for Rhodes —

How know I else? — Hear me denied my
right

By such a knave!

Raghib [interposing]. Each ravage for himself!

Booty enough! On, Druses! Be there
found

Blood and a heap behind us; with us,
Djabal

Turned Hakeem; and before us, Lebanon!
Yields the porch? Spare not! There his minions dragged

Thy daughter, Karshook, to the Prefect's couch!

Ayoub! Thy son; to soothe the Prefect's
pride,

Bent o'er that task, the death-sweat on his
brow,

Carving the spice-tree's heart in scrollwork there!

Onward in Djabal's name!

As the tumult is at height, enter KHALIL.

A pause and silence.

Khalil! Was it for this,
Djabal hath summoned you? Deserve you thus

A portion in to-day's event? What,
here —

When most behoves your feet fall soft, your
eyes

Sink low, your tongues lie still, — at Djabal's side,

Close in his very hearing, who, perchance, Assumes e'en now God Hakeem's dreaded
shape, —

Dispute you for these gauds?

Ayoub. How say'st thou, Khalil?
Doubtless our Master prompts thee! Take the fringe,

Old Karshook! I supposed it was a
day . . .

Khalil. For pillage?

Karshook. Harken, Khalil!
Never spoke

A boy so like a song-bird; we avouch thee
Prettiest of all our Master's instruments

Except thy bright twin-sister; thou and 40
Anael

Challenge his prime regard: but we may crave

(Such nothings as we be) a portion too
Of Djabal's favour; in him we believed,

His bound ourselves, him moon by moon obeyed,

Kept silence till this daybreak — so, may claim

Reward: who grudges me my claim?

Ayoub. To-day
Is not as yesterday!

Raghib. Stand off!

Khalil. Rebel you?
Must I, the delegate of Djabal, draw

His wrath on you, the day of our Return?
Other Druses. Wrench from their grasp 50

the fringe! Hounds! must the earth Vomit her plagues on us thro' thee? — and
thee?

Plague me not, Khalil, for their fault!

Khalil. Oh, shame!
Thus breaks to-day on you, the mystic
tribe

Who, flying the approach of Osman, bore
Our faith, a merest spark, from Syria's ridge

Its birthplace, hither! "Let the sea divide

"These hunters from their prey," you said;
"and safe

"In this dim islet's virgin solitude
"Tend we our faith, the spark, till happier
time

"Fan it to fire; till Hakeem rise again, 55
"According to his word that, in the flesh

"Which faded on Mokattam ages since,
"He, at our extreme need, would interpose,
"And, reinstating all in power and bliss,

"Lead us himself to Lebanon once more."
Was't not thus you departed years ago,
Ere I was born?

Druses. 'Twas even thus, years ago.
Khalil. And did you call — (according to old laws

Which bid us, lest the sacred grow profane,
Assimilate ourselves in outward rites 70

With strangers fortune makes our lords, and live

As Christian with the Christian, Jew with Jew,

Druse only with the Druses) — did you call Or no, to stand 'twixt you and Osman's rage

(Mad to pursue e'en hither thro' the sea The remnant of our tribe), a race self-vowed

To endless warfare with his hordes and him,

The White-cross Knights of the adjacent Isle?

Karshook. And why else rend we down, wrench up, rase out?

10 These Knights of Rhodes we thus solicited For help, bestowed on us a fiercer pest Than aught we fled — their Prefect; who began

His promised mere paternal governance By a prompt massacre of all our Sheikhs Able to thwart the Order in its scheme Of crushing, with our nation's memory, Each chance of our return, and taming us Bondslaves to Rhodes for ever — all, he thinks

To end by this day's treason.

Khalil. Say I not?

You, fitted to the Order's purposes,

20 Your Sheikhs cut off, your rites, your garb proscribed,

Must yet receive one degradation more; The Knights at last throw off the mask — transfer,

As tributary now and appanage,

This islet they are but protectors of,

To their own ever-craving liege, the Church,

Who licenses all crimes that pay her thus. You, from their Prefect, were to be con-signed

(Pursuant of I know not what vile pact) To the Knights' Patriarch, ardent to outvie

30 His predecessor in all wickedness.

When suddenly rose Djabal in the midst, Djabal, the man in semblance, but our God Confessed by signs and portents. Ye saw fire

Bicker round Djabal, heard strange music flit

Bird-like about his brow?

Druses. We saw — we heard!

Djabal is Hakeem, the incarnate Dread, The phantasm Khalif, King of Prodigies!

Khalil. And as he said has not our Khalif done,

And so disposed events (from land to land

40 Passing invisibly) that when, this morn, The pact of villany complete, there comes This Patriarch's Nuncio with this Master's Prefect

There treason to consummate, — each will face

For a crouching handful, an uplifted nation:

For simulated Christians, confessed Druses: And, for slaves past hope of the Mother-mount,

Freedmen returning there 'neath Venice' flag;

That Venice which, the Hospitallers' foe, Grants us from Candia escort home at price

Of our relinquished isle, Rhodes counts 50 her own —

Venice, whose promised argosies should stand

Toward harbour: is it now that you, and you,

And you, selected from the rest to bear The burthen of the Khalif's secret, further

To-day's event, entitled by your wrongs, And witness in the Prefect's hall his fate — That you dare clutch these gauds? Ay, drop them!

Karshook. True,

Most true, all this; and yet, may one dare hint,

Thou art the youngest of us? — though employed

Abundantly as Djabal's confidant, 60 Transmitter of his mandates, even now.

Much less, whene'er beside him Anael graces

The cedar throne, his queen-bride, art thou like

To occupy its lowest step that day! Now, Khalil, wert thou checked as thou aspiest, Forbidden such or such an honour, — say, Would silence serve so amply?

Khalil. Karshook thinks

I covet honours? Well, nor idly thinks. Honours? I have demanded of them all

The greatest. 70

Karshook. I supposed so.

Khalil. Judge, yourselves!

Turn, thus: 'tis in the alcove at the back Of yonder columned porch, whose entrance

now The veil hides, that our Prefect holds his state,

Receives the Nuncio, when the one, from Rhodes,

The other lands from Syria; there they meet.

Now, I have sued with earnest prayers . . .

Karshook. For what Shall the Bride's brother vainly sue?

Khalil. That mine —

Avenging in one blow a myriad wrongs — Might be the hand to slay the Prefect there!

Djabal reserves that office for himself. 80

[A silence.]

Thus far, as youngest of you all, I speak

— Scarce more enlightened than yourselves; since, near
 As I approach him, nearer as I trust
 Soon to approach our Master, he reveals
 Only the God's power, not the glory yet.
 Therefore I reasoned with you: now, as servant
 To Djabal, bearing his authority, Hear me appoint your several posts! Till noon
 None see him save myself and Anael: once
 The deed achieved, our Khalif, casting off
 The embodied Awe's tremendous mystery,
 The weakness of the flesh disguise, resumes
 His proper glory, ne'er to fade again.

Enter a Druse.

The Druse. Our Prefect lands from Rhodes! — without a sign
 That he suspects aught since he left our Isle;
 Nor in his train a single guard beyond
 The few he sailed with hence: so have we learned
 From Loys.
Karshook. Loys? Is not Loys gone
 For ever?
Ayoob. Loys, the Frank Knight, returned?

The Druse. Loys, the boy, stood on the leading prow
 Conspicuous in his gay attire, and leapt
 Under the surf the foremost. Since day-dawn
 I kept watch to the Northward; take but
 note

Of my poor vigilance to Djabal!
Khalil. Peace!
 Thou, Karshook, with thy company,
 receive
 The Prefect as appointed: see, all keep
 The wonted show of servitude: announce
 His entry here by the accustomed peal
 Of trumpets, then await the further pleasure
 Of Djabal! (Loys back, when Djabal sent
 To Rhodes that we might spare the single Knight
 Worth sparing!)

Enter a second Druse.

The Druse. I espied it first! Say, I First spied the Nuncio's galley from the South!
 Said'st thou a Crossed-keys' flag would flap the mast?
 It nears apace! One galley and no more.
 If Djabal chance to ask who spied the flag, Forget not, I it was!

Khalil. Thou, Ayoob, bring
 The Nuncio and his followers hither!
 Break

One rule prescribed, ye wither in your
 blood,
 Die at your fault!

Enter a third Druse.

The Druse. I shall see home, see home!
 — Shall banquet in the sombre groves 40
 again!

Hail to thee, Khalil! Venice looms afar;
 The argosies of Venice, like a cloud,
 Bear up from Candia in the distance!

Khalil. Joy!
 Summon our people, Raghib! Bid all
 forth!

Tell them the long-kept secret, old and young!

Set free the captive, let the trampled raise
 Their faces from the dust, because at length
 The cycle is complete, God Hakeem's reign

Begins anew! Say, Venice for our guard, Ere night we steer for Syria! Hear you, 50
 Druses?

Hear you this crowning witness to the claims

Of Djabal? Oh, I spoke of hope and fear,
 Reward and punishment, because he bade
 Who has the right; for me, what should I
 say

But, mar not those imperial lineaments,
 No majesty of all that rapt regard Vex by the least omission! Let him rise
 Without a check from you!

Druses. Let Djabal rise!

Enter Loys. — The Druses are silent.

Loys. Who speaks of Djabal? — for I seek him, friends!

[Aside.] Tu Dieu! 'Tis as our Isle broke 60 out in song

For joy, its Prefect-incubus drops off
 To-day, and I succeed him in his rule!
 But no — they cannot dream of their good fortune!

[Aloud.] Peace to you, Druses! I have tidings for you

But first for Djabal: where's your tall
 bewitcher,

With that small Arab thin-lipped silver-
 mouth?

Khalil [aside to KARSHOOK]. Loys, in truth! Yet Djabal cannot err!

Karshook [to KHALIL]. And who takes charge of Loys? That's forgotten, Despite thy wariness! Will Loys stand
 And see his comrades slaughtered? 70

Loys [aside]. How they shrink
 And whisper, with those rapid faces!
 What?

The sight of me in their oppressors' garb Strikes terror to the simple tribe? God's shame

On those that bring our Order ill repute!

But all's at end now; better days begin
For these mild mountaineers from over-
sea:

The timidest shall have in me no Prefect
To cower at thus! [Aloud.] I asked for Djabal —

Karshook [aside]. Better
One lured him, ere he can suspect, inside
The corridor; 'twere easy to dispatch
A youngster. [To Loys.] Djabal passed some minutes since

Thro' yonder porch, and . . .
Khalil [aside]. Hold! What, him dispatch?

The only Christian of them all we charge
No tyranny upon? Who, — noblest Knight Of all that learned from time to time their trade

Of lust and cruelty among us, — heir
To Europe's pomp, a truest child of
pride, —

Yet stood between the Prefect and ourselves

From the beginning? Loys, Djabal makes

Account of, and precisely sent to Rhodes
For safety? I take charge of him!

[To Loys.] Sir Loys, —

Loys. There, cousins! Does Sir Loys strike you dead?

Khalil [advancing]. Djabal has intercourse with few or none

20 Till noontide: but, your pleasure?
Loys.

"Intercourse
"With few or none?" — (Ah, Khalil, when you spoke

I saw not your smooth face! All health!
— and health

To Anael! How fares Anael?) — "Inter-
course

"With few or none?" Forget you, I've been friendly

With Djabal long ere you or any Druse?
— Enough of him at Rennes, I think,
beneath

The Duke my father's roof! He'd tell by the hour,

With fixed white eyes beneath his swarthy
brow,

Plausibler stories . . .

Khalil. Stories, say you? — Ah,

30 The quaint attire!
Loys. My dress for the last time!

How sad I cannot make you understand,
This ermine, o'er a shield, betokens me

Of Bretagne, ancientest of provinces
And noblest; and, what's best and oldest
there,

See, Dreux', our house's blazon, which the Nuncio

Tacks to an Hospitaller's vest to-day!
Khalil. The Nuncio we await? What brings you back

From Rhodes, Sir Loys?

Loys. How you island-tribe

Forget the world's awake while here you drowse!

What brings me back? What should not 40 bring me, rather!

Our Patriarch's Nuncio visits you to-day —
Is not my year's probation out? I come
To take the knightly vows.

Khalil. What's that you wear?

Loys. This Rhodian cross? The cross your Prefect wore.

You should have seen, as I saw, the full
Chapter

Rise, to a man, while they transferred this cross

From that unworthy Prefect's neck to . . .
(fool —

My secret will escape me!) In a word,
My year's probation passed, a Knight ere
eve

Am I; bound, like the rest, to yield my 50
wealth

To the common stock, to live in chastity, (We Knights espouse alone our Order's fame)

— Change this gay weed for the back white-crossed gown,

And fight to death against the Infidel — Not, therefore, against you, you Christians with

Such partial difference only as befits
The peacefullest of tribes. But Khalil, prithee,

Is not the Isle brighter than wont to-day?
Khalil. Ah, the new sword!

Loys. See now! You handle sword
As 'twere a camel-staff. Pull! That's 60
my motto,

Annealed "Pro fide," on the blade in blue.
Khalil. No curve in it? Surely a blade should curve.

Loys. Straight from the wrist! Loose
— it should poise itself!

Khalil [wavering with irrepressible exultation the sword]. We are a nation,
Loys, of old fame

Among the mountains! Rights have we to keep

With the sword too!

[Remembering himself.] But I forget — you bid me

Seek Djabal?

Loys. What! A sword's sight scares
you not?

(The People I will make of him and them!
Oh let my Prefect-sway begin at once!)

Bring Djabal — say, indeed, that come he 70
must!

Khalil. At noon seek Djabal in the Prefect's Chamber.

And find . . . [Aside.] Nay, 'tis thy cursed race's token,

Frank pride, no special insolence of thine!

[Aloud.] Tarry, and I will do your bidding, Loys!

[To the rest aside.] Now, forth you! I proceed to Djabal straight.

Leave this poor boy, who knows not what he says!

Oh will it not add joy to even thy joy, Djabal, that I report all friends were true?

[KHALIL goes, followed by the Druses.]

Loys. Tu Dieu! How happy I shall make these Druses!

Was't not surpassingly contrived of me To get the long list of their wrongs by heart, Then take the first pretence for stealing off From these poor islanders, present myself Sudden at Rhodes before the noble Chapter,

And (as best proof of ardour in its cause Which ere to-night will have become, too, mine)

Acquaint it with this plague-sore in its body,

This Prefect and his villanous career?

The princely Synod! All I dared request

Was his dismissal; and they graciously

Consigned his very office to myself —

Myself may cure the Isle diseased!

And well

For them, they did so! Since I never felt

How lone a lot, tho' brilliant, I embrace,

Till now that, past retrieval, it is mine.

To live thus, and thus die! Yet, as I leapt

On shore, so home a feeling greeted me

That I could half believe in Djabal's story,

He used to tempt my father with, at Rennes —

And me, too, since the story brought me here —

Of some Count Dreux and ancestor of ours

Who, sick of wandering from Bouillon's war,

Left his old name in Lebanon.

Long days

At least to spend in the Isle! and, my news known

An hour hence, what if Anael turn on me

The great black eyes I must forget?

Why, fool,

Recall them, then? My business is with

Djabal,

Not Anael! Djabal tarries: if I seek him? —

The Isle is brighter than its wont to-day.

ACT II.

Enter DJABAL.

Djabal. That a strong man should think himself a God!

I — Hakeem? To have wandered through the world,

Sown falsehood, and thence reaped now scorn, now faith,

For my one chant with many a change, my tale

Of outrage, and my prayer for vengeance — this

Required, forsooth, no mere man's faculty, Nought less than Hakeem's? The persuading Loys

To pass probation here; the getting access By Loys to the Prefect; worst of all,

The gaining my tribe's confidence by fraud That would disgrace the very Frank, — a few

Of Europe's secrets which subdue the flame,

The wave, — to ply a simple tribe with these,

Took Hakeem?

59

And I feel this first to-day!

Does the day break, is the hour imminent

When one deed, when my whole life's deed, my deed

Must be accomplished? Hakeem? Why the God?

Shout, rather, "Djabal, Youssof's child, thought slain

"With his whole race, the Druses' Sheikhs, this Prefect

"Endeavoured to extirpate — saved, a child,

"Returns from traversing the world, a man,

"Able to take revenge, lead back the march

"To Lebanon" — so shout, and who gainsays?

But now, because delusion mixed itself 60

Insensibly with this career, all's changed!

Have I brought Venice to afford us convoy?

"True — but my jugglings wrought that!"

Put I heart

Into our people where no heart lurked? —

"Ah,

"What cannot an impostor do!"

Not this!

Not do this which I do! Not bid avaunt Falshood! Thou shalt not keep thy hold on me!

Nor even get a hold on me! 'Tis now —

This day — hour — minute — 'tis as here I stand

On the accursed threshold of the Prefect, 70

That I am found deceiving and deceived!

And now what do I? — hasten to the few Deceived, ere they deceive the many —

shout,

"As I professed, I did believe myself!

"Say, Druses, had you seen a butchery —

"If Ayoob, Karshook saw — Maani there

"Must tell you how I saw my father sink;

"My mother's arms twine still about my neck;

- "I hear my brother shriek, here's yet the scar
 "Of what was meant for my own death-blow — say,
 "If you had woke like me, grown year by year
 "Out of the tumult in a far-off clime,
 "Would it be wondrous such delusion grew?
 "I walked the world, asked help at every hand;
 "Came help or no? Not this and this? Which helps
 "When I returned with, found the Prefect here,
 "The Druses here, all here but Hakeem's self, 10 "The Khalif of the thousand prophecies,
 "Reserved for such a juncture, — could I call
 "My mission aught but Hakeem's? Promised Hakeem
 "More than performs the Djabal — you absolve?
 "— Me, you will never shame before the crowd
 "Yet happily ignorant? — Me, both throngs surround,
 "The few deceived, the many unabused,
 "— Who, thus surrounded, slay for you and them
 "The Prefect, lead to Lebanon? No Khalif,
 "But Sheikh once more! Mere Djabal — not" . . .
- Enter KHALIL hastily.*
- Khalil.* — God Hakeem!
 20 'Tis told! The whole Druse nation knows thee, Hakeem,
 As we! and mothers lift on high their babes
 Who seem aware, so glisten their great eyes,
 Thou hast not failed us; ancient brows are proud;
 Our elders could not earlier die, it seems,
 Than at thy coming! The Druse heart is thine!
 Take it! my lord and theirs, be thou adored!
Djabal [aside]. Adored! — but I renounce it utterly!
Khalil. Already are they instituting choirs
 And dances to the Khalif, as of old 30 'Tis chronicled thou bad'st them.
Djabal [aside]. I abjure it!
 'Tis not mine — not for me!
Khalil. Why pour they wine
 Flavoured like honey and bruised mountain-herbs,
 Or wear those strings of sun-dried cedar-fruit?
 Oh, let me tell thee — Esaad, we supposed
- Doting, is carried forth, eager to see
 The last sun rise on the Isle: he can see now!
 The shamed Druse women never wept before:
 They can look up when we reach home, they say.
 Smell! — sweet cane, saved in Lilith's breast thus long — Sweet! — it grows wild in Lebanon. And I Alone do nothing for thee! 'Tis my office
 Just to announce what well thou know'st — but thus Thou bidst me. . . At this self-same moment tend
 The Prefect, Nuncio and the Admiral Hither by their three sea-paths: nor forget
 Who were the trusty watchers! — thou forget?
 Like me, who do forget that Anael bade . . .
Djabal [aside]. Ay, Anael, Anael — is that said at last?
 Louder than all, that would be said, I knew!
 What does abjuring mean, confessing so mean,
 To the people? Till that woman crossed my path,
 On went I, solely for my people's sake:
 I saw her, and I then first saw myself,
 And slackened pace: "if I should prove indeed
 "Hakeem — with Anael by!"
Khalil. Ah, he is rapt!
 Dare I at such a moment break on him
 Even to do my sister's bidding? Yes:
 The eyes are Djabal's and not Hakeem's yet,
 Though but till I have spoken this, perchance.
Djabal [aside]. To yearn to tell her, and yet have no one Great heart's word that will tell her! I could gasp Doubtless one such word out, and die.
 [Aloud.] You said That Anael . . .
Khalil. . . . Fain would see thee, speak with thee,
 Before thou change, discard this Djabal's shape
 She knows, for Hakeem's shape she is to know.
 Something to say that will not from her mind!
 I know not what — "Let him but come!" she said.
Djabal [half-apart]. My nation — all my Druses — how fare they?
 Those I must save, and suffer thus to save,
 Hold they their posts? Wait they their Khalif too?

Khalil. All at the signal pant to flock around

That banner of a brow!

Djabal [aside]. And when they flock, Confess them this: and after, for reward, Be chased with howlings to her feet perchance!

— Have the poor outraged Druses, deaf and blind,

Precede me there, forestall my story there, Tell it in mocks and jeers!

I lose myself.
Who needs a Hakeem to direct him now? need the veriest child — why not this child?

[Turning abruptly to KHALIL.]
You are a Druse too, Khalil; you were nourished like Anael with our mysteries: if she Could vow, so nourished, to love only one Who should avenge the Druses, whence proceeds

Your silence? Wherefore made you no essay,

Who thus implicitly can execute My bidding? What have I done, you could not?

Who, knowing more than Anael the prostration

Of our once lofty tribe, the daily life Of this detested . . .

Does he come, you say, This Prefect? All's in readiness?

Khalil. The sword, The sacred robe, the Khalil's mystic tiar, Laid up so long, are all disposed beside The Prefect's chamber.

Djabal. — Why did you despair?

Khalil. I know our nation's state? Too surely know,

As thou who speak'st to prove me! Wrongs like ours

Should wake revenge: but when I sought the wronged and spoke, — "The Prefect stabbed your son — arise!

Your daughter, while you starve, eats shameless bread

In his pavilion — then arise!" — my speech fell idly: 'twas, "Be silent, or worse fare! Endure till time's slow cycle prove complete!

Who mayst thou be that takest on thee to thrust

Into this peril — art thou Hakeem?" No!

Only a mission like thy mission renders all these obedient at a breath, subdues Their private passions, brings their wills to one.

Djabal. You think so?

Khalil. Even now — when they have witnessed

Thy miracles — had I not threatened all With Hakeem's vengeance, they would mar the work,

And couch ere this, each with his special prize,

Safe in his dwelling, leaving our main hope To perish. No! When these have kissed thy feet

At Lebanon, the past purged off, the present

Clear, — for the future, even Hakeem's mission

May end, and I perchance, or any youth, Shall rule them thus renewed. — I tutor thee!

Djabal. And wisely. (He is Anael's brother, pure

As Anael's self.) Go say, I come to her. Haste! I will follow you. [KHALIL goes.]

Oh, not confess To these, the blinded multitude — confess, 50

Before at least the fortune of my deed Half-authorise its means! Only to her

Let me confess my fault, who in my path Curled up like incense from a Mage-king's tomb

When he would have the wayfarer descend Through the earth's rift and bear hid treasure forth!

How should child's-carelessness prove manhood's crime

Till now that I, whose lone youth hurried past,

Letting each joy 'scape for the Druses' sake,

At length recover in one Druse all joy? 60

Were her brow brighter, her eyes richer, still

Would I confess. On the gulf's verge I pause.

How could I slay the Prefect, thus and thus? Anael, be mine to guard me, not destroy!

[Goes.]

Enter ANAEL, and MAANI who is assisting to array her in the ancient dress of the Druses.

Anael. Those saffron vestures of the tabret-girls!

Comes Djabal, think you?

Maani. Doubtless Djabal comes.

Anael. Dost thou snow-swathe thee kinglier, Lebanon.

Than in my dreams? — Nay all the tresses off

My forehead! Look I lovely so? He says That I am lovely.

Maani. Lovely: nay, that hangs 70

Awry.

Anael. You tell me how a khandjar hangs?

The sharp side, thus, along the heart, see, marks

The maiden of our class. Are you content
For Djabal as for me?

Maani. Content, my child.

Anael. Oh mother, tell me more of him!
He comes

Even now — tell more, fill up my soul with
him!

Maani. And did I not . . . yes, surely
. . . tell you all?

Anael. What will be changed in Djabal when the Change

Arrives? Which feature? Not his eyes!

Maani. 'Tis writ
Our Hakeem's eyes rolled fire and clove
the dark

Superbly.

Anael. Not his eyes! His voice perhaps?

10 Yet that's no change; for a grave current lived

— Grandly beneath the surface ever lived,
That, scattering, broke as in live silver
spray

While . . . ah, the bliss . . . he would discourse to me

In that enforced still fashion, word on
word!

'Tis the old current which must swell thro'
that,

For what least tone, Maani, could I lose?
'Tis surely not his voice will change!

—If Hakeem

Only stood by! If Djabal, somehow,
passed

Out of the radiance as from out a robe;

20 Possessed, but was not it!

He lived with you?

Well — and that morning Djabal saw me
first

And heard me vow never to wed but one Who saved my People — on that day . . .
proceed!

Maani. Once more, then: from the time of his return

In secret, changed so since he left the Isle
That I, who screened our Emir's last of
sons,

This Djabal, from the Prefect's massacre — Who bade him ne'er forget the child he
was,

— Who dreamed so long the youth he might become —

30 I knew not in the man that child; the man
Who spoke alone of hope to save our tribe, How he had gone from land to land to save

Our tribe — allies were sure, nor foes to dread.

And much he mused, days, nights, alone he mused:

But never till that day when, pale and worn
As by a persevering woe, he cried

"Is there not one Druse left me?" — and I showed

The way to Khali's and your hiding-place
From the abhorred eye of the Prefect here,
So that he saw you, heard you speak —
till then,

Never did he announce — (how the moon
seemed

To ope and shut, the while, above us
both!)

— His mission was the mission promised
us;

The cycle had revolved; all things renew-
ing,

He was lost Hakeem clothed in flesh to lead

His children home anon, now veiled to
work

Great purposes: the Druses now would
change!

Anael. And they have changed! And obstacles did sink,

And furtherances rose! And round his form

Played fire, and music beat her angel so wings!

My people, let me more rejoice, oh more
For you than for myself! Did I but watch

Afar the pageant, feel our Khalif pass,
One of the throng, how proud were I — tho' ne'er

Singled by Djabal's glance! But to be chosen

His own from all, the most his own of all,
To be exalted with him, side by side,

Lead the exulting Druses, meet . . . ah,
how

Worthily meet the maidens who await Ever beneath the cedars — how deserve

60 This honour, in their eyes? So bright are they

Who saffron-vested sound the tabret there,
The girls who throng there in my dream!

One hour

And all is over: how shall I do aught
That may deserve next hour's exalting? —

How? —

[Suddenly to MAANI.

Mother, I am not worthy him! I read it Still in his eyes! He stands as if to tell me

I am not, yet forbears. Why else revert To one theme ever? — how mere human

gifts

Suffice him in myself — whose worship
fades,

Whose awe goes ever off at his approach,
As now, who when he comes

[DJABAL enters.] Oh why is it

I cannot kneel to you?

Djabal.

Rather, 'tis I

Should kneel to you, my Anael!

Anael.

Even so!

For never seem you — shall I speak the
truth? —

Never a God to me! 'Tis the Man's hand, Eye, voice! Oh do you veil these to our people,

Or but to me? To them, I think, to them!
And brightness is their veil, shadow — my truth!

You mean that I should never kneel to you —
So, thus I kneel!

Djabal [preventing her]. No — no!

[Feeling the khandjar as he raises her.]

Ha, have you chosen . . .

Anael. The khandjar with our ancient garb. But, Djabal,

Change not, be not exalted yet! Give time

That I may plan more, perfect more! My blood

Beats, beats!

[Aside.] Oh must I then — since Loys leaves us

Never to come again, renew in me
These doubts so near effaced already — must

I needs confess them now to Djabal? —
own

That when I saw that stranger, heard his voice,

My faith fell, and the woeful thought flashed first

That each effect of Djabal's presence, taken

For proof of more than human attributes
In him, by me whose heart at his approach

Beat fast, whose brain while he was by swam round,

Whose soul at his departure died away,
— That every such effect might have been

wrought

In other frames, tho' not in mine, by Loys
Or any merely mortal presence? Doubt

Is fading fast; shall I reveal it now?
How shall I meet the rapture presently,

With doubt unexpiated, undisclosed?
Djabal [aside]. Avow the truth? I cannot! In what words

Avow that all she loved in me was false?

— Which yet has served that flower-like love of hers

To climb by, like the clinging gourd, and clasp

With its divinest wealth of leaf and bloom.
Could I take down the prop-work, in itself

So vile, yet interlaced and overlaid With painted cups and fruitage — might

. . . these still Bask in the sun, unconscious their own

strength

Of matted stalk and tendril had replaced
The old support thus silently withdrawn!

But no; the beauteous fabric crushes too.
'Tis not for my sake but for Anael's sake

I leave her soul this Hakeem where it leans.

Oh could I vanish from her, quit the Isle!
And yet — a thought comes: here my work is done

At every point; the Druses must return —

Have convoy to their birth-place back, who'er

The leader be, myself or any Druse —
Venice is pledged to that: 'tis for myself,

For my own vengeance in the Prefect's
death,

I stay now, not for them: to slay or spare

The Prefect, whom imports it save myself?
He cannot bar their passage from the Isle;

What would his death be but my own reward?

Then, mine I will forego. It is foregone! 50
Let him escape with all my House's blood!

Ere he can reach land, Djabal disappears,
And Hakeem, Anael loved, shall, fresh as

first,
Live in her memory, keeping her sublime

Above the world. She cannot touch that
world

By ever knowing what I truly am,
Since Loys, — of mankind the only one

Able to link my present with my past,
My life in Europe with my Island life,

Thence, able to unmask me, — I've dis- 60
posed

Safely at last at Rhodes, and . . .

Enter KHALIL.

Khalil. Loys greets thee!

Djabal. Loys? To drag me back? It cannot be!

Anael [aside]. Loys! Ah, doubt may not be stifled so!

Khalil. Can I have erred that thou so gazes? Yes,

I told thee not in the glad press of tidings
Of higher import, Loys is returned

Before the Prefect, with, if possible, Twice the light-heartedness of old. As though

On some inauguration he expects,
To-day, the world's fate hung! 70

Djabal. — And asks for me?

Khalil. Thou knowest all things. Thee in chief he greets,

But every Druse of us is to be happy
At his arrival, he declares: were Loys

Thou, Master, he could have no wider soul
To take us in with. How I love that Loys!

Djabal [aside]. Shame winds me with her tether round and round.

Anael [aside]. Loys? I take the trial! it is meet,

The little I can do, be done; that faith,
All I can offer, want no perfecting

Which my own act may compass. Ay, this 80
way

All may go well, nor that ignoble doubt Be chased by other aid than mine. Advance

Close to my fear, weigh Loys with my
Lord,

The mortal with the more than mortal gifts!

Djabal [aside]. Before, there were so few deceived! and now

There's doubtless not one least Druse in the Isle

But, having learned my superhuman claims,

And calling me his Khalif-God, will clash The whole truth out from Loys at first word!

While Loys, for his part, will hold me up, With a Frank's unimaginable scorn

Of such imposture, to my people's eyes! Could I but keep him longer yet awhile

From them, amuse him here until I plan How he and I at once may leave the Isle!

Khalil I cannot part with from my side — My only help in this emergency:

'There's Anael!

Anael. Please you?

Djabal. Anael — none but she!

[To ANAEL.] I pass some minutes in the chamber there,

Ere I see Loys: you shall speak with him Until I join you. Khalil follows me.

Anael [aside]. As I divined: he bids me save myself,

Offers me a probation — I accept.

Let me see Loys!

Loys [without]. Djabal!

Anael [aside]. 'Tis his voice.

The smooth Frank trifler with our people's wrongs,

The self-complacent boy-inquirer, loud

On this and that inflicted tyranny,

— Aught serving to parade an ignorance Of how wrong feels, inflicted! Let me close With what I viewed at distance: let myself

Probe this delusion to the core!

Djabal. He comes.

Khalil, along with me! while Anael waits

Till I return once more — and but once

more.

ACT III.

ANAEL and LOYS.

Anael. Here leave me! Here I wait another. 'Twas

For no mad protestation of a love

Like this you say possesses you, I came.

Loys. Love? how protest a love I dare not feel?

Mad words may doubtless have escaped me: you

Are here — I only feel you here!

Anael. No more!

Loys. But once again, whom could you love? I dare,

Alas, say nothing of myself, who am

A Knight now, for when Knighthood we embrace,

Love we abjure: so, speak on safely: speak,

Lest I speak, and betray my faith! And yet

To say your breathing passes through me, changes

My blood to spirit, and my spirit to you, As Heaven the sacrificer's wine to it —

'This is not to protest my love! You said You could love one . . .

Anael. One only! We are bent To earth — who raises up my tribe, I love;

The Prefect bows us — who removes him; we

Have ancient rights — who gives them back to us,

I love. Forbear me! Let my hand go! Him

Loys. You could love only? Where is Djabal? Stay!

[Aside.] Yet wherefore stay? Who does this but myself?

Had I apprised her that I come to do Just this, what more could she acknowledge? No, She sees into my heart's core! What is it Feeds either cheek with red, as June some rose?

Why turns she from me? Ah fool, overfond

To dream I could call up . . . What never dream

Yet feigned! 'Tis love. Oh Anael, speak to me!

Djabal — Anael. Seek Djabal by the Prefect's chamber At noon! [She paces the room.

Loys [aside]. And am I not the Prefect now?

Is it my fate to be the only one Able to win her love, the only one

Unable to accept her love? The past Breaks up beneath my footing: came I here

This morn as to a slave, to set her free And take her thanks, and then spend day by day Content beside her in the Isle? What works This knowledge in me now? Her eye has broken The faint disguise away: for Anael's sake

I left the Isle, for her espoused the cause Of the Druses, all for her I thought, till now, To live without!

— As I must live! To-day Ordains me Knight, forbids me . . . never shall Forbid me to profess myself, heart, arm, Thy soldier!

Anael. Djabal you demanded, comes Loys [aside]. What wouldst thou, Loys?

See him? Nought beside

Is wanting: I have felt his voice a spell
From first to last. He brought me here, made known

The Druses to me, drove me hence to seek Redress for them; and shall I meet him
now,

When nought is wanting but a word of
his,

To — what? — induce me to spurn hope,
faith, pride,

Honour away, — to cast my lot among His tribe, become a proverb in men's mouths,

Breaking my high pact of companionship
With those who graciously bestowed on me

The very opportunities I turn Against them! Let me not see Djabal
now!

Anael. The Prefect also comes.

Loys [aside]. Him let me see,
Not Djabal! Him, degraded at a word,
To soothe me, — to attest belief in me —
And after, Djabal! Yes, ere I return To her, the Nuncio's vow shall have destroyed

This heart's rebellion, and coerced this will
For ever.

Anael, not before the vows
Irrevocably fix me . . .

Let me fly!
The Prefect, or I lose myself for ever!

[Goes.]

Anael. Yes, I am calm now; just one way remains —

One, to attest my faith in him: for, see,
I were quite lost else: Loys, Djabal, stand On either side — two men! I balance looks

And words, give Djabal a man's preference,
No more. In Djabal, Hakeem is absorbed,
And for a love like this, the God who saves
My race, selects me for his bride? One
way!

Enter DJABAL.

Djabal [to himself]. No moment is to waste then; 'tis resolved.

If Khalil may be trusted to lead back
My Druses, and if Loys can be lured
Out of the Isle — if I procure his silence,
Or promise never to return at least, —
All's over. Even now my bark awaits:
I reach the next wild islet and the next,
And lose myself beneath the sun for ever.
And now, to Anael!

Anael. Djabal, I am thine!

Djabal. Mine? Djabal's? — As if Hakeem had not been?

Anael. Not Djabal's? Say first, do you read my thought?

Why need I speak, if you can read my
thought?

Djabal. I do not, I have said a thousand times.

Anael. (My secret's safe, I shall surprise him yet!)

Djabal, I knew your secret from the first:
Djabal, when first I saw you . . . (by our porch

You leant, and pressed the tinkling veil
away,

And one fringe fell behind your neck — I
see!)

. . . I knew you were not human, for I
said

"This dim secluded house where the sea so beats

"Is heaven to me — my people's huts are hell

"To them; this august form will follow me,
"Mix with the waves his voice will, — I have him;

"And they, the Prefect! Oh, my happiness "Rounds to the full whether I choose or
no!

"His eyes met mine, he was about to speak,
"His hand grew damp — surely he meant
to say

"He let me love him: in that moment's
bliss

"I shall forget my people pine for home —
"They pass and they repass with pallid
eyes!"

I vowed at once a certain vow; this vow —
Not to embrace you till my tribe was saved.

Embrace me!

Djabal [apart]. And she loved me!
Nought remained

But that! Nay, Anael, is the Prefect
dead?

Anael. Ah, you reproach me! True, his death crowns all,

I know — or should know: and I would do much,

Believe! but, death! Oh, you, who have known death,

Would never doom the Prefect, were death fearful

As we report!

Death! — a fire curls within us
From the foot's palm, and fills up to the brain,

Up, out, then shatters the whole bubble-shell

Of flesh, perchance!

Death! — witness, I would die,
Whate'er death be, would venture now to
die

For Khalil, for Maani — what for thee?
Nay but embrace me, Djabal, in assurance

My vow will not be broken, for I must Do something to attest my faith in you,
Be worthy you!

Djabal [avoiding her]. I come for that
— to say

Such an occasion is at hand: 'tis like

I leave you — that we part, my Anael, —
part

For ever!

Anael. We part? Just so! I have succumbed, —

I am, he thinks, unworthy — and nought
less

Will serve than such approval of my faith.
Then, we part not! Remains there no way short

Of that? Oh not that!

Death! — yet a hurt bird

Died in my hands; its eyes filmed — "Nay, it sleeps,"

I said, "will wake to-morrow well:"
'twas dead.

Djabal. I stand here and time fleets.

Anael — I come

10 To bid a last farewell to you: perhaps We never meet again. But, ere the Prefect
Arrive . . .

Enter KHALIL, breathlessly.

Khalil. He's here! The Prefect!

Twenty guards,

No more: no sign he dreams of danger.
All

Awaits thee only. Ayoob, Karshook, keep Their posts — wait but the deed's accomplishment

To join us with thy Druses to a man.

Still holds his course the Nuncio — near and near

The fleet from Candia steering.

Djabal [aside]. . . All is lost!

— Or won?

Khalil. And I have laid the sacred robe,

20 The sword, the head-tiar, at the porch —
the place

Commanded. Thou wilt hear the Prefect's trumpet.

Djabal. Then I keep Anael; — him
then, past recall,

I slay — 'tis forced on me. As I began
I must conclude — so be it!

Khalil. For the rest,

Save Loys, our foe's solitary sword,
All is so safe that . . . I will ne'er entreat

Thy post again of thee: tho' danger none,
There must be glory only meet for thee

In slaying the Prefect.

Anael [aside]. And 'tis now that Djabal

30 Would leave me! — in the glory meet for
him!

Djabal. As glory, I would yield the deed to you

Or any Druse; what peril there may be,
I keep. [Aside.] All things conspire to hound me on.

Not now, my soul, draw back, at least!
Not now!

The course is plain, howe'er obscure all
else.

Once offer this tremendous sacrifice,
Prevent what else will be irreparable,
Secure these transcendental helps, regain
The Cedars — then let all dark clear itself!
I slay him!

Khalil. Anael, and no part for us!

[To DJABAL.] Hast thou possessed her with . . .

Djabal [to ANAEL]. Whom speak you
to?

What is it you behold there? Nay, this
smile

Turns stranger. Shudder you? The man must die,

As thousands of our race have died thro'
him.

One blow, and I discharge his weary soul
From the flesh that pollutes it! Let him fill Straight some new expiatory form, of earth
Or sea, the reptile or some æry thing:
What is there in his death?

Anael. My brother said,

Is there no part in it for us?

Djabal. For Khalil, —

The trumpet will announce the Nuncio's
entry;

Here, I shall find the Prefect hastening
In the Pavilion to receive him — here

I slay the Prefect; meanwhile Ayoob leads The Nuncio with his guards within: once
these

Secured in the outer hall, bid Ayoob bai
Entry or egress till I give the sign

Which waits the landing of the argosies
You will announce to me: this double sign

60 That justice is performed and help arrived,
When Ayoob shall receive, but not before,
Let him throw ope the palace doors, admit
The Druses to behold their tyrant, ere
We leave for ever this detested spot.

Go, Khalil, hurry all! No pause, no pause!

Whirl on the dream, secure to wake anon!

Khalil. What sign? and who the bearer?

Djabal. Who shall show My ring, admit to Ayoob. How she
stands!

Have I not . . . I must have some task
for her.

Anael, not that way! 'Tis the Prefect's
chamber!

Anael, keep you the ring — give you the sign!

(It holds her safe amid the stir.) You will Be faithful?

Anael [taking the ring]. I would fain be worthy. Hark! [Trumpet without.]

Khalil. He comes.

Djabal. And I too come.

Anael. One word, but one!

Say, shall you be exalted at the deed?
Then? On the instant?

Djabal. I exalted? What?

He, there — we, thus — our wrongs revenged, our tribe
 Set free? Oh, then shall I, assure your-
 self,
 Shall you, shall each of us, be in his death Exalted!
Khalil. He is here.
Djabal. Away — away! [They go.]

Enter the PREFECT with Guards, and LOYS.

The Prefect [to Guards]. Back, I say, to the galley every guard!
 That's my sole care now; see each bench retains
 Its complement of rowers; I embark O' the instant, since this Knight will have it so.
 Alas me! Could you have the heart, my Loys!
 10 [To a Guard who whispers.] Oh, bring the holy Nuncio here forthwith!

[The Guards go.]
Loys, a rueful sight, confess, to see
 The grey discarded Prefect leave his post,
 With tears i' the eye! So, you are Prefect
 now?

You depose me — you succeed me? Ha, ha!

Loys. And dare you laugh, whom laughter less becomes Than yesterday's forced meekness we beheld . . .

Prefect. — When you so eloquently pleaded, Loys,
 For my dismissal from the post? Ah, meek

With cause enough, consult the Nuncio
 else!

20 And wish him the like meekness: for so staunch

A servant of the Church can scarce have bought

His share in the Isle, and paid for it, hard pieces!

You've my successor to condole with,
 Nuncio!

I shall be safe by then i' the galley, Loys!

Loys. You make as you would tell me you rejoice

To leave your scene of . . .

Prefect. Trade in the dear Druses?
 Blood and sweat traffic? Spare what yesterday

We heard enough of! Drove I in the Isle
 A profitable game? Learn wit, my son,

30 Which you'll need shortly! Did it never breed

Suspicion in you, all was not pure profit,
 When I, the insatiate . . . and so forth — was bent

On having a partaker in my rule?

Why did I yield this Nuncio half the
 gain,

If not that I might also shift — what on
 him?

Half of the peril, Loys!

Loys.

Peril?

Prefect.

Hark you!

I'd love you if you'd let me — this for reason,

You save my life at price of . . . well, say risk

At least, of yours. I came a long time
 since

To the Isle; our Hospitallers bade me 40 tame

These savage wizards, and reward myself — Loys. The Knights who so repudiate your crime?

Prefect. Loys, the Knights! we doubt less understood

Each other; as for trusting to reward

From any friend beside myself . . . no,
 no!

I clutched mine on the spot, when it was
 sweet,

And I had taste for it. I felt these wizards Alive — was sure they were not on me,
 only

When I was on them: but with age comes caution:

And stinging pleasures please less and 50
 sting more.

Year by year, fear by fear! The girls were brighter

Than ever ('faith, there's yet one Anael
 left,

I set my heart upon — Oh, prithee, let That brave new sword lie still!) — These joys looked brighter,

But silenter the town, too, as I passed.
 With this alcove's delicious memories

Began to mingle visions of gaunt fathers, Quick-eyed sons, fugitives from the mine,

the oar,
 Stealing to catch me. Brief, when I began

To quake with fear — (I think I hear the 60
 Chapter

Solicited to let me leave, now all Worth staying for was gained and gone!)

— I say,

Just when, for the remainder of my life,
 All methods of escape seemed lost — that

then

Up should a young hot-headed Loys
 spring,

Talk very long and loud, — in fine, compel
 The Knights to break their whole arrangement, have me

Home for pure shame — from this safe-hold of mine

Where but ten thousand Druses seek my
 life,

To my wild place of banishment, San 70
 Gines

By Murcia, where my three fat manors lying,

Purchased by gains here and the Nuncio's gold,
Are all I have to guard me, — that such fortune
Should fall to me, I hardly could expect.
Therefore I say, I'd love you.

Loys. Can it be?
I play into your hands then? Oh no, no!
The Venerable Chapter, the Great Order
Sunk o' the sudden into fiends of the pit?
But I will back — will yet unveil you!

Prefect. Me?
To whom? — perhaps Sir Galeas, who in Chapter

10 Shook his white head thrice — and some dozen times

My hand next morning shook, for value paid!

To that Italian saint, Sir Cosimo? —
Indignant at my wringing year by year
A thousand bezants from the coral-divers,
As you recounted; felt the saint aggrieved?
Well might he — I allowed for his half-share

Merely one hundred. To Sir . . .

Loys. See! you dare
Inculcate the whole Order; yet should I,
A youth, a sole voice, have the power to change

20 Their evil way, had they been firm in it?
Answer me!

Prefect. Oh, the son of Bretagne's Duke,
And that son's wealth, the father's influence, too,

And the young arm, we'll even say, my Loys,

— The fear of losing or diverting these Into another channel, by gainsaying
A novice too abruptly, could not influence
The Order! You might join, for aught they cared,

Their red-cross rivals of the Temple!
Well,

I thank you for my part, at all events.

30 Stay here till they withdraw you! You'll inhabit

My palace — sleep, perchance, in the alcove

Whither I go to meet our holy friend.

Good! and now disbelieve me if you can, —
This is the first time for long years I enter Thus [lifts the arras] without feeling just as if I lifted

The lid up of my tomb.

Loys. They share his crime!
God's punishment will overtake you yet.

Prefect. Thank you it does not! Pardon this last flash:

I bear a sober visage presently

40 With the disinterested Nuncio here —
His purchase-money safe at Murcia, too!
Let me repeat — for the first time, no draught

Coming as from a sepulchre salutes me.

When we next meet, this folly may have passed,

We'll hope. Ha, ha!

[Goes through the arras.]

Loys. Assure me but . . . he's gone!
He could not lie. Then what have I escaped,

I, who had so nigh given up happiness
For ever, to be linked with him and them!
Oh, opportunist of discoveries! I

Their Knight? I utterly renounce them 50
all!

Hark! What, he meets by this the Nuncio? Yes,

The same hyæna groan-like laughter!
Quick —

To Djabal! I am one of them at last,
These simple-hearted Druses — Anael's tribe!

Djabal! She's mine at last. Djabal, I say!
[Goes.]

ACT IV.

Enter DJABAL.

Djabal. Let me but slay the Prefect.
The end now!

To-morrow will be time enough to pry
Into the means I took: suffice, they served,
Ignoble as they were, to hurl revenge
True to its object. 60

[Seeing the robe, etc., disposed.]

Mine should never so

Have hurried to accomplishment! Thee, Djabal,

Far other mood befitted! Calm the Robe
Should clothe this doom's awarder!

[Taking the robe.] Shall I dare Assume my nation's Robe? I am at least
A Druse again, chill Europe's policy Drops from me: I dare take the Robe.
Why not

The Tiar? I rule the Druses, and what more

Betokens it than rule? — yet — yet —

[Lays down the tiar.]

[Footsteps in the alcove.] He comes!

[Taking the sword.]

If the Sword serve, let the Tiar lie! So, feet

Clogged with the blood of twenty years can 70
fall

Thus lightly! Round me, all ye ghosts!
He'll lift . . .

Which arm to push the arras wide? — or both?

Stab from the neck down to the heart — there stay!

Near he comes — nearer — the next footstep! Now!

[As he dashes aside the arras, ANAEL is discovered.]

Ha! Anael! Nay, my Anael, can it be?

Heard you the trumpet? I must slay him here,

And here you ruin all. Why speak you not?

Anael, the Prefect comes! [ANAEI screams. So slow to feel

'Tis not a sight for you to look upon?

A moment's work — but such work! Till you go,

I must be idle — idle, I risk all! [Pointing to her hair.

Those locks are well, and you are beauteous thus,

But with the dagger 'tis, I have to do!

Anael. With mine!

Djabal. Blood — Anael?

Anael. Djabal, 'tis thy deed!

It must be! I had hoped to claim it mine —

Be worthy thee — but I must needs confess

'Twas not I, but thyself . . . not I have . . . Djabal!

Speak to me!

Djabal. Oh, my punishment!

Anael. Speak to me While I can speak! touch me, despite the blood!

When the command passed from thy soul to mine,

I went, fire leading me, muttering of thee, And the approaching exaltation, — "make

"One sacrifice!" I said, — and he sat there,

Bade me approach; and, as I did approach,

Thy fire with music burst into my brain. 'Twas but a moment's work, thou saidst — perchance It may have been so! Well, it is thy deed.

Djabal. It is my deed.

Anael. His blood all this! — this! and . . .

And more! Sustain me, Djabal! Wait not — now

Let flash thy glory! Change thyself and me!

It must be! Ere the Druses flock to us! At least confirm me! Djabal, blood gushed forth — He was our tyrant — but I looked he'd fall

Prone as asleep — why else is death called sleep?

Sleep? He bent o'er his breast! 'Tis sin, I know, —

Punish me, Djabal, but wilt thou let him? Be it thou that punishest, not he — who creeps On his red breast — is here! 'Tis the small groan

Of a child — no worse! Bestow the new life, then!

Too swift it cannot be, too strange, surpassing! [Following him as he retreats.

Now! Change us both! Change me and change thou!

Djabal [sinks on his knees]. Thus! Behold my change! You have done nobly.

I! —

Anael. Can Hakeem kneel?

Djabal. No Hakeem, and scarce Djabal!

I have dealt falsely, and this woe is come. No — hear me ere scorn blast me! Once 40 and ever, The deed is mine. Oh think upon the past!

Anael [to herself]. Did I strike once, or twice, or many times?

Djabal. I came to lead my tribe where, bathed in glooms,

Doth Bahumid the Renovator sleep: Anael, I saw my tribe: I said, "Without

"A miracle this cannot be" — I said "Be there a miracle!" — for I saw you.

Anael. His head lies south the portal. Djabal. — Weighed with this

The general good, how could I choose my own?

What matter was my purity of soul? Little by little I engaged myself — 50

Heaven would accept me for its instrument,

I hoped: I said Heaven had accepted me. Anael. Is it this blood breeds dreams in me? Who said You were not Hakeem? And your miracles — The fire that plays innocuous round your form? [Again changing her whole manner.

Ah, thou wouldst try me — thou art Hakeem still!

Djabal. Woe — woe! As if the Druses of the Mount (Scarce Arabs, even there, but here, in the Isle, Beneath their former selves) should comprehend

The subtle lore of Europe! A few secrets

That would not easily affect the meanest Of the crowd there, could wholly subjugate The best of our poor tribe. Again that eye?

Anael [after a pause springs to his neck.] Djabal, in this there can be no deceit!

Why, Djabal, were you human only, — think,

Maani is but human, Khalil human, Loys is human even — did their words

Haunt me, their looks pursue me? Shame on you

So to have tried me! Rather, shame on me

So to need trying! Could I, with the Prefect

And the blood, there — could I see only you?

— Hang by your neck over this gulf of blood?

Speak, I am saved! Speak, Djabal! Am I saved?

[As DJABAL slowly unclasps her arms and puts her silently from him.]

Hakeem would save me. Thou art Djabal. Crouch!

Bow to the dust, thou basest of our kind!

The pile of thee, I reared up to the cloud — Full, midway, of our fathers' trophied tombs,

Based on the living rock, devoured not by The unstable desert's jaws of sand, — falls prone.

10 Fire, music, quenched: and now thou liest there

A ruin, obscene creatures will moan through.

— Let us come, Djabal!

Djabal. Whither come?

Anael. At once —

Lest so it grow intolerable. Come!

Will I not share it with thee? Best at once!

So, feel less pain! Let them deride, — thy tribe

Now trusting in thee, — Loys shall deride! Come to them, hand in hand, with me!

Djabal. Where come?

Anael. Where? — to the Druses thou hast wronged! Confess,

Now that the end is gained — (I love thee now —)

20 That thou hast so deceived them — (perchance love thee

Better than ever.) Come, receive their doom

Of infamy! O, best of all I love thee! Shame with the man, no triumph with the

God,
Be mine! Come!

Djabal. Never! More shame yet? and why?

Why? You have called this deed mine — it is mine!

And with it I accept its circumstance.

How can I longer strive with fate? The past

Is past: my false life shall henceforth show true.

Hear me! The argosies touch land by this;

30 They bear us to fresh scenes and happier skies.

What if we reign together? — if we keep Our secret for the Druses' good? — by means

Of even their superstition, plant in them New life? I learn from Europe: all who seek Man's good must awe man, by such means as these.

We two will be divine to them — we are! All great works in this world spring from the ruins

Of greater projects — ever, on our earth, Babels men block out, Babylons they build.

I wrest the weapon from your hand! I claim

The deed! Retire! You have my ring — you bar

All access to the Nuncio till the forces From Venice land.

Anael. Thou wilt feign Hakeem then?

Djabal [putting the Tiara of Hakeem on his head]. And from this moment that I dare ope wide

Eyes that till now refused to see, begins My true dominion: for I know myself,

And what am I to personate. No word? [ANAEL goes.]

'Tis come on me at last! His blood on her —

What memories will follow that! Her eye,

Her fierce distorted lip and ploughed black 50 brow!

Ah, fool! Has Europe then so poorly tamed

The Syrian blood from out thee? Thou, presume

To work in this foul earth by means not foul?

Scheme, as for heaven, — but, on the earth, be glad

If a least ray like heaven's be left thee! Thus

I shall be calm — in readiness — no way Surprised. [A noise without.]

This should be Khalil and my Druses. Venice is come then! Thus I grasp thee, sword!

Druses, 'tis Hakeem saves you! In! Behold

Your Prefect!

Enter LOYS. DJABAL hides the khandjar in his robe.

Loys. Oh, well found, Djabal! — but no time for words.

You know who waits there?

[Pointing to the alcove.]

Well! — and that 'tis there

He meets the Nuncio? Well? Now, a surprise —

He there —

Djabal. I know —

Loys. — is now no mortal's lord, Is absolutely powerless — call him, dead —

He is no longer Prefect — you are Prefect! Oh, shrink not! I do nothing in the dark, Nothing unworthy Breton blood, believe!

I understood at once your urgency
That I should leave this isle for Rhodes; I felt
What you were loath to speak — your need of help.
I have fulfilled the task, that earnestness Imposed on me: have, face to face, confronted
The Prefect in full Chapter, charged on
him
The enormities of his long rule; he stood
Mute, offered no defence, no crime denied.
On which, I spoke of you, and of your tribe,
Your faith so like our own, and all you urged
Of old to me: I spoke, too, of your good-
ness,
Your patience — brief, I hold henceforth the Isle
In charge, am nominally lord, — but you,
You are associated in my rule —
Are the true Prefect! Ay, such faith had
they
In my assurance of your loyalty
(For who insults an imbecile old man?)
That we assume the Prefecture this hour.
You gaze at me? Hear greater wonders
yet —
I cast down all the fabric I have built.
These Knights, I was prepared to worship
... but
Of that another time; what's now to say,
Is — I shall never be a Knight! Oh,
Djabal,
Here first I throw all prejudice aside,
And call you brother! I am Druse like
you:
My wealth, my friends, my power, are wholly yours,
Your people's, which is now my people: for
There is a maiden of your tribe, I love —
She loves me — Khalil's sister — Djabal. Anael?
Loys. Start you?
Seems what I say, unknighly? Thus it chanced:
When first I came, a novice, to the Isle ...

Enter one of the NUNCIO'S Guards from the alcove.

Guard. Oh horrible! Sir Loys! Here is Loys!
And here — [Others enter from the alcove.
[Pointing to DJABAL.] Secure him, bind him — this is he!
[They surround DJABAL.]
Loys. Madmen — what is't you do?
Stand from my friend,
And tell me!
Guard. Thou canst have no part in
this — Surely no part! But slay him not! The Nuncio

Commanded, slay him not!
Loys. Speak, or ...
Guard. The Prefect
Lies murdered there by him thou dost embrace.
Loys. By Djabal? Miserable fools!
How Djabal?
[A Guard lifts DJABAL'S robe;
DJABAL flings down the khandjar.
Loys [after a pause]. Thou hast re- 4c ceived some insult worse than all,
Some outrage not to be endured —
[To the Guards.] Stand back!
He is my friend — more than my friend.
Thou hast
Slain him upon that provocation.
Guard. No!
No provocation! 'Tis a long devised
Conspiracy: the whole tribe is involved.
He is their Khalif — 'tis on that pre-
tence —
Their mighty Khalif who died long ago,
And now comes back to life and light again!
All is just now revealed, I know not how,
By one of his confederates — who, struck 50
With horror at this murder, first apprised
The Nuncio. As 'twas said, we find this
Djabal
Here where we take him.
Djabal [aside]. Who broke faith with
me?
Loys [to DJABAL]. Hear'st thou? Speak!
Till thou speak, I keep off these,
Or die with thee. Deny this story! Thou
A Khalif, an impostor? Thou, my friend,
Whose tale was of an incensive tribe,
With ... but thou know'st — on that tale's truth I pledged My faith before the Chapter: what art
thou?
Djabal. Loys, I am as thou hast heard. 60
All's true.
No more concealment! As these tell thee,
all
Was long since planned. Our Druses are
enough
To crush this handful: the Venetians land
Even now in our behalf. Loys, we part.
Thou, serving much, wouldst fain have served me more;
It might not be. I thank thee. As thou hearest,
We are a separated tribe: farewell!
Loys. Oh where will truth be found now? Canst thou so Belie the Druses? Do they share thy crime?
Those thou professest of our Breton stock, 70 Are partners with thee? Why, I saw but
now
Khalil, my friend: he spoke with me —
no word
Of this! and Anael — whom I love, and
who

Loves me — she spoke no word of this.

Djabal. Poor boy!
Anael, who loves thee? Khalil, fast thy friend?

We, offsets from a wandering Count of Dreux?

No: older than the eldest, princelier
Than Europe's princeliest race, our tribe:
enough

For thine, that on our simple faith we found

A monarchy to shame your monarchies

At their own trick and secret of success.

The child of this our tribe shall laugh upon

10 The palace-step of him whose life ere night is forfeit, as that child shall know, and yet Shall laugh there! What, we Druses wait
forsooth

The kind interposition of a boy

— Can only save ourselves if thou concede:

— Khalil admire thee? He is my right-hand,

My delegate! — Anael accept thy love?
She is my bride!

Loys. Thy bride? She one of them!

Djabal. My bride!

Loys. And she retains her glorious eyes!

She, with those eyes, has shared this mis-creant's guilt!

20 Ah — who but she directed me to find Djabal within the Prefect's chamber?
Khalil

Bade me seek Djabal there, too. All is
truth.

What spoke the Prefect worse of them than
this?

Did the Church ill to institute long since Perpetual warfare with such serpentry?

And I — have I desired to shift my part,
Evade my share in her design? 'Tis well.

Djabal. Loys, I wronged thee — but unwittingly:

I never thought there was in thee a virtue

30 That could attach itself to what thou deemest

A race below thine own. I wronged thee,
Loys,

But that is over: all is over now,

Save the protection I ensure against

My people's anger. By their Khalif's side, Thou art secure and mayst depart: so,
come!

Loys. Thy side? I take protection at thy hand?

Enter other Guards.

Guards. Fly with him! Fly, Sir Loys!

'Tis too true:

And only by his side thou mayst escape.
The whole tribe is in full revolt: they flock

10 About the palace — will be here — on
thee —

And there are twenty of us, we the Guards O' the Nuncio, to withstand them! Even we

Had stayed to meet our death in ignorance,
But that one Druse, a single faithful Druse,
Made known the horror to the Nuncio.

Fly!

The Nuncio stands aghast. At least let us Escape thy wrath, O Hakeem! We are

nought

In thy tribe's persecution! [To Loys.]

Keep by him!

They hail him Hakeem, their dead Prince
returned:

He is their God, they shout, and at his beck 35
Are life and death!

Loys [springing at the khandjar DJABAL had thrown down, seizes him by the throat]. Thus by his side am I!

Thus I resume my knighthood and its warfare,

Thus end thee, miscreant, in thy pride of
place!

Thus art thou caught. Without, thy dupes may cluster:

Friends aid thee, foes avoid thee, — thou art Hakeem,

How say they? — God art thou! but also
here

Is the least, youngest, meanest the Church calls

Her servant, and his single arm avails
To aid her as she lists. I rise, and thou Art crushed. Hordes of thy Druses flock 60

without:

Here thou hast me, who represent the Cross,

Honour and Faith, 'gainst Hell, Mahound
and thee.

Die! [DJABAL remains calm.] Implore my mercy, Hakeem, that my scorn

May help me! Nay, I cannot ply thy
trade;

I am no Druse, no stabber: and thine eye, Thy form, are too much as they were —
my friend

Had such. Speak! Beg for mercy at my foot! [DJABAL still silent.]

Heaven could not ask so much of me — not, sure,

So much. I cannot kill him so.

[After a pause.] Thou art

Strong in thy cause, then — dost outbrave 70 us, then.

Heardst thou that one of thine accomplishes,

Thy very people, has accused thee? Meet His charge! Thou hast not even slain the

Prefect

As thy own vile creed warrants. Meet that Druse!

Come with me and disprove him — be thou tried

By him, nor seek appeal! Promise me this,

Or I will do God's office. What, shalt thou

Boast of assassins at thy beck, yet truth
Want even an executioner? Consent,
Or I will strike — look in my face — I will!

Djabal. Give me again my khandjar, if thou darest! [Loys gives it.]

Let but one Druse accuse me, and I plunge
This home. A Druse betray me? Let us
go!

[Aside.] Who has betrayed me?
[Shouts without.]

Hearst thou? I hear

No plainer than long years ago I heard

10 That shout — but in no dream now.
They return!

Wilt thou be leader with me, Loys? Well.

ACT V.

The Uninitiated Druses, filling the hall tumultuously, and speaking together.

Here flock we, obeying the summons.
Lo, Hakeem hath appeared, and the Prefect is dead, and we return to Lebanon!
My manufacture of goats' fleece must, I doubt, soon fall away there. Come, old Nasif — link thine arm in mine — we fight, if needs be. Come, what is a great fight-word? — "Lebanon?" (My daughter 20 — my daughter!) — But is Khalif to have the office of Hamza? — Nay, rather, if he be wise, the monopoly of henna and cloves.
Where is Hakeem? — The only prophet I ever saw, prophesied at Cairo once, in my youth: a little black Copht, dressed all in black too, with a great stripe of yellow cloth flapping down behind him like the back-fin of a water-serpent. Is this he?
Biamrallah! Biamreh! HAKEEM!

Enter the NUNCIO, with Guards.

30 Nuncio [to his Attendants]. Hold both, the sorcerer and this accomplice
Ye talk of, that accuseth him! And tell Sir Loys he is mine, the Church's hope: Bid him approve himself our Knight indeed!

Lo, this black disemboгуing of the Isle!
[To the Druses.] Ah children, what a sight for these old eyes

That kept themselves alive this voyage
through

To smile their very last on you! I came To gather one and all you wandering sheep
Into my fold, as though a father came . . .

35 As though, in coming, a father should . . .
[To his Guards.] (Ten, twelve — Twelve guards of you, and not an outlet? None?

The wizards stop each avenue? Keep close!)

[To the Druses.] As if one came to a son's house, I say,

So did I come — no guard with me — to find . . .

Alas! alas!

A Druse. Who is the old man?

Another. Oh, ye are to shout!
Children, he styles you.

Druses. Ay, the Prefect's slain!
Glory to the Khalif, our Father!

Nuncio. Even so
I find, (ye prompt aright) your father slain.

While most he plotted for your good, that father

(Alas, how kind, ye never knew) — lies 50
slain.

[Aside.] (And hell's worm gnaw the gloz-ing knave — with me,

For being duped by his cajoleries!

Are these the Christians? These the docile crew

My bezants went to make me Bishop o'er?)

[To his Attendants, who whisper.] What say ye does this wizard style himself?

Hakeem? Biamrallah? The third Fatemite?

What is this jargon? He — the insincere Khalif,

Dead near three hundred years ago, come
back

In flesh and blood again?

Druses. He mutters! Hear ye?

He is blaspheming Hakeem. The old man 60
Is our dead Prefect's friend. Tear him!

Nuncio. Ye dare not.

I stand here with my five-and-seventy years,
The Patriarch's power behind me, God's
above.

Those years have witnessed sin enough;
ere now

Misguided men arose against their lords,
And found excuse; but ye, to be enslaved

By sorceries, cheats — alas! the same tricks, tried

On my poor children in this nook o' the
earth,

Could triumph, that have beer successively Exploded, laughed to scorn all nations 70

through:

"Romaioi, Ioudaioite kai proselutoi,

"Cretes and Arabians" — you are duped
the last.

Said I, refrain from tearing me? I pray ye Tear me! Shall I return to tell the Patriarch

That so much love was wasted — every gift Rejected, from his benison I brought,

Down to the galley-full of bezants, sunk
An hour since at the harbour's mouth, by

that . . .

That . . . never will I speak his hated
name!

[To his Servants.] What was the name his fellow slip-fetter

Called their arch-wizard by? [They whisper.] Oh, Djabal was't?

Druses. But how a sorcerer? false wherein?

Nuncio. (Ay, Djabal!)

How false? Ye know not, Djabal has confessed . . .

Nay, that by tokens found on him we learn . . .

What I sailed hither solely to divulge — How by his spells the demons were allured To seize you: not that these be aught save lies

And mere illusions. Is this clear? I say,

10 By measures such as these, he would have led you

Into a monstrous ruin: follow ye?

Say, shall ye perish for his sake, my sons?

Druses. Hark ye!

Nuncio. — Be of one privilege amerced?

No! Infinite the Patriarch's mercies are!

No! With the Patriarch's licence, still I bid

Tear him to pieces who misled you! Haste!

Druses. The old man's beard shakes, and his eyes are white fire! After all, I know nothing of Djabal beyond what Kar-shook says; he knows but what Khalil says, who knows just what Djabal says himself. Now, the little Copht Prophet, I saw at Cairo in my youth, began by promising each bystander three full measures of wheat . . .

Enter KHALIL and the initiated DRUSES.

Khalil. Venice and her deliverance are at hand:

Their fleet stands through the harbour.

Hath he slain

The Prefect yet? Is Djabal's change come yet?

Nuncio [to Attendants]. What's this of Venice? Who's this boy?

[Attendants whisper.] One Khalil?

30 Djabal's accomplice, Loys called, but now,

The only Druse, save Djabal's self, to fear? [To the Druses.] I cannot hear ye with these aged ears:

Is it so? Ye would have my troops assist?

Doth he abet him in his sorceries?

Down with the cheat, guards, as my children bid!

[They spring at KHALIL; as he beats them back.

Stay! No more bloodshed! Spare deluded youth!

Whom seek'st thou? (I will teach him) — whom, my child?

Thou know'st not what these know, what these declare.

I am an old man as thou seest — have done

With life; and what should move me but the truth?

Art thou the only fond one of thy tribe?

'Tis I interpret for thy tribe.

Khalil.

Oh, this

Is the expected Nuncio! Druses, hear —

Endure ye this? Unworthy to partake

The glory Hakeem gains you! While I speak,

The ships touch land: who makes for Lebanon?

They plant the winged lion in these halls!

Nuncio [aside]. If it be true! Venice?

Oh, never true!

Yet Venice would so gladly thwart our Knights,

So fain get footing here, stand close by 50 Rhodes!

Oh, to be duped this way!

Khalil.

Ere he appear

And lead you gloriously, repent, I say!

Nuncio [aside]. Nor any way to stretch the arch-wizard stark

Ere the Venetians come? Cut off the head,

The trunk were easily stilled. [To the Druses.] He? Bring him forth!

Since so you needs will have it, I assent. You'd judge him, say you, on the spot —

confound

The sorcerer in his very circle? Where's

Our short black-bearded sallow friend who swore

He'd earn the Patriarch's guerdon by one 60 stab?

Bring Djabal forth at once!

Druses.

Ay, bring him forth!

The Patriarch drives a trade in oil and silk,

And we're the Patriarch's children — true men, we!

Where is the glory? Show us all the glory!

Khalil. You dare not so insult him!

What, not see . . .

(I tell thee, Nuncio, these are uninstructed, Untrusted: they know nothing of our Khalil!)

— Not see that if he lets a doubt arise 'Tis but to give yourselves the chance of seeming

To have some influence in your own Re- 70 turn!

That all may say ye would have trusted him

Without the all-convincing glory — ay, And did! Embrace the occasion, friends!

For, think —

What wonder when his change takes place? But now

For your sakes, he should not reveal himself.

No: could I ask and have, I would not ask The change yet!

Enter DJABAL and LOYS.

Spite of all, reveal thyself!
 I had said, pardon them for me — for Anael —
 For our sakes pardon these besotted men —
 Ay, for thine own — they hurt not thee!
 Yet now
 One thought swells in me and keeps down all else.
 This Nuncio couples shame with thee, has called Imposture thy whole course, all bitter
 things
 Has said: he is but an old fretful man!
 Hakeem — nay, I must call thee Hakeem
 now —
 10 Reveal thyself! See! Where is Anael?
 See!
Loys [to DJABAL]. Here are thy people.
 Keep thy word to me!
Djabal. Who of my people hath accused
 me?
Nuncio. So!
 So this is Djabal, Hakeem, and what not?
 A fit deed, Loys, for thy first Knight's day!
 May it be augury of thy after-life!
 Ever prove truncheon of the Church as
 now
 That, Nuncio of the Patriarch, having
 charge
 Of the Isle here, I claim thee [turning to DJABAL] as these bid me,
 Forfeit for murder done thy lawful prince,
 20 Thou conjurer that peep'st and mutterest!
 Why should I hold thee from their hands?
 (Spells, children?)
 But hear how I dispose of all his spells!) Thou art a prophet? — wouldst entice thy
 tribe
 From me? — thou workest miracles?
 (Attend!)
 Let him but move me with his spells!) I,
 Nuncio . . .
Djabal. . . . Which how thou camest to be, I say not now,
 Though I have also been at Stamboul,
 Luke!
 Ply thee with spells, forsooth! What need of spells?
 If Venice, in her Admiral's person, stoop
 30 To ratify thy compact with her foe,
 The Hospitallers, for this Isle — withdraw
 Her warrant of the deed which reinstates
 My people in their freedom, tricked away
 By him I slew, — refuse to convoy us
 To Lebanon and keep the Isle we leave —
 Then will be time to try what spells can do!
 Dost thou dispute the Republic's power?
Nuncio. Lo ye!
 He tempts me too, the wily exorcist!
 No! The renowned Republic was and is 40 The Patriarch's friend: 'tis not for courting Venice

That I — that these implore thy blood of
 me.
 Lo ye, the subtle miscreant! Ha, so subtle?
 Ye, Druses, hear him. Will ye be de-
 ceived?
 How he evades me! Where's the miracle
 He works? I bid him to the proof — fish
 up
 Your galley-full of bezants that he sank!
 That were a miracle! One miracle!
 Enough of trifling, for it chafes my years.
 I am the Nuncio, Druses! I stand forth
 To save you from the good Republic's rage 50
 When she shall find her fleet was summoned here
 To aid the mummeries of a knave like this.
 [As the Druses hesitate, his Attendants whisper.] Ah, well suggested! Why, we hold the
 while
 One who, his close confederate till now,
 Confesses Djabal at the last a cheat,
 And every miracle a cheat. Who throws
 me
 His head? I make three offers, once I offer, —
 And twice . . .
Djabal. Let who moves perish at my foot!
Khalil. Thanks, Hakeem, thanks! Oh,
 Anael, Maani,
 Why tarry they? 60
Druses [to each other]. He can! He can!
 Live fire —
 [To the NUNCIO.] I say he can, old man!
 Thou know'st him not.
 Live fire like that thou seest now in his eyes, Plays fawning round him. See! The change begins.
 All the brow lightens as he lifts his arm.
 Look not at me! It was not I!
Djabal. What Druse
 Accused me, as he saith? I bid each bone Crumble within that Druse! None, Loys,
 none
 Of my own people, as thou said'st, have raised
 A voice against me. 70
Nuncio [aside]. Venice to come! Death!
Djabal [continuing]. Confess and go unscathed, however false!
 Seest thou my Druses, Luke? I would submit
 To thy pure malice did one Druse confess!
 How said I, Loys?
Nuncio [to his Attendants who whisper].
 Ah, ye counsel so?
 [Aloud.] Bring in the witness, then, who,
 first of all,
 Disclosed the treason! Now I have thee, wizard!
 Ye hear that? If one speaks, he bids you tear him

Joint after joint: well then, one does speak! One,
 Befooled by Djabal, even as yourselves,
 But who hath voluntarily proposed
 To expiate, by confessing thus, the fault
 Of having trusted him.

[They bring in a veiled Druse.]

Loys. Now, Djabal, now!

Nuncio. Friend, Djabal fronts thee!

Make a ring, sons. Speak!

Expose this Djabal — what he was, and
 how:

The wiles he used, the aims he cherished:
 all,

Explicitly as late 'twas spoken to these

10 My servants: I absolve and pardon thee.

Loys. Thou hast the dagger ready,

Djabal?

Djabal. Speak,

Recreant!

Druses. Stand back, foe! farther!

Suddenly

You shall see some huge serpent glide from under

The empty vest, or down will thunder crash!

Back, Khalil!

Khalil. I go back? Thus go I back!

15 [To ANAEL.] Unveil! Nay, thou shalt face the Khalif! Thus!

[*He tears away ANAEL'S veil; DJABAL folds his arms and bows his head;
 the Druses fall back; LOYS springs from the side of DJABAL and the
 NUNCIO.*]

Loys. Then she was true — she only of them all!

True to her eyes — may keep those glorious eyes,

And now be mine, once again mine! Oh,
 Anael!

20 Dared I think thee a partner in his crime —

That blood could soil that hand? nay, 'tis mine — Anael,

— Not mine? — who offer thee before all
 these

My heart, my sword, my name — so thou wilt say

That Djabal, who affirms thou art his bride,

Lies — say but that he lies!

Djabal. Thou, Anael?

Loys. Nay, Djabal, nay, one chance for me — the last!

Thou hast had every other; thou hast spoken

Days, nights, what falsehood listed thee
 let me

Speak first now; I will speak now!

Nuncio. Loys, pause!

30 Thou art the Duke's son, Bretagne's choicest stock,

Loys of Dreux, God's sepulchre's first
 sword:

This wilt thou spit on, this degrade, this trample

To earth?

Loys [to ANAEL]. Who had foreseen that one day Loys

Would stake these gifts against some other
 good

In the whole world? I give them thee! I would

My strong will might bestow real shape on
 them,

That I might see, with my own eyes, thy foot

Tread on their very neck! 'Tis not by gifts

I put aside this Djabal: we will stand —
 We do stand, see, two men! Djabal, 40 stand forth!

Who's worth her, I or thou? I — who for Anael

Uprightly, purely kept my way, the long True way — left thee each by-path, boldly

lived

Without the lies and blood, — or thou, or
 thou?

Mel love me, Anael! Leave the blood and him!

[To DJABAL.] Now speak — now, quick on this that I have said, —

Thou with the blood, speak if thou art a
 man!

Djabal [to ANAEL]. And was it thou be-trayedst me? 'Tis well!

I have deserved this of thee, and submit.
 Nor 'tis much evil thou inflict: life 50

Ends here. The cedars shall not wave
 for us:

For there was crime, and must be punishment.

See fate! By thee I was seduced, by thee
 I perish: yet do I — can I repent?

I with my Arab instinct, thwarted ever
 By my Frank policy, and with, in turn,

My Frank brain, thwarted by my Arab
 heart —

While these remained in equipoise, I lived Nothing; had either been predominant,

As a Frank schemer or an Arab mystic, 60

I had been something; — now, each has destroyed

The other — and behold, from out their
 crash,

A third and better nature rises up —
 My mere man's-nature! And I yield to it:

I love thee, I who did not love before!
Anael. Djabal!

Djabal. It seemed love, but it was not love:

How could I love while thou adoredst me?
 Now thou despisest, art above me so

Immeasurably! Thou, no other, doonest
 My death now; this my steel shall execute 70

Thy judgment; I shall feel thy hand in it.

Oh luxury to worship, to submit,
Transcended, doomed to death by thee!

Anael. My Djabal!

Djabal. Dost hesitate? I force thee
then. Approach,

Druses! for I am out of reach of fate;
No further evil waits me. Speak the doom!

Hear, Druses, and hear, Nuncio, and hear,
Loys!

Anael. HAKEEM! [*She falls dead.
[The Druses scream, grovelling before him.*

Druses. Ah, Hakeem! — not on me thy wrath!

Biamrallah, pardon! never doubted I!

Ha, dog, how sayest thou?

[They surround and seize the NUNCIO and his Guards. LOYS flings himself upon the body of ANAEL, on which DJABAL continues to gaze as stupefied.

Nuncio. Caitiffs! Have ye eyes?

Whips, racks should teach you! What, his fools? his dupes?

Leave me! Unhand me!

Khalil [approaching DJABAL timidly].

Save her for my sake!

She was already thine; she would have shared

To-day thine exaltation: think, this day
Her hair was plaited thus because of thee!
Yes, feel the soft bright hair — feel!

Nuncio [struggling with those who have seized him]. What, because His leman dies for him? You think it hard To die? Oh, would you were at Rhodes, and choice

Of deaths should suit you!

Khalil [bending over ANAEL'S body].

Just restore her life!

So little does it! there — the eyelids
tremble!

'Twas not my breath that made them: and the lips

Move of themselves. I could restore her
life!

Hakeem, we have forgotten — have presumed

On our free converse: we are better taught.
See, I kiss — how I kiss thy garment's hem
For her! She kisses it — Oh, take her deed
In mine! Thou dost believe now, Anael?

— See,

She smiles! Were her lips open o'er the teeth

Thus, when I spoke first? She believes in
thee!

Go not without her to the cedars, lord!

Or leave us both — I cannot go alone!
I have obeyed thee, if I dare so speak:
Hath Hakeem thus forgot all Diabal knew?
Thou feelest then my tears fall hot and fast
Upon thy hand, and yet thou speakest not?

Ere the Venetian trumpet sound — ere
thou

Exalt thyself, O Hakeem! save thou her!

Nuncio. And the accursed Republic will arrive

And find me in their toils — dead, very
like,

Under their feet!

What way — not one way yet

To foil them? None?

[Observing DJABAL'S face.

What ails the Khalif? Ah,

That ghastly face! A way to foil them
yet!

[To the Druses.] Look to your Khalif, Druses! Is that face

God Hakeem's? Where is triumph, — where is . . . what

Said he of exaltation — hath he promised So much to-day? Why then, exalt thy-
self!

Cast off that husk, thy form, set free thy
soul

In splendour! Now, bear witness! here
I stand —

I challenge him exalt himself, and I

Become, for that, a Druse like all of
you!

The Druses. Exalt thyself! Exalt thy- 50
self, O Hakeem!

Djabal [advances]. I can confess now all from first to last.

There is no longer shame for me. I am . . .

[*Here the Venetian trumpet sounds:
the Druses shout, DJABAL'S eye catches the expression of those about him, and, as the old dream comes back, he is again confident and inspired.*

Am I not Hakeem? And ye would have crawled

But yesterday within these impure courts Where now ye stand erect! Not grand
enough?

— What more could be conceded to such beasts

As all of you, so sunk and base as you,
Than a mere man? A man among such beasts

Was miracle enough: yet him you doubt,
Him you forsake, him fain would you 60
destroy —

With the Venetians at your gate, the Nuncio

Thus — (see the baffled hypocrite!) and,
best,

The Prefect there!

Druses. No, Hakeem, ever thine!

Nuncio. He lies — and twice he lies — and thrice he lies!

Exalt thyself, Mahound! Exalt thyself!

Djabal. Druses! we shall henceforth be far away —

Out of mere mortal ken — above the cedars —

But we shall see ye go, hear ye return, Repeopling the old solitudes, — through
thee,

My Khalil! Thou art full of me: I fill Thee full — my hands thus fill thee!

Yestereve,
— Nay, but this morn, I deemed thee ignorant

Of all to do, requiring word of mine
To teach it: now, thou hast all gifts in one,
With truth and purity go other gifts,
All gifts come clustering to that. Go, lead
My people home whate'er betide!

[Turning to the Druses.] Ye take
This Khalil for my delegate? To him Bow as to me? He leads to Lebanon —
Ye follow?

Druses. We follow! Now exalt thy-
self!

Djabal [raises Loys]. Then to thee,
Loys! How I wronged thee, Loys!
Yet, wronged, no less thou shalt have full
revenge,

Fit for thy noble self, revenge — and thus.
Thou, loaded with such wrongs, the princely soul,

The first sword of Christ's sepulchre — thou shalt

20 Guard Khalil and my Druses home again!
Justice, no less, God's justice and no more,
For those I leave! To seeking this, devote Some few days out of thy Knight's brilliant
life:

And, this obtained them, leave their Lebanon,

My Druses' blessing in thine ears — (they shall

Bless thee with blessing sure to have its
way)

— One cedar-blossom in thy ducal cap,
One thought of Anael in thy heart, —
perchance,

One thought of him who thus, to bid thee
speed,

His last word to the living speaks! This 30
done,

Resume thy course, and, first amidst the
first

In Europe, take my heart along with thee!
Go boldly, go serenely, go augustly —

What shall withstand thee then?

[He bends over ANAEL.] And last to
thee!

Ah, did I dream I was to have, this day, Exalted thee? A vain dream: hast thou
not

Won greater exaltation? What remains
But press to thee, exalt myself to thee?

Thus I exalt myself, set free my soul!

[He stabs himself. As he falls, supported by KHALIL and LOYS, the Venetians enter; the ADMIRAL advances.

Admiral. God and St. Mark for Venice! 40
Plant the Lion!

[At the clash of the planted standard, the Druses shout and move tumultuously forward, LOYS drawing his sword.

Djabal [leading them a few steps between KHALIL and LOYS]. On to the Mountain! At the Mountain, Druses! [Dies.

A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON;

A TRAGEDY.

1843.

A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON.

PERSONS.

MILDRED TRESHAM.
GUENDOLEN TRESHAM.
THOROLD, Earl Tresham.
AUSTIN TRESHAM.
HENRY, Earl Mertoun.
GERARD, and other retainers of Lord Tresham.

TIME, 17—.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — The interior of a lodge in LORD TRESHAM'S park. Many Retainers crowded at the window, supposed to command a view of the entrance to his mansion. GERARD, the warrener, his back to a table on which are flagons, etc.

1st Retainer. Ay, do! push, friends, and then you'll push down me!
— What for? Does any hear a runner's foot
Or a steed's trample or a coach-wheel's cry?

Is the Earl come or his least poursuivant?
But there's no breeding in a man of you Save Gerard yonder: here's a half-place yet, Old Gerard!

Gerard. Save your courtesies, my friend. Here is my place.

2nd Retainer. Now, Gerard, out with it! What makes you sullen, this of all the days
I' the year? To-day that young rich bountiful

Handsome Earl Mertoun, whom alone they match

With our Lord Tresham through the country-side,

Is coming here in utmost bravery
To ask our master's sister's hand?

Gerard. What then?
2nd Retainer. What then? Why, you, she speaks to, if she meets

Your worship, smiles on as you hold apart

The boughs to let her through her forest
walks,
You, always favourite for your no-deserts,
You've heard, these three days, how Earl Mertoun sues
To lay his heart and house and broad lands 20
too
At Lady Mildred's feet: and while we squeeze
Ourselves into a mousehole lest we miss
One congee of the least page in his train,
You sit o' one side — "there's the Earl," say I —

"What then?" say you!
3rd Retainer. I'll wager he has let

Both swans he tamed for Lady Mildred swim

Over the falls and gain the river!
Gerard. Ralph,

Is not to-morrow my inspecting-day
For you and for your hawks?

4th Retainer. Let Gerard be!
He's coarse-grained, like his carved black 30 cross-bow stock.

Ha, look now, while we squabble with him,
look!

Well done, now — is not this beginning,
now,

To purpose?
1st Retainer. Our retainers look as fine —

That's comfort. Lord, how Richard holds
himself

With his white staff! Will not a knave behind

Prick him upright?
4th Retainer. He's only bowing, fool!

The Earl's man bent us lower by this much.
1st Retainer. That's comfort. Here's a very cavalcade!

3rd Retainer. I don't see wherefore
Richard, and his troop

Of silk and silver varlets there, should find 40
Their perfumed selves so indispensable

On high days, holidays! Would it so dis-
grace

Our family, if I, for instance, stood —
In my right hand a cast of Swedish hawks,

A leash of greyhounds in my left? — Gerard. — With Hugh

The logman for supporter, in his right

The bill-hook, in his left the brushwood-shears!

3rd Retainer. Out on you, crab! What next, what next? The Earl!

1st Retainer. Oh Walter, groom, our horses, do they match

The Earl's? Alas, that first pair of the six —

They paw the ground — Ah Walter! and that brute

Just on his haunches by the wheel!

6th Retainer. Ay — ay!

You, Philip, are a special hand, I hear, At soups and sauces: what's a horse to you?

D'ye mark that beast they've slid into the midst

10 So cunningly? — then, Philip, mark this further;

No leg has he to stand on!

1st Retainer. No? That's comfort.

2nd Retainer. Peace, Cook! The Earl descends. Well, Gerard, see

The Earl at least! Come, there's a proper man,

I hope! Why, Ralph, no falcon, Pole or Swede,

Has got a starrier eye.

3rd Retainer. His eyes are blue:

But leave my hawks alone!

4th Retainer. So young, and yet

So tall and shapely!

5th Retainer. Here's Lord Tresham's self!

There now — there's what a nobleman should be!

He's older, graver, loftier, he's more like 20 A House's head.

2nd Retainer. But you'd not have a boy — And what's the Earl beside? — possess too soon

That stateliness?

1st Retainer. Our master takes his hand —

Richard and his white staff are on the move —

Back fall our people — (tsh! — there's Timothy Sure to get tangled in his ribbon-ties, And Peter's cursed rosette's a-coming off!)

— At last I see our lord's back and his friend's;

And the whole beautiful bright company Close round them — in they go! [Jumping down from the window-bench, and making for the table and its jugs.]

Good health, long life,

30 Great joy to our Lord Tresham and his House!

6th Retainer. My father drove his father first to court,

After his marriage-day — ay, did he!

2nd Retainer. God bless

Lord Tresham, Lady Mildred, and the Earl!

Here, Gerard, reach your beaker!

Gerard. Drink, my boys!

Don't mind me — all's not right about me — drink!

2nd Retainer [aside]. He's vexed, now, that he let the show escape!

[To GERARD.] Remember that the Earl returns this way.

Gerard. That way?

2nd Retainer. Just so.

Gerard. Then my way's here.

[Does.]

2nd Retainer. Old Gerard

Will die soon — mind, I said it! He was used

To care about the pitifullest thing 40

That touched the House's honour, not an eye

But his could see wherein: and on a cause Of scarce a quarter this importance,

Gerard

Fairly had fretted flesh and bone away In cares that this was right, nor that was wrong,

Such point decorous, and such square by rule —

He knew such niceties, no herald more: And now — you see his humour: die he will!

2nd Retainer. God help him! Who's for the great servants'-hall

To hear what's going on inside? They'd 50 follow

Lord Tresham into the saloon.

3rd Retainer. I! —

4th Retainer. I! —

Leave Frank alone for catching, at the door, Some hint of how the parley goes inside!

Prosperity to the great House once more! Here's the last drop!

1st Retainer. Have at you! Boys, hurrah!

SCENE II. — A Saloon in the Mansion.

Enter LORD TRESHAM, LORD MERTOUN, AUSTIN, and GUENDOLEN.

Tresham. I welcome you, Lord Mertoun, yet once more,

To this ancestral roof of mine. Your name

— Noble among the noblest in itself, Yet taking in your person, fame avers,

New price and lustre, — (as that gem you 60 wear,

Transmitted from a hundred knightly breasts,

Fresh chased and set and fixed by its last lord,

Seems to re-kindle at the core) — your name

Would win you welcome! —

Mertoun. Thanks!

Tresham. — But add to that,
The worthiness and grace and dignity
Of your proposal for uniting both
Our Houses even closer than respect Unites them now — add these, and you must grant

One favour more, nor that the least, — to
think

The welcome I should give; — 'tis given!

My lord,

My only brother, Austin: he's the king's.
Our cousin, Lady Guendolen — betrothed
To Austin: all are yours.

Mertoun. I thank you — less For the expressed commendings which your seal,

And only that, authenticates — forbids
My putting from me . . . to my heart I
take

Your praise . . . but praise less claims
my gratitude,

Than the indulgent insight it implies
Of what must needs be uppermost with
one

Who comes, like me, with the bare leave to ask,

In weighed and measured unimpassioned
words,

A gift, which, if as calmly 'tis denied,
He must withdraw, content upon his cheek,
Despair within his soul. That I dare ask Firmly, near boldly, near with confidence
That gift, I have to thank you. Yes, Lord

Tresham,

I love your sister — as you'd have one love
That lady . . . oh more, more I love her!
Wealth,

Rank, all the world thinks me, they're yours, you know,

To hold or part with, at your choice — but grant

My true self, me without a rood of land
A piece of gold, a name of yesterday, Grant me that lady, and you . . . Death or life?

Guendolen [apart to AUSTIN]. Why, this is loving, Austin!

Austin. He's so young!

Guendolen Young? Old enough, I think, to half surmise

He never had obtained an entrance here,
Were all this fear and trembling needed.

Austin. Hush!

He reddens.
Guendolen. Mark him, Austin; that's true love!

Ours must begin again.

Tresham. We'll sit, my lord.

Ever with best desert goes diffidence.

I may speak plainly nor be misconceived
That I am wholly satisfied with you

On this occasion, when a falcon's eye

Were dull compared with mine to search out faults,

Is somewhat. Mildred's hand is hers to give

Or to refuse.

Mertoun. But you, you grant my suit?
I have your word if hers?

Tresham. My best of words
If hers encourage you. I trust it will.

Have you seen Lady Mildred, by the way?

Mertoun. I . . . I . . . our two de-mesnes, remember, touch;

I have been used to wander carelessly
After my stricken game: the heron roused

Deep in my woods, has trailed its broken ^{wing} 50

Thro' thickets and glades a mile in yours, —
or else

Some eyass¹ ill-reclaimed has taken flight
And lured me after her from tree to tree,

I marked not whither. I have come upon
The lady's wondrous beauty unaware,

And — and then . . . I have seen her.

Guendolen [aside to AUSTIN]. Note that mode

Of faltering out that, when a lady passed.
He, having eyes, did see her! You had
said

"On such a day I scanned her, head to
foot;

"Observed a red, where red should not 60
have been,

"Outside her elbow; but was pleased
enough

"Upon the whole." Let such irreverent
talk

Be lessoned for the future!

Tresham. What's to say
May be said briefly. She has never known

A mother's care; I stand for father too.
Her beauty is not strange to you, it seems —

You cannot know the good and tender
heart,

Its girl's trust and its woman's constancy,
How pure yet passionate, how calm yet

kind,

How grave yet joyous, how reserved yet 70
free

As light where friends are — how imbued with lore

The world most prizes, yet the simplest,
yet

The . . . one might know I talked of Mildred — thus

We brothers talk!

Mertoun. I thank you.

Tresham. In a word,
Control's not for this lady; but her wish

To please me outstrips in its subtlety
My power of being pleased: herself creates

The want she means to satisfy. My heart

Prefers your suit to her as 'twere its own.
Can I say more?

Mertoun. No more — thanks, thanks
— no more!

Tresham. This matter then discussed . . .

Mertoun. — We'll waste no breath
On aught less precious. I'm beneath the roof

Which holds her: while I thought of that,
my speech

'To you would wander — as it must not do,
Since as you favour me I stand or fall.

I pray you suffer that I take my leave!

Tresham. With less regret 'tis suffered, that again

10 We meet, I hope, so shortly.

Mertoun. We? again? —

Ah yes, forgive me — when shall . . . you will crown

Your goodness by forthwith apprising me
When . . . if . . . the lady will appoint a day

For me to wait on you — and her.

Tresham. So soon

As I am made acquainted with her
thoughts

On your proposal — howsoe'er they lean —
A messenger shall bring you the result.

Mertoun. You cannot bind me more to you,
my lord.

Farewell till we renew . . . I trust, renew 20 A converse ne'er to disunite again.

Tresham. So may it prove!

Mertoun. You, lady, you, sir, take

My humble salutation!

Guendolen and Austin. Thanks!

Tresham. Within there!

[Servants enter. TRESHAM conducts

MERTOUN to the door. Meantime AUSTIN remarks,

Well,

Here I have an advantage of the Earl, Confess now! I'd not think that all was safe

Because my lady's brother stood my
friend!

Why, he makes sure of her — "do you say
yes —

"She'll not say, no," — what comes it to
beside?

I should have prayed the brother, "speak
this speech,

"For Heaven's sake urge this on her — put in this —

30 "Forget not, as you'd save me, t'other
thing, —

"Then set down what she says, and how she looks,

"And if she smiles, and" (in an under breath)

"Only let her accept me, and do you

"And all the world refuse me, if you dare!"

Guendolen. That way you'd take, friend
Austin? What a shame

I was your cousin, tamely from the first
Your bride, and all this fervour's run to waste!

Do you know you speak sensibly to-day?
The Earl's a fool.

Austin. Here's Thorold. Tell him so!

Tresham [returning]. Now, voices, 4 voices! 'St! the lady's first!

How seems he? — seems he not . . .
come, faith give fraud

The mercy-stroke whenever they engage!
Down with fraud, up with faith! How seems the Earl?

A name! a blazon! if you knew their
worth,

As you will never! come — the Earl?

Guendolen. He's young.

Tresham. What's she? an infant save in heart and brain.

Young! Mildred is fourteen, remark!
And you . . .

Austin, how old is she?

Guendolen. There's tact for you!

I meant that being young was good excuse
If one should tax him . . .

Tresham. Well? 50

Guendolen. — With lacking wit.

Tresham. He lacked wit? Where might he lack wit, so please you?

Guendolen. In standing straighter than the steward's rod

And making you the tiresomest harangue,
Instead of slipping over to my side

And softly whispering in my ear, "Sweet
lady,

"Your cousin there will do me detriment

"He little dreams of: he's absorbed, I see,
"In my old name and fame — be sure he'll leave

"My Mildred, when his best account of me
"Is ended, in full confidence I wear

"My grandsire's periwig down either
cheek.

"I'm lost unless your gentleness vouch-safes" . . .

Tresham. . . . "To give a best of best accounts, yourself,

"Of me and my demerits." You are
right!

He should have said what now I say for
him.

Yon golden creature, will you help us all?
Here's Austin means to vouch for much,

but you

— You are . . . what Austin only knows!
Come up,

All three of us: she's in the library
No doubt, for the day's wearing fast. 70

Precede!

Guendolen. Austin, how we must —!

Tresham. Must what? Must speak
truth,

50

60

70

Malignant tongue! Detect one fault in him!

I challenge you!

Guendolen. Witchcraft's a fault in him, For you're bewitched.

Tresham. What's urgent we obtain Is, that she soon receive him — say, to-morrow —

Next day at furthest.

Guendolen. Ne'er instruct me!

Tresham. Come! — He's out of your good graces, since forsooth,

He stood not as he'd carry us by storm With his perfections! You're for the composed Manly assured becoming confidence!

— Get her to say, "to-morrow," and I'll give you . . .

I'll give you black Urganda, to be spoiled With petting and snail-paces. Will you? Come!

SCENE III. — MILDRED'S chamber. A painted window overlooks the park. MILDRED and GUENDOLEN.

Guendolen. Now, Mildred, spare those pains. I have not left

Our talkers in the library, and climbed The wearisome ascent to this your bower In company with you, — I have not dared . . .

Nay, worked such prodigies as sparing you Lord Mertoun's pedigree before the flood, Which Thorold seemed in very act to tell — Or bringing Austin to pluck up that most

Firm-rooted heresy — your suitor's eyes, He would maintain, were grey instead of blue —

I think I brought him to contrition! — Well,

I have not done such things, (all to deserve A minute's quiet cousin's talk with you,) To be dismissed so coolly.

Mildred. Guendolen! What have I done? what could suggest . . .

Guendolen. There, there!

Do I not comprehend you'd be alone To throw those testimonies in a heap,

Thorold's enlargings, Austin's brevities, With that poor silly heartless Guendolen's

Ill-time misplaced attempted smartnesses — And sift their sense out? now, I come to spare you

Nearly a whole night's labour. Ask and have!

Demand, be answered! Lack I ears and eyes?

Am I perplexed which side of the rock-table

The Conqueror dined on when he landed first,

Lord Mertoun's ancestor was bidden take —

The bow-hand or the arrow-hand's great meed?

Mildred, the Earl has soft blue eyes! 40

Mildred. My brother — Did he . . . you said that he received him well?

Guendolen. If I said only "well" I said not much.

Oh, stay — which brother?

Mildred. Thorold! who — who else?

Guendolen. Thorold (a secret) is too proud by half, —

Nay, hear me out — with us he's even gentler

Than we are with our birds. Of this great House

The least retainer that e'er caught his glance

Would die for him, real dying — no mere talk:

And in the world, the court, if men would cite

The perfect spirit of honour, Thorold's 50 name

Rises of its clear nature to their lips.

But he should take men's homage, trust in it,

And care no more about what drew it down.

He has desert, and that, acknowledgment; Is he content?

Mildred. You wrong him, Guendolen.

Guendolen. He's proud, confess; so proud with brooding o'er

The light of his interminable line,

An ancestry with men all paladins,

And women all . . .

Mildred. Dear Guendolen, 'tis late!

When yonder purple pane the climbing 60 moon

Pierces, I know 'tis midnight.

Guendolen. Well, that Thorold Should rise up from such musings, and receive

One come audaciously to graft himself Into this peerless stock, yet find no flaw,

No slightest spot in such an one . . .

Mildred. Who finds A spot in Mertoun?

Guendolen. Not your brother; therefore,

Not the whole world.

Mildred. I am weary, Guendolen. Bear with me!

Guendolen. I am foolish.

Mildred. Oh no, kind! But I would rest.

Guendolen. Good night and rest to you!

I said how gracefully his mantle lay 70 Beneath the rings of his light hair?

Mildred. Brown hair.

Guendolen. Brown? why, it is brown: how could you know that?

Mildred. How? did not you — Oh, Austin 'twas, declared

His hair was light, not brown — my head! — and look,

The moon-beam purpling the dark chamber! Sweet,

Good night!

Guendolen. Forgive me — sleep the soundlier for me!

[Going, she turns suddenly.

Mildred!

Perdition! a! — discovered! Thorold finds — That the Earl's greatest of all grand-mothers

Was grander daughter still — to that fair dame

Whose garter slipped down at the famous dance!

[Goes.

10 Mildred. Is she — can she be really gone at last?

My heart! I shall not reach the window. Needs

Must I have sinned much, so to suffer.

[She lifts the small lamp which is suspended before the Virgin's image in the window, and places it by the purple pane.

There!

[She returns to the seat in front.

Mildred and Mertoun! Mildred, with consent

Of all the world and Thorold, Mertoun's bride!

'Too late! 'Tis sweet to think of, sweeter still

To hope for, that this blessed end soothes up

The curse of the beginning; but I know It comes too late: 'twill sweetest be of all To dream my soul away and die upon.

[A noise without.

20 The voice! Oh why, why glided sin the snake

Into the paradise Heaven meant us both?

[The window opens softly.

A low voice sings.

There's a woman like a dew-drop, she's so purer than the purest;

And her noble heart's the noblest, yes, and her sure faith's the surest:

And her eyes are dark and humid, like the depth on depth of lustre

Hid 't the harebell, while her tresses, sunnier than the wild-grape cluster,

Cush in golden-tinted plenty down her neck's rose-misted marble:

Then her voice's music . . . call it the well's bubbling the bird's warble!

And this woman says, "My days were sunless and my nights were moonless, "Parched the pleasant April herbage, and the lark's heart's outbreak tuneless, "If you loved me not!" And I who — (ah, 30 for words of flame!) adore her, Who am mad to lay my spirit prostrate palpably before her —

[He enters, approaches her seat, and bends over her.

I may enter at her portal soon, as now her lattice takes me,

And by noontide as by midnight make her mine, as hers she makes me!

[The Earl throws off his slouched hat and long cloak.

My very heart sings, so I sing, Beloved!

Mildred. Sit, Henry — do not take my hand!

Mertoun.

'Tis mine.

The meeting that appalled us both so much Is ended.

Mildred. What begins now?

Mertoun. Happiness Such as the world contains not.

Mildred. That is it. Our happiness would, as you say, exceed

The whole world's best of blisses: we — 40 do we Deserve that? Utter to your soul, what mine

Long since, Beloved, has grown used to hear,

Like a death-knell, so much regarded once, And so familiar now; this will not be!

Mertoun. Oh, Mildred, have I met your brother's face?

Compelled myself — if not to speak untruth,

Yet to disguise, to shun, to put aside The truth, as — what had e'er prevailed on me

Save you, to venture? Have I gained at last

Your brother, the one scarer of your 50 dreams,

And waking thoughts' sole apprehension too?

Does a new life, like a young sunrise, break On the strange unrest of our night, confused

With rain and stormy flaw — and will you see

No dripping blossoms, no fire-tinted drops On each live spray, no vapour steaming up,

And no expressless glory in the East? When I am by you, to be ever by you,

When I have won you and may worship you,

Oh, Mildred, can you say "this will not 60 be"?

Mildred. Sin has surprised us, so will punishment.

Mertoun. Me — me alone, who sinned alone!

Mildred. The night
You likened our past life to — was it storm
Throughout to you then, Henry?

Mertoun. Of your life
I spoke — what am I, what my life, to waste

A thought about when you are by me? — you

It was, I said my folly called the storm
And pulled the night upon. 'Twas day with me —

Perpetual dawn with me.

Mildred. Come what, come will,
You have been happy: take my hand!

Mertoun [after a pause]. How good Your brother is! I figured him a cold —
Shall I say, haughty man?

Mildred. They told me all.
I know all.

Mertoun. It will soon be over.

Mildred. Over?
Oh, what is over? what must I live through
And say, "'tis over"? Is our meeting over?

Have I received in presence of them all
The partner of my guilty love — with brow
Trying to seem a maiden's brow — with lips

Which make believe that when they strive to form

Replies to you and tremble as they strive,
It is the nearest ever they approached

A stranger's . . . Henry, yours that stranger's . . . lip —

With cheek that looks a virgin's, and that is . . .

Ah God, some prodigy of thine will stop
This planned piece of deliberate wicked-
ness

In its birth even! some fierce leprous spot
Will mar the brow's dissimulating! I Shall murmur no smooth speeches got by heart,

But, frenzied, pour forth all our woeful
story,

The love, the shame, and the despair —
with them

Round me aghast as round some cursed fount

That should spirt water, and spouts blood. I'll not

. . . Henry, you do not wish that I should draw

This vengeance down? I'll not affect a
grace

That's gone from me — gone once, and gone for ever!

Mertoun. Mildred, my honour is your own. I'll share

Disgrace I cannot suffer by myself.

A word informs your brother I retract
This morning's offer; time will yet bring
forth

Some better way of saving both of us. 4

Mildred. I'll meet their faces, Henry!

Mertoun. When? to-morrow!
Get done with it!

Mildred. Oh, Henry, not to-morrow!
Next day! I never shall prepare my
words

And looks and gestures sooner. — How you must

Despise me!

Mertoun. Mildred, break it if you choose,

A heart the love of you uplifted — still Uplifts, thro' this protracted agony,

To heaven! but Mildred, answer me, —
first pace

The chamber with me — once again —
now, say

Calmly the part, the . . . what it is of me 5

You see contempt (for you did say contempt)

— Contempt for you in! I would pluck it
off

And cast it from me! — but no — no, you'll not

Repeat that? — will you, Mildred, repeat
that?

Mildred. Dear Henry!

Mertoun. I was scarce a boy — e'en now What am I more? And you were infant-ine

When first I met you; why, your hair fell loose

On either side! My fool's-cheek reddens
now

Only in the recalling how it burned

That morn to see the shape of many a 6
dream

— You know we boys are prodigal of charms

To her we dream of — I had heard of one,
Had dreamed of her, and I was close to her,

Might speak to her, might live and die
her own,

Who knew? I spoke. Oh, Mildred, feel you not

That now, while I remember every glance
Of yours, each word of yours, with power to test

And weigh them in the diamond scales of pride,

Resolved the treasure of a first and last

Heart's love shall have been bartered at its 7
worth,

— That now I think upon your purity

And utter ignorance of guilt — your own
Or other's guilt — the girlish undisguised

Delight at a strange novel prize — (I talk
A silly language, but interpret, you!)

If I, with fancy at its full, and reason

Scarce in its germ, enjoined you secrecy,

If you had pity on my passion, pity
On my protested sickness of the scul
To sit beside you, hear you breathe, and
watch
Your eyelids and the eyes beneath — if
you

Accorded gifts and knew not they were gifts —

If I grew mad at last with enterprise
And must behold my beauty in her bower
Or perish — (I was ignorant of even My own desires — what then were you?) if sorrow —

10 Sin — if the end came — must I now renounce

My reason, blind myself to light, say truth
Is false and lie to God and my own soul?
Contempt were all of this!

Mildred. Do you believe . . .
Or, Henry, I'll not wrong you — you believe

That I was ignorant. I scarce grieve o'er
The past. We'll love on; you will love me still.

Mertoun. Oh, to love less what one has injured! Dove, Whose pinion I have rashly hurt, my
breast —

Shall my heart's warmth not nurse thee into strength?

20 Flower I have crushed, shall I not care for thee?

Bloom o'er my crest, my fight-mark and device!

Mildred, I love you and you love me.

Mildred. Go!
Be that your last word. I shall sleep to-
night.

Mertoun. This is not our last meeting?

Mildred. One night more.

Mertoun. And then — think, then!

Mildred. Then, no
sweet courtship-days,

No dawning consciousness of love for us,
No strange and palpitating births of sense
From words and looks, no innocent fears and hopes,

Reserves and confidences: morning's over!

30 Mertoun. How else should love's perfected noontide follow?

All the dawn promised shall the day perform.

Mildred. So may it be! but —

You are cautious, Love?
Are sure that unobserved you scaled the walls?

Mertoun. Oh, trust me! Then our final meeting's fixed

To-morrow night?

Mildred. Farewell! Stay, Henry
. . . wherefore?

His foot is on the yew-tree bough; the turf Receives him: now the moonlight as he runs

Embraces him — but he must go — is
gone.

Ah, once again he turns — thanks, thanks,
my Love!

He's gone. Oh, I'll believe him every
word!

I was so young, I loved him so, I had No mother, God forgot me, and I fell.

There may be pardon yet: all's doubt beyond

Surely the bitterness of death is past.

ACT II.

SCENE. — The Library.

Enter LORD TRESHAM, hastily.

Tresham. This way! In, Gerard,
quick!

[As GERARD enters, TRESHAM secures the door.

Now speak! or, wait —
I'll bid you speak directly. [Seats himself.

Now repeat
Firmly and circumstantially the tale

You just now told me; it eludes me;
either

I did not listen, or the half is gone Away from me. How long have you lived

here?
Here in my house, your father kept our woods

Before you?

Gerard. — As his father did, my lord.
I have been eating, sixty years almost,

Your bread.

Tresham. Yes, yes. You ever were of
all

The servants in my father's house, I know,
The trusted one. You'll speak the truth.

Gerard. I'll speak
God's truth. Night after night . . .

Tresham. Since when?

Gerard. At least
A month — each midnight has some man access

To Lady Mildred's chamber.
Tresham. Tush, "access" —

No wide words like "access" to me!
Gerard. He runs

Along the woodside, crosses to the South,
Takes the left tree that ends the avenue . . .

Tresham. The last great yew-tree?

Gerard. You might stand upon The main boughs like a platform. Then
he . . .

Tresham. Quick!

Gerard. Climbs up, and, where they lessen at the top,

— I cannot see distinctly, but he throws,
I think — for this I do not vouch — a line

That reaches to the lady's casement — Tresham. — Which

He enters not! Gerard, some wretched
 fool

Dares pry into my sister's privacy!
 When such are young, it seems a precious
 thing

To have approached, — to merely have approached,

Got sight of, the abode of her they set Their frantic thoughts upon. He does not enter?

Gerard?

Gerard. There is a lamp that's full i' the midst,
 Under a red square in the painted glass
 Of Lady Mildred's . . .

Tresham. Leave that name out! Well?
 That lamp?

Gerard. — Is moved at midnight higher
 up

To one pane — a small dark-blue pane;
 he waits

For that among the boughs: at sight of
 that,

I see him, plain as I see you, my lord,
 Open the lady's casement, enter there . . .

Tresham. — And stay?

Gerard. An hour, two hours.

Tresham. And this you saw
 Once? — twice? — quick!

Gerard. Twenty times.

Tresham. And what brings you
 Under the yew-trees?

Gerard. The first night I left
 My range so far, to track the stranger stag
 That broke the pale, I saw the man.

Tresham. Yet sent
 No cross-bow shaft through the marauder?

Gerard. But
 He came, my lord, the first time he was
 seen,

In a great moonlight, light as any day,
 From Lady Mildred's chamber.

Tresham [after a pause]. You have no cause

— Who could have cause to do my sister
 wrong?

Gerard. Oh, my lord, only once — let me this once

Speak what is on my mind! Since first I noted

All this, I've groaned as if a fiery net Plucked me this way and that — fire if I turned

To her, fire if I turned to you, and fire
 If down I flung myself and strove to die.
 The lady could not have been seven years
 old

When I was trusted to conduct her safe
 Through the deer-herd to stroke the snow-white fawn

I brought to eat bread from her tiny hand
 Within a month. She ever had a smile

To greet me with — she . . . if it could undo

What's done, to lop each limb from off this trunk . . .

All that is foolish talk, not fit for you —
 I mean, I could not speak and bring her 40
 hurt

For Heaven's compelling. But when I was fixed

To hold my peace, each morsel of your food Eaten beneath your roof, my birth-place
 too,

Choked me. I wish I had grown mad in doubts

What it behoved me do. This morn it seemed

Either I must confess to you, or die:

Now it is done, I seem the vilest worm

That crawls, to have betrayed my lady.

Tresham. No —
 No, Gerard!

Gerard. Let me go!

Tresham. A man, you say:
 What man? Young? Not a vulgar 50 hind? What dress?

Gerard. A slouched hat and a large dark foreign cloak

Wraps his whole form; even his face is hid;

But I should judge him young: no hind,
 be sure!

Tresham. Why?

Gerard. He is ever armed: his sword projects

Beneath the cloak.

Tresham. Gerard, — I will not say
 No word, no breath of this!

Gerard. Thank, thanks, my lord!
 [Goes.]

Tresham [paces the room. After a pause]. Oh, thoughts absurd! — as with some monstrous fact

Which, when ill thoughts beset us, seems to give

Merciful God that made the sun and stars,
 The waters and the green delights of earth, 60
 The lie! I apprehend the monstrous
 fact —

Yet know the maker of all worlds is good,
 And yield my reason up, inadequate

To reconcile what yet I do behold —

Blasting my sense! There's cheerful day outside:

This is my library, and this the chair
 My father used to sit in carelessly

After his soldier-fashion, while I stood Between his knees to question him: and
 here

Gerard our grey retainet, — as he says, 70 Fed with our food, from sire to son, an
 age, —

Has told a story — I am to believe!

That Mildred . . . oh, no, no! both tales are true,

Her pure cheek's story and the forester's!
Would she, or could she, err — much less,
confound

All guilts of treachery, of craft, of . . .
Heaven

Keep me within its hand! — I will sit here
Until thought settle and I see my course.
Avert, oh God, only this woe from me!

[As he sinks his head between his arms on the table, GUENDOLEN'S voice is heard at the door.

Lord Tresham! [She knocks.] Is Lord
Tresham there?

[TRESHAM, hastily turning, pulls down the first book above him and opens it.

Tresham. Come in! [She enters.
Ha, Guendolen! — good morning.

Guendolen. Nothing more?

Tresham. What should I say more?

Guendolen. Pleasant question! more?

10 This more. Did I besiege poor Mildred's brain

Last night till close on morning with "the Earl,"

"The Earl" — whose worth did I assevera-te

Till I am very fain to hope that . . .
Thorold,

What is all this? You are not well!

Tresham. Who, I?

You laugh at me.

Guendolen. Has what I'm fain to hope, Arrived then? Does that huge tome show some blot

In the Earl's 'scutcheon come no longer
back

Than Arthur's time?

Tresham. When left you Mildred's chamber?

Guendolen. Oh, late enough, I told you!
The main thing

20 To ask is, how I left her chamber, — sure,
Content yourself, she'll grant this paragon
Of Earls no such ungracious . . .

Tresham. Send her here!

Guendolen. Thorold?

Tresham. I mean — acquaint her, Guendolen,

— But mildly!

Guendolen. Mildly?

Tresham. Ah, you guessed aright!

I am not well: there is no hiding it.

But tell her I would see her at her leisure —

That is, at once! here in the library!

The passage in that old Italian book

We hunted for so long is found, say,
found —

30 And if I let it slip again . . . you see,
That she must come — and instantly!

Guendolen. I'll die

Piecemeal, record that, if there have not gloomed

Some blot i' the 'scutcheon!

Tresham.

Go! or, Guendolen,
Be you at call, — with Austin, if you
choose, —

In the adjoining gallery! There, go!

[GUENDOLEN goes.

Another lesson to me! You might bid
A child disguise his heart's sore, and conduct

Some sly investigation point by point
With a smooth brow, as well as bid me
catch

The inquisitorial cleverness some praise.

If you had told me yesterday, "There's one

"You needs must circumvent and practise with,

"Entrap by policies, if you would worm

"The truth out: and that one is — Mildred!" There,

There — reasoning is thrown away on it!

Prove she's unchaste . . . why, you may after prove

That she's a poisoner, traitress, what you
will!

Where I can comprehend nought, nought's
to say.

Or do, or think. Force on me but the first

Abomination, — then outpour all plagues,
And I shall ne'er make count of them.

Enter MILDRED.

Mildred.

What book

Is it I wanted, Thorold? Guendolen

Thought you were pale; you are not pale.

That book?

That's Latin surely.

Tresham.

Mildred, here's a line,
(Don't lean on me: I'll English it for you)

"Love conquers all things." What love conquers them?

What love should you esteem — best love?

Mildred.

True love.

Tresham. I mean, and should have said, whose love is best

Of all that love or that profess to love?

Mildred. The list's so long: there's father's, mother's, husband's . . .

Tresham. Mildred, I do believe a brother's love

For a sole sister must exceed them all.

For see now, only see! there's no alloy

Of earth that creeps into the perfect'st
gold

Of other loves — no gratitude to claim;

You never gave her life, not even aught

That keeps life — never tended her, instructed,

Enriched her — so, your love can claim no right

O'er her save pure love's claim: that's what I call

Freedom from earthliness. You'll never hope

- To be such friends, for instance, she and you,
 As when you hunted cowslips in the woods
 Or played together in the meadow hay.
 Oh yes — with age, respect comes, and your worth
 Is felt, there's growing sympathy of tastes,
 There's ripened friendship, there's confirmed esteem:
 — Much head these make against the new-comer!
 The startling apparition, the strange youth —
 Whom one half-hour's conversing with, or, say, Mere gazing at, shall change (beyond all change
 This Ovid ever sang about) your soul
 . . . Her soul, that is, — the sister's soul!
 With her
 'Twas winter yesterday; now, all is warmth,
 The green leaf's springing and the turtle's voice,
 "Arise and come away!" Come whither? — far Enough from the esteem, respect, and all
 The brother's somewhat insignificant Array of rights! All which he knows before,
 Has calculated on so long ago!
 I think such love, (apart from yours and mine,)
 Contented with its little term of life,
 Intending to retire betimes, aware
 How soon the background must be placed for it,
 — I think, am sure, a brother's love exceeds
 All the world's love in its unworldliness.
Mildred. What is this for?
Tresham. This, Mildred, is it for!
 Or, no, I cannot go to it so soon!
 That's one of many points my haste left out —
 Each day, each hour throws forth its silk-slight film
 Between the being tied to you by birth,
 And you, until these slender threads compose
 A web that shrouds her daily life of hopes
 And fears and fancies, all her life, from yours:
 So close you live and yet so far apart!
 And must I rend this web, tear up, break down
 The sweet and palpitating mystery
 That makes her sacred? You — for you I mean, Shall I speak, shall I not speak?
Mildred. Speak!
Tresham. I will.
 Is there a story men could — any man
- Could tell of you, you would conceal from me?
 I'll never think there's falsehood on that lip.
 Say "There is no such story men could tell,"
 And I'll believe you, though I disbelieve
 The world — the world of better men than I,
 And women such as I suppose you. Speak!
 [After a pause.] Not speak? Explain then!
 Clear it up then! Move
 Some of the miserable weight away
 That presses lower than the grave! Not speak?
 Some of the dead weight, Mildred! Ah, if I Could bring myself to plainly make their charge Against you! Must I, Mildred? Silent still?
 [After a pause.] Is there a gallant that has night by night
 Admittance to your chamber?
 [After a pause] Then, his name!
 Till now, I only had a thought for you:
 But now, — his name!
Mildred. Thorold, do you devise Fit expiation for my guilt, if fit
 There be! 'Tis nought to say that I'll endure
 And bless you, — that my spirit yearns to purge
 Her stains off in the fierce renewing fire:
 But do not plunge me into other guilt! 60
 Oh, guilt enough! I cannot tell his name.
Tresham. Then judge yourself! How should I act? Pronounce!
Mildred. Oh, Thorold, you must never tempt me thus!
 To die here in this chamber by that sword
 Would seem like punishment: so should I glide,
 Like an arch-cheat, into extremest bliss!
 'Twere easily arranged for me: but you —
 What would become of you?
Tresham. And what will now Become of me? I'll hide your shame and mine From every eye; the dead must heave 70 their hearts
 Under the marble of our chapel-floor;
 They cannot rise and blast you. You may wed
 Your paramour above our mother's tomb;
 Our mother cannot move from 'neath your foot.
 We too will somehow wear this one day out:
 But with to-morrow hastens here — the Earl!
 The youth without suspicion face can come From Heaven and heart from . . .
 whence proceed such hearts?

I have dispatched last night at your command

A missive bidding him present himself
To-morrow — here — thus much is said;
the rest

Is understood as if 'twere written down —
"His suit finds favor in your eyes." Now dictate

This morning's letter that shall countermand

Last night's — do dictate that!

Mildred. But, Thorold — if I will receive him as I said?

Tresham. The Earl?

Mildred. I will receive him.

Tresham [starting up]. Ho there!
Guendolen!

GUENDOLEN and AUSTIN enter.

And, Austin, you are welcome, too! Look there!

The woman there!

Austin and Guendolen. How? Mildred?

Tresham. Mildred once!

Now the receiver night by night, when sleep

Blesses the inmates of her father's house,
— I say, the soft sly wanton that receives Her guilt's accomplice 'neath this roof which holds

You, Guendolen, you, Austin, and has held A thousand Treshams — never one like
her!

No lighter of the signal-lamp her quick
Foul breath near quenches in hot eagerness

To mix with breath as foul! no loosener
O' the lattice, practised in the stealthy tread,

The low voice and the noiseless come-and-go!

Not one composer of the bacchant's mien Into — what you thought Mildred's, in a word!

Know her!

Guendolen. Oh, Mildred, look to me, at least!

Thorold — she's dead, I'd say, but that she stands

Rigid as stone and whiter!

Tresham. You have heard . . .

Guendolen. Too much! You must proceed no further.

Mildred. Yes —

Proceed! All's truth. Go from me!

Tresham. All is truth,

She tells you! Well, you know, or ought to know,

All this I would forgive in her. I'd con Each precept the harsh world enjoins, I'd
take

Our ancestors' stern verdicts one by one,
I'd bind myself before them to exact

The prescribed vengeance — and one word of hers,

The sight of her, the bare least memory
Of Mildred, my one sister, my heart's pride
Above all prides, my all in all so long,
Would scatter every trace of my resolve.
What were it silently to waste away
And see her waste away from this day
forth,

Two scathed things with leisure to repent,
And grow acquainted with the grave; and
die

Tired out if not at peace, and be forgotten?
It were not so impossible to bear.

But this — that, fresh from last night's pledge renewed

Of love with the successful gallant there,
She calmly bids me help her to entice,
Inveigle an unconscious trusting youth Who thinks her all that's chaste and good and pure,

— Invites me to betray him . . . who so
fit

As honour's self to cover shame's arch-
deed?

— That she'll receive Lord Mertoun — (her own phrase) —

This, who could bear? Why, you have heard of thieves,

Stabbers, the earth's disgrace, who yet have laughed,

"Talk not to me of torture — I'll betray "No comrade I've pledged faith to!" — you have heard

Of wretched women — all but Mildreds — tied

By wild illicit ties to losels vile You'd tempt them to forsake; and they'll

reply

"Gold, friends, repute, I left for him, I find
"In him, why should I leave him then for gold,

"Repute or friends?" — and you have felt your heart

Respond to such poor outcasts of the world
As to so many friends; bad as you please,

You've felt they were God's men and women still,

So, not to be disowned by you. But she
That stands there, calmly gives her lover up
As means to wed the Earl that she may hide Their intercourse the surelier: and, for
this,

I curse her to her face before you all.
Shame hunt her from the earth! Then Heaven do right

To both! It hears me now — shall judge her then! [As MILDRED faints and falls,

TRESHAM rushes out.

Austin. Stay, Tresham, we'll accompany you!

Guendolen. We?

What, and leave Mildred? We? Why, where's my place

But by her side, and where yours but by mine?

Mildred — one word! Only look at me, then!

Austin. No, Guendolen! I echo Thorold's voice.

She is unworthy to behold . . .
Guendolen. Us two?

If you spoke on reflection, and if I approved your speech — if you (to put the thing

At lowest) you the soldier, bound to make The king's cause yours and fight for it, and throw

Regard to others of its right or wrong,
— If with a death-white woman you can help,

Let alone sister, let alone a Mildred, You left her — or if I, her cousin, friend This morning, playfellow but yesterday, Who said, or thought at least a thousand times,

"I'd serve you if I could," should now face round

And say, "Ah, that's to only signify
"I'd serve you while you're fit to serve yourself:

"So long as fifty eyes await the turn
"Of yours to forestall its yet half-formed wish,

"I'll proffer my assistance you'll not need —

"When every tongue is praising you, I'll join

"The praisers' chorus — when you're hemmed about

"With lives between you and detraction — lives

"To be laid down if a rude voice, rash eye,
"Rough hand should violate the sacred ring

"Their worship throws about you, — then indeed,

"Who'll stand up for you stout as I?"
If so

We said, and so we did, — not Mildred there

Would be unworthy to behold us both,
But we should be unworthy, both of us,
To be beheld by — by — your meanest dog,
Which, if that sword were broken in your face

Before a crowd, that badge torn off your breast,

And you cast out with hooting and contempt,

— Would push his way thro' all the hooters, gain

Your side, go off with you and all your shame

To the next ditch you choose to die in!
Austin,

Do you love me? Here's Austin, Mildred, — here's

Your brother says he does not believe half — No, nor half that — of all he heard! He 40
says,

Look up and take his hand!

Austin. Look up and take My hand, dear Mildred!

Mildred. I — I was so young!
Beside, I loved him, Thorold — and I had No mother; God forgot me: so, I fell.

Guendolen. Mildred!

Mildred. Require no further!
Did I dream

That I could palliate what is done? All's true.

Now, punish me! A woman takes my hand?

Let go my hand! You do not know, I see. I thought that Thorold told you.

Guendolen. What is this?

Where start you to? 50

Mildred. Oh, Austin, loosen me! You heard the whole of it — your eyes were worse,

In their surprise, than Thorold's! Oh, unless

You stay to execute his sentence, loose My hand! Has Thorold gone, and are you here?

Guendolen. Here, Mildred, we two friends of yours will wait

Your bidding; be you silent, sleep or muse!

Only, when you shall want your bidding done,

How can we do it if we are not by?

Here's Austin waiting patiently your will! One spirit to command, and one to love 60

And to believe in it and do its best,
Poor as that is, to help it — why, the world

Has been won many a time, its length and breadth,

By just such a beginning!

Mildred. I believe
If once I threw my arms about your neck

And sunk my head upon your breast, that I Should weep again.

Guendolen. Let go her hand now, Austin!

Wait for me. Pace the gallery and think On the world's seemings and realities,

Until I call you. [AUSTIN goes. 70
Mildred. No — I cannot weep.

No more tears from this brain — no sleep — no tears!

O Guendolen, I love you!
Guendolen. Yes: and "love"

Is a short word that says so very much! It says that you confide in me.

Mildred. Confide!
Guendolen. Your lover's name, then!

I've so much to learn,
Ere I can work in your behalf!

Mildred. My friend

You know I cannot tell his name.

Guendolen. At least
He is your lover? and you love him too?
Mildred. Ah, do you ask me that? — but I am fallen

So low!

Guendolen. You love him still, then?
Mildred. My sole prop
Against the guilt that crushes me! I say, Each night ere I lie down, "I was so young —

"I had no mother, and I loved him so!"
And then God seems indulgent, and I dare
Trust him my soul in sleep.

Guendolen. How could you let us
10 E'en talk to you about Lord Mertoun
then?

Mildred. There is a cloud around me.
Guendolen. But you said
You would receive his suit in spite of this?

Mildred. I say there is a cloud . . .
Guendolen. No cloud to me!

Lord Mertoun and your lover are the same!
Mildred. What maddest fancy . . .

Guendolen [calling aloud]. Austin!
(spare your pains —

When I have got a truth, that truth I keep) —

Mildred. By all you love, sweet Guen-dolen, forbear!

Have I confided in you . . .
Guendolen. Just for this!

Austin! — Oh, not to guess it at the first!
20 But I did guess it — that is, I divined,
Felt by an instinct how it was: why else Should I pronounce you free from all that heap

Of sins which had been irredeemable?
I felt they were not yours — what other
way

Than this, not yours? The secret's wholly mine!

Mildred. If you would see me die before his face . . .

Guendolen. I'd hold my peace! And if the Earl returns

To-night?

Mildred. Ah Heaven, he's lost!

Guendolen. I thought so. Austin!

Enter AUSTIN.

Oh, where have you been hiding?

Austin. Thorold's gone,
30 I know not how, across the meadow-land.
I watched him till I lost him in the skirts
O' the beech-wood.

Guendolen. Gone? All thwarts us.
Mildred. Thorold too?

Guendolen. I have thought. First lead this Mildred to her room.

Go on the other side; and then we'll seek Your brother: and I'll tell you, by the
way,

The greatest comfort in the world. You
said

There was a clue to all. Remember,
Sweet,

He said there was a clue! I hold it.
Come!

ACT III.

SCENE I. — The end of the Yew-tree Avenue under MILDRED'S window. A light seen through a central red pane.

Enter TRESHAM through the trees.

Again here! But I cannot lose myself.
The heath — the orchard — I have traversed glades

And dells and bosky paths which used to lead

Into green wild-wood depths, bewildering
My boy's adventurous step. And now they tend

Hither or soon or late; the blackest shade Breaks up, the thronged trunks of the trees
ope wide,

And the dim turret I have fled from, fronts Again my step; the very river put

Its arm about me and conducted me
To this detested spot. Why then, I'll shun

Their will no longer: do your will with me!
Oh, bitter! To have reared a towering scheme

Of happiness, and to behold it razed,
Were nothing: all men hope, and see their hopes

Frustrate, and grieve awhile, and hope anew.

But I . . . to hope that from a line like
ours

No horrid prodigy like this would spring, Were just as though I hoped that from these old

Confederates against the sovereign day,
Children of older and yet older sires,

Whose living coral berries dropped, as now
On me, on many a baron's surcoat once,

On many a beauty's whimple — would proceed

No poison-tree, to thrust, from hell its root,
Hither and thither its strange snaky arms.

Why came I here. What must I do?
[A bell strikes.] A bell?

Midnight! and 'tis at midnight . . . Ah,
I catch

— Woods, river, plains, I catch your meaning now,

And I obey you! Hist! This tree will serve.

[*He retires behind one of the trees.
After a pause, enter MERTOUN cloaked as before.*

Mertoun. Not time! Beat out thy last voluptuous beat

Of hope and fear, my heart! I thought the clock
I' the chapel struck as I was pushing
through

The ferns. And so I shall no more see rise
My love-star! Oh, no matter for the past!
So much the more delicious task to watch Mildred revive: to pluck out, thorn by thorn,

All traces of the rough forbidden path
My rash love lured her to! Each day must see
Some fear of hers effaced, some hope
renewed:

Then there will be surprises, unforeseen Delights in store. I'll not regret the past.
[The light is placed above in the purple pane.]

And see, my signal rises, Mildred's star!
I never saw it lovelier than now

It rises for the last time. If it sets,
'Tis that the re-assuring sun may dawn.

[As he prepares to ascend the last tree of the avenue, TRESHAM arrests his arm.]

Unhand me — peasant, by your grasp!
Here's gold.

'Twas a mad freak of mine. I said I'd pluck

A branch from the white-blossomed shrub
beneath

The casement there. Take this, and hold your peace.

Tresham. Into the moonlight yonder, come with me!

Out of the shadow!

Mertoun. I am armed, fool!

Tresham. Yes,
Or no? You'll come into the light, or no?

My hand is on your throat — refuse! —

Mertoun. That voice!

Where have I heard . . . no — that was mild and slow.

I'll come with you. [They advance.]

Tresham. You're armed: that's well.
Declare

Your name: who are you?

Mertoun. [Tresham! — she is lost!]

Tresham. Oh, silent? Do you know, you bear yourself

Exactly as, in curious dreams I've had
How felons, this wild earth is full of, look

When they're detected, still your kind has looked!

The bravo holds an assured countenance,
The thief is voluble and plausible,

But silently the slave of lust has crouched
When I have fancied it before a man.

Your name!

Mertoun. I do conjure Lord Tresham —
ay,

Kissing his foot, if so I might prevail —
That he for his own sake forbear to ask

My name! As heaven's above, his future weal

Or woe depends upon my silence! Vain!
I read your white inexorable face.

40

Know me, Lord Tresham!

[He throws off his disguises.]
Tresham. Mertoun!

[After a pause.] Draw now!

Mertoun. Hear me

But speak first!

Tresham. Not one least word on your
life!

Be sure that I will strangle in your throat
The least word that informs me how you
live

And yet seem what you seem! No doubt
'twas you

Taught Mildred still to keep that face and sin.

We should join hands in frantic sympathy
If you once taught me the unteachable,

Explained how you can live so, and so lie.
With God's help I retain, despite my sense, 50

The old belief — a life like yours is still Impossible. Now draw!

Mertoun. Not for my sake,
Do I entreat a hearing — for your sake,
And most, for her sake!

Tresham. Ha ha, what should I Know of your ways? A miscreant like
yourself,

How must one rouse his ire? A blow? — that's pride

No doubt, to him! One spurns him, does one not?

Or sets the foot upon his mouth, or spits Into his face! Come! Which, or all of these?

Mertoun. 'Twixt him and me and Mil- 60
dred, Heaven be judge!

Can I avoid this? Have your will, my
lord!

[He draws and, after a few passes, falls.]
Tresham. You are not hurt?

Mertoun. You'll hear me now!

Tresham. But rise!

Mertoun. Ah, Tresham, say I not
"you'll hear me now!"

And what procures a man the right to speak
In his defence before his fellow man,

But — I suppose — the thought that presently

He may have leave to speak before his God
His whole defence?

Tresham. Not hurt? It cannot be!

You made no effort to resist me. Where Did my sword reach you? Why not have 70

returned
My thrusts? Hurt where?

Mertoun. My lord —

Tresham. How young he is!

Mertoun. Lord Tresham, I am very young, and yet

I have entangled other lives with mine.
Do let me speak, and do believe my speech!
That when I die before you presently, —

Tresham. Can you stay here till I return with help?

Mertoun. Oh, stay by me! When I was less than boy

I did you grievous wrong and knew it not — Upon my honour, knew it not! Once known,

I could not find what seemed a better way To right you than I took: 'my life — you feel

How less than nothing were the giving you The life you've taken! But I thought my way

The better — only for your sake and hers:

10 And as you have decided otherwise, Would I had an infinity of lives

To offer you! Now say — instruct me — think!

Can you, from the brief minutes I have left, Eke out my reparation? Oh think — think!

For I must wring a partial — dare I say, Forgiveness from you, ere I die?

Tresham. I do Forgive you.

Mertoun. Wait and ponder that great word!

Because, if you forgive me, I shall hope To speak to you of — Mildred!

20 Tresham. Mertoun, haste And anger have undone us. 'Tis not you Should tell me for a novelty you're young, Thoughtless, unable to recall the past. Be but your pardon ample as my own!

Mertoun. Ah, Tresham, that a sword-stroke and a drop

Of blood or two, should bring all this about Why, 'twas my very fear of you, my love Of you — (what passion like a boy's for one

Like you?) — that ruined me! I dreamed of you —

30 You, all accomplished, courted everywhere, The scholar and the gentleman. I burned

To knit myself to you: but I was young, And your surpassing reputation kept me So far aloof! Oh, wherefore all that love? With less of love, my glorious yesterday Of praise and gentlest words and kindest looks,

Had taken place perchance six months ago. Even now, how happy we had been! And yet

I know the thought of this escaped you, Tresham!

Let me look up into your face; I feel 40 'Tis changed above me: yet my eyes are glazed.

Where? where?

[As he endeavours to raise himself, his eye catches the lamp.

Ah, Mildred! What will Mildred do?

Tresham, her life is bound up in the life That's bleeding fast away! I'll live — must live,

There, if you'll only turn me I shall live And save her! Tresham — oh, had you but heard!

Had you but heard! What right was yours to set

The thoughtless foot upon her life and mine,

And then say, as we perish, "Had I thought,

"All had gone otherwise"? We've sinned and die:

Never you sin, Lord Tresham! for you'll die,

And God will judge you.

Tresham. Yes, be satisfied! That process is begun.

Mertoun. And she sits there Waiting for me! Now, say you this to her —

You, not another — say, I saw him die As he breathed this, "I love her" — you don't know

What those three small words mean! Say, loving her

Lowers me down the bloody slope to death With memories . . . I speak to her, not you,

Who had no pity, will have no remorse, Perchance intend her . . . Die along with me,

Dear Mildred! 'tis so easy, and you'll 'scape

So much unkindness! Can I lie at rest, With rude speech spoken to you, ruder deeds

Done to you? — heartless men shall have my heart,

And I tied down with grave-clothes and the worm,

Aware, perhaps, of every blow — oh God! —

Upon those lips — yet of no power to tear The felon stripe by stripe! Die, Mildred!

Leave Their honourable world to them! For God

We're good enough, though the world casts us out. [A whistle is heard.

Tresham. Ho, Gerard!

Enter GERARD, AUSTIN and GUENDOLEN, with lights.

No one speak!

You see what's done.

I cannot bear another voice.

Mertoun. There's light — Light all about me, and I move to it.

Tresham, did I not tell you — did you not just promise to deliver words of mine

To Mildred?

Tresham. I will bear those words to her.
Mertoun. Now?

Tresham. Now. Lift you the body, and leave me
 The head.

[As they have half raised MERTOUN, he turns suddenly.]

Mertoun. I knew they turned me: turn me not from her!

There! stay you! there! [Dies.]

Guendolen [after a pause]. Austin, remain you here

With Thorold until Gerard comes with
 help:

Then lead him to his chamber. I must go
 To Mildred.

Tresham. Guendolen, I hear each word
 You utter. Did you hear him bid me give His message? Did you hear my promise?
 I,

And only I, see Mildred.

Guendolen. She will die.

Tresham. Oh no, she will not die! I dare not hope

She'll die. What ground have you to think she'll die?

Why, Austin's with you!

Austin. Had we but arrived
 Before you fought!

Tresham. There was no fight at all.
 He let me slaughter him — the boy! I'll trust

The body there to you and Gerard — thus!
 Now bear him on before me.

Austin. Whither bear him?

Tresham. Oh, to my chamber! When we meet there next,

We shall be friends.

[They bear out the body of MERTOUN.]

Will she die, Guendolen?

Guendolen. Where are you taking me?

Tresham. He fell just here.

Now answer me. Shall you in your whole
 life

— You who have nought to do with Mer-toun's fate,

Now you have seen his breast upon the turf,
 Shall you e'er walk this way if you can help?

When you and Austin wander arm-in-arm
 Through our ancestral grounds, will not a shade

Be ever on the meadow and the waste —
 Another kind of shade than when the night Shuts the woodside with all its whispers
 up?

But will you ever so forget his breast
 As carelessly to cross this bloody turf Under the black yew avenue? That's
 well!

You turn your head: and I then? —

Guendolen. What is done

Is done. My care is for the living.
 Thorold,

Bear up against this burden; more remains

To set the neck to!

Tresham. Dear and ancient trees
 My fathers planted, and I loved so well!
 What have I done that, like some fabled
 crime

Of yore, lets loose a Fury leading thus
 Her miserable dance amidst you all?

Oh, never more for me shall winds intone

With all your tops a vast antiphony, Demanding and responding in God's
 praise!

Hers ye are now, not mine! Farewell —
 farewell!

SCENE II. — MILDRED'S chamber.
 MILDRED alone.

He comes not! I have heard of those who seemed

Resourceless in prosperity, — you thought Sorrow might slay them when she listed;
 yet

Did they so gather up their diffused
 strength

At her first menace, that they bade her strike,

And stood and laughed her subtlest skill to

Oh, 'tis not so with me! The first woe
 fell,

And the rest fall upon it, not on me:
 Else should I bear that Henry comes not?

— fails

Just this first night out of so many nights?
 Loving is done with. Were he sitting now,

As so few hours since, on that seat, we'd
 love

No more — contrive no thousand happy
 ways

To hide love from the loveless, any more.
 I think I might have urged some little point

In my defence, to Thorold; he was breath-
 less

For the least hint of a defence: but no,
 The first shame over, all that would might
 fall.

No Henry! Yet I merely sit and think The morn's deed o'er and o'er. I must have crept

Out of myself. A Mildred that has lost
 Her lover — oh, I dare not look upon

Such woe! I crouch away from it! 'Tis
 she,

Mildred, will break her heart, not I!
 The world

Forsakes me: only Henry's left me —
 left?

When I have lost him, for he does not come, 70
 And I sit stupidly . . . Oh Heaven, break

up
 This worse than anguish, this mad apathy,
 By any means or any messenger!

- Tresham* [without]. Mildred!
Mildred. Come in!
 Heaven hears me!
 [Enter TRESHAM.] You? alone?
 Oh, no more cursing!
Tresham. Mildred, I must sit.
 There — you sit!
Mildred. Say it, Thorold — do not look
 The curse! deliver all you come to say!
 What must become of me? Oh, speak that thought
 Which makes your brow and cheeks so pale!
Tresham. My thought?
Mildred. All of it!
Tresham. How we waded years —
 ago —
 After those water-lilies, till the plash.
 I know not how, surprised us; and you
 dared Neither advance nor turn back: so, we stood
 Laughing and crying until Gerard came —
 Once safe upon the turf, the loudest too,
 For once more reaching the relinquished
 prize!
 How idle thoughts are, some men's, dying men's!
Mildred. —
Mildred. You call me kindlier by my
 name
 Than even yesterday: what is in that?
Tresham. It weighs so much upon my mind that I
 This morning took an office not my own!
 I might . . . of course, I must be glad or grieved,
 Content or not, at every little thing
 That touches you. I may with a wrung
 heart
 Even reprove you, Mildred; I did more:
 Will you forgive me?
Mildred. Thorold? do you mock?
 Or no . . . and yet you bid me . . . say that word!
Tresham. Forgive me, Mildred! — are you silent, Sweet?
Mildred [starting up]. Why does not Henry Mertoun come to-night?
 Are you, too, silent?
 [Dashing his mantle aside, and pointing to his scabbard, which is empty.
 Ah, this speaks for you!
 You've murdered Henry Mertoun! Now proceed!
 What is it I must pardon? This and all?
 Well, I do pardon you — I think I do.
 Thorold, how very wretched you must be!
Tresham. He bade me tell you . . .
Mildred. What I do forbid
 Your utterance of! So much that you may tell
 And will not — how you murdered him
 . . . but, no!
- You'll tell me that he loved me, never
 more Than bleeding out his life there: must I
 say
 "Indeed," to that? Enough! I pardon
 you.
Tresham. You cannot, Mildred! for the harsh words, yes;
 Of this last deed Another's judge: whose doom
 I wait in doubt, despondency and fear.
Mildred. Oh, true! There's nought for me to pardon! True!
 You loose my soul of all its cares at once.
 Death makes me sure of him for ever!
 You
 Tell me his last words? He shall tell me
 them,
 And take my answer — not in words, but reading
 Himself the heart I had to read him late,
 Which death . . .
Tresham. Death? You are dying too? Well said
 Of Guendolen! I dared not hope you'd die:
 But she was sure of it.
Mildred. Tell Guendolen
 I loved her, and tell Austin . . .
Tresham. Him you loved:
 And me?
Mildred. Ah, Thorold! Was't not rashly done
 To quench that blood, on fire with youth and hope
 And love of me — whom you loved too, and yet
 Suffered to sit here waiting his approach While you were slaying him? Oh, doubt-
 lessly
 You let him speak his poor confused boy's-
 speech
 — Do his poor utmost to disarm your wrath
 And respite me! — you let him try to give
 The story of our love and ignorance,
 And the brief madness and the long despair —
 You let him plead all this, because your code
 Of honour bids you hear before you
 strike:
 But at the end, as he looked up for life
 Into your eyes — you struck him down!
Tresham. No! No!
 Had I but heard him — had I let him speak Half the truth — less — had I looked long
 on him
 I had desisted! Why, as he lay there,
 The moon on his flushed cheek, I gathered
 all
 The story ere he told it: I saw through
 The troubled surface of his crime and yours
 A depth of purity immovable,

Had I but glanced, where all seemed turbidest

Had gleamed some inlet to the calm beneath;

I would not glance: my punishment's at
hand.

There, Mildred, is the truth! and you — say on —

You curse me?

Mildred. As I dare approach that
Heaven

Which has not bade a living thing despair,
Which needs no code to keep its grace from stain,

But bids the vilest worm that turns on it Desist and be forgiven, — I — forgive not,

But bless you, Thorold, from my soul of souls! [Falls on his neck.]

There! Do not think too much upon the past!

The cloud that's broke was all the same a cloud

While it stood up between my friend and
you;

You hurt him 'neath its shadow: but is
that

So past retrieve? I have his heart, you
know;

I may dispose of it: I give it you!

It loves you as mine loves! Confirm me,
Henry! [Dies.]

Tresham. I wish thee joy, Beloved! I am glad

In thy full gladness!

Guendolen [without]. Mildred! Tresh-
am!

[Entering with AUSTIN.] Thorold,
I could desist no longer. Ah, she swoons!

That's well.

Tresham. Oh, better far than that!

Guendolen. She's dead!
Let me unlock her arms!

Tresham. She threw them thus About my neck, and blessed me, and then
died:

You'll let them stay now, Guendolen!

Austin. Leave her
And look to him! What ails you, Thor-
old?

Guendolen. White

As she, and whiter! Austin! quick — this side!

Austin. A froth is oozing through his clenched teeth;

Both lips, where they're not bitten through,
are black:

Speak, dearest Thorold!

Tresham. Something does weigh down

My neck beside her weight: thanks: I 30 should fall

But for you, Austin, I believe! — there,
there,

'Twill pass away soon! — ah, — I had forgotten:

I am dying.

Guendolen. Thorold — Thorold — why was this?

Tresham. I said, just as I drank the poison off,

The earth would be no longer earth to
me,

The life out of all life was gone from
me.

There are blind ways provided, the fore-
done

Heart-weary player in this pageant-world Drops out by, letting the main masque
defile

By the conspicuous portal: I am through — 40
Just through!

Guendolen. Don't leave him, Austin!
Death is close.

Tresham. Already Mildred's face is peacefuller.

I see you, Austin — feel you: here's my
hand,

Put yours in it — you, Guendolen, yours
too!

You're lord and lady now — you're Treshams; name

And fame are yours: you hold our
'scutcheon up.

Austin, no blot on it! You see how blood Must wash one blot away: the first blot
came

And the first blood came. To the vain world's eye

All's gules again: no care to the vain 50
world,

From whence the red was drawn!

Austin. No blot shall come!

Tresham. I said that: yet it did come.
Should it come,

Vengeance is God's, not man's. Remember me! [Dies.]

Guendolen [letting fall the pulseless arm].
Ah, Thorold, we can but — remember
you!

COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY;

A PLAY.

1844.

NO ONE LOVES AND HONOURS BARRY CORNWALL MORE THAN DOES ROBERT BROWNING;

WHO, HAVING NOTHING BETTER THAN THIS PLAY
TO GIVE HIM IN PROOF OF IT, MUST SAY SO.

LONDON: 1844.

COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY.

Ivy and violet, what do ye here
With blossom and shoot in the warm spring-weather,
Hiding the arms of Monchenci and Vere?
— Hanmer.

PERSONS.

COLOMBE OF RAVESTEIN, Duchess of Juliers and Cleves.
SABYNE, ADOLF, her attendants.
GUIBERT, GAUCELME, MAUFROY, CLU-GNET, courtiers.
VALENCE, advocate of Cleves.
PRINCE BERTHOLD, claimant of the Duchy.
MELCHIOR, his confidant.

PLACE. — The Palace at Juliers.

TIME, 16—.

ACT I.

MORNING.

SCENE. — A corridor leading to the Audience-chamber.

GAUCELME, CLUGNET, MAUFROY and other Courtiers, round GUIBERT, who is silently reading a paper: as he drops it at the end —

Guibert. That this should be her birthday; and the day
We all invested her, twelve months ago,
As the late Duke's true heiress and our
liege;
And that this also must become the day ...
Oh, miserable lady!

1st Courtier. Ay, indeed?

2nd Courtier. Well, Guibert?

3rd Courtier. But your news my friend, your news!
The sooner, friend, one learns Prince
Berthold's pleasure,
The better for us all: how writes the Prince?
Give me! I'll read it for the common
good.

Guibert. In time, sir, — but till time comes, pardon me!
Our old Duke just disclosed his child's retreat,
Declared her true succession to his rule,
And died: this birthday was the day, last
year,
We convoyed her from Castle Ravestein —
That sleeps out trustfully its extreme age
On the Meuse' quiet bank, where she lived — queen

Over the water-buds, — to Juliers' court With joy and bustle. Here again we
stand;

Sir Gaucelme's buckle's constant to his cap:

To-day's much such another sunny day! 20

Gaucelme. Come, Guibert, this out-grows a jest, I think!

You're hardly such a novice as to need
The lesson, you pretend.

Guibert. What lesson, sir?
That everybody, if he'd thrive at court,
Should, first and last of all, look to himself?
Why, no: and therefore with your good example,
(— Ho, Master Adolf!) — to myself I'll
look.

Enter ADOLF.

Guibert. The Prince's letter; why, of all men else,

Comes it to me?

Adolf. By virtue of your place,
Sir Guibert! 'Twas the Prince's express 30
charge,

His envoy told us, that the missive there Should only reach our lady by the hand
Of whosoever held your place.

Guibert.

Enough!

[ADOLF retires.]

Then, gentles, who'll accept a certain poor
Indifferently honourable place,
My friends, I make no doubt, have gnashed their teeth
At leisure minutes these half-dozen years,
To find me never in the mood to quit?
Who asks may have it, with my blessing,
and —

10 This to present our lady. Who'll accept?
You, — you, — you? There it lies, and may, for me!

Mausfroy [a youth, picking up the paper,
reads aloud]. "Prince Berthold, proved by titles following

"Undoubted Lord of Juliers, comes this day
"To claim his own, with licence from the Pope,

"The Emperor, the Kings of Spain and France"

Gaucelme. Sufficient "titles following,"
I judge!

Don't read another! Well, — "to claim
his own?"

Mausfroy. "— And take possession of the Duchy held

"Since twelve months, to the true heir's prejudice,

20 "By" . . . Colombe, Juliers' mistress, so she thinks,

And Ravestein's mere lady, as we find.
Who wants the place and paper? Gui- bert's right.

I hope to climb a little in the world, —
I'd push my fortunes, — but, no more than he,

Could tell her on this happy day of days,
That, save the nosegay in her hand, perhaps,

There's nothing left to call her own. Sir
Clugnet,

You famish for promotion; what say you?

Clugnet [an old man]. To give this letter were a sort, I take it,

30 Of service: services ask recompense:
What kind of corner may be Ravestein?

Guibert. The castle? Oh, you'd share her fortunes? Good!

Three walls stand upright, full as good as four,

With no such bad remainder of a roof.

Clugnet. Oh, — but the town?

Guibert. Five houses, fifteen huts;

A church whereto was once a spire, 'tis
judged;

And half a dyke, except in time of thaw.

Clugnet. Still, there's some revenue?

Guibert. Else Heaven forfend!

You hang a beacon out, should fogs increase;

So, when the Autumn floats of pine-wood 40 steer

Safe 'mid the white confusion, thanks to
you,

Their grateful raftsmen flings a guilder in;
— That's if he mean to pass your way next
time.

Clugnet. If not?

Guibert. Hang guilders, then! He blesses you.

Clugnet. What man do you suppose me? Keep your paper!

And, let me say, it shows no handsome spirit

To dally with misfortune: keep your
place!

Gaucelme. Some one must tell her.

Guibert. Some one may: you may!

Gaucelme. Sir Guibert, 'tis no trifle turns me sick

Of court-hypocrisy at years like mine, 50
But this goes near it. Where's there news at all?

Who'll have the face, for instance, to affirm
He never heard, e'en while we crowned the girl,

That Juliers' tenure was by Salic law;
That one, confessed her father's cousin's
child,

And, she away, indisputable heir,
Against our choice protesting and the

Duke's,
Claimed Juliers? — nor, as he preferred
his claim,

That first this, then another potentate,
Inclined to its allowance? — I or you, 60

Or any one except the lady's self?

Oh, it had been the direst cruelty
To break the business to her! Things might change:

At all events, we'd see next masque at end,
Next mummary over first: and so the edge

Was taken off sharp tidings as they came,
Till here's the Prince upon us, and there's

she — Wreathing her hair, a song between her

lips,

With just the faintest notion possible
That some such claimant earns a livelihood 70

About the world, by feigning grievances —
Few pay the story of, but grudge its price,

And fewer listen to, a second time.
Your method proves a failure; now try

mine!

And, since this must be carried . . .
Guibert [snatching the paper from him].

By your leave!

Your zeal transports you! 'Twill not serve the Prince

So much as you expect, this course you'd
take.

If she leaves quietly her palace, — well;
But if she died upon its threshold, — no:

He'd have the trouble of removing her. 80

Come, gentles, we're all — what the devil knows!

You, Gaucelme, won't lose character, beside:

You broke your father's heart superiorly
To gather his succession — never blush!
You're from my province, and, be comforted,

They tell of it with wonder to this day.
You can afford to let your talent sleep.
We'll take the very worst supposed, as true:

There, the old Duke knew, when he hid his child

10 Among the river-flowers at Ravestein,
With whom the right lay! Call the Prince our Duke!

There, she's no Duchess, she's no anything

More than a young maid with the bluest eyes:

And now, sirs, we'll not break this young maid's heart

Coolly as Gaucelme could and would!
No haste!

His talent's full-blown, ours but in the bud:
We'll not advance to his perfection yet —
Will we, Sir Maufroy? See, I've ruined Maufroy

For ever as a courtier!

Gaucelme. Here's a coil!

20 And, count us, will you? Count its residue,
This boasted convoy, this day last year's crowd!

A birthday, too, a gratulation day!

I'm dumb: bid that keep silence!

Maufroy and others. Eh, Sir Guibert?
He's right: that does say something: that's bare truth.

Ten — twelve, I make: a perilous dropping off!

Guibert. Pooh — is it audience hour?
The vestibule

Swarms too, I wager, with the common sort
That want our privilege of entry here.

Gaucelme. Adolf! [Re-enter ADOLF.]
Who's outside?

Guibert. Oh, your looks suffice!

30 Nobody waiting?

Maufroy [looking through the door-folds].
Scarce our number!

Guibert. 'Sdeath!

Nothing to beg for, to complain about?
It can't be! Ill news spreads, but not so fast

As thus to frighten all the world!

Gaucelme. The world
Lives out of doors, sir — not with you and me

By presence-chamber porches, state-room stairs,

Wherever warmth's perpetual: outside's free

To every wind from every compass-point,

And who may get nipped needs be weather-wise.

The Prince comes and the lady's People go;
The snow-goose settles down, the swallows flee —

Why should they wait for winter-time?
'Tis instinct.

Don't you feel somewhat chilly?

Guibert. That's their craft?

And last year's crowders-round and criers-forth

That strewed the garlands, overarched the roads,

Lighted the bonfires, sang the loyal songs!
Well, 'tis my comfort, you could never call me

The People's Friend! The People keep their word —

I keep my place: don't doubt I'll entertain
The People when the Prince comes, and the People

Are talked of! Then, their speeches — 50 no one tongue

Found respite, not a pen had holiday
For they wrote, too, as well as spoke, these knaves!

Now see: we tax and tithe them, pill and poll,

They wince and fret enough, but pay they must

— We manage that, — so, pay with a good grace

They might as well, it costs so little more.
But when we've done with taxes, meet folk next

Outside the toll-booth and the rating-place,
In public — there they have us if they will, 60
We're at their mercy after that, you see!

For one tax not ten devils could extort —
Over and above necessity, a grace;

This prompt disbosoming of love, to wit —
Their vine-leaf wrappage of our tribute penny,

And crowding attestation, all works well.
Yet this precisely do they thrust on us!

These cappings quick, these crook-and-cringings low,

Hand to the heart, and forehead to the knee,

With grin that shuts the eyes and opes the mouth —

So tender they their love; and, tender 70
made,

Go home to curse us, the first doit we ask.
As if their souls were any longer theirs!

As if they had not given ample warrant
To who should clap a collar on their neck,

Rings in their nose, a goad to either flank,
And take them for the brute they boast themselves!

Stay — there's a bustle at the outer door —
And somebody entreating . . . that's my name!

Adolf, — I heard my name!

Adolf.

'Twas probably

The suitor.

Guibert. Oh, there is one?

Adolf. With a suit

He'd fain enforce in person.

Guibert. The good heart — And the great fool! Just ope the mid-door's fold!

Is that a lappet of his cloak, I see?

Adolf. If it bear plenteous sign of travel

... ay,

The very cloak my comrades tore!

Guibert. Why tore?

Adolf. He seeks the Duchess' presence in that trim:

Since daybreak, was he posted hereabouts to Lest he should miss the moment.

Guibert. Where's he now?

Adolf. Gone for a minute possibly, not more:

They have ado enough to thrust him back.

Guibert. Ay — but my name, I caught?

Adolf. Oh, sir — he said

— What was it? — You had known him formerly,

And, he believed, would help him did you guess

He waited now; you promised him as much:

The old plea! 'Faith, he's back, — renews the charge!

[Speaking at the door.] So long as the man parleys, peace outside —

Nor be too ready with your halberts, there!

to Gaucelme. My horse bespattered, as he blocked the path,

A thin sour man, not unlike somebody.

Adolf. He holds a paper in his breast, whereon

He glances when his cheeks flush and his brow

At each repulse —

Gaucelme. I noticed he'd a brow.

Adolf. So glancing, he grows calmer, leans awhile

Over the balustrade, adjusts his dress,

And presently turns round, quiet again,

With some new pretext for admittance. — Back!

[To GUIBERT.] — Sir, he has seen you!

Now cross halberts! Ha —

30 Pascal is prostrate — there lies Fabian too! No passage! Whither would the madman press?

Close the doors quick on me!

Guibert. Too late! He's here.

Enter, hastily and with discomposed dress,

VALENCE.

Valence. Sir Guibert, will you help me? — me, that come

Charged by your townsmen, all who starve at Cleves,

To represent their heights and depths of woe

Before our Duchess and obtain relief!

Such errands barricade such doors, it seems:

But not a common hindrance drives me back

On all the sad yet hopeful faces, lit With hope for the first time, which sent me 40 forth.

Cleves, speak for me! Cleves' men and women, speak!

Who followed me — your strongest — many a mile

That I might go the fresher from their ranks,

— Who sit — your weakest — by the city gates,

To take me fuller of what news I bring

As I return — for I must needs return!

— Can I? 'Twere hard, no listener for their wrongs,

To turn them back upon the old despair —

Harder, Sir Guibert, than imploring thus — So, I do — any way you please — implore! 50

If you . . . but how should you remember Cleves?

Yet they of Cleves remember you so well!

Ay, comment on each trait of you they keep,

Your words and deeds caught up at second hand, —

Proud, I believe, at bottom of their hearts,

O, the very levity and recklessness

Which only prove that you forget their wrongs.

Cleves, the grand town, whose men and women starve,

Is Cleves forgotten? Then, remember me!

You promised me that you would help me 60 once,

For other purpose: will you keep your word?

Guibert. And who may you be, friend?

Valence. Valence of Cleves.

Guibert. Valence of . . . not the advocate of Cleves,

I owed my whole estate to, three years back?

Ay, well may you keep silence! Why, my lords,

You've heard, I'm sure, how, Pentecost three years,

I was so nearly ousted of my land

By some knave's-pretext — (eh? when you refused me

Your ugly daughter, Clugnet!) — and you've heard

How I recovered it by miracle

— (When I refused her!) Here's the very friend, 70

— Valence of Cleves, all parties have to thank!

Nay, Valence, this procedure's vile in you!

I'm no more grateful than a courtier should,
But politic am I — I bear a brain,
Can cast about a little, might require
Your services a second time. I tried To tempt you with advancement here to court

— "No!" — well, for curiosity at least
To view our life here — "No!" — our Duchess, then, —

A pretty woman's worth some pains to see,
Nor is she spoiled, I take it, if a crown

10 Complete the forehead pale and tresses
pure . . .

Valence. Our city trusted me its miseries,
And I am come.

Guibert. So much for taste! But
"come," —

So may you be, for anything I know,
To beg the Pope's cross, or Sir Clugnet's daughter,

And with an equal chance you get all three.
If it was ever worth your while to come,
Was not the proper way worth finding too?

Valence. Straight to the palace-portal, sir, I came —

Guibert. — And said? —

Valence. — That I had brought the miseries

20 Of a whole city to relieve.

Guibert. — Which saying Won your admittance? You saw me,
indeed,

And here, no doubt, you stand: as certainly,

My intervention, I shall not dispute,
Procures you audience; which, if I procure, —

That paper's closely written — by Saint Paul,

Here flock the Wrongs, follow the Remedies,

Chapter and verse, One, Two, A, B and C!
Perhaps you'd enter, make a reverence,
And launch these "miseries" from first to
last?

30 Valence. How should they let me pause or turn aside?

Gaucelme [to Valence]. My worthy sir, one question! You've come straight From Cleves, you tell us: heard you any talk

At Cleves about our lady?

Valence. Much.

Gaucelme. And what?

Valence. Her wish was to redress all wrongs she knew.

Gaucelme. That, you believed?

Valence. You see me, sir!

Gaucelme. — Nor stopped
Upon the road from Cleves to Juliers here,
For any — rumours you might find afloat?

Valence. I had my townsmen's wrongs to busy me.

Gaucelme. This is the lady's birthday, do you know?

— Her day of pleasure?

Valence. — That the great, I know,
For pleasure born, should still be on the
watch

To exclude pleasure when a duty offers:
Even as, for duty born, the lowly too

May ever snatch a pleasure if in reach:
Both will have plenty of their birthright,
sir!

Gaucelme [aside to Guibert]. Sir Guibert, here's your man! No scruples
now —

You'll never find his like! Time presses hard.

I've seen your drift and Adolf's too, this
while,

But you can't keep the hour of audience
back

Much longer, and at noon the Prince arrives.

[Pointing to Valence.] Entrust him with it — fool no chance away!

Guibert. Him?

Gaucelme. — With the missive! What's the man to her?

Guibert. No bad thought! Yet, 'tis yours, who ever played

The tempting serpent: else 'twere no bad
thought!

I should — and do — mistrust it for your
sake,

Or else . . .

Enter an Official who communicates with ADOLF.

Adolf. The Duchess will receive the court.

Guibert. Give us a moment, Adolf!
Valence, friend,

I'll help you. We of the service, you're to mark,

Have special entry, while the herd . . .
the folk

Outside, get access through our help
alone;

— Well, it is so, was so, and I suppose
So ever will be: your natural lot is, therefore,

To wait your turn and opportunity,
And probably miss both. Now, I engage
To set you, here and in a minute's space,
Before the lady, with full leave to plead
Chapter and verse, and A, and B, and C,
To heart's content.

Valence. I grieve that I must ask, —
This being, yourself admit, the custom
here, —

To what the price of such a favour mounts?

Guibert. Just so! You're not without a courtier's tact.

Little at court, as your quick instinct prompts,
Do such as we without a recompense.
Valence. Yours is? — Guibert. A trifle: here's a document
'Tis some one's duty to present her
Grace —
I say, not mine — these say, not theirs — such points
Have weight at court. Will you relieve us all
And take it? Just say, "I am bidden lay "This paper at the Duchess' feet!"
Valence. No more?
I thank you, sir!
Adolf. Her Grace receives the court, Guibert [aside]. Now, sursum corda.
quothe the mass-priest! Do — Whoever's my kind saint, do let alone
These pushings to and fro, and pullings
back;
Peaceably let me hang o' the devil's arm
The downward path, if you can't pluck me off Completely! Let me live quite his, or
yours!
[The Courtiers begin to range themselves, and move toward the door.]
After me, Valence! So, our famous Cleves Lacks bread? Yet don't we gallants buy their lace?
And dear enough — it beggars me, I know,
To keep my very gloves fringed properly.
This, Valence, is our Great State Hall you
cross;
Yon grey urn's veritable marcasite,
The Pope's gift: and those salvers testify
The Emperor. Presently you'll set your foot
... But you don't speak, friend Valence!
Valence. I shall speak.
Gaucelme [aside to GUIBERT]. Guibert
— it were no such ungraceful thing
If you and I, at first, seemed horror-struck With the bad news. Look here, what you shall do.
Suppose you, first, clap hand to sword and
cry
"Yield strangers our allegiance? First I'll perish
"Beside your Grace!" — and so give me
the cue
To ...
Guibert. — Clap your hand to notebook and jot down
That to regale the Prince with? I conceive.
[To VALENCE.] Do, Valence, speak, or I shall half suspect
You're plotting to supplant us, me the first I' the lady's favour! Is't the grand harangue
You mean to make, that thus engrosses
you?

— Which of her virtues you'll apostrophise?

Or is't the fashion you aspire to start,
Of that close-curved, not unbecoming
hair?

Or what else ponder you? 40

Valence. My townsmen's wrongs.

ACT II.

NOON.

SCENE. — The Presence-chamber.The DUCHESS and SABYNE.

The Duchess. Announce that I am ready for the court!

Sabyne. 'Tis scarcely audience-hour, I think; your Grace
May best consult your own relief, no doubt,
And shun the crowd: but few can have arrived.

The Duchess. Let those not yet arrived, then, keep away!

'Twas me, this day last year at Ravestein,
You hurried. It has been full time, be-
side,

This half-hour. Do you hesitate?

Sabyne. Forgive me!

The Duchess. Stay, Sabyne; let me hasten to make sure

Of one true thanker: here with you begins 50

My audience, claim you first its privilege!
It is my birth's event they celebrate:

You need not wish me more such happy
days,

But — ask some favour! Have you none
to ask?

Has Adolf none, then? this was far from
least

Of much I waited for impatiently, Assure yourself! It seemed so natural

Your gift, beside this bunch of river-bells,
Should be the power and leave of doing

good
To you, and greater pleasure to myself. 60

You ask my leave to-day to marry Adolf?
The rest is my concern.

Sabyne. Your Grace is ever
Our lady of dear Ravestein, — but, for Adolf ...

The Duchess. "But"? You have not, sure, changed in your regard

And purpose towards him?
Sabyne. We change?

The Duchess. Well then? Well?
Sabyne. How could we two be happy, and, most like,

Leave Juliers, when — when ... but
'tis audience-time!

The Duchess. "When, if you left me, I were left indeed!"

Would you subjoin that? — Bid the court approach!

— Why should we play thus with each other, Sabyne?

Do I not know, if courtiers prove remiss, If friends detain me, and get blame for it, There is a cause? Of last year's fervid throng

Scarce one half comes now.

Sabyne [aside]. One half? No, alas!

The Duchess. So can the mere suspicion of a cloud

Over my fortunes, strike each loyal heart. They've heard of this Prince Berthold; and, forsooth, 10 Some foolish arrogant pretence he makes, May grow more foolish and more arrogant, They please to apprehend! I thank their love.

Admit them!

Sabyne [aside]. How much has she really learned?

The Duchess. Surely, whoever's absent, Tristan waits?

— Or at least Romuald, whom my father raised

From nothing — come, he's faithful to me, come!

(Sabyne, I should but be the prouder — yes,

The fitter to comport myself aright)

Not Romuald? Xavier — what said he to that?

20 For Xavier hates a parasite, I know!

[SABYNE goes out.]

The Duchess. Well, sunshine's everywhere, and summer too.

Next year 'tis the old place again, perhaps —

The water-breeze again, the birds again. — It cannot be! It is too late to be!

What part had I, or choice in all of it?

Hither they brought me; I had not to think

Nor care, concern myself with doing good Or ill, my task was just — to live, — to live,

And, answering ends there was no need explain,

30 To render Juliers happy — so they said.

All could not have been falsehood: some was love,

And wonder and obedience. I did all They looked for: why then cease to do it now?

Yet this is to be calmly set aside,

And — ere next birthday's dawn, for aught I know,

Things change, a claimant may arrive, and I . . .

It cannot nor it shall not be! His right? Well then, he has the right, and I have not,

— But who bade all of you surround my life

And close its growth up with your ducal crown

Which, plucked off rudely, leaves me perishing?

I could have been like one of you, — loved, hoped,

Feared, lived and died like one of you — but you

Would take that life away and give me this, And I will keep this! I will face you!

Come!

Enter the COURTIERs and VALENCE.

The Courtiers. Many such happy mornings to your Grace!

The Duchess [aside, as they pay their devoir]. The same words, the same faces, — the same love!

I have been overfearful. These are few; But these, at least, stand firmly: these are mine.

As many come as may; and if no more, 'Tis that these few suffice — they do suffice!

What succour may not next year bring me? Plainly,

I feared too soon. [To the Courtiers.] I thank you, sirs: all thanks!

Valence [aside, as the DUCHESS passes from one group to another, conversing].

'Tis she — the vision this day last year brought,

When, for a golden moment at our Cleves, She tarried in her progress hither. Cleves Chose me to speak its welcome, and I spoke

— Not that she could have noted the recluse

— Ungainly, old before his time — who gazed.

Well, Heaven's gifts are not wasted, and 60 that gaze

Kept, and shall keep me to the end, her own!

She was above it — but so would not sink My gaze to earth! The People caught it, hers —

Thenceforward, mine; but thus entirely mine,

Who shall affirm, had she not raised my soul

Ere she retired and left me — them? She turns —

There's all her wondrous face at once! The ground

Reels and . . . [suddenly occupying himself with his paper]

These wrongs of theirs I have to plead!

The Duchess [to the Courtiers]. Nay, compliment enough! and kindness' self Should pause before it wish me more such 70 years.

'Twas fortunate that thus, ere youth
escaped,
I tasted life's pure pleasure — one such,
pure,
Is worth a thousand, mixed — and youth's for pleasure:

Mine is received; let my age pay for it.

Gaucelme. So, pay, and pleasure paid for, thinks your Grace,
Should never go together?

Guibert. How, Sir Gaucelme?
Hurry one's feast down unenjoyingly
At the snatched breathing-intervals of
work?

As good you saved it till the dull day's-end to When, stiff and sleepy, appetite is gone.
Eat first, then work upon the strength of food!

The Duchess. True: you enable me to risk my future,

By giving me a past beyond recall.
I lived, a girl, one happy leisure year:
Let me endeavour to be the Duchess now!
And so, — what news, Sir Guibert, spoke you of?

[As they advance a little, and GUIBERT speaks —

— That gentleman?

Valence [aside]. I feel her eyes on me.

Guibert [to VALENCE]. The Duchess, sir, in lines to hear your suit.

Advance! He is from Cleves.

Valence [coming forward. Aside]. Their wrongs — their wrongs!

to The Duchess. And you, sir, are from Cleves? How fresh in mind,

The hour or two I passed at queenly Cleves!
She entertained me bravely, but the best
Of her good pageant seemed its standers-by
With insuppressive joy on every face!

What says my ancient famous happy
Cleves?

Valence. Take the truth, lady — you are made for truth!

So think my friends: nor do they less deserve

The having you to take it, you shall think,
When you know all — nay, when you only
know

30 How, on that day you recollect at Cleves,
When the poor acquiescing multitude
Who thrust themselves with all their woes
apart

Into unnoticed corners, that the few,
Their means sufficed to muster trappings for,

Might fill the foreground, occupy your sight

With joyous faces fit to bear away
And boast of as a sample of all Cleves

How, when to daylight these crept out,
once more,

Clutching, unconscious, each his empty rags

Whence the scant coin, which had not half 40
bought bread,

That morn he shook forth, counted piece
by piece,

And, well-advisedly, on perfumes spent
them

To burn, or flowers to strew, before your path

— How, when the golden flood of music and bliss

Ebb'd, as their moon retreated, and again
Left the sharp black-point rocks of misery
bare

— Then I, their friend, had only to suggest

"Saw she the horror as she saw the pomp!"

And as one man they cried "He speaks the
truth:

"Show her the horror! Take from our 50 own mouths

"Our wrongs and show them, she will see them too!"

This they cried, lady! I have brought the wrongs.

The Duchess. Wrongs? Cleves has wrongs — apparent now and thus?

I thank you! In that paper? Give it me!

Valence. (There, Cleves!) In this!
(What did I promise, Cleves?)

Our weavers, clothiers, spinners are reduced

Since . . . Oh, I crave your pardon! I forget

I buy the privilege of this approach,
And promptly would discharge my debt.

I lay
This paper humbly at the Duchess' feet. 60

[Presenting GUIBERT'S paper.

Guibert. Stay! for the present . . .

The Duchess. Stay, sir? I take aught
That teaches me their wrongs with greater
pride

Than this your ducal circlet. Thank you,
sir!

[The DUCHESS reads hastily; then, turning to the Courtiers —

What have I done to you? Your deed or
mine

Was it, this crowning me? I gave myself
No more a title to your homage, no,

Than church-flowers, born this season;
wrote the words

In the saint's-book that sanctified them
first.

For such a flower, you plucked me; well, you erred —

Well, 'twas a weed; remove the eye-sore 70
quick!

But should you not remember it has lain steeped in the candles' glory, pearly

shined,

Nearer God's Mother than most earthly
things?

— That if't be faded 'tis with prayer's sole breath —

That the one day it boasted was God's day?

Still, I do thank you! Had you used respect,

Here might I dwindle to my last white leaf,

Here lose life's latest freshness, which even yet

May yield some wandering insect rest and food:

So, fling me forth, and — all is best for all!

[After a pause.] Prince Berthold, who art Juliers' Duke it seems —

The King's choice, and the Emperor's, and the Pope's —

10 Be mine, too! Take this People! Tell not me

Of rescripts, precedents, authorities, — But take them, from a heart that yearns to give!

Find out their love, — I could not; find their fear, —

I would not; find their like, — I never shall,

Among the flowers! [Taking off her coronet.]

Colombe of Ravestein Thanks God she is no longer Duchess here!

Valence [advancing to GUIBERT]. Sir Guibert, knight, they call you — this of mine

Is the first step I ever set at court. You dared make me your instrument,

I find;

20 For that, so sure as you and I are men, We reckon to the utmost presently:

But as you are a courtier and I none, Your knowledge may instruct me. I, already,

Have too far outraged, by my ignorance Of courtier-ways, this lady, to proceed

A second step and risk addressing her: — I am degraded — you let me address!

Out of her presence, all is plain enough What I shall do — but in her presence, too,

30 Surely there's something proper to be done. [To the others.] You, gentles, tell me if I guess aright —

May I not strike this man to earth?

The Courtiers [as GUIBERT springs forward, withholding him]. Let go!

— The clothiers' spokesman, Guibert? Grace a churl?

The Duchess [to VALENCE]. Oh, be acquainted with your party, sir!

He's of the oldest lineage Juliers boasts; A lion crests him for a cognizance;

"Scorning to waver" — that's his 'scutcheon's word;

His office with the new Duke — probably The same in honour as with me; or more,

40 By so much as this gallant turn deserves. He's now, I dare say, of a thousand times

The rank and influence that remain with her

Whose part you take! So, lest for taking it

You suffer . . .

Valence. I may strike him then to earth?

Guibert [falling on his knee]. Great and dear lady, pardon me! Hear once!

Believe me and be merciful — be just! I could not bring myself to give that paper

Without a keener pang than I dared meet — And so felt Clugnet here, and Maufroy here — No one dared meet it. Protestation's so cheap, —

But, if to die for you did any good, [To GAUCELME.] Would not I die, sir?

Say your worst of me!

But it does no good, that's the mournful truth.

And since the hint of a resistance, even, Would just precipitate, on you the first,

A speedier ruin — I shall not deny, Saving myself indubitable pain,

I thought to give you pleasure (who might say?)

By showing that your only subject found To carry the sad notice, was the man 60

Precisely ignorant of its contents; A nameless, mere provincial advocate;

One whom 'twas like you never saw before, Never would see again. All has gone wrong; But I meant right, God knows, and you, I trust!

The Duchess. A nameless advocate, this gentleman?

— (I pardon you, Sir Guibert!)

Guibert [rising, to VALENCE]. Sir, and you?

Valence. — Rejoice that you are lightened of a load.

Now, you have only me to reckon with. The Duchess. One I have never seen, 70 much less obliged?

Valence. Dare I speak, lady?

The Duchess. Dare you!

Heard you not

I rule no longer?

Valence. Lady, if your rule Were based alone on such a ground as these [Pointing to the Courtiers.]

Could furnish you, — abjure it! They have hidden

A source of true dominion from your sight. The Duchess. You hear them — no such source is left . . .

Valence. Hear Cleves! Whose haggard craftsmen rose to starve this day,

Starve now, and will lie down at night to starve,

Sure of a like to-morrow — but as sure

Of a most unlike morrow-after-that,
Since end things must, end howsoever things may.

What curbs the brute-force instinct in its
hour?

What makes — instead of rising, all as one,
And teaching fingers, so expert to wield
Their tool, the broadsword's play or car-bine's trick,

— What makes that there's an easier help,
they think,

For you, whose name so few of them can
spell,

Whose face scarce one in every hundred
saw, —

10 You simply have to understand their wrongs,

And wrongs will vanish — so, still trades are plied,

And swords lie rusting, and myself stand
here?

There is a vision in the heart of each
Of justice, mercy, wisdom, tenderness
To wrong and pain, and knowledge of its cure:

And these embodied in a woman's form
That best transmits them, pure as first received,

From God above her, to mankind below.
Will you derive your rule from such a
ground,

20 Or rather hold it by the suffrage, say,

Of this man — this — and this?

The Duchess [after a pause]. You come from Cleves:

How many are at Cleves of such a mind?
Valence [from his paper]. "We, all the manufacturers of Cleves —"

The Duchess. Or stay, sir — lest I seem too covetous —

Are you my subject? such as you describe,
Am I to you, though to no other man?

Valence [from his paper]. — "Valence, ordained your Advocate at Cleves" —

The Duchess [replacing the coronet].
Then I remain Cleves' Duchess!

Take you note,

30 While Cleves but yields one subject of this stamp,

I stand her lady till she waves me off!

For her sake, all the Prince claims I with-
hold;

Laugh at each menace; and, his power
defying,

Return his missive with its due contempt!
[Casting it away.]

Guibert [picking it up]. — Which to the Prince I will deliver, lady,

(Note it down, Gaucelme) — with your message too!

The Duchess. I think the office is a subject's, sir!

— Either . . . how style you him? —
my special guarder

The Marshal's — for who knows but violence

May follow the delivery? — Or, perhaps, 40
My Chancellor's — for law may be to urge On its receipt! — Or, even my Chamberlain's —

For I may violate established form!

[To VALENCE.] Sir, — for the half-hour
till this service ends,

Will you become all these to me?

Valence [falling on his knee]. My liege!

The Duchess. Give me!

[The Courtiers present their badges of office.]

[Putting them by.] Whatever was their virtue once,

They need new consecration. [*Raising
VALENCE.*] Are you mine?

I will be Duchess yet! [She retires.

The Courtiers. Our Duchess yet!

A glorious lady! Worthy love and dread! 50 I'll stand by her, — And I, whate'er betide!

Guibert [to VALENCE]. Well done, well done, sir! I care not who knows,
You have done nobly and I envy you —
Tho' I am but unfairly used, I think:

For when one gets a place like this I hold,
One gets too, the remark that its mere wages,

The pay and the preferment, make our
prize.

Talk about zeal and faith apart from these,
We're laughed at — much would zeal and faith subsist

Without these also! Yet, let these be stopped,

Our wages discontinue, — then, indeed, 60

Our zeal and faith, (we hear on every side,)
Are not released — having been pledged
away

I wonder, for what zeal and faith in turn?
Hard money purchased me my place! No,
no —

I'm right, sir — but your wrong is better
still,

If I had time and skill to argue it.

Therefore, I say, I'll serve you, how you
please —

If you like, — fight you, as you seem to wish —

(The kinder of me that, in sober truth,
I never dreamed I did you any harm) . . . 70

Gaucelme. — Or, kinder still, you'll introduce, no doubt,

His merits to the Prince who's just at hand,
And let no hint drop he's made Chancellor And Chamberlain and Heaven knows what
beside!

Clugnet [to VALENCE]. You stare, young sir, and threaten! Let me say,

That at your age, when first I came to
court,

I was not much above a gentleman;

While now . . .

Valence. — You are Head-Lackey?

With your office

I have not yet been graced, sir!

Other Courtiers [to CLUGNET]. Let him talk!

Fidelity, disinterestedness,

Excuse so much! Men claim my worship ever

Who staunchly and steadfastly . . .

Enter ADOLF.

Adolf. The Prince arrives.

Courtiers. Ha? How?

Adolf. He leaves his guard a stage behind

At Aix, and enters almost by himself.

1st Courtier. The Prince! This foolish business puts all out.

2nd Courtier. Let Gaucelme speak first!

3rd Courtier. Better I began

10 About the state of Juliers: should one say All's prosperous and inviting him?

4th Courtier. — Or rather,

All's prostrate and imploring him?

5th Courtier. That's best

Where's the Cleves' paper, by the way?

4th Courtier [to VALENCE]. Sir — sir — If you'll but lend that paper — trust it me, I'll warrant . . .

5th Courtier. Softly, sir — the Marshal's duty!

Clugnet. Has not the Chamberlain a hearing first

By virtue of his patent?

Gaucelme. Patents? — Duties?

All that, my masters, must begin again!

One word composes the whole controversy:

20 We're simply now — the Prince's!

The Others. Ay — the Prince's!

Enter SABYNE.

SABYNE. Adolf! Bid . . . Oh, no time for ceremony!

Where's whom our lady calls her only subject?

She needs him. Who is here the Duchess's?

Valence [starting from his reverie]. Most gratefully I follow to her feet.

ACT III.

AFTERNOON.

SCENE. — The Vestibule.

Enter PRINCE BERTHOLD and MELCHIOR.

Berthold. A thriving little burgh this Juliers looks.

[Half-apart.] Keep Juliers, and as good you kept Cologne:

Better try Aix, though! —

Melchior. Please 't your Highness speak?

Berthold [as before]. Aix, Cologne Frankfort, — Milan; — Rome! —

Melchior. The Grave.

More weary seems your Highness, I remark,

Than sundry conquerors whose path I've 34 watched

Through fire and blood to any prize they gain.

I could well wish you, for your proper sake, Had met some shade of opposition here

— Found a blunt seneschal refuse unlock, Or a scared usher lead your steps astray.

You must not look for next achievement's palm

So easily: this will hurt your conquering.

Berthold. My next? Ay, as you say, my next and next!

Well, I am tired, that's truth, and moody too,

This quiet entrance-morning: listen why! 40 Our little burgh, now, Juliers — 'tis indeed

One link, however insignificant,

Of the great chain by which I reach my hope,

— A link I must secure; but otherwise, You'd wonder I esteem it worth my grasp.

Just see what life is, with its shifts and turns!

It happens now — this very nook — to be A place that once . . . not a long while since, neither —

When I lived an ambiguous hanger-on

Of foreign courts, and bore my claims 50 about,

Discarded by one kinsman, and the other A poor priest merely, — then, I say, this

place

Shone my ambition's object; to be Duke —

Seemed then, what to be Emperor seems now.

My rights were far from judged as plain and sure

In those days as of late, I promise you:

And 'twas my day-dream, Lady Colombe here

Might e'en compound the matter, pity me, Be struck, say, with my chivalry and

grace

(I was a boy!) — bestow her hand at 60 length,

And make me Duke, in her right if not mine.

Here am I, Duke confessed, at Juliers now. Harken: if ever I be Emperor, Remind me what I felt and said to-day!

Melchior. All this consoles a bookish man like me.

— And so will weariness cling to you. Wrong,

Wrong! Had you sought the lady's court
yourself, —

Faced the redoubtables composing it, Flattered this, threatened that man, bribed the other, —

Pleaded by writ and word and deed, your
cause, —

Conquered a footing inch by painful inch, —

And, after long years' struggle, pounced at
last

On her for prize, — the right life had been
lived,

And justice done to divers faculties

Shut in that brow. Yourself were visible

10 As you stood victor, then; whom now —
(your pardon!)

I am forced narrowly to search and see,
So are you hid by helps — this Pope, your uncle —

Your cousin, the other King! You are a
mind, —

They, body: too much of mere legs-and-
arms

Obstructs the mind so! Match these with their like:

Match mind with mind!

Berthold. And where's your mind to match?

They show me legs-and-arms to cope withal!

I'd subjugate this city — where's its mind?
[The Courtiers enter slowly.]

Melchior. Got out of sight when you came troops and all!

20 And in its stead, here greets you flesh-and-
blood:

A smug oeconomy of both, this first!

[As CLUGNET bows obsequiously.]

Well done, gout, all considered! — I may go?

Berthold. Help me receive them!

Melchior. Oh, they just will say
What yesterday at Aix their fellows said —

At Treves, the day before! Sir Prince,
my friend,

Why do you let your life slip thus? —
Meantime,

I have my little Juliers to achieve —

The understanding this tough Platonist,

Your holy unele disinterred, Amelius;

30 Lend me a company of horse and foot,
To help me through his tractate — gain my Duchy!

Berthold. And Empire, after that is gained, will be —?

Melchior. To help me through your uncle's comment, Prince! [Goes.]

Berthold. Ah? Well: he o'er-refines — the scholar's fault!

How do I let my life slip? Say, this
life,

I lead now, differs from the common life
Of other men in mere degree, not kind,

Of joys and griefs, — still there is such degree

Mere largeness in a life is something,
sure, —

Enough to care about and struggle for, 40
In this world: for this world, the size of
things;

The sort of things, for that to come, no
doubt.

A great is better than a little aim:

And when I wooed Priscilla's rosy mouth

And failed so, under that grey convent-
wall,

Was I more happy than I should be now [By this time, the Courtiers

are ranged before him.]

If failing of my Empire? Not a whit.
— Here comes the mind, it once had tasked me sore

To baffle, but for my advantages!
All's best as 'tis: these scholars talk and 50 talk [Seats himself.]

The Courtiers. Welcome our Prince to Juliers! — to his heritage!

Our dutifullest service proffer we!

Clugnet. I, please your Highness, having exercised

The function of Grand Chamberlain at
court,

With much acceptance, as men testify . . .

Berthold. I cannot greatly thank you, gentlemen!

The Pope declares my claim to the Duchy founded

On strictest justice — you concede it, therefore,

I do not wonder: and the kings my friends
Protest they mean to see such claim en- 60
forced, —

You easily may offer to assist.
But there's a slight discretionary power

To serve me in the matter, you've had long, Though late you use it. This is well to
say —

But could you not have said it months ago?
I'm not denied my own Duke's truncheon,
true —

'Tis flung me — I stoop down, and from the ground

Pick it, with all you placid standers-by:
And now I have it, gems and mire at once,

Grace go with it to my soiled hands, you 70
say!

Guibert. (By Paul, the advocate our doughty friend

Cuts the best figure!)

Gaucelme. If our ignorance
May have offended, sure our loyalty . . .

Berthold. Loyalty? Yours? Oh — of yourselves you speak!

I mean the Duchess all this time, I hope!
And since I have been forced repeat my claims

As if they never had been urged before,

As I began, so must I end, it seems.
The formal answer to the grave demand!
What says the lady?

Courtiers [one to another]. 1st Courtier.
Marshal! 2nd Courtier. Orator!

Guibert. A variation of our mistress' way!

Wipe off his boots' dust, Clugnet! — that, he waits!

1st Courtier. Your place!

2nd Courtier. Just now it was your own!

Guibert. The devil's!

Berthold [to GUIBERT]. Come forward, friend — you with the paper, there!

Is Juliers the first city I've obtained?

By this time, I may boast proficiency

10 In each decorum of the circumstance.

Give it me as she gave it — the petition, Demand, you style it! What's required, in brief?

What title's reservation, appanage's Allowance? I heard all at Treves, last week.

Gaucelme [to GUIBERT]. "Give it him as she gave it!"

Guibert. And why not?

[To BERTHOLD.] The lady crushed your summons thus together,

And bade me, with the very greatest scorn

So fair a frame could hold, inform you . . .

Courtiers. Stop — Idiot!

Guibert. — Inform you she denied your claim,

20 Defied yourself! (I tread upon his heel, The blustering advocate!)

Berthold. By heaven and earth!

Dare you jest, sir?

Guibert. Did they at Treves, last week?

Berthold [starting up]. Why then, I look much bolder than I knew,

And you prove better actors than I thought:

Since, as I live, I took you as you entered For just so many dearest friends of mine,

Fled from the sinking to the rising power — The sneaking'st crew, in short, I e'er despised!

Whereas, I am alone here for the moment,

30 With every soldier left behind at Aix! Silence? That means the worst? I thought as much!

What follows next then?

Courtiers. Gracious Prince, he raves!

Guibert. He asked the truth and why not get the truth?

Berthold. Am I a prisoner? Speak, will somebody?

— But why stand paltering with imbeciles? Let me see her, or . . .

Guibert. Her, without her leave, Shall no one see: she's Duchess yet!

Courtiers [footsteps without as they are disputing]. Good chance!

She's here — the Lady Colombe's self!

Berthold. 'Tis well!

[Aside.] Array a handful thus against my world?

Not ill done, truly! Were not this a mind 40

To match one's mind with? Colombe!

Let us wait!

I failed so, under that grey convent wall! She comes.

Guibert. The Duchess! Strangers, range yourselves!

[As the Duchess enters in conversation with VALENCE, BERTHOLD and the Courtiers fall back a little.

The Duchess. Presagefully it beats, presagefully,

My heart: the right is Berthold's and not mine.

Valence. Grant that he has the right, dare I mistrust

Your power to acquiesce so patiently As you believe, in such a dream-like change

Of fortune — change abrupt, profound, complete?

The Duchess. Ah, the first bitterness is 50 over now!

Bitter I may have felt it to confront The truth, and ascertain those natures' value

I had so counted on; that was a pang; But I did bear it, and the worst is over.

Let the Prince take them!

Valence. And take Juliers too? — Your people without crosses, wands and chains —

Only with hearts?

The Duchess. There I feel guilty, sir! I cannot give up what I never had:

For I ruled these, not them — these stood between.

Shall I confess, sir? I have heard by 60 stealth

Of Berthold from the first; more news and more:

Closer and closer swam the thundercloud, But I was safely housed with these, I knew.

At times when to the casement I would turn,

At a bird's passage or a flower-trail's play, I caught the storm's red glimpses on its edge —

Yet I was sure some one of all these friends Would interpose: I followed the bird's flight

Or plucked the flower: some one would interpose!

Valence. Not one thought on the 70 People — and Cleves there!

The Duchess. Now, sadly conscious my real sway was missed,

Its shadow goes without so much regret: Else could I not again thus calmly bid you, Answer Prince Berthold!

Valence. Then you acquiesce?

The Duchess. Remember over whom it was I ruled!

Guibert [stepping forward]. Prince Berthold, yonder, craves an audience, lady!

The Duchess [to VALENCE]. I only have to turn, and I shall face

Prince Berthold! Oh, my very heart is sick!

It is the daughter of a line of Dukes

This scornful insolent adventurer

Will bid depart from my dead father's halls!

I shall not answer him — dispute with him —

But, as he bids, depart! Prevent it, sir! Sir — but a mere day's respite! Urge for me

— What I shall call to mind I should have urged

When time's gone by: 'twill all be mine, you urge!

A day — an hour — that I myself may lay My rule down! 'Tis too sudden — must not be!

The world's to hear of it! Once done — for ever!

How will it read, sir? How be sung about?

Prevent it!

Berthold [approaching]. Your frank indignation, lady,

Cannot escape me. Overbold I seem;

But somewhat should be pardoned my surprise

At this reception, — this defiance, rather.

And if, for their and your sake, I rejoice Your virtues could inspire a trusty few To make such gallant stand in your behalf,

I cannot but be sorry, for my own, Your friends should force me to retrace my steps;

Since I no longer am permitted speak

After the pleasant peaceful course prescribed

No less by courtesy than relationship —

Which I remember, if you once forgot.

But never must attack pass unrepelled.

Suffer that, through you, I demand of these,

Who controverts my claim to Juliers?

The Duchess. — Me

You say, you do not speak to —

Berthold. Of your subjects

I ask, then: whom do you accredit?

Where

Stand those should answer?

Valence [advancing]. The lady is alone.

Berthold. Alone, and thus? So weak and yet so bold?

Valence. I said she was alone —

Berthold. And weak, I said.

Valence. When is man strong until he feels alone?

It was some lonely strength at first, be sure, 46
Created organs, such as those you seek,
By which to give its varied purpose shape:
And, naming the selected ministrants, Took sword, and shield, and sceptre, — each, a man!

That strength performed its work and passed its way:

You see our lady: there, the old shapes stand!

— A Marshal, Chamberlain, and Chancellor —

"Be helped their way, into their death put life

"And find advantage!" — so you counsel us.

But let strength feel alone, seek help 50
itself, —

And, as the inland-hatched sea-creature hunts

The sea's breast out, — as, littered 'mid the waves

The desert-brute makes for the desert's joy,
So turns our lady to her true resource,

Passing o'er hollow fictions, worn-out types,

— And I am first her instinct fastens on.

And prompt I say, as clear as heart can speak,

The People will not have you; nor shall have!

It is not merely I shall go bring Cleves
And fight you to the last, — though that 60
does much,

And men and children, — ay, and women too,

Fighting for home, are rather to be feared
Than mercenaries fighting for their pay —

But, say you beat us, since such things have been,

And, where this Juliers laughed, you set your foot

Upon a steaming bloody plash — what then?

Stand you the more our lord that there you stand?

Lord it o'er troops whose force you concentrate,

A pillared flame whereto all ardours tend —

Lord it 'mid priests whose schemes you 70
amplify,

A cloud of smoke 'neath which all shadows brood —

But never, in this gentle spot of earth,
Can you become our Colombe, our play-

queen,
For whom, to furnish lilies for her hair,

We'd pour our veins forth to enrich the soil.

— Our conqueror? Yes! — Our despot?
Yes! — Our Duke?

Know yourself, know us!

Berthold [who has been in thought].

Know your lady, also!

[Very deferentially.]—To whom I needs must exculpate myself

For having made a rash demand, at least.

Wherefore to you, sir, who appear to be

Her chief adviser, I submit my claims,

[Giving papers.]

But, this step taken, take no further step,
Until the Duchess shall pronounce their
worth.

Here be our meeting-place; at night, its
time:

Till when I humbly take the lady's leave!

[He withdraws. As the DUCHESS turns to VALENCE, the Courtiers interchange glances and come forward a little.] to 1st Courtier. So, this was their device!

2nd Courtier. No bad device!

3rd Courtier. You'd say they love each other, Guibert's friend

From Cleves, and she, the Duchess!

4th Courtier. — And moreover,

That all Prince Berthold comes for, is to help

Their loves!

5th Courtier. Pray, Guibert, what is next to do?

Guibert [advancing]. I laid my office at the Duchess' foot —

Others. And I — and I — and I!

The Duchess. I took them, sirs.

Guibert [apart to VALENCE]. And now, sir, I am simple knight again —

Guibert, of the great ancient house, as yet
That never bore affront; whate'er your birth, —

20 As things stand now, I recognise yourself
(If you'll accept experience of some date)
As like to be the leading man o' the time,
Therefore as much above me now, as I Seemed above you this morning. Then, I ffered

To fight you: will you be as generous

And now fight me?

Valence. Ask when my life is mine!

Guibert. ('Tis hers now!)

Clugnet [apart to VALENCE, as GUIBERT turns from him]. You, sir, have insulted me

Grossly, — will grant me, too, the self-same favour

You've granted him, just now, I make no question?

30 Valence. I promise you, as him, sir.

Clugnet. " Do you so?

Handsomely said! I hold you to it, sir.

You'll get me reinstated in my office

As you will Guibert!

The Duchess. I would be alone!

[They begin to retire slowly; as

VALENCE is about to follow —

Alone, sir — only with my heart: you stay!

Gaucelme. You hear that? Ah, light breaks upon me! Cleves —

It was at Cleves some man harangued us
all —

With great effect, — so those who listened
said,

My thoughts being busy elsewhere: was this he?

Guibert, — your strange, disinterested man!

Your uncorrupted, if uncourtly friend!

The modest worth you mean to patronise!

He cares about no Duchesses, not he —

His sole concern is with the wrongs of Cleves!

What, Guibert? What, it breaks on you
at last?

Guibert. Would this hall's floor were a mine's roof! I'd back

And in her very face . . .

Gaucelme. Apply the match

That fired the train, — and where would you be, pray?

Guibert. With him!

Gaucelme. Stand, rather, safe outside with me!

The mine's charged: shall I furnish you the match

And place you properly? To the ante- 50
chamber!

Guibert. Can you?

Gaucelme. Try me! Your friend's in fortune!

Guibert. Quick —

To the antechamber! He is pale with
bliss!

Gaucelme. No wonder! Mark her eyes!

Guibert. To the antechamber!

[The Courtiers retire.]

The Duchess. Sir, could you know all you have done for me

You were content! You spoke, and I am saved.

Valence. Be not too sanguine, lady!

Ere you dream,

That transient flush of generosity

Fades off, perchance. The man, beside, is gone, —

Him we might bend; but see, the papers
here —

Inalterably his requirement stays, 60
And cold hard words have we to deal with
now.

In that large eye there seemed a latent
pride,

To self-denial not incompetent,
But very like to hold itself dispensed

From such a grace: however, let us hope!
He is a noble spirit in noble form.

I wish he less had bent that brow to smile
As with the fancy how he could subject

Himself upon occasion to — himself!

From rudeness, violence, you rest secure; 70
But do not think your Duchy rescued yet!

The Duchess. You, — who have opened a new world to me,
Will never take the faded language up
Of that I leave? My Duchy — keeping it,
Or losing it — is that my sole world now?

Valence. Ill have I spoken if you thence despise

Juliers; although the lowest, on true grounds,
Be worth more than the highest rule, on
false:

Aspire to rule, on the true grounds!

The Duchess. Nay, hear — False, I will never — rash, I would not be!
This is indeed my birthday — soul and
body,

Its hours have done on me the work of
years.

You hold the requisition: ponder it!
If I have right, my duty's plain: if he —
Say so, nor ever change a tone of voice!
At night you meet the Prince; meet me at eve!

Till when, farewell! This discomposes
you?

Believe in your own nature, and its force
Of renovating mine! I take my stand
Only as under me the earth is firm:

So, prove the first step stable, all will prove.

That first, I choose: [Laying her hand on his] — the next to take, choose you!

[She withdraws.]

Valence [after a pause]. What drew down this on me? — on me, dead once,
She thus bids live, — since all I hitherto Thought dead in me, youth's ardours and emprise,

Burst into life before her, as she bids Who needs them. Whither will this reach, where end?

Her hand's print burns on mine . . . Yet she's above —

So very far above me! All's too plain:
I served her when the others sank away,

And she rewards me as such souls reward —

The changed voice, the suffusion of the
cheek,

The eye's acceptance, the expressive hand,
— Reward, that's little, in her generous
thought,

Though all to me . . .

I cannot so disclaim
Heaven's gift: nor call it other than it is!
She loves me!

[Looking at the Prince's papers.] — Which love, these, perchance, forbid.

Can I decide against myself — pronounce
She is the Duchess and no mate for me?
— Cleves, help me! Teach me, — every haggard face, —

To sorrow and endure! I will do right Whatever be the issue Help me, Cleves!

ACT IV.

EVENING.

SCENE. — An Antechamber.Enter the Courtiers.

Maufroy. Now, then, that we may speak
— how spring this mine?

Gaucelme. Is Guibert ready for its match? He cools!

Nct so friend Valence with the Duchess
there!

"Stay, Valence! Are not you my better
self?"

And her cheek mantled —

Guibert. Well, she loves him, sir:
And more, — since you will have it I grow cool, —

She's right: he's worth it.

Gaucelme. For his deeds to-day?
Say so!

Guibert. What should I say beside?

Gaucelme. Not this — For friendship's sake leave this for me to
say —

That we're the dupes of an egregious cheat!
This plain unpractised suitor, who found
way

To the Duchess through the merest die's turn-up

A year ago, had seen her and been seen,
Loved and been loved.

Guibert. Impossible!

Gaucelme. — Nor say,
How sly and exquisite a trick, moreover,
Was this which — taking not their stand on facts

Boldly, for that had been endurable,
But worming on their way by craft, they choose

Resort to, rather, — and which you and 60
we,

Sheep-like, assist them in the playing-off!
The Duchess thus parades him as preferred,

Not on the honest ground of preference, Seeing first, liking more, and there an
end —

But as we all had started equally,
And at the close of a fair race he proved
The only valiant, sage and loyal man.
Herself, too, with the pretty fits and
starts, —

The careless, winning, candid ignorance
Of what the Prince might challenge or 70 forego —

She had a hero in reserve! What risk Ran she? This deferential easy Prince Who brings his claims for her to ratify
— He's just her puppet for the nonce!

You'll see, —

Valence pronounces, as is equitable,
Against him: off goes the confederate:

As equitably, Valence takes her hand!

The Chancellor. You run too fast: her hand, no subject takes.

Do not our archives hold her father's will?

That will provides against such accident,
And gives next heir, Prince Berthold, the reversion

Of Juliers, which she forfeits, wedding so.

Gauclme. I know that, well as you, — but does the Prince?

10 Knows Berthold, think you, that this plan, he helps,

For Valence's ennoblement, — would end,
If crowned with the success which seems its due,

In making him the very thing he plays,
The actual Duke of Juliers? All agree
That Colombe's title waived or set aside,
He is next heir.

The Chancellor. Incontrovertibly.

Gauclme. Guibert, your match, now, to the train!

Guibert. Enough!

I'm with you: selfishness is best again.

I thought of turning honest — what a dream!

20 Let's wake now!

Gauclme. Selfish, friend, you never were:

'Twas but a series of revenges taken
On your unselfishness for prospering ill.
But now that you're grown wiser, what's our course?

Guibert. — Wait, I suppose, till Valence weds our lady,
And then, if we must needs revenge ourselves,

Apprise the Prince.

Gauclme. — The Prince, ere then dismissed

With thanks for playing his mock part so well?

Tell the Prince now, sir! Ay, this very night,

Ere he accepts his dole and goes his way,

30 Explain how such a marriage makes him Duke,

Then trust his gratitude for the surprise!

Guibert. — Our lady wedding Valence all the same

As if the penalty were undisclosed?
Good! If she loves, she'll not disown her love,

Throw Valence up. I wonder you see that.

Gauclme. The shame of it — the suddenness and shame!

Within her, the inclining heart — without,
A terrible array of witnesses —

And Valence by, to keep her to her word,

40 With Berthold's indignation or disgust!

We'll try it! — Not that we can venture much.

Her confidence we've lost for ever: Berthold's

Is all to gain.

Guibert. To-night, then, venture we! Yet — if lost confidence might be renewed?

Gauclme. Never in noble natures!

With the base ones, —

Twist off the crab's claw, wait a smarting-while,

And something grows and grows and gets to be

A mimic of the lost joint, just so like
As keeps in mind it never, never will Replace its predecessor! Crabs do that: 50

But lop the lion's foot — and . . .

Guibert. To the Prince!

Gauclme [aside]. And come what will to the lion's foot, I pay you,

My cat's-paw, as I long have yearned to pay.

[Aloud.] Footsteps! Himself! 'Tis Valence breaks on us,

Exulting that their scheme succeeds. We'll hence —

And perfect ours! Consult the archives, first —

Then, fortified with knowledge, seek the Hall!

Clugnet [to GAUCLME as they retire].

You have not smiled so since your father died!

As they retire, enter VALENCE with papers.

Valence. So must it be! I have examined these

With scarce a palpitating heart — so calm, 60
Keeping her image almost wholly off,

Setting upon myself determined watch,
Repelling to the uttermost his claims:

And the result is — all men would pronounce

And not I, only, the result to be — Berthold is heir; she has no shade of right

To the distinction which divided us,
But, suffered to rule first, I know not why,

Her rule connived at by those Kings and Popes,

To serve some devil's-purpose, — now 'tis 70
gained,

Whate'er it was, the rule expires as well.

— Valence, this rapture . . . selfish can it be?

Eject it from your heart, her home! — It stays!

Ah, the brave world that opens on us both!

— Do my poor townsmen so esteem it? Cleves, —

I need not your pale faces! This, reward
For service done to you? Too horrible!

I never served you: 'twas myself I served —

Say, served not — rather saved from punishment
Which, had I failed you then, would plague me now.
My life continues yours, and your life, mine.
But if, to take God's gift, I swerve no step — Cleves! If I breathe no prayer for it — if she,
Colombe, that comes now, freely gives herself —
Will Cleves require, that, turning thus to her,
I . . .

Enter Prince BERTHOLD.

Pardon, sir! I did not look for you Till night, i' the Hall; nor have as yet declared
My judgment to the lady.

Berthold. So I hoped.

Valence. And yet I scarcely know why that should check
The frank disclosure of it first to you —
What her right seems, and what, in consequence,
She will decide on.

Berthold. That I need not ask.

Valence. You need not: I have proved the lady's mind:

And, justice being to do, dare act for her.
Berthold. Doubtless she has a very noble mind.

Valence. Oh, never fear but she'll in each conjuncture

Bear herself bravely! She no whit depends

On circumstance; as she adorns a throne,
She had adorned . . .

Berthold. A cottage — in what book
Have I read that, of every queen that lived?
A throne! You have not been instructed,
sure,

To forestall my request?

Valence. 'Tis granted, sir!
My heart instructs me. I have scrutinised
Your claims . . .

Berthold. Ah — claims, you mean,
at first preferred?

I come, before the hour appointed me,
To pray you let those claims at present rest,
In favour of a new and stronger one.

Valence. You shall not need a stronger:
on the part

O' the lady, all you offer I accept,
Since one clear right suffices: yours is clear.
Propose!

Berthold. I offer her my hand.

Valence. Your hand?

Berthold. A Duke's, yourself say; and,
at no far time,
Something here whispers me — an Emperor's.

The lady's mind is noble: which induced
This seizure of occasion ere my claims
Were — settled, let us amicably say!

Valence. Your hand!

Berthold. (He will fall down and kiss it next!)

Sir, this astonishment's too flattering,
Nor must you hold your mistress' worth so cheap.

Enhance it, rather, — urge that blood is
blood —

The daughter of the Burgraves, Land-graves, Markgraves, Remains their daughter! I shall scarce
gainsay.

Elsewhere or here, the lady needs must
rule:

Like the imperial crown's great chryso-prase,¹

They talk of — somewhat out of keeping
there,

And yet no jewel for a meaner cap.

Valence. You wed the Duchess?

Berthold. Cry you mercy, friend!
Will the match also influence fortunes so
here?

A natural solicitude enough.

Be certain, no bad chance it proves for you!

However high you take your present stand,

There's prospect of a higher still remove —

For Juliers will not be my resting-place,

And, when I have to choose a substitute

To rule the little burgh, I'll think of you

Who need not give your mates a character.

And yet I doubt your fitness to supplant

The grey smooth Chamberlain: he'd hesi- 60
tate

A doubt his lady could demean herself

So low as to accept me. Courage, sir!

I like your method better: feeling's play

Is franker much, and flatters me beside.

Valence. I am to say, you love her?

Berthold. Say that too!

Love has no great concernment, thinks the
world,

With a Duke's marriage. How go precedents

In Juliers' story — how use Juliers' Dukes?

I see you have them here in goodly row;

Yon must be Luitpold — ay, a stalwart 70 sire!

Say, I have been arrested suddenly

In my ambition's course, its rocky course,

By this sweet flower: I fain would gather it

And then proceed: so say and speedily

— (Nor stand there like Duke Luitpold's brazen self!)

Enough, sir: you possess my mind, I
think.

This is my claim, the others being withdrawn,

And to this be it that, i' the Hall to-night,

Your lady's answer comes; till when, farewell! [He retires.]

Valence [after a pause]. The heavens and earth stay as they were; my heart Beats as it beat: the truth remains the truth.

What falls away, then, if not faith in her? Was it my faith, that she could estimate Love's value, and, such faith still guiding me,

Dare I now test her? Or grew faith so strong

'Solely because no power of test was mine?

Enter the DUCHESS.

The Duchess. My fate, sir! Ah, you turn away. All's over.

10 But you are sorry for me? Be not so! What I might have become, and never was, Regret with me! What I have merely been,

Rejoice I am no longer! What I seem Beginning now, in my new state, to be, Hope that I am! — for, once my rights proved void,

This heavy roof seems easy to exchange For the blue sky outside — my lot henceforth.

Valence. And what a lot is Berthold's! The Duchess. How of him?

Valence. He gathers earth's whole good into his arms;

20 Standing, as man now, stately, strong and wise,

Marching to fortune, not surprised by her. One great aim, like a guiding-star, above —

Which tasks strength, wisdom, stateliness, to lift

His manhood to the height that takes the prize;

A prize not near — lest overlooking earth He rashly spring to seize it — nor remote, So that he rest upon his path content:

But day by day, while shimmering grows shine,

And the faint circlet prophesies the orb,

30 He sees so much as, just evolving these, The stateliness, the wisdom and the strength,

To due completion, will suffice this life, And lead him at his grandest to the grave. After this star, out of a night he springs; A beggar's cradle for the throne of thrones He quits; so, mounting, feels each step he mounts,

Nor, as from each to each exultingly He passes, overleaps one grade of joy. This, for his own good: — with the world, each gift

40 Of God and man, — reality, tradition, Fancy and fact — so well environ him, That as a mystic panoply they serve —

Of force, untenanted, to awe mankind, And work his purpose out with half the world,

While he, their master, dexterously slipt From such encumbrance, is meantime employed

With his own prowess on the other half. Thus shall he prosper, every day's success Adding, to what is he, a solid strength — An æry might to what encircles him,

Till at the last, so life's routine lends help,

That as the Emperor only breathes and moves,

His shadow shall be watched, his step or stalk

Become a comfort or a portent, how He trails his ermine take significance, — Till even his power shall cease to be most power,

And men shall dread his weakness more, nor dare

Peril their earth its bravest, first and best, Its typified invincibility.

Thus shall he go on, greatening, till he ends —

The man of men, the spirit of all flesh, The fiery centre of an earthly world!

The Duchess. Some such a fortune I had dreamed should rise

Out of my own — that is, above my power Seemed other, greater potencies to stretch —

Valence. For you?

The Duchess. It was not I moved there, I think:

But one I could, — though constantly beside,

And aye approaching, — still keep distant from,

And so adore. 'Twas a man moved there.

Valence. Who?

The Duchess. I felt the spirit, never saw the face.

Valence. See it! 'Tis Berthold's! He enables you

To realise your vision.

The Duchess. Berthold?

Valence. Duke — Emperor to be: he proffers you his hand.

The Duchess. Generous and princely!

Valence. He is all of this. The Duchess. Thanks, Berthold, for my father's sake! No hand Degrades me. Valence. You accept the proffered hand?

The Duchess. That he should love me!

Valence. "Loved" I did not say. Had that been — love might so incline the Prince

To the world's good, the world that's at his foot, —

I do not know, this moment, I should dare 8

Desire that you refused the world — and Cleves —

The sacrifice he asks,

The Duchess. Not love me, sir?

Valence. He scarce affirmed it.

The Duchess. May not deeds affirm?

Valence. What does he? . . . Yes, yes, very much he does!

All the shame saved, he thinks, and sorrow saved —

Immitigable sorrow, so he thinks, —

Sorrow that's deeper than we dream, perchance.

The Duchess. Is not this love?

Valence. So very much he does!

For look, you can descend now gracefully: All doubts are banished, that the world might have,

Or worst, the doubts yourself, in after-time, May call up of your heart's sincereness now.

To such, reply, "I could have kept my rule

"Increased it to the utmost of my dreams —
"Yet I abjured it." This, he does for you:

It is munificently much.

The Duchess. Still "much!"

But why is it not love, sir? Answer me!

Valence. Because not one of Berthold's words and looks

Had gone with love's presentment of a flower

To the beloved: because bold confidence, Open superiority, free pride —

Love owns not, yet were all that Berthold owned:

Because where reason, even, finds no flaw, Unerringly a lover's instinct may.

The Duchess. You reason, then, and doubt?

Valence. I love, and know.

The Duchess. You love? How strange!

I never cast a thought

On that. Just see our selfishness! You seemed

So much my own . . . I had no ground — and yet,

I never dreamed another might divide

My power with you, much less exceed it.

Valence. Lady,

I am yours wholly.

The Duchess. Oh, no, no, not mine!

'Tis not the same now, never more can be.

— Your first love, doubtless. Well, what's gone from me?

What have I lost in you?

Valence. My heart replies —

No loss there! So to Berthold back again:

This offer of his hand, he bids me make — its obvious magnitude is well to weigh.

The Duchess. She's . . . yes, she must be very fair for you!

Valence. I am a simple advocate of Cleves.

The Duchess. You! With the heart and brain that so helped me,

I fancied them exclusively my own,

Yet find are subject to a stronger sway!

She must be . . . tell me, is she very fair?

Valence. Most fair, beyond conception or belief.

The Duchess. Black eyes? — no matter!

Colombe, the world leads

Its life without you, whom your friends professed

The only woman: see how true they spoke!

One lived this while, who never saw your face,

Nor heard your voice — unless . . . Is she from Cleves?

Valence. Cleves knows her well.

The Duchess. Ah — just a fancy, now!

When you poured forth the wrongs of Cleves, — I said,

— Thought, that is, afterward . . .

Valence. You thought of me?

The Duchess. Of whom else? Only such great cause, I thought,

For such effect: see what true love can do!

Cleves is his love. I almost fear to ask . . . And will not. This is idling: to our work!

Admit before the Prince, without reserve, My claims misgrounded; then may follow better

. . . When you poured out Cleves' wrongs impetuously,

Was she in your mind?

Valence. All done was done for her — To humble me!

The Duchess. She will be proud at least.

Valence. She?

The Duchess. When you tell her.

Valence. That will never be.

The Duchess. How — are there sweeter things you hope to tell?

No, sir! You counselled me, — I counsel you

In the one point I — any woman — can. Your worth, the first thing; let her own come next —

Say what you did through her, and she through you —

The praises of her beauty afterward!

Will you?

Valence. I dare not.

The Duchess. Dare not?

Valence. She I love

Suspects not such a love in me.

The Duchess. You jest.

Valence. The lady is above me and away.

Not only the brave form, and the bright mind,

And the great heart, combine to press me low —

But all the world calls rank divides us.

The Duchess. Rank!

Now grant me patience! Here's a man declares

Oracularly in another's case —

Sees the true value and the false, for them —

Nay, bids them see it, and they straight do see.

You called my court's love worthless — so it turned:

I threw away as dross my heap of wealth, And here you stickle for a piece or two!

10 First — has she seen you?

Valence. Yes.

The Duchess. She loves you, then.

Valence. One flash of hope burst; then succeeded night:

And all's at darkest now. Impossible!

The Duchess. We'll try: you are — so to speak — my subject yet?

Valence. As ever — to the death.

The Duchess. Obey me, then!

Valence. I must.

The Duchess. Approach her, and . . . no! first of all

Get more assurance. "My instructress," say,

"Was great, descended from a line of kings, And even fair" — (wait why I say this folly) —

20 "She said, of all men, none for eloquence, Courage, and (what cast even these to shade)

"The heart they sprung from, — none deserved like him

"Who saved her at her need: if she said this,

"What should not one I love, say?"

Valence. Heaven — this hope — Oh, lady, you are filling me with fire!

The Duchess. Say this! — nor think I bid you cast aside

One touch of all the awe and reverence; Nay, make her proud for once to heart's content

That all this wealth of heart and soul's her own!

Think you are all of this, — and, thinking it,

30 . . . (Obey!) —

Valence. I cannot choose.

The Duchess. Then, kneel to her!

[Valence sinks on his knee.]

I dream!

Valence. Have mercy! Yours, unto the death, —

I have obeyed. Despise, and let me die!

The Duchess. Alas, sir, is it to be ever thus?

Even with you as with the world? I know This morning's service was no vulgar deed Whose motive, once it dares avow itself,

Explains all done and infinitely more, So, takes the shelter of a nobler cause.

Your service named its true source, — loyalty!

The rest's unsaid again. The Duchess 4 bids you,

Rise, sir! The Prince's words were in debate.

Valence [rising]. Rise? Truth, as ever, lady, comes from you!

I should rise — I who spoke for Cleves, can speak

For Man — yet tremble now, who stood firm then.

I laughed — for 'twas past tears — that Cleves should starve

With all hearts beating loud the infamy, And no tongue daring trust as much to air:

Yet here, where all hearts speak, shall I be mute?

Oh, lady, for your own sake look on me! On all I am, and have, and do — heart, 5 brain,

Body and soul, — this Valence and his gifts!

I was proud once: I saw you, and they sank,

So that each, magnified a thousand times, Were nothing to you — but such nothingness,

Would a crown gild it, or a sceptre prop, A treasure speed, a laurel-wreath enhance?

What is my own desert? But should your love

Have . . . there's no language helps here . . . singled me, —

Then — oh, that wild word "then!" — be just to love,

In generosity its attribute!

Love, since you pleased to love! All's cleared — a stage

For trial of the question kept so long: Judge you — Is love or vanity the best?

You, solve it for the world's sake — you, speak first

What all will shout one day — you, vindicate

Our earth and be its angel! All is said. Lady, I offer nothing — I am yours:

But, for the cause' sake, look on me and him,

And speak!

The Duchess. I have received the Prince's message:

Say, I prepare my answer!

Valence. Take me, Cleves! [He withdraws.]

The Duchess. Mournful — that nothing's what it calls itself!

Devotion, zeal, faith, loyalty — mere love! And, love in question, what may Berthold's be?

I did ill to mistrust the world so soon: Already was this Berthold at my side.

The valley-level has its hawks no doubt;
May not the rock-top have its eagles, too?
Yet Valence . . . let me see his rival then!

ACT V.

NIGHT.

SCENE. — The Hall.Enter BERTHOLD and MELCHIOR.

Melchior. And here you wait the matter's issue?

Berthold. Here.

Melchior. I don't regret I shut Amelius,
then.

But tell me, on this grand disclosure, —
how

Behaved our spokesman with the forehead?

Berthold. Oh,

Turned out no better than the forehead-
less —

Was dazzled not so very soon, that's all!

For my part, this is scarce the hasty showy

Chivalrous measure you give me credit of.

Perhaps I had a fancy, — but 'tis gone.

— Let her commence the unfriended innocent

And carry wrongs about from court to court?

No, truly! The least shake of fortune's
sand,

— My uncle-Pope chokes in a coughing fit,
King-cousin takes a fancy to blue eyes, —

And wondrously her claims would brighten
up;

Forth comes a new gloss on the ancient law,

O'er-looked provisoes, o'er-past premises,

Follow in plenty. No: 'tis the safe step.

The hour beneath the convent-wall is lost:

Juliers and she, once mine, are ever mine.

Melchior. Which is to say, you, losing heart already,

Elude the adventure.

Berthold. Not so — or, if so —

Why not confess at once that I advise

None of our kingly craft and guild just

now

To lay, one moment, down their privilege

With the notion they can any time at pleasure

Retake it: that may turn out hazardous.

We seem, in Europe, pretty well at end

O' the night, with our great masque:

those favoured few

Who keep the chamber's top, and honour's

chance

Of the early evening, may retain their

place

And figure as they list till out of breath.

But it is growing late: and I observe

A dim grim kind of tipstaves at the door-
way

Not only bar new-comers entering now,
But caution those who left, for any cause,
And would return, that morning draws too near;

The ball must die off, shut itself up. We —
I think, may dance lights out and sunshine
in,

And sleep off headache on our frippery:
But friend the other, who cunningly stole
out,

And, after breathing the fresh air outside,
Means to re-enter with a new costume,
Will be advised go back to bed, I fear.

I stick to privilege, on second thoughts.

Melchior. Yes — you evade the adventure: and, beside,

Give yourself out for colder than you are.

King Philip, only, notes the lady's eyes? 50

Don't they come in for somewhat of the motive

With you too?

Berthold. Yes — no: I am past that
now.

Gone 'tis: I cannot shut my soul to fact.

Of course, I might by forethought and contrivance

Reason myself into a rapture. Gone:

And something better come instead, no
doubt.

Melchior. So be it! Yet, all the same,
proceed my way,

Though to your ends; so shall you pros- 60 per best!

The lady, — to be won for selfish ends, —
Will be won easier my unselfish . . . call

it,
Romantic way.

Berthold. Won easier?

Melchior. Will not she?

Berthold. There I profess humility without bound:

Ill cannot speed — not I — the Emperor.

Melchior. And I should think the Emperor best waived,

From your description of her mood and
way.

You could look, if it pleased you, into hearts;

But are too indolent and fond of watching
Your own — you know that, for you study
it.

Berthold. Had you but seen the orator 70
her friend,

So bold and valuble an hour before,

Abashed to earth at aspect of the change!

Make her an Empress? Ah, that changed the case!

Oh, I read hearts! 'Tis for my own behoof,

I court her with my true worth: wait the event!

I learned my final lesson on that head

When years ago, — my first and last essay —

Before the priest my uncle could by help
Of his superior, raise me from the dirt —
Priscilla left me for a Brabant lord Whose cheek was like the topaz on his thumb.

I am past illusion on that score.

Melchior.

Here comes

The lady —

Berthold. — And there you go. But do not! Give me

Another chance to please you! Hear me plead!

Melchior. You'll keep, then, to the lover, to the man?

Enter the DUCHESS — followed by ADOLF and SABYNE and, after an interval, by the Courtiers.

10 Berthold. Good auspice to our meeting!

The Duchess. May it prove!

— And you, sir, will be Emperor one day?

Berthold. (Ay, that's the point!) I may be Emperor.

The Duchess. 'Tis not for my sake only,
I am proud

Of this you offer: I am prouder far That from the highest state should duly
spring

The highest, since most generous, of deeds.

Berthold. (Generous — still that!) You underrate yourself.

You are, what I, to be complete, must
gain —

Find now, and may not find, another time.

20 While I career on all the world for stage,
There needs at home my representative.

The Duchess. — Such, rather, would some warrior-woman be —

One dowered with lands and gold, or rich in friends —

One like yourself.

Berthold. Lady, I am myself,

And have all these: I want what's not
myself.

Nor has all these. Why give one hand two swords?

Here's one already: be a friend's next gift
A silk glove, if you will — I have a sword.

The Duchess. You love me, then?

Berthold. Your lineage I revere,

30 Honour your virtue, in your truth believe,
Do homage to your intellect, and bow
Before your peerless beauty.

The Duchess. But, for love —

Berthold. A further love I do not understand.

Our best course is to say these hideous
truths,

And see them, once said, grow endurable:
Like waters shuddering from their central

bed,

Black with the midnight bowels of the
earth,

That, once up-spouted by an earthquake's
throe,

A portent and a terror — soon subside,
Freshen apace, take gold and rainbow 4
hues

In sunshine, sleep in shadow, and at last Grow common to the earth as hills or
trees —

Accepted by all things they came to scare.

The Duchess. You cannot love, then?

Berthold. — Charlemagne, perhaps!

Are you not over-curious in love-lore?

The Duchess. I have become so, very recently.

It seems, then, I shall best deserve esteem,
Respect, and all your candour promises,
By putting on a calculating mood —

Asking the terms of my becoming yours? 50

Berthold. Let me not do myself injustice, neither.

Because I will not condescend to fictions
That promise what my soul can ne'er acquit,

It does not follow that my guarded phrase
May not include far more of what you seek,

Than wide profession of less scrupulous
men.

You will be Empress, once for all: with
me

The Pope disputes supremacy — you
stand,

And none gainsays, the earth's first woman.

The Duchess. That —

Or simple Lady of Ravestein again? 60

Berthold. The matter's not in my arbitrament:

Now I have made my claims — which I regret

Cede one, cede all.

The Duchess. This claim then, you enforce?

Berthold. The world looks on.

The Duchess. And when must I decide?

Berthold. When, lady? Have I said
thus much so promptly

For nothing? — Poured out, with such pains, at once

What I might else have suffered to ooze
forth

Droplet by droplet in a lifetime long —

For aught less than as prompt an answer,
too?

All's fairly told now: who can teach you 70
more?

The Duchess. I do not see him.

Berthold. I shall ne'er deceive.

This offer should be made befittingly

Did time allow the better setting forth

The good of it, with what is not so good,

Advantage, and disparagement as well:

But as it is, the sum of both must serve.

I am already weary of this place:

My thoughts are next stage on to Rome.

Decide!

The Empire — or, — not even Juliers now!

Hail to the Empress — farewell to the Duchess!

[The Courtiers, who have been drawing nearer and nearer, interpose.

Gaucelme. — "Farewell," Prince? when we break in at our risk —

Clugnet. Almost upon court-licence trespassing —

Gaucelme. — To point out how your claims are valid yet!

You know not, by the Duke her father's will,

The lady, if she weds beneath her rank, Forfeits her Duchy in the next heir's favour —

So 'tis expressly stipulate. And if It can be shown 'tis her intent to wed A subject, then yourself, next heir, by right Succeed to Juliers.

Berthold. What insanity? —

Guibert. Sir, there's one Valence, the pale fiery man

You saw and heard this morning — thought, no doubt,

Was of considerable standing here:

I put it to your penetration, Prince,

If aught save love, the truest love for her Could make him serve the lady as he did!

He's simply a poor advocate of Cleves

— Creeps here with difficulty, finds a place

With danger, gets in by a miracle,

And for the first time meets the lady's face

So runs the story: is that credible?

For, first — no sooner in, than he's surprised

Fortunes have changed; you are all-powerful here,

The lady as powerless: he stands fast by her!

The Duchess [aside]. And do such deeds spring up from love alone?

Guibert. But here occurs the question, does the lady Love him again? I say, how else can she?

Can she forget how he stood singly forth

In her defence, dared outrage all of us,

Insult yourself — for what, save love's reward?

The Duchess [aside]. And is love then the sole reward of love?

Guibert. But, love him as she may and must — you ask,

Means she to wed him? "Yes," both natures answer!

Both, in their pride, point out the sole result;

Nought less would he accept nor she propose.

For each conjecture was she great enough

— Will be, for this.

Clugnet. Though, now that this is known,

Policy, doubtless, urges she deny . . .

The Duchess. — What, sir, and wherefore? — since I am not sure

That all is any other than you say!

You take this Valence, hold him close to me,

Him with his actions: can I choose but look?

I am not sure, love trulier shows itself

Than in this man, you hate and would degrade,

Yet, with your worst abatement, show me thus.

Nor am I — (thus made look within myself, Ere I had dared) — now that the look is sure that I do not love him!

Guibert. Hear you, Prince?

Berthold. And what, sirs, please you, may this prattle mean

Unless to prove with what alacrity

You give your lady's secrets to the world?

How much indebted, for discovering

That quality, you make me, will be found

When there's a keeper for my own to seek.

Courtiers. "Our lady?"

Berthold. — She assuredly remains.

The Duchess. Ah, Prince — and you too can be generous?

You could renounce your power, if this were so,

And let me, as these phrase it, wed my love

Yet keep my Duchy? You perhaps exceed

Him, even, in disinterestedness!

Berthold. How, lady, should all this affect my purpose?

Your will and choice are still as ever, free.

Say, you have known a worthier than myself

In mind and heart, of happier form and face —

Others must have their birthright: I have gifts,

To balance theirs, not blot them out of sight.

Against a hundred alien qualities, I lay the prize I offer. I am nothing:

Wed you the Empire?

The Duchess. And my heart away?

Berthold. When have I made pretension to your heart?

I give none. I shall keep your honour safe;

With mine I trust you, as the sculptor trusts

Yon marble woman with the marble rcse,

Loose on her hand, she never will let fall,

In graceful, slight, silent security.

You will be proud of my world-wide career,

And I content in you the fair and good.

What were the use of planting a few seeds

The thankless climate never would mature —

Affections all repelled by circumstance?

Enough: to these no credit I attach, —

To what you own, find nothing to object.

Write simply on my requisition's face

What shall content my friends — that you admit,

As Colombe of Ravestein, the claims therein,

Or never need admit them, as my wife —

10 And either way, all's ended!

The Duchess. Let all end!

Berthold. The requisition!

Guibert. — Valence holds, of course!

Berthold. Desire his presence!

[ADOLF goes out.]

Courtiers [to each other]. Out it all comes yet;

He'll have his word against the bargain yet;

He's not the man to tamely acquiesce.

One passionate appeal — upbraiding even,

May turn the tide again. Despair not yet!

[They retire a little.]

Berthold [to MELCHIOR]. The Empire

has its old success, my friend!

Melchior. You've had your way: before the spokesman speaks,

Let me, but this once, work a problem out,

20 And ever more be dumb! The Empire wins?

To better purpose have I read my books!

Enter VALENCE.

Melchior [to the Courtiers]. Apart, my masters!

[TO VALENCE.] Sir, one word with you!

I am a poor dependant of the Prince's —

Pitched on to speak, as of slight consequence.

You are no higher, I find: in other words,

We two, as probably the wisest here,

Need not hold diplomatic talk like fools.

Suppose I speak, divesting the plain fact

Of all their tortuous phrases, fit for them?

30 Do you reply so, and what trouble saved!

The Prince, then — an embroiled strange heap of news

This moment reaches him — if true or false,

All dignity forbids he should inquire

In person, or by worthier deputy;

Yet somehow must inquire, lest slander come:

And so, 'tis I am pitched on. You have heard

His offer to your lady?

Valence. Yes.

Melchior. — Conceive

Her joy thereat?

Valence. I cannot.

Melchior. No one can.

All draws to a conclusion, therefore.

Valence. [aside]. So!

No after-judgment — no first thought 4 revised —

Her first and last decision! — me, she

leaves,

Takes him; a simple heart is flung aside,

The ermine o'er a heartless breast embraced.

Oh Heaven, this mockery has been played too oft!

Once, to surprise the angels — twice, that fiends

Recording, might be proud they chose not

so

Thrice, many thousand times, to teach

the world

All men should pause, misdoubt their strength, since men

Can have such chance yet fail so signally,

— But ever, ever this farewell to Heaven, 50

Welcome to earth — this taking death for

life —

This spurning love and kneeling to the

world —

Oh Heaven, it is too often and too old!

Melchior. Well, on this point, what but an absurd rumour

Arises — these, its source — its subject,

you!

Your faith and loyalty misconstruing,

They say, your service claims the lady's

hand!

Of course, nor Prince nor lady can respond:

Yet something must be said: for, were it

true

You made such claim, the Prince would . . . 60

Valence. Well, sir, — would?

Melchior. — Not only probably withdraw his suit,

But, very like, the lady might be forced

Accept your own. Oh, there are reasons

why!

But you'll excuse at present all save one, —

I think so. What we want is, your own

witness,

For, or against — her good, or yours:

decide!

Valence [aside]. Be it her good if she accounts it so!

[After a contest.] For what am I but hers, to choose as she?

Who knows how far, beside, the light from

her

May reach, and dwell with, what she looks 70

upon?

Melchior [to the Prince]. Now to him,

you!

Berthold [to VALENCE]. My friend acquaints you, sir,

The noise runs . . .

Valence.

— Prince, how fortunate are you,

Wedding her as you will, in spite of noise,
To show belief in love! Let her but love you,

All else you disregard! What else can be?
You know how love is incompatible
With falsehood — purifies, assimilates
All other passions to itself.

Melchior.

Ay, sir:

But softly! Where, in the object we select,
Such love is, perchance, wanting?

Valence.

Then indeed,

What is it you can take?

Melchior.

Nay, ask the world!

Youth, beauty, virtue, an illustrious name,
An influence o'er mankind.

Valence.

When man perceives . . .
— Ah, I can only speak as for myself!

The Duchess. Speak for yourself!

Valence. May I? — no, I have spoken,
And time's gone by. Had I seen such an one,

As I loved her — weighing thoroughly
that word —

So should my task be to evolve her love:
If for myself! — if for another — well.

Berthold. Heroic truly! And your sole reward, —

The secret pride in yielding up love's
right?

Valence. Who thought upon reward?

And yet how much

Comes after! — oh, what amplest recompense!

Is the knowledge of her, nought? the memory, nought?

— Lady, should such an one have looked on you,

Ne'er wrong yourself so far as quote the
world

And say, love can go unrequited here!
You will have blessed him to his whole life's end —

Low passions hindered, baser cares kept
back,

All goodness cherished where you dwelt
— and dwell.

What would he have? He holds you — you, both form

And mind, in his, — where self-love makes such room

For love of you, he would not serve you
now

The vulgar way, — repulse your enemies, Win you new realms, or best, to save the

old

Die blissfully — that's past so long ago!
He wishes you no need, thought, care of

him —

Your good, by any means, himself un-
seen,

Away, forgotten! — He gives that life's task up,

As it were . . . but this charge which I return —

[Offers the requisition, which she takes.

Wishing your good.

The Duchess [having subscribed it]. And opportune, sir —

Since at a birthday's close, like this of
mine,

Good wishes gentle deeds reciprocate.
Most on a wedding-day, as mine is too,

Should gifts be thought of: yours comes first by right.

Ask of me!

Berthold. He shall have whate'er he asks,

For your sake and his own.

Valence [aside]. If I should ask —

The withered bunch of flowers she wears
— perhaps,

One last touch of her hand, I never more shall see!

[After a pause, presenting his paper to the Prince.

Cleves' Prince, redress the wrongs of Cleves!

Berthold. I will, sir!

The Duchess [as VALENCE prepares to retire]. — Nay, do out your duty,
first!

You bore this paper; I have registered
My answer to it: read it and have done!

[VALENCE reads it.

I take him — give up Juliers and the
world.

This is my Birthday.

Melchior.

Berthold, my one hero
Of the world she gives up, one friend worth

my books,

Sole man I think it pays the pains to
watch, —

Speak, for I know you through your Popes and Kings!

Berthold [after a pause]. Lady, well rewarded! Sir, as well deserved!

I could not imitate — I hardly envy —
I do admire you. All is for the best.

Too costly a flower were this, I see it
now,

To pluck and set upon my barren helm
To wither — any garish plume will do.

I'll not insult you and refuse your Duchy —
You can so well afford to yield it me,

And I were left, without it, sadly lorn.
As it is — for me — if that will flatter

you,

A somewhat wearier life seems to remain
Than I thought possible where . . .

'faith, their life

Begins already! They're too occupied
To listen: and few words content me

best.

[Abruptly to the Courtiers.] I am your Duke, though! Who obey me here?

The Duchess. Adolf and Sabyne follow
us —

Guibert [starting from the Courtiers]. — And I?

Do I not follow them, if I mayn't you?
 Shall not I get some little duties up
 At Ravestein and emulate the rest?
 God save you, Gaucelme! 'Tis my Birthday, too!

Berthold. You happy handful that remain with me

. . . That is, with Dietrich the black Barnabite

I shall leave over you — will earn your wages

Or Dietrich has forgot to ply his trade!
 Meantime, — go copy me the precedents
 Of every installation, proper styles
 And pedigrees of all your Juliers' Dukes, — While I prepare to plod on my old
 way,

And somewhat wearily, I must confess!

The Duchess [with a light joyous laugh as she turns from them]. Come, Valence, to our friends, God's earth . . .

Valence [as she falls into his arms].

— And thee!

DRAMATIC ROMANCES.

184- TO 185-.

INCIDENT OF THE FRENCH CAMP.

I.

You know, we French stormed Ratisbon:
A mile or so away,
On a little mound, Napoleon
Stood on our storming-day;
With neck out-thrust, you fancy how,
Legs wide, arms locked behind,
As if to balance the prone brow
Oppressive with its mind.

II.

Just as perhaps he mused "My plans
"That soar, to earth may fall,
"Let once my army-leader Lannes
"Waver at yonder wall," —
Out 'twixt the battery-smokes there flew
A rider, bound on bound Full-galloping; nor bridle drew
Until he reached the mound.

III.

Then off there flung in smiling joy,
And held himself erect
By just his horse's mane, a boy:
You hardly could suspect —
(So tight he kept his lips compressed, Scarce any blood came through)
You looked twice ere you saw his breast
Was all but shot in two.

IV.

"Well," cried he, "Emperor, by God's grace
"We've got you Ratisbon!
"The Marshal's in the market-place,
"And you'll be there anon
"To see your flag-bird flap his vans
"Where I, to heart's desire,
"Perched him!" The chief's eye flashed;
his plans
Soared up again like fire.

V.

The chief's eye flashed; but presently Softened itself, as sheathes
A film the mother-eagle's eye
When her bruised eaglet breathes;
"You're wounded!" "Nay," the soldier's pride Touched to the quick, he said:
"I'm killed, Sire!" And his chief beside Smiling the boy fell dead.

THE PATRIOT.

AN OLD STORY.

I.

It was roses, roses, all the way,
With myrtle mixed in my path like mad:
The house-roofs seemed to heave and sway,
The church-spires flamed, such flags they had,
A year ago on this very day.

II.

The air broke into a mist with bells,
The old walls rocked with the crowd and cries.
Had I said, "Good folk, mere noise repels —
"But give me your sun from yonder
skies!"
They had answered, "And afterward, 50 what else?"

III.

Alack, it was I who leaped at the sun
To give it my loving friends to keep!
Nought man could do, have I left undone:
And you see my harvest, what I reap
This very day, now a year is run.

IV.

There's nobody on the house-tops now —
Just a palsied few at the windows set;
For the best of the sight is, all allow,
At the Shambles' Gate — or, better yet,
By the very scaffold's foot, I trow. 60

V.

I go in the rain, and, more than needs,
A rope cuts both my wrists behind;
And I think, by the feel, my forehead
bleeds,
For they fling, whoever has a mind,
Stones at me for my year's misdeeds.

VI.

Thus I entered, and thus I go!
In triumphs, people have dropped down
dead.
"Paid by the world, what dost thou owe "Me?" — God might question; now
instead,
'Tis God shall repay: I am safer so. 70

MY LAST DUCHESS.

FERRARA.

THAT's my last Duchess painted on the wall,
 Looking as if she were alive. I call That piece a wonder, now: Frà Pandolf's
 hands
 Worked busily a day, and there she stands,
 Will't please you sit and look at her?
 I said.
 "Frà Pandolf" by design, for never read Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
 The depth and passion of its earnest
 glance,
 But to myself they turned (since none puts by 70 The curtain I have drawn for you, but I)
 And seemed as they would ask me, if they
 durst,
 How such a glance came there; so, not
 the first
 Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, 'twas
 not
 Her husband's presence only, called that spot
 Of joy into the Duchess' cheek: perhaps Frà Pandolf chanced to say "Her mantle laps
 "Over my lady's wrist too much," or
 "Paint
 "Must never hope to reproduce the faint
 "Half-flush that dies along her throat:"
 such stuff
 20 Was courtesy, she thought, and cause
 enough
 For calling up that spot of joy. She had A heart — how shall I say? — too soon made glad,
 Too easily impressed; she liked what'er
 She looked on, and her looks went everywhere.
 Sir, 'twas all one! My favour at her
 breast,
 The dropping of the daylight in the West,
 The bough of cherries some officious fool Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
 She rode with round the terrace — all and each 30 Would draw from her alike the approving
 speech,
 Or blush, at least. She thanked men, ~~not~~ good! but thanked.
 Somewhat I know not how — as if she ranked
 My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name With anybody's gift. Who'd stoop to blame
 This sort of trifling? Even had you skill

In speech — (which I have not) — to make your will Quite clear to such an one, and say, "Just
 this
 "Or that in you disgusts me; here you miss,
 "Or there exceed the mark" — and if she let Herself be lessoned so, nor plainly set 40 Her wits to yours, forsooth, and made excuse,
 E'en then would be some stooping;
 and I choose Never to stoop. Oh sir, she smiled, no
 doubt,
 Whene'er I passed her; but who passed without Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands;
 Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands
 As if alive. Will't please you rise? We'll meet
 The company below, then. I repeat,
 The Count your master's known munificence
 Is ample warrant that no just pretence
 Of mine for dowry will be disallowed;
 Though his fair daughter's self, as I avowed
 At starting, is my object. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. Notice Neptune,
 though,
 Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity,
 Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for me!

COUNT GISMOND.

AIX IN PROVENCE.

I.

CHRIST God who savest man, save most
 Of men Count Gismond who saved me!
 Count Gauthier, when he chose his post,
 Chose time and place and company
 To suit it; when he struck at length
 My honour, 'twas with all his strength.

II.

And doubtlessly ere he could draw
 All points to one, he must have schemed!
 That miserable morning saw Few half so happy as I seemed,
 While being dressed in queen's array
 To give our tourney prize away.

III.

I thought they loved me, did me grace
 To please themselves; 'twas all their
 deed;
 God makes, or fair or foul, our face;
 If showing mine so caused to bleed

My cousins' hearts, they should have dropped
A word, and straight the play had stopped.

IV.

They, too, so beauteous! Each a queen
By virtue of her brow and breast;
Not needing to be crowned, I mean,
As I do. E'en when I was dressed,
Had either of them spoke, instead
Of glancing sideways with still head!

V.

But no: they let me laugh, and sing
My birthday song quite through, adjust
The last rose in my garland, fling
A last look on the mirror, trust
My arms to each an arm of theirs,
And so descend the castle-stairs—

VI.

And come out on the morning-troop
Of merry friends who kissed my cheek,
And called me queen, and made me stoop
Under the canopy—(a streak
That pierced it, of the outside sun, Powdered with gold its gloom's soft dun)—

VII.

And they could let me take my state
And foolish throne amid applause
Of all come there to celebrate
My queen's-day—Oh I think the cause
Of much was, they forgot no crowd
Makes up for parents in their shroud!

VIII.

However that be, all eyes were bent
Upon me, when my cousins cast
Theirs down; 'twas time I should present
The victor's crown, but . . . there,
'twill last
No long time . . . the old mist again
Blinds me as then it did. How vain!

IX.

See! Gismond's at the gate, in talk
With his two boys: I can proceed.
Well, at that moment, who should stalk
Forth boldly—to my face, indeed—
But Gauthier, and he thundered "Stay!"
And all stayed. "Bring no crowns, I say!"

X.

"Bring torches! Wind the penance-sheet
"About her! Let her shun the chaste,
"Or lay herself before their feet!
"Shall she whose body I embraced
"A long time, queen it in the day?
"For honour's sake no crowns, I say!"

XI.

I? What I answered? As I live,
I never fancied such a thing
As answer possible to give.
What says the body when they spring
Some monstrous torture engine's wheel
Strength on it? No more says the soul. 54

XII.

Till out strode Gismond; then I knew That I was saved. I never met
His face before, but, at first view,
I felt quite sure that God had set Himself to Satan; who would spend
A minute's mistrust on the end?

XIII.

He strode to Gauthier, in his thro'— Gave him the lie, then struck his mouth
With one back-handed blow that wrote
In blood men's verdict there. North, 60
South,
East, West, I looked. The lie was dead,
And damned, and truth stood up instead.

XIV.

This glads me most, that I enjoyed
The heart of the joy, with my content
In watching Gismond unalloyed
By any doubt of the event:
God took that on him—I was bid
Watch Gismond for my part: I did.

XV.

Did I not watch him while he let
His armourer just brace his greaves, 70
Rivet his hauberk, on the fret
The while! His feet . . . my memory
leaves
No least stamp out, nor how anon
He pulled his ringing gauntlets on.

XVI.

And e'en before the trumpet's sound
Was finished, prone lay the false
knight,
Prone as his lie, upon the ground:
Gismond flew at him, used no sleight
O' the sword, but open-breasted drove,
Cleaving till out the truth he cleve. 80

XVII.

Which done, he dragged him to my feet
And said "Here die, but end thy breath
"In full confession, lest thou fleet
"From my first, to God's second death!
"Say, hast thou lied?" And, "I have lied
"To God and her," he said, and died.

XVIII.

Then Gismond, kneeling to me, asked — What safe my heart holds, though no
 word
 Could I repeat now, if I tasked
 My powers for ever, to a third
 Dear even as you are. Pass the rest
 Until I sank upon his breast.

XIX.

Over my head his arm he flung Against the world; and scarce I felt
 His sword (that dripped by me and swung)
 10 A little shifted in its belt:
 For he began to say the while
 How South our home lay many a mile.

XX.

So 'mid the shouting multitude
 We two walked forth to never more Return. My cousins have pursued
 Their life, untroubled as before
 I vexed them. Gauthier's dwelling-place
 God lighten! May his soul find grace!

XXI.

Our elder boy has got the clear 20 Great brow; tho' when his brother's black
 Full eye shows scorn, it . . . Gismond
 here?
 And have you brought my tercel¹
 back?
 I just was telling Adela
 How many birds it struck since May.

THE BOY AND THE ANGEL.

MORNING, evening, noon and night,
 "Praise God!" sang Theocrite.

Then to his poor trade he turned,
 Whereby the daily meal was earned.

Hard he laboured, long and well;
 30 O'er his work the boy's curls fell.

But ever, at each period,
 He stopped and sang, "Praise God!"

Then back again his curls he threw,
 And cheerful turned to work anew.

Said Blaise, the listening monk, "Well
 done;

"I doubt not thou art heard, my son:

"As well as if thy voice to-day
 "Were praising God, the Pope's great way.

¹ A male of the peregrine falcon.

"This Easter Day, the Pope at Rome
 "Praises God from Peter's dome."

Said Theocrite, "Would God that I "Might praise him, that great way, and die!"

Night passed, day shone,
 And Theocrite was gone.

With God a day endures away,
 A thousand years are but a day.

God said in heaven, "Nor day nor night
 "Now brings the voice of my delight."

Then Gabriel, like a rainbow's birth,
 Spread his wings and sank to earth;

Entered in flesh, the empty cell,
 Lived there, and played the craftsman
 well;

And morning, evening, noon and night,
 Praised God in place of Theocrite.

And from a boy, to youth he grew:
 The man put off the stripling's hue:

The man matured and fell away
 Into the season of decay:

And ever o'er the trade he bent,
 And ever lived on earth content.

(He did God's will; to him, all one If on the earth or in the sun.)

God said, "A praise is in mine ear;
 "There is no doubt in it, no fear:

"So sing old worlds, and so
 "New worlds that from my footstool go.

"Clearer loves sound other ways:
 "I miss my little human praise."

Then forth sprang Gabriel's wings, off fell
 The flesh disguise, remained the cell.

'Twas Easter Day: he flew to Rome,
 And paused above Saint Peter's dome.

In the tiring-room close by
 The great outer gallery,

With his holy vestments dight,
 Stood the new Pope, Theocrite.

And all his past career
 Came back upon him clear,

Since when, a boy, he plied his trade,
 Till on his life the sickness weighed;

And in his cell, when death drew near,
An angel in a dream brought cheer:

And rising from the sickness drear
He grew a priest, and now stood here.

To the East with praise he turned,
And on his sight the angel burned.

"I bore thee from thy craftsman's cell
"And set thee here; I did not well.

"Vainly I left my angel-sphere,
"Vain was thy dream of many a year.

"Thy voice's praise seemed weak; it dropped

"Creation's chorus stopped!

"Go back and praise again
"The early way, while I remain.

"With that weak voice of our disdain,
"Take up creation's pausing strain.

"Back to the cell and poor employ "Resume the craftsman and the boy!"

Theocrite grew old at home;
A new Pope dwelt in Peter's dome.

One vanished as the other died:
They sought God side by side.

INSTANS TYRANNUS.

I.

OF the million or two, more or less,
I rule and possess,
One man, for some cause undefined,
Was least to my mind.

II.

I struck him, he grovelled of course
For, what was his force?
I pinned him to earth with my weight
And persistence of hate:
And he lay, would not moan, would not
curse,
As his lot might be worse.

III.

Were the object less mean, would he
stand
At the swing of my hand!
For obscurity helps him and blots
The hole where he squats."
o, I set my five wits on the stretch
To inveigle the wretch.
All in vain! Gold and jewels I threw,
till he couched there perdue;

I tempted his blood and his flesh,
Hid in roses my mesh,
Choicest cates and the flagon's best spilt:
Still he kept to his filth.

IV.

Had he kith now or kin, were access
To his heart, did I press:
Just a son or a mother to seize!
No such booty as these.
Were it simply a friend to pursue Mid my million or two,
Who could pay me in person or pelf
What he owes me himself!
No; I could not but smile through my chafe:
For the fellow lay safe
As his mates do, the midge and the nit,
Through minuteness, to wit.

V.

Then a humour more great took its place
At the thought of his face,
The droop, the low cares of the mouth,
The trouble uncouth
"Twixt the brows, all that air one is fain
To put out of its pain.
And, "no!" I admonished myself,
"Is one mocked by an elf,
"Is one baffled by toad or by rat?
"The gravamen's in that!
"How the lion, who crouches to suit
"His back to my foot,
"Would admire that I stand in debate!
"But the small turns the great
"If it vexes you, - that is the thing!
"Toad or rat vex the king?
"Though I waste half my realm to unearth
"Toad or rat, 'tis well worth!"

VI.

So, I soberly laid my last plan
To extinguish the man.
Round his creep-hole, with never a break
Ran my fires for his sake;
Over head, did my thunder combine
With my underground mine:
Till I looked from my labour content
To enjoy the event.

VII.

When sudden . . . how think ye, the end?
Did I say "without friend"?
Say rather, from marge to blue marge
The whole sky grew his targe
With the sun's self for visible boss,
While an Arm ran across
Which the earth heaved beneath like a breast
Where the wretch was safe prest!
Do you see? Just my vengeance complete.

The man sprang to his feet,
 Stood erect, caught at God's skirts, and prayed!
 —So, I was afraid!

MESMERISM.

I.

ALL I believed is true!
 I am able yet
 All I want, to get
 By a method as strange as new:
 Dare I trust the same to you?

II.

10 It at night, when doors are shut,
 And the wood-worm picks,
 And the death-watch ticks,
 And the bar has a flag of smut,
 And a cat's in the water-butt —

III.

And the socket floats and flares,
 And the house-beams groan,
 And a foot unknown
 Is surmised on the garret-stairs,
 And the locks slip unawares —

IV.

20 And the spider, to serve his ends,
 By a sudden thread,
 Arms and legs outspread,
 On the table's midst descends,
 Comes to find, God knows what
 friends! —

V.

'f since eve drew in, I say,
 I have sat and brought (So to speak) my thought
 To bear on the woman away,
 Till I felt my hair turn grey —

VI.

30 Till I seemed to have and hold,
 In the vacancy
 'Twixt the wall and me,
 From the hair-plait's chestnut gold
 To the foot in its muslin fold —

VII.

Have and hold, then and there,
 Her, from head to foot,
 Breathing and mute,
 Passive and yet aware,
 In the grasp of my steady stare —

VIII.

40 Hold and have, there and then,
 All her body and soul

That completes my whole,
 All that women add to men,
 In the clutch of my steady ken —

IX.

Having and holding, till
 I imprint her fast
 On the void at last
 As the sun does whom he will
 By the calotypist's skill —

X.

Then, — if my heart's strength serve,
 And through all and each
 Of the veils I reach
 To her soul and never swerve,
 Knitting an iron nerve —

XI.

Command her soul to advance
 And inform the shape
 Which has made escape
 And before my countenance
 Answers me glance for glance —

XII.

I, still with a gesture fit
 Of my hands that best
 Do my soul's behest,
 Pointing the power from it,
 While myself do steadfast sit —

XIII.

Steadfast and still the same
 On my object bent,
 While the hands give vent
 To my ardour and my aim
 And break into very flame —

XIV.

Then I reach, I must believe,
 Not her soul in vain,
 For to me again
 It reaches, and past retrieve
 Is wound in the toils I weave;

XV.

And must follow as I require,
 As befits a thrall,
 Bringing flesh and all,
 Essence and earth-attire,
 To the source of the tractile fire:

XVI.

Till the house called hers, not mine,
 With a growing weight
 Seems to suffocate
 If she break not its leaden line
 And escape from its close confine.

XVII.

Out of doors into the night!
 On to the maze
 Of the wild wood-ways,
 Not turning to left nor right
 From the pathway, blind with sight —

XVIII.

Making thro' rain and wind
 O'er the broken shrubs,
 'Twixt the stems and stubs,
 With a still, composed, strong mind,
 Nor a care for the world behind —

XIX.

Swifter and still more swift,
 As the crowding peace
 Doth to joy increase
 In the wide blind eyes uplift
 Thro' the darkness and the drift!

XX.

While I — to the shape, I too
 Feel my soul dilate
 Nor a whit abate,
 And relax not a gesture due,
 As I see my belief come true.

XXI.

For, there! have I drawn or no
 Life to that lip?
 Do my fingers dip
 In a flame which again they throw
 On the cheek that breaks a-glow?

XXII.

Ha! was the hair so first?
 What, unfileted,
 Made alive, and spread
 Through the void with a rich outburst,
 Chestnut gold-interspersed?

XXIII.

Like the doors of a casket-shrine,
 See, on either side,
 Her two arms divide
 Till the heart betwixt makes sign,
 Take me, for I am thine!

XXIV.

"Now — now" — the door is heard!
 Hark, the stairs! and near — Nearer — and here —
 "Now!" and at call the third
 She enters without a word.

XXV.

On doth she march and on
 To the fancied shape;
 It is, past escape,

Herself, now: the dream is done
 And the shadow and she are one.

XXVI.

First I will pray. Do Thou
 That ownest the soul,
 Yet wilt grant control
 To another, nor disallow
 For a time, restrain me now!

XXVII.

I admonish me while I may,
 Not to squander guilt,
 Since require Thou wilt
 At my hand its price one day!
 What the price is, who can say?

THE GLOVE.

(PETER RONSARD loquitur.)

"HEIGHO!" yawned one day King Francis,
 "Distance all value enhances!
 "When a man's busy, why, leisure
 "Strikes him as wonderful pleasure:
 "Faith, and at leisure once is he?
 "Straightway he wants to be busy. 6a
 "Here we've got peace; and aghast I'm "Caught thinking war the true pastime.
 "Is there a reason in metre?
 "Give us your speech, master Peter!"
 I who, if mortal dare say so,
 Ne'er am at loss with my Naso,
 "Sire," I replied, "joys prove cloudlets:
 "Men are the merest Ixions" —
 Here the King whistled aloud, "Let's 70
 "— Heigho — go look at our lions!
 Such are the sorrowful chances
 If you talk fine to King Francis.

And so, to the courtyard proceeding,
 Our company, Francis was leading,
 Increased by new followers tenfold:
 Before he arrived at the penfold;
 Lords, ladies, like clouds which bed...
 At sunset the western horizon.
 And Sir De Lorge pressed 'mid the fore- 80
 most

With the dame he professed to adore most.
 Oh, what a face! One by fits eyed
 Here, and the horrible pitside;
 For the penfold surrounded a hollow
 Which led where the eye scarce dared
 follow,

And shelved to the chamber secluded
 Where Bluebeard, the great lion, brooded.
 The King hailed his keeper, an Arab
 As glossy and black as a scarab,¹
 And bade him make sport and at once stir 90
 Up and out of his den the old monster.

They opened a hole in the wire-work
 Across it, and dropped there a firework,
 And fled: one's heart's beating redoubled;
 A pause, while the pit's mouth was troubled,
 The blackness and silence so utter,
 By the firework's slow sparkling and sputter;
 Then earth in a sudden contortion
 Gave out to our gaze her abortion.
 Such a brute! Were I friend Clement
 Marot

10 (Whose experience of nature's but narrow,
 And whose faculties move in no small mist
 When he versifies David the Psalmist)
 I should study that brute to describe you Illum Juda Leonem de Tribu.
 One's whole blood grew curdling and creepy

To see the black mane, vast and heapy,
 The tail in the air stiff and straining,
 The wide eyes, nor waxing nor waning,
 As over the barrier which bounded

20 His platform, and us who surrounded
 The barrier, they reached and they rested
 On space that might stand him in best
 stead:

For who knew, he thought, what the amaze-
 ment,

The eruption of clatter and blaze meant,
 And if, in this minute of wonder,
 No outlet, 'mid lightning and thunder,
 Lay broad, and, his shackles all shivered,
 The lion at last was delivered?

Ay, that was the open sky o'erhead!

30 And you saw by the flash on his forehead,
 By the hope in those eyes wide and steady,
 He was leagues in the desert already,
 Driving the flocks up the mountain,
 Or catlike couched hard by the fountain,
 To waylay the date-gathering negress:
 So guarded he entrance or egress.

"How he stands!" quoth the King: "we may well swear,

("No novice, we've won our spurs elsewhere

"And so can afford the confession.)

40 "We exercise wholesome discretion

"In keeping aloof from his threshold;

"Once hold you, those jaws want no fresh
 hold,

"Their first would too pleasantly purloin

"The visitor's brisket or surloin:

"But who's he would prove so fool-hardy?

"Not the best man of Marignan, pardie!"

The sentence no sooner was uttered,
 Than over the rails a glove fluttered,
 Fell close to the lion, and rested:

50 The dame 'twas, who flung it and jested
 With life so, De Lorge had been wooing
 For months past; he sat there pursuing His suit, weighing out with nonchalance
 Fine speeches like gold from a balance.

Sound the trumpet, no true knight's a tarrier!

De Lorge made one leap at the barrier, Walked straight to the glove, — while the lion

Ne'er moved, kept his far-reaching eye on The palm-tree-edged desert-spring's sapphire,

And the musky oiled skin of the Kaffir, — 60
 Picked it up, and as calmly retreated,
 Leaped back where the lady was seated,
 And full in the face of its owner
 Flung the glove.

"Your heart's queen, you dethrone her?
 "So should I!" — cried the King —

"'twas mere vanity,
 Not love, set that task to humanity!"
 Lords and ladies alike turned with loathing
 From such a proved wolf in sheep's clothing.

Not so, I; for I caught an expression 70
 In her brow's undisturbed self-possession Amid the Court's scoffing and merri-
 ment, —

As if from no pleasing experiment
 She rose, yet of pain not much heedful
 So long as the process was needful, —
 As if she had tried in a crucible,
 To what "speeches like gold" were reducible,

And, finding the finest prove copper,
 Felt the smoke in her face was but proper;
 To know what she had not to trust to, 80
 Was worth all the ashes and dust too.
 She went out 'mid hooting and laughter;
 Clement Marot stayed; I followed after,
 And asked, as a grace, what it all meant?
 If she wished not the rash deed's recal-
 ment?

"For I" — so I spoke — "am a poet:
 "Human nature, — behoves that I know
 it!"

She told me, "Too long had I heard

"Of the deed proved alone by the word:

"For my love — what De Lorge would not dare!

"With my scorn — what De Lorge could compare!

"And the endless descriptions of death

"He would brave when my lip formed a
 breath,

"I must reckon as braved, or, of course,

"Doubt his word — and moreover, per-
 force,

"For such gifts as no lady could spurn,

"Must offer my love in return.

"When I looked on your lion, it brought

"All the dangers at once to my thought,

"Encountered by all sorts of men,

"Before he was lodged in his den, —

"From the poor slave whose club or bare hands
 "Dug the trap, set the snare on the sands,
 "With no King and no Court to applaud,
 "By no shame, should he shrink, overawed,
 "Yet to capture the creature made shift
 "That his rude boys might laugh at the gift,
 "— To the page who last leaped o'er the fence
 "Of the pit, on no greater pretence
 "Than to get back the bonnet he dropped,
 "Lest his pay for a week should be stopped.
 "So, wiser I judged it to make "One trial what 'death for my sake'
 "Really meant, while the power was yet
 mine,
 "Than to wait until time should define
 "Such a phrase not so simply as I,
 "Who took it to mean just 'to die.'
 "The blow a glove gives is but weak:
 "Does the mark yet discolour my cheek?
 "But when the heart suffers a blow,
 "Will the pain pass so soon, do you
 know?"

I looked, as away she was sweeping.
 And saw a youth eagerly keeping
 As close as he dared to the doorway.
 No doubt that a noble should more weigh
 His life than befits a plebeian;
 And yet, had our brute been Nemean —
 (I judge by a certain calm fervour
 The youth stepped with, forward to serve
 her)
 — He'd have scarce thought you did him
 the worst turn
 If you whispered "Friend, what you'd get, first earn!"
 And when, shortly after, she carried Her shame from the Court, and they married,
 To that marriage some happiness, maugre
 The voice of the Court, I dared augur.

For De Lorge, he made women with men vie,
 Those in wonder and praise, these in envy;
 And in short stood so plain a head taller
 That he wooed and won . . . how do you call her?
 The beauty, that rose in the sequel
 To the King's love, who loved her a week
 well.
 And 'twas noticed he never would honour
 De Lorge (who looked daggers upon her)
 With the easy commission of stretching
 His legs in the service, and fetching
 His wife, from her chamber, those straying
 Sad gloves she was always mislaying,
 While the King took the closet to chat
 in, —
 But of course this adventure came pat in.

And never the King told the story,
 How bringing a glove brought such glory, 50
 But the wife smiled — "His nerves are grown firmer:
 "Mine he brings now and utters no murmur."

Venienti occurrere morbo!
 With which moral I drop my theorbo.

TIME'S REVENGES.

I've a Friend, over the sea;
 I like him, but he loves me.
 It all grew out of the books I write;
 They find such favour in his sight
 That he slaughters you with savage looks
 Because you don't admire my books. 60
 He does himself though, — and if some vein

Were to snap to-night in this heavy brain,
 To-morrow month, if I lived to try,
 Round should I just turn quietly,
 Or out of the bedclothes stretch my hand
 Till I found him, come from his foreign
 land

To be my nurse in this poor place,
 And make my broth and wash my face
 And light my fire and, all the while,
 Bear with his old good-humoured smile 70
 That I told him "Better have kept away
 "Than come and kill me, night and day,
 "With, worse than fever throbs and shoots,
 "The creaking of his clumsy boots."
 I am as sure that this he would do,
 As that Saint Paul's is striking two.
 And I think I rather . . . woe is me!
 — Yes, rather would see him than not see,
 If lifting a hand could seat him there
 Before me in the empty chair 80
 To night, when my head aches indeed,
 And I can neither think nor read
 Nor make these purple fingers hold
 The pen; this garret's freezing cold!

And I've a Lady — there he wakes,
 The laughing fiend and prince of snakes
 Within me, at her name, to pray
 Fate send some creature in the way
 Of my love for her, to be down-torn,
 Upthrust and outward-borne, 90
 So I might prove myself that sea
 Of passion which I needs must be!
 Call my thoughts false and my fancies quaint
 And my style infirm and its figures faint,
 All the critics say, and more blame yet,
 And not one angry word you get.
 But, please you, wonder I would put My cheek beneath that lady's foot
 Rather than trample under mine
 The laurels of the Florentine, 100
 And you shall see how the devil spends

A fire God gave for other ends!
 I tell you, I stride up and down
 'This garret, crowned with love's best crown,
 And feasted with love's perfect feast,
 'To think I kill for her, at least,
 Body and soul and peace and fame,
 Alike youth's end and manhood's aim,

So is my spirit, as flesh with sin,
 Filled full, eaten out and in 10 With the face of her, the eyes of her,
 The lips, the little chin, the stir
 Of shadow round her mouth; and she I'll tell you, — calmly would decree
 That I should roast at a slow fire,
 If that would compass her desire
 And make her one whom they invite
 To the famous ball to-morrow night.

There may be heaven: there must be hell;
 Meantime, there is our earth here — well!

THE ITALIAN IN ENGLAND.

20 THAT second time they hunted me
 From hill to plain, from shore to sea,
 And Austria, hounding far and wide
 Her blood-hounds thro' the country-side,
 Breathed hot and instant on my trace,
 I made six days a hiding-place
 Of that dry green old aqueduct Where I and Charles, when boys, have plucked

The fire-flies from the roof above,
 Bright creeping thro' the moss they love:
 30 How long it seems since Charles was lost!

Six days the soldiers crossed and crossed
 The country in my very sight;
 And when that peril ceased at night,
 The sky broke out in red dismay
 With signal fires; well, there I lay
 Close covered o'er in my recess,
 Up to the neck in ferns and cress,
 Thinking on Metternich our friend,
 And Charles's miserable end,

40 And much beside, two days; the third,
 Hunger o'ercame me when I heard
 The peasants from the village go
 To work among the maize; you know,
 With us in Lombardy, they bring Provisions packed on mules, a string
 With little bells that cheer their task,
 And casks, and boughs on every cask
 To keep the sun's heat from the wine;
 These I let pass in jingling line,
 50 And, close on them, dear noisy crew,
 The peasants from the village, too;
 For at the very rear would troop
 Their wives and sisters in a group
 To help, I knew. When these had passed,
 I threw my glove to strike the last,
 Taking the chance: she did not start,
 Much less cry out, but stooped apart,

One instant rapidly glanced round,
 And saw me beckon from the ground.
 A wild bush grows and hides my crypt; 60
 She picked my glove up while she stripped
 A branch off, then rejoined the rest
 With that; my glove lay in her breast.
 Then I drew breath; they disappeared:
 It was for Italy I feared.

An hour, and she returned alone
 Exactly where my glove was thrown.
 Meanwhile came many thoughts: on me
 Rested the hopes of Italy.
 I had devised a certain tale 70
 Which, when 'twas told her, could not fail
 Persuade a peasant of its truth;
 I meant to call a freak of youth
 This hiding, and give hopes of pay,
 And no temptation to betray.
 But when I saw that woman's face,
 Its calm simplicity of grace,
 Our Italy's own attitude
 In which she walked thus far, and stood, 80
 Planting each naked foot so firm,
 To crush the snake and spare the worm —
 At first sight of her eyes, I said,
 "I am that man upon whose head
 "They fix the price, because I hate
 "The Austrians over us: the State
 "Will give you gold — oh, gold so much! —
 "If you betray me to their clutch,
 "And be your death, for aught I know,
 "If once they find you saved their foe.
 "Now, you must bring me food and drink, 90
 "And also paper, pen and ink,
 "And carry safe what I shall write
 "To Padua, which you'll reach at night
 "Before the duomo shuts; go in,
 "And wait till Tenebræ begin;
 "Walk to the third confessional,
 "Between the pillar and the wall,
 "And kneeling whisper, *Whence comes
 peace?*
 "Say it a second time, then cease;
 "And if the voice inside returns, 100
 "From Christ and Freedom; what concerns
 "The cause of Peace? — for answer, slip
 "My letter where you placed your lip;
 "Then come back happy we have done
 "Our mother service — I, the son,
 "As you the daughter of our land!"

Three mornings more, she took her stand
 In the same place, with the same eyes:
 I was no surer of sun-rise
 Than of her coming. We conferred 110
 Of her own prospects, and I heard
 She had a lover — stout and tall,
 She said — then let her eyelids fall,
 "He could do much" — as if some doubt Entered her heart, — then, passing out,
 "She could not speak for others, who
 "Had other thoughts; herself she knew."

And so she brought me drink and food.
 After four days, the scouts pursued
 Another path; at last arrived
 The help my Paduan friends contrived
 To furnish me: she brought the news.
 For the first time I could not choose
 But kiss her hand, and lay my own Upon her head — "This faith was shown "To Italy, our mother; she
 "Uses my hand and blesses thee."
 She followed down to the sea-shore;
 I left and never saw her more.

How very long since I have thought Concerning — much less wished for — aught

Beside the good of Italy,
 For which I live and mean to die!
 I never was in love; and since Charles proved false, what shall now convince.

My inmost heart I have a friend?
 However, if I pleased to spend Real wishes on myself — say, three —
 I know at least what one should be.
 I would grasp Metternich until
 I felt his red wet throat distil
 In blood thro' these two hands. And next,
 — Nor much for that am I perplexed
 Charles, perjured traitor, for his part,
 Should die slow of a broken heart
 Under his new employers. Last — Ah, there, what should I wish? For
 fast

Do I grow old and out of strength.
 If I resolved to seek at length
 My father's house again, how scared
 They all would look, and unprepared!
 My brothers live in Austria's pay — Disowned me long ago, men say;
 And all my early mates who used
 To praise me so — perhaps induced
 More than one early step of mine —
 Are turning wise: while some opine
 "Freedom grows licence," some suspect
 "Haste breeds delay," and recollect
 They always said, such premature Beginnings never could endure!
 So, with a sullen "All's for best,"
 The land seems settling to its rest.
 I think then, I should wish to stand
 This evening in that dear, lost land,
 Over the sea the thousand miles,
 And know if yet that woman smiles
 With the calm smile; some little farm
 She lives in there, no doubt: what harm
 If I sat on the door-side bench,
 And, while her spindle made a trench
 Fantastically in the dust,
 Inquired of all her fortunes — just
 Her children's ages and their names,
 And what may be the husband's aims
 For each of them. I'd talk this out,
 And sit there, for an hour about,

Then kiss her hand once more, and lay
 Mine on her head, and go my way.

So much for idle wishing — how
 It steals the time! To business now.

THE ENGLISHMAN IN ITALY.

PIANO DI SORRENTO.

FORTÙ, Fortù, my beloved one,
 Sit here by my side,
 On my knees put up both little feet!
 I was sure, if I tried,
 I could make you laugh spite of Scirecco.
 Now, open your eyes,
 Let me keep you amused till he vanish
 In black from the skies,
 With telling my memories over
 As you tell your beads;
 All the Plain saw me gather, I garland
 — The flowers or the weeds.

Time for rain! for your long hot dry Autumn
 Had net-worked with brown
 The white skin of each grape on the bunches,
 Marked like a quail's crown,
 Those creatures you make such account of,
 Whose heads, — speckled white
 Over brown like a great spider's back,
 As I told you last night, —
 Your mother bites off for her supper.
 Red-ripe as could be,
 Pomegranates were chapping and splitting
 In halves on the tree:
 And betwixt the loose walls of great flint-
 stone,
 Or in the thick dust
 On the path, or straight out of the rock-
 side,
 Wherever could thrust
 Some burnt sprig of bold hardy rock-flower
 Its yellow face up,
 For the prize were great butterflies fight-
 ing,
 Some five for one cup.
 So, I guessed, ere I got up this morning,
 What change was in store,
 By the quick rustle-down of the quail-nets
 Which woke me before
 I could open my shutter, made fast
 With a bough and a stone,
 And look thro' the twisted dead vine-twigs,
 Sole lattice that's known.
 Quick and sharp rang the rings down the net-poles,
 While, busy beneath,
 Your priest and his brother tugged at them,
 The rain in their teeth.
 And out upon all the flat house-roofs
 Where split figs lay drying,

The girls took the frails under cover:

Nor use seemed in trying

To get out the boats and go fishing,

For, under the cliff,

Fierce the black water frothed o'er the blind-rock.

No seeing our skiff

Arrive about noon from Amalfi,

— Our fisher arrive,

And pitch down his basket before us,

10 All trembling alive

With pink and grey jellies, your sea-fruit;

You touch the strange lumps,

And mouths gape there, eyes open, all manner

Of horns and of humps,

Which only the fisher looks grave at,

While round him like imps

Cling screaming the children as naked

And brown as his shrimps;

Himself too as bare to the middle

20 — You see round his neck

The string and its brass coin suspended,

That saves him from wreck.

But to-day not a boat reached Salerno,

So back, to a man,

Came our friends, with whose help in the vineyards

Grape-harvest began.

In the vat, halfway up in our house-side,

Like blood the juice spins,

While your brother all bare-legged is dancing

30 Till breathless he grins

Dead-beaten in effort on effort

To keep the grapes under,

Since still when he seems all but master,

In pours the fresh plunder

From girls who keep coming and going

With basket on shoulder,

And eyes shut against the rain's driving;

Your girls that are older,

For under the hedges of alce,

40 And where, on its bed

Of the orchard's black mould, the love-apple

Lies pulpy and red,

All the young ones are kneeling and filling

Their laps with the snails

Tempted out by this first rainy weather,

Your best of regales,

As to-night will be proved to my sorrow,

When, supping in state,

We shall feast our grape-gleaners (two dozen,

50 Three over one plate)

With lasagne so tempting to swallow

In slippery ropes,

And gourds fried in great purple slices,

That colour of popes.

Meantime, see the grape bunch they've brought you:

The rain-water slips

O'er the heavy blue bloom on each globe

Which the wasp to your lips

Still follows with fretful persistence:

Nay, taste, while awake,

This half of a curd-white smooth cheese-ball

That peels, flake by flake,

Like an onion, each smoother and whiter;

Next, sip this weak wine

From the thin green glass flask, with its stopper,

A leaf of the vine;

And end with the prickly-pear's red flesh

That leaves thro' its juice

The stony black seeds on your pearl-teeth.

Scirocco is loose!

70 Hark, the quick, whistling pelt of the olives

Which, thick in one's track,

Tempt the stranger to pick up and bite them,

Tho' not yet half black!

How the old twisted olive trunks shudder,

The medlars let fall

Their hard fruit, and the brittle great fig-trees

Snap off, figs and all,

For here comes the whole of the tempest!

No refuge, but creep

80 Back again to my side and my shoulder

And listen or sleep.

O how will your country show next week,

When all the vine-boughs

Have been stripped of their foliage to pasture

The mules and the cows?

Last eve, I rode over the mountains;

Your brother, my guide,

Soon left me, to feast on the myrtles

That offered, each side,

90 Their fruit-balls, black, glossy and luscious, —

Or strip from the sorbs

A treasure, or, rosy and wondrous,

Those hairy gold orbs!

But my mule picked his sure sober path out,

Just stopping to neigh

When he recognised down in the valley

His mates on their way

With the faggots and barrels of water;

And soon we emerged

100 From the plain, where the woods could scarce follow;

And still as we urged

Our way, the woods wondered, and left us,

As up still we trudged

Though the wild path grew wilder each instant,

And place was e'en grudged

'Mid the rock-chasms and piles of loose stones

Like the loose broken teeth

Of some monster which climbed there to die

From the ocean beneath —

Place was grudged to the silver-grey fume-wood

That clung to the path,

And dark rosemary ever a-dying
 That, 'spite the wind's wrath,
 So loves the salt rock's face to seaward,
 And lentisks¹ as staunch
 To the stone where they root and bear berries,
 And . . . what shows a branch
 Coral-coloured, transparent, with circlets
 Of pale seagreen leaves;
 Over all trod my mule with the caution
 Of gleaners o'er sheaves,
 Still, foot after foot like a lady,
 Till, round after round,
 He climbed to the top of Calvano,
 And God's own profound
 Was above me, and round me the mountains,
 And under, the sea,
 And within me my heart to bear witness
 What was and shall be.
 Oh, heaven and the terrible crystal!
 No rampart excludes
 Your eye from the life to be lived
 In the blue solitudes.
 Oh, those mountains, their infinite movement!
 Still moving with you;
 For, ever some new head and breast of them
 Thrusts into view
 To observe the intruder; you see it
 If quickly you turn
 And, before they escape you surprise them.
 They grudge you should learn
 How the soft plains they look on, lean over
 And love (they pretend) — Cover beneath them, the flat sea-pine crouches,
 The wild fruit-trees bend, E'en the myrtle-leaves curl, shrink and
 shut:
 All is silent and grave:
 'Tis a sensual and timorous beauty,
 How fair! but a slave.
 So, I turned to the sea; and there slumbered
 As greenly as ever
 Those isles of the siren, your Galli;
 No ages can sever
 The Three, nor enable their sister
 To join them, — halfway
 On the voyage, she looked at Ulysses —
 No farther to-day,
 Tho' the small one, just launched in the
 wave,
 Watches breast-high and steady
 From under the rock, her bold sister
 Swum halfway already.
 Fortū, shall we sail there together
 And see from the sides
 Quite new rocks show their faces, new haunts
 Where the siren abides?

Shall we sail round and round them, close
 over
 The rocks, tho' unseen,
 That ruffle the grey glassy water
 To glorious green?
 Then scramble from splinter to splinter,
 Reach land and explore,
 On the largest, the strange square black turret
 With never a door,
 Just a loop to admit the quick lizards;
 Then, stand there and hear
 The birds' quiet singing, that tells us
 What life is, so clear?
 — The secret they sang to Ulysses
 When, ages ago,
 He heard and he knew this life's secret
 I hear and I know. 70

Ah, see! The sun breaks o'er Calvano;
 He strikes the great gloom
 And flutters it o'er the mount's summit
 In airy gold fume.
 All is over. Look out, see the gipsy,
 Our tinker and smith,
 Has arrived, set up bellows and forge,
 And down-squatted forthwith
 To his hammering, under the wall there; 80
 One eye keeps aloof
 The urchins that itch to be putting His jews'-harps to proof,
 While the other, thro' locks of curled wire,
 Is watching how sleek Shines the hog, come to share in the windfall
 — Chew, abbot's own cheek!
 All is over. Wake up and come out now,
 And down let us go,
 And see the fine things got in order
 At church for the show 90
 Of the Sacrament, set forth this evening.
 To-morrow's the Feast
 Of the Rosary's Virgin, by no means Of Virgins the least,
 As you'll hear in the off-hand discourse
 Which (all nature, no art)
 The Dominican brother, these three weeks,
 Was getting by heart.
 Not a pillar nor post but is dizen'd
 With red and blue papers; 100
 All the roof waves with ribbons, each altar
 A-blaze with long tapers;
 But the great masterpiece is the scaffold
 Rigged glorious to hold
 All the fiddlers and fifers and drummers
 And trumpeters bold,
 Not afraid of Bellini nor Auber,
 Who, when the priest's hoarse,
 Will strike us up something that's brisk
 For the feast's second course. 110
 And then will the flaxen-wigged Image
 Be carried in pomp
 Thro' the plain, while in gallant procession
 The priests mean to stomp.

All round the glad church lie old bottles
 With gunpowder stopped,
 Which will be, when the Image re-enters,
 Religiously popped;
 And at night from the crest of Calvano
 Great bonfires will hang,
 On the plain will the trumpets join chorus,
 And more poppers bang.
 At all events, come — to the garden
 As far as the wall;
 See me tap with a hoe on the plaster
 Till out there shall fall
 A scorpion with wide angry nippers!

— “Such trifles!” you say?
 Forth, in my England at home,
 Men meet gravely to-day
 And debate, if abolishing Corn-laws
 Be righteous and wise
 — If ’twere proper, Scirocco should vanish
 In black from the skies!

IN A GONDOLA.

He sings.

I SEND my heart up to thee, all my heart
 In this my singing.
 For the stars help me, and the sea bears
 part;
 The very night is clinging Closer to Venice’ streets to leave one space
 Above me, whence thy face May light my joyous heart to thee its dwelling-place.

She speaks.

Say after me, and try to say
 My very words, as if each word
 Came from you of your own accord,
 In your own voice, in your own way:
 “This woman’s heart and soul and brain
 “Are mine as much as this gold chain
 “She bids me wear; which” (say again)
 “I choose to make by cherishing
 “A precious thing, or choose to fling
 “Over the boat-side, ring by ring.”
 And yet once more say . . . no word more Since words are only words. Give o’er!

Unless you call me, all the same,
 Familiarly by my pet name,
 Which if the Three should hear you call,
 And me reply to, would proclaim
 At once our secret to them all.
 Ask of me, too, command me, blame —
 Do, break down the partition-wall
 ’Twixt us, the daylight world beholds
 Curtained in dusk and splendid folds!
 What’s left but — all of me to take?
 I am the Three’s: prevent them, slake
 Your thirst! ’Tis said, the Arab sage,

In practising with gems, can loose
 Their subtle spirit in his cruce
 And leave but ashes: so, sweet mage,
 Leave them my ashes when thy use
 Sucks out my soul, thy heritage!

He sings.

I.

Past we glide, and past, and past!
 What’s that poor Agnese doing
 Where they make the shutters fast?
 Grey Zanobi’s just a-wooing
 To his couch the purchased bride:
 Past we glide!

II.

Past we glide, and past, and past!
 Why’s the Pucci Palace flaring
 Like a beacon to the blast?
 Guests by hundreds, not one caring
 If the dear host’s neck were wried:
 Past we glide!

She sings.

I.

The moth’s kiss, first!
 Kiss me as if you made believe
 You were not sure, this eve
 How my face, your flower, had pursed
 Its petals up; so, here and there
 You brush it, till I grow aware
 Who wants me, and wide ope I burst.

II.

The bee’s kiss, now!
 Kiss me as if you entered gay
 My heart at some noonday,
 A bud that dares not disallow
 The claim, so all is rendered up,
 And passively its shattered cup
 Over your head to sleep I bow.

He sings.

I.

What are we two?
 I am a Jew,
 And carry thee, farther than friends can pursue,
 To a feast of our tribe;
 Where they need thee to bribe
 The devil that blasts them unless he im-bite
 Thy . . . Scatter the vision for ever!
 And now,
 As of old, I am I, thou art thou!

II.

Say again, what we are?
 The sprite of a star,
 I lure thee above where the destinies bar

My plumes their full play
Till a ruddier ray
Than my pale one announce there is withering away
Some . . . Scatter the vision for ever!
And now,
As of old, I am I, thou art thou!

He muses.

Oh, which were best, to roam or rest?
The land's lap or the water's breast?
To sleep on yellow millet-sheaves,
Or swim in lucid shallows just Eluding water-lily leaves,
An inch from Death's black fingers, thrust
To lock you, whom release he must;
Which life were best on Summer eves?

He speaks, musing.

Lie back; could thought of mine improve
you?
From this shoulder let there spring
A wing; from this, another wing;
Wings, not legs and feet, shall move you!
Snow-white must they spring, to blend
With your flesh, but I intend
They shall deepen to the end,
Broader, into burning gold,
Till both wings crescent-wise enfold
Your perfect self, from 'neath your feet
To o'er your head, where, lo, they meet
As if a million sword-blades hurled Defiance from you to the world!

Rescue me thou, the only real!
And scare away this mad ideal
That came, nor motions to depart!
Thanks! Now, stay ever as thou art!

Still he muses.

I.

What if the Three should catch at last Thy serenader? While there's cast
Paul's cloak about my head, and fast
Gian pinions me, Himself has past
His stylet thro' my back; I reel;
And . . . is it thou I feel?

II.

They trail me, these three godless knaves,
Past every church that saints and saves,
Nor stop till, where the cold sea raves
By Lido's wet accursed graves,
They scoop mine, roll me to its brink,
And . . . on thy breast I sink!

She replies, musing.

Dip your arm o'er the breast-side, elbow-deep,
As I do: thus: were death so unlike sleep,

Caught this way? Death's to fear from flame or steel,
Or poison doubtless; but from water —
feel!
Go find the bottom! Would you stay me?
There!
Now pluck a great blade of that ribbon-
grass
To plait in where the foolish jewel was,
I flung away: since you have praised my
hair,
'Tis proper to be choice in what I wear.

He speaks.

Row home? must we row home? Too surely Know I where its front's demurely
Over the Giudecca piled;
Window just with window mating,
Door on door exactly waiting,
All's the set face of a child:
But behind it, where's a trace
Of the staidness and reserve,
And formal lines without a curve,
In the same child's playing-face?
No two windows look one way
O'er the small sea-water thread
Below them. Ah, the autumn day
I, passing, saw you overhead!
First, out a cloud of curtain blew,
Then a sweet cry, and last came you —
To catch your lory¹ that must needs
Escape just then, of all times then,
To peck a tall plant's fleecy seeds,
And make me happiest of men.
I scarce could breathe to see you reach
So far back o'er the balcony
To catch him ere he climbed too high Above you in the Smyrna peach
That quick the round smooth cord of gold,
This coiled hair on your head, unrolled,
Fell down you like a gorgeous snake
The Roman girls were wont, of old,
When Rome there was, for coolness' sake
To let lie curling o'er their bosoms.
Dear lory, may his beak retain Ever its delicate rose stain
As if the wounded lotus-blossoms
Had marked their thief to know again!

Stay longer yet, for others' sake Than mine! What should your chamber do?

— With all its rarities that ache
In silence while day lasts, but wake
At night-time and their life renew,
Suspended just to pleasure you
Who brought against their will together
These objects, and, while day lasts, weave Around them such a magic tether
That dumb they look; your harp, believe,
With all the sensitive tight strings

Which dare not speak, now to itself
 Breathes slumberously, as if some elf
 Went in and out the chords, his wings
 Make murmur wheresoe'er they graze,
 As an angel may, between the maze
 Of midnight palace-pillars, on
 And on, to sow God's plagues, have gone Through guilty glorious Babylon.
 And while such murmurs flow, the nymph
 Bends o'er the harp-top from her shell
 As the dry limpet for the lymph
 Come with a tune he knows so well.
 And how your statues' hearts must swell!
 And how your pictures must descend
 To see each other, friend with friend!
 Oh, could you take them by surprise,
 You'd find Schidone's eager Duke
 Doing the quaintest courtesies
 To that prim saint by Haste-thee-Luke!
 And, deeper into her rock den,
 Bold Castelfranco's Magdalen
 You'd find retreated from the ken
 Of that robed counsel-keeping Ser —
 As if the Tizian thinks of her,
 And is not, rather, gravely bent
 On seeing for himself what toys
 Are these, his progeny invent,
 What litter now the board employs Whereon he signed a document
 That got him murdered! Each enjoys
 Its night so well, you cannot break
 The sport up, so, indeed must make
 More stay with me, for others' sake.

She speaks.

I.

To-morrow, if a harp-string, say,
 Is used to tie the jasmine back
 That overfloods my room with sweets,
 Contrive your Zorzi somehow meets
 My Zanze! If the ribbon's black,
 The Three are watching: keep away!

II.

Your gondola — let Zorzi wreath
 A mesh of water-weeds about
 Its prow, as if he unaware
 Had struck some quay or bridge-foot stair!
 That I may throw a paper cut
 As you and he go underneath.

There's Zanze's vigilant taper; safe are we.
 Only one minute more to-night with me?
 Resume your past self of a month ago!
 Be you the bashful gallant, I will be
 The lady with the colder breast than snow.
 Now bow you, as becomes, nor touch my
 hand
 More than I touch yours when I step to
 land,
 And say, "All thanks, Siora!" —
 Heart to heart

And lips to lips! Yet once more, ere we
 part,
 Clasp me and make me thine, as mine thou art!

He is surprised and stabbed.

It was ordained to be so, sweet! — and best Comes now, beneath thine eyes, upon thy breast.
 Still kiss me! Care not for the cowards!
 Care
 Only to put aside thy beauteous hair
 My blood will hurt! The Three, I do not scorn
 To death, because they never lived: but I Have lived indeed, and so — (yet one more kiss) — can die!

WARING.

[Mr. Alfred Domett, C.M.G., author of "Ranolf and Amohia," full of descriptions of New Zealand scenery.]

I.

I.

WHAT'S become of Waring
 Since he gave us all the slip,
 Chose land-travel or seafaring,
 Boots and chest or staff and scrip,
 Rather than pace up and down
 Any longer London town?

II.

Who'd have guessed it from his lip
 Or his brow's accustomed bearing,
 On the night he thus took ship
 Or started landward? — little caring
 For us, it seems, who supped together
 (Friends of his too, I remember)
 And walked home thro' the merry weather,
 The snowiest in all December.
 I left his arm that night myself
 For what's-his-name's, the new prose-poet
 Who wrote the book there, on the shelf —
 How, fersooth, was I to know it
 If Waring meant to glide away
 Like a ghost at break of day?
 Never looked he half so gay!

III.

He was prouder than the devil:
 How he must have cursed our revel!
 Ay and many other meetings,
 Indoor visits, outdoor greetings,
 As up and down he paced this London,
 With no work done, but great works un-
 done,
 Where scarce twenty knew his name.
 Why not, then, have earlier spoken,
 Written, bustled? Who's to blame
 If your silence kept unbroken?

"True, but there were sundry jottings,
 "Stray-leaves, fragments, blurs and blottings,
 "Certain first steps were achieved
 "Already which" — (is that your meaning?)
 "Had well borne out whoe'er believed "In more to come!" But who goes glean-
 ing Hedgeseide chance-glades, while fullsheaved
 Stand cornfields by him? Pride, o'erweening
 Pride alone, puts forth such claims
 O'er the day's distinguished names.

IV.

Meantime, how much I loved him,
 I find out now I've lost him.
 I who cared not if I moved him,
 Who could so carelessly accost him,
 Henceforth never shall get free
 Of his ghostly company,
 His eyes that just a little wink
 As deep I go into the merit
 Of this and that distinguished spirit —
 His cheeks' raised colour, soon to sink,
 As long I dwell on some stupendous
 And tremendous (Heaven defend us!)
 Monstr'-inform'-ingens-horrend-ous
 Demoniaco-seraphic
 Penman's latest piece of graphic.
 Nay, my very wrist grows warm
 With his dragging weight of arm.
 E'en so, swimmingly appears,
 Through one's after-supper musings,
 Some lost lady of old years
 With her beauteous vain endeavour
 And goodness unrepaid as ever;
 The face, accustomed to refusings,
 We, puppies that we were . . . Oh never Surely, nice of conscience, scrupled
 Being aught like false, forsooth, to?
 Telling aught but honest truth to?
 What a sin, had we centupled
 Its possessor's grace and sweetness!
 No! she heard in its completeness
 Truth, for truth's a weighty matter,
 And truth at issue, we can't flatter!
 Well, 'tis done with; she's exempt
 From damning us thro' such a sally;
 And so she glides, as down a valley,
 Taking up with her contempt,
 Past our reach; and, in the flowers
 Shut her unregarded hours.

V.

Oh, could I have him back once more,
 This Waring, but one half-day more!
 Back, with the quiet face of yore,
 So hungry for acknowledgment
 Like mine! I'd fool him to his bent.
 Feed, should not he, to heart's content?

I'd say, "to only have conceived,
 "Planned your great works, apart from progress,
 "Surpasses little works achieved!"
 I'd lie so, I should be believed.
 I'd make such havoc of the claims
 Of the day's distinguished names
 To feast him with, as feasts an ogress
 Her feverish sharp-toothed gold-crowned
 child!
 Or as one feasts a creature rarely Captured here, unreconciled
 To capture; and completely gives
 Its pettish humours licence, barely Requiring that it lives.

VI.

Ichabod, Ichabod,
 The glory is departed!
 Travels Waring East, away?
 Who, of knowledge, by hearsay,
 Reports a man upstart
 Somewhere as a god,
 Hordes grown European-hearted,
 Millions of the wild made tame
 On a sudden at his fame?
 In Vishnu-land what Avatar?
 Or who in Moscow, toward the Czar,
 With the demurest of footfalls
 Over the Kremlin's pavement bright
 With serpentine and sycnite,
 Steps, with five other Generals
 That simultaneously take snuff,
 For each to have pretext enough
 And kerchiefwise unfold his sash
 Which, softness' self, is yet the stuff
 To hold fast where a steel chain snaps,
 And leave the grand white neck no gash?
 Waring in Moscow, to those rough Cold northern natures born perhaps,
 Like the lambwhite maiden dear
 From the circle of mute kings
 Unable to repress the tear,
 Each as his sceptre down he flings,
 To Dian's sanc at Taurica,
 Where now a captive priestess, she alway
 Mingles her tender grave Hellenic speech
 With theirs, tuned to the hailstone-beaten beach
 As pours some pigeon, from the myrrhy
 lands
 Rapt by the whirlblast to fierce Scythian strands
 Where breed the swallows, her melodious
 cry
 Amid their barbarous twitter!
 In Russia? Never! Spain were fitter!
 Ay, most likely 'tis in Spain
 That we and Waring meet again
 Now, while he turns down that cool narrow lane
 Into the blackness, out of grave Madrid
 Egyptian granite.

All fire and shine, abrupt as when there's slid

Its stiff gold blazing pall
From some black coffin-lid.

Or, best of all,
I love to think

The leaving us was just a feint;
Back here to London did he slink,
And now works on without a wink
Of sleep, and we are on the brink

10 Of something great in fresco-paint:
Some garret's ceiling, walls and floor,
Up and down and o'er and o'er
He splashes, as none splashed before Since great Caldara Polidore.¹

Or Music means this land of ours
Some favour yet, to pity won
By Purcell from his Rosy Bowers, —
"Give me my so-long promised son,
"Let Waring end what I begun!"

20 Then down he creeps and out he steals
Only when the night conceals
His face; in Kent 'tis cherry-time,
Or hops are picking: or at prime
Of March he wanders as, too happy,
Years ago when he was young,
Some mild eve when woods grew sappy
And the early moths had sprung
To life from many a trembling sheath
Woven the warm boughs beneath;

30 While small birds said to themselves
What should soon be actual song,
And young gnats, by tens and twelves,
Made as if they were the throng
That crowd around and carry aloft
The sound they have nursed, so sweet and
pure,

Out of a myriad noises soft,
Into a tone that can endure
Amid the noise of a July noon
When all God's creatures crave their
boon,

40 All at once and all in tune,
And get it, happy as Waring then,
Having first within his ken
What a man might do with men:
And far too glad, in the even-glow,
To mix with the world he meant to take Into his hand, he told you, so —
And out of it his world to make,
To contract and to expand
As he shut or oped his hand.

50 Oh Waring, what's to really be?

A clear stage and a crowd to see!
Some Garrick, say, out shall not he
The heart of Hamlet's mystery pluck?
Or, where most unclean beasts are rife,
Some Junius — am I right? — shall tuck
His sleeve, and forth with flaying-knife!
Some Chatterton shall have the luck
Of calling Rowley into life!

Some one shall somehow run a muck
With this old world for want of strife
Sound asleep. Contrive, contrive
To rouse us, Waring! Who's alive?
Our men scarce seem in earnest now.
Distinguished names! — but 'tis, some-
how,
As if they played at being names
Still more distinguished, like the games
Of children. Turn our sport to earnest
With a visage of the sternest!
Bring the real times back, confessed
Still better than our very best!

II.

I.

"When I last saw Waring . . ." (How all turned to him who spoke!
You saw Waring? Truth or joke?
In land-travel or sea-faring?)

II.

"We were sailing by Triest
"Where a day or two we harboured:
"A sunset was in the West,
"When, looking over the vessel's side,
"One of our company espied
"A sudden speck to larboard. 80
"And as a sea-duck flies and swims
"At once, so came the light craft up,
"With its sole lateen sail that trims
"And turns (the water round its rims
"Dancing, as round a sinking cup)
"And by us like a fish it curled,
"And drew itself up close beside,
"Its great sail on the instant furled,
"And o'er its thwarts a shrill voice cried, 90
"(A neck as bronzed as a Lascar's)
"Buy wine of us, you English Brig?
"Or fruit, tobacco and cigars?
"A pilot for you to Triest?
"Without one, look you ne'er so big,
"They'll never let you up the bay!
"We natives should know best."
"I turned, and 'just those fellows' way."
"Our captain said, 'The 'long-shore thieves
"Are laughing at us in their sleeves."

III.

"In truth, the boy leaned laughing back; 100
"And one, half-hidden by his side
"Under the furled sail, soon I spied,
"With great grass hat and kerchief black,
"Who looked up with his kingly throat,
"Said somewhat, while the other shook
"His hair back from his eyes to look
"Their longest at us; then the boat,
"I know not how, turned sharply round,
"Laying her whole side on the sea
"As a leaping fish does; from the lee
"Into the weather, cut somehow

"Her sparkling path beneath our bow
 "And so went off, as with a bound,
 "Into the rosy and golden half
 "O' the sky, to overtake the sun
 "And reach the shore, like the sea-calf
 "Its singing cave; yet I caught one
 "Glance ere away the boat quite passed,
 "And neither time nor toil could mar
 "Those features: so I saw the last
 "Of Waring!" — You? Oh, never star
 Was lost here but it rose afar!
 Look East, where whole new thousands
 are!
 In Vishnu-land what Avatar?

THE TWINS.

"Give" and "It-shall-be-given-unto-you."

I.

GRAND rough old Martin Luther Bloomed fables — flowers on furze,
 The better the uncouth:
 Do roses stick like burrs?

II.

A beggar asked an alms
 One day at an abbey-door,
 Said Luther; but, seized with qualms,
 The abbot replied, "We're poor!"

III.

"Poor, who had plenty once,
 "When gifts fell thick as rain:
 "But they give us nought, for the nonce,
 "And now should we give again?"

IV.

Then the beggar, "See your sins!
 "Of old, unless I err,
 "Ye had brothers for inmates, twins,
 "Date and Dabitur.

V.

"While Date was in good case
 "Dabitur flourished too:
 "For Dabitur's lenten face
 "No wonder if Date rue.

VI.

"Would ye retrieve the one?
 "Try and make plump the other!
 "When Date's penance is done,
 "Dabitur helps his brother.

VII.

"Only, beware relapse!"
 The Abbot hung his head.
 This beggar was perhaps
 An angel, Luther said.

A LIGHT WOMAN.

I.

So far as our story approaches the end,
 Which do you pity the most of us three? —
 My friend, or the mistress of my friend
 With her wanton eyes, or me?

II.

My friend was already too good to lose,
 And seemed in the way of improvement
 yet,
 When she crossed his path with her hunting noose
 And over him drew her net.

III.

When I saw him tangled in her toils, 50
 A shame, said I, if she adds just him
 To her nine-and-ninety other spoils,
 The hundredth for a whim!

IV.

And before my friend be wholly hers,
 How easy to prove to him, I said,
 An eagle's the game her pride prefers,
 Though she snaps at a wren instead!

V.

So, I gave her eyes my own eyes to take,
 My hand sought hers as in earnest need,
 And round she turned for my noble sake, 60
 And gave me herself indeed.

VI.

The eagle am I, with my fame in the world,
 The wren is he, with his maiden face.
 — You look away and your lip is curled?
 Patience, a moment's space!

VII.

For see, my friend goes shaking and white;
 He eyes me as the basilisk:
 I have turned, it appears, his day to night,
 Eclipsing his sun's disk.

VIII.

And I did it, he thinks, as a very thief: 70
 "Though I love her — that, he compre-hends —
 "One should master one's passions, (love,
 in chief)
 "And be loyal to one's friends!"

IX.

And she, — she lies in my hand as tame
 As a pear late basking over a wall;
 Just a touch to try and off it came;
 'Tis mine, — can I let it fall?

X.

With no mind to eat it, that's the worst !
 Were it thrown in the road, would the case assist ?
 'Twas quenching a dozen blue-flies' thirst
 When I gave its stalk a twist.

XI.

And I, — what I seem to my friend, you
 see :
 What I soon shall seem to his love, you
 guess :
 What I seem to myself, do you ask of me ?
 No hero, I confess.

XII.

'Tis an awkward thing to play with souls,
 And matter enough to save one's own :
 Yet think of my friend, and the burning coals
 He played with for bits of stone !

XIII.

One likes to show the truth for the truth ;
 That the woman was light is very true :
 But suppose she says, — Never mind that
 youth !
 What wrong have I done to you ?

XIV.

Well, any how, here the story stays,
 So far at least as I understand ;
 And, Robert Browning, you writer of plays,
 Here's a subject made to your hand !

THE LAST RIDE TOGETHER.

I.

I SAID — Then, dearest, since 'tis so,
 Since now at length my fate I know,
 Since nothing all my love avails,
 Since all, my life seemed meant for, fails,
 Since this was written and needs must be —
 My whole heart rises up to bless
 Your name in pride and thankfulness !
 Take back the hope you gave, I claim
 Only a memory of the same,
 — And this beside, if you will not blame,
 Your leave for one more last ride with
 me.

II.

My mistress bent that brow of hers ;
 Those deep dark eyes where pride demurs
 When pity would be softening through,
 Fixed me a breathing-while or two
 With life or death in the balance :
 right !
 The blood replenished me again ;
 My last thought was at least not vain :

I and my mistress, side by side
 Shall be together, breathe and ride,
 So, one day more am I deified.
 Who knows but the world may end
 to-night ?

III.

Hush ! if you saw some western cloud
 All billowy-bosomed, over-bowed
 By many benedictions — sun's
 And moon's and evening-star's at once —
 And so, you, looking and loving best,
 Conscious grew, your passion drew
 Cloud, sunset, moonrise, star-shine too,
 Down on you, near and yet more near,
 Till flesh must fade for heaven was here ! — Thus leant she and lingered — joy and
 fear !
 Thus lay she a moment on my breast.

IV.

Then we began to ride. My soul
 Smoothed itself out, a long-cramped scroll Freshening and fluttering in the wind.
 Past hopes already lay behind.
 What need to strive with a life awry ?
 Had I said that, had I done this,
 So might I gain, so might I miss.
 Might she have loved me ? just as well
 She might have hated, who can tell !
 Where had I been now if the worst befell ?
 And here we are riding, she and I.

V.

Fail I alone, in words and deeds ?
 Why, all men strive and who succeeds ?
 We rode ; it seemed my spirit flew,
 Saw other regions, cities new,
 As the world rushed by on either side.
 I thought, — All labour, yet no less Bear up beneath their unsuccess.
 Look at the end of work, contrast
 The petty done, the undone vast,
 This present of theirs with the hopeful
 past !
 I hoped she would love me ; here we ride.

VI.

What hand and brain went ever paired ?
 What heart alike conceived and dared ?
 What act proved all its thought had been ?
 What will but felt the fleshly screen ?
 We ride and I see her bosom heave.
 There's many a crown for who can reach.
 Ten lines, a statesman's life in each !
 The flag stuck on a heap of bones,
 A soldier's doing ! what atones ?
 They scratch his name on the abbey-stones.
 My riding is better, by their leave.

VII.

What does it all mean, poet ? Well,
 Your brains beat into rhythm, you tell

What we felt only; you expressed
You hold things beautiful the best,
And pace them in rhyme so, side by
side.

'Tis something, nay 'tis much: but then,
Have you yourself what's best for men?
Are you — poor, sick, old ere your time —
Nearer one whit your own sublime
Than we who never have turned a rhyme?
Sing, riding's a joy! For me, I ride.

VIII.

10 And you, great sculptor — so, you gave
A score of years to Art, her slave,
And that's your Venus, whence we turn
To yonder girl that fords the burn!
You acquiesce, and shall I repine?
What, man of music, you grown grey
With notes and nothing else to say,
Is this your sole praise from a friend,
"Greatly his opera's strains intend,
"Put in music we know how fashions end!"
20 I gave my youth; but we ride, in fine.

IX.

Who knows what's fit for us? Had fate
Proposed bliss here should sublimate
My being — had I signed the bond —
Still one must lead some life beyond,
Have a bliss to die with, dim-described.
This foot once planted on the goal,
This glory-garland round my soul,
Could I desecrate such? Try and test!
I sink back shuddering from the quest.
30 Earth being so good, would heaven seem
best?
Now, heaven and she are beyond this ride.

X.

And yet — she has not spoke so long!
What if heaven be that, fair and strong
At life's best, with our eyes upturned
Whither life's flower is first discerned,
We, fixed so, ever should so abide?
What if we still ride on, we two
With life for ever old yet new,
Changed not in kind but in degree,
40 The instant made eternity, —
And heaven just prove that I and she Ride, ride together, for ever ride?

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN;

A CHILD'S STORY.

written for, and inscribed to, W. M. the Younger.

I.

HAMELIN Town's in Brunswick,
By famous Hanover city;
The river Weser, deep and wide,

2 A

Washes its wall on the southern side;
A pleasanter spot you never spied;
But, when begins my ditty,
Almost five hundred years ago,
To see the townsfolk suffer so
From vermin, was a pity.

50

II.

Rats!
They fought the dogs and killed the cats,
And bit the babies in the cradles,
And ate the cheeses out of the vats,
And licked the soup from the cooks'
own ladles,
Split open the kegs of salted sprats,
Made nests inside men's Sunday hats,
And even spoiled the women's chats
By drowning their speaking
With shrieking and squeaking
In fifty different sharps and flats.

60

III.

At last the people in a body
To the Town Hall came flocking:
"Tis clear," cried they, "our Mayor's a noddy;
"And as for our Corporation — shock-
ing
"To think we buy gowns lined with ermine
"For dolts that can't or won't determine
"What's best to rid us of our vermin!
"You hope, because you're old and obese, 70
"To find in the furry civic robe ease?
"Rouse up, sirs! Give your brains a racking
"To find the remedy we're lacking,
"Or, sure as fate, we'll send you packing!"
At this the Mayor and Corporation
Quaked with a mighty consternation.

IV.

An hour they sat in council,
At length the Mayor broke silence:
"For a guilder I'd my ermine gown sell,
"I wish I were a mile hence! 80
"It's easy to bid one rack one's brain —
"I'm sure my poor head aches again,
"I've scratched it so, and all in vain.
"Oh for a trap, a trap, a trap!"
Just as he said this, what should hap
At the chamber door but a gentle tap?
"Bless us," cried the Mayor, "what's
that?"
(With the Corporation as he sat,
Looking little though wondrous fat;
Nor brighter was his eye, nor moister 90
Than a too-long-opened oyster,
Save when at noon his paunch grew mutinous
For a plate of turtle green and glutinous)
"Only a scraping of shoes on the mat?
"Anything like the sound of a rat
"Makes my heart go pit-a-pat!"

V.

"Come in!" — the Mayor cried, looking bigger:

And in did come the strangest figure!
His queer long coat from heel to head
Was half of yellow and half of red,
And he himself was tall and thin,
With sharp blue eyes, each like a pin,
And light loose hair, yet swarthy skin,
No tuft on cheek nor beard on chin,
But lips where smiles went out and in;
10 There was no guessing his kith and kin:
And nobody could enough admire
The tall man and his quaint attire.
Quoth one: "It's as my great-grandsire,
"Starting up at the Trump of Doom's
tone,

"Had walked this way from his painted tombstone!"

VI.

He advanced to the council-table:

And, "Please your honours," said he,
"I'm able,

"By means of a secret charm, to draw

"All creatures living beneath the sun,

30 "That creep or swim or fly or run,

"After me so as you never saw!

"And I chiefly use my charm

"On creatures that do people harm,

"The mole and toad and newt and viper;

"And people call me the Pied Piper."
(And here they noticed round his neck

A scarf of red and yellow stripe,
To match with his coat of the self-same cheque;

And at the scarf's end hung a pipe;

30 And his fingers, they noticed, were ever straying

As if impatient to be playing

Upon this pipe, as low it dangled

Over his vesture so old-fangled.)

"Yet," said he, "poor piper as I am,

"In Tartary I freed the Cham,

"Last June, from his huge swarms of gnats;

"I eased in Asia the Nizam

"Of a monstrous brood of vampyre-bats:

"And as for what your brain bewilders,

40 "If I can rid your town of rats

"Will you give me a thousand guilders?"

"One? fifty thousand!" — was the exclamation

Of the astonished Mayor and Corporation.

VII.

Into the street the Piper stept,

Smiling first a little smile,

As if he knew what magic slept

In his quiet pipe the while;

Then, like a musical adept,

To blow the pipe his lips he wrinkled,

And green and blue his sharp eyes twinkled, 51
Like a candle-flame where salt is sprinkled;
And ere three shrill notes the pipe uttered,
You heard as if an army muttered;
And the muttering grew to a grumbling;
And the grumbling grew to a mighty rumbling;

And out of the houses the rats came tumbling.

Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny
rats,

Brown rats, black rats, grey rats, tawny
rats,

Grave old plodders, gay young friskers,

Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins, 60

Cocking tails and pricking whiskers,

Families by tens and dozens,

Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives —

Followed the Piper for their lives.

From street to street he piped advancing,

And step for step they followed dancing,

Until they came to the river Weser,

Wherein all plunged and perished!

— Save one who, stout as Julius Caesar,

Swam across and lived to carry 70

(As he, the manuscript he cherished)

To Rat-land home his commentary:

Which was, "At the first shrill notes of the pipe,

"I heard a sound as of scraping tripe,

"And putting apples, wondrous ripe,

"Into a cider-press's gripe:

"And a moving away of pickle-tub-boards,

"And a leaving ajar of conserve-cupboards,

"And a drawing the corks of train-oilflasks,

"And a breaking the hoops of butter- 80
casks:

"And it seemed as if a voice

("Sweeter far than by harp or by psaltery

"Is breathed) called out, 'Oh rats, rejoice!

"The world is grown to one vast drysal-tery!

"So munch on, crunch on, take your nun-cheon,

"Breakfast, supper, dinner, luncheon!"

"And just as a bulky sugar punchoon,

"All ready staved, like a great sun shone

"Glorious scarce an inch before me,

"Just as methought it said, 'Come, bore 90
me!'

"— I found the Weser rolling o'er me."

VIII.

You should have heard the Hamelin people

Ring the bells till they rocked the steeple.

"Go," cried the Mayor, "and get long poles,

"Poke out the nests and block up the holes!

"Consult with carpenters and builders,

"And leave in our town not even a trace

"Of the rats!" — when suddenly, up the
face

Of the Piper perked in the market-place,
With a, "First, if you please, my thousand guilders!"

IX.

A thousand guilders! The Mayor looked blue;

So did the Corporation too.

For council dinners made rare havoc

With Claret, Moselle, Vin-de-Grave, Hock;

And half the money would replenish

Their cellar's biggest butt with Rhenish.

To pay this sum to a wandering fellow

10 With a gipsy coat of red and yellow!

"Beside," quoth the Mayor with a knowing wink,

"Our business was done at the river's brink;

"We saw with our eyes the vermin sink,

"And what's dead can't come to life, I
think.

"So, friend, we're not the folks to shrink

"From the duty of giving you something for drink,

"And a matter of money to put in your poke;

"But as for the guilders, what we spoke

"Of them, as you very well know, was in joke.

20 "Beside, our losses have made us thrifty.

"A thousand guilders! Come, take fifty!"

X.

The Piper's face fell, and he cried

"No trifling! I can't wait, beside!

"I've promised to visit by dinnertime

"Bagdat, and accept the prime

"Of the Head-Cook's pottage, all he's rich
in,

"For having left, in the Caliph's kitchen,

"Of a nest of scorpions no survivor:

"With him I proved no bargain-driver,

30 "With you, don't think I'll bate a stiver!

"And folks who put me in a passion

"May find me pipe after another fashion."

XI.

"How?" cried the Mayor, "d'ye think I brook

"Being worse treated than a Cook?

"Insulted by a lazy ribald

"With idle pipe and vesture piebald?

"You threaten us, fellow? Do your
worst,

"Blow your pipe there till you burst!"

XII.

Once more he stept into the street

And to his lips again

40 Laid his long pipe of smooth straight cane;

And ere he blew three notes (such sweet

Soft notes as yet musician's cunning

Never gave the enraptured air)

There was a rustling that seemed like a bustling

Of merry crowds justling at pitching and hustling,

Small feet were pattering, wooden shoes
clattering,

Little hands clapping and little tongues chattering,

And, like fowls in a farm-yard when barley
is scattering,

Out came the children running.

All the little boys and girls,

With rosy cheeks and flaxen curls,

And sparkling eyes and teeth like pearls,

Tripping and skipping, ran merrily after

The wonderful music with shouting and laughter.

XIII.

The Mayor was dumb, and the Council
stood

As if they were changed into blocks of
wood,

Unable to move a step, or cry

To the children merrily skipping by,

— Could only follow with the eye

60 That joyous crowd at the Piper's back.

But how the Mayor was on the rack,

And the wretched Council's bosoms beat,

As the Piper turned from the High Street

To where the Weser rolled its waters

Right in the way of their sons and daughters!

However he turned from South to West,

And to Koppelberg Hill his steps addressed,

And after him the children pressed;

Great was the joy in every breast.

70 "He never can cross that mighty top!

"He's forced to let the piping drop,

"And we shall see our children stop!"

When, lo, as they reached the mountain-
side,

A wondrous portal opened wide,

As if a cavern was suddenly hollowed;

And the Piper advanced and the children followed,

And when all were in to the very last,

The door in the mountain-side shut fast.

80 Did I say, all? No! One was lame,

And could not dance the whole of the
way;

And in after years, if you would blame

His sadness, he was used to say, —

"It's dull in our town since my playmates
left!

"I can't forget that I'm bereft

"Of all the pleasant sights they see,

"Which the Piper also promised me.

"For he led us, he said, to a joyous land,

"Joining the town and just at hand,

"Where waters gushed and fruit-trees 90 grew

"And flowers put forth a fairer hue,
 "And everything was strange and new;
 "The sparrows were brighter than peacocks here,
 "And their dogs outran our fallow deer,
 "And honey-bees had lost their stings,
 "And horses were born with eagle's wings:
 "And just as I became assured
 "My lame foot would be speedily cured,
 "The music stopped and I stood still, 20 "And found myself outside the hill,
 "Left alone against my will,
 "To go now limping as before,
 "And never hear of that country more!"

XIV.

Alas, alas for Hamelin!

There came into many a burgher's pate
 A text which says that heaven's gate
 Opes to the rich at as easy rate
 As the needle's eye takes a camel in!
 The Mayor sent East, West, North, and South,

20 To offer the Piper, by word of mouth,
 Wherever it was men's lot to find him,
 Silver and gold to his heart's content,
 If he'd only return the way he went,
 And bring the children behind him.
 But when they saw 'twas a lost endeavour,
 And Piper and dancers were gone for
 ever,

They made a decree that lawyers never Should think their records dated duly
 If, after the day of the month and year, 30 These words did not as well appear,
 "And so long after what happened here
 "On the Twenty-second of July,
 "Thirteen hundred and seventy-six:"

And the better in memory to fix
 The place of the children's last retreat,
 They called it, the Pied Piper's Street — Where any one playing on pipe or tabor
 Was sure for the future to lose his labour.
 Nor suffered they hostelry or tavern

40 To shock with mirth a street so solemn;
 But opposite the place of the cavern

They wrote the story on a column,
 And on the great church-window painted
 The same, to make the world acquainted
 How their children were stolen away,
 And there it stands to this very day.

And I must not omit to say
 That in Transylvania there's a tribe
 Of alien people who ascribe

50 The outlandish ways and dress
 On which their neighbours lay such stress,
 To their fathers and mothers having risen

Out of some subterranean prison
 Into which they were trepanned
 Long time ago in a mighty band
 Out of Hamelin town in Brunswick land,
 But how or why, they don't understand.

XV.

So, Willy, let me and you be wipers
 Of scores out with all men — especial, pipers!
 And, whether they pipe us free from rats &
 or from mice,
 If we've promised them aught, let us keep our promise!

THE FLIGHT OF THE DUCHESS.

I.

You'RE my friend:

I was the man the Duke spoke to;

I helped the Duchess to cast off his yoke
 too;

So here's the tale from beginning to end,
 My friend!

II.

Ours is a great wild country:

If you climb to our castle's top,

I don't see where your eye can stop;

For when you've passed the cornfield 70
 country,

Where vineyards leave off, flocks are packed,

And sheep-range leads to cattle-tract,

And cattle-tract to open-chase,

And open-chase to the very base

Of the mountain where, at a funeral pace,

Round about, solemn and slow,

One by one, row after row,

Up and up the pine-trees go,

So, like black priests up, and so

Down the other side again 80

To another greater, wilder country,
 That's one vast red drear burnt-up plain, Branched through and through with many a vein

Whence iron's dug, and copper's dealt;

Look right, look left, look straight
 before, —

Beneath they mine, above they smelt,

Copper-ore and iron-ore,

And forge and furnace mould and melt,

And so on, more and ever more,

Till at the last, for a bounding belt, 90

Comes the salt sand hoar of the great sea shore,

— And the whole is our Duke's country.

III.

I was born the day this present Duke was —

(And O, says the song, ere I was old!)

In the castle where the other Duke was —

(When I was happy and young, not old!)

I in the kennel, he in the bower:

We are of like age to an hour.

My father was huntsman in that day;

Who has not heard my father say 100

That, when a boar was brought to bay.

Three times, four times out of five,
 With his huntspear he'd contrive
 To get the killing-place transfixed,
 And pin him true, both eyes betwixt?
 And that's why the old Duke would rather
 He lost a salt-pit than my father,
 And loved to have him ever in call;
 That's why my father stood in the hall
 When the old Duke brought his infant out To show the people, and while they passed

The wondrous bantling round about,
 Was first to start at the outside blast
 As the Kaiser's courier blew his horn
 Just a month after the babe was born.
 "And," quoth the Kaiser's courier, "since
 "The Duke has got an heir, our Prince
 "Needs the Duke's self at his side:"
 The Duke looked down and seemed to
 wince,
 But he thought of wars o'er the world
 wide,

Castles a-fire, men on their march,
 The toppling tower, the crashing arch;
 And up he looked, and awhile he eyed
 The row of crests and shields and banners
 Of all achievements after all manners,
 And "ay," said the Duke with a surly
 pride.

The more was his comfort when he died
 At next year's end, in a velvet suit,
 With a gilt glove on his hand, his foot
 In a silken shoe for a leather boot,
 Petticoated like a herald,

In a chamber next to an ante-room,
 Where he breathed the breath of page
 and groom,

What he called stink, and they, perfume:
 — They should have set him on red Berold
 Mad with pride, like fire to manage!
 They should have got his cheek fresh tannage

Such a day as to-day in the merry sunshine!

Had they stuck on his fist a rough-foot merlin!

(Hark, the wind's on the heath at its game!
 Oh for a noble falcon-lanner

To flap each broad wing like a banner,
 And turn in the wind, and dance like flame!)

Had they broached a white-beer cask from Berlin

— Or if you incline to prescribe mere wine
 Put to his lips, when they saw him pine,
 A cup of our own Moldavia fine,
 Cotnar for instance, green as May sorrel
 And rosy with sweet, — we shall not quarrel.

IV.

So, at home, the sick tall yellow Duchess
 Was left with the infant in her clutches,
 She being the daughter of God knows who:

And now was the time to revisit her
 tribe.

Abroad and afar they went, the two,
 And let our people rail and gibe
 At the empty hall and extinguished fire,
 As loud as we liked, but ever in vain,
 Till after long years we had our desire,
 And back came the Duke and his mother
 again.

v.

And he came back the pertest little ape
 That ever affronted human shape;
 Full of his travel, struck at himself.

You'd say, he despised our bluff old ways?

— Not he! For in Paris they told the elf
 Our rough North land was the Land of Lays,

The one good thing left in evil days;
 Since the Mid-Age was the Heroic Time,
 And only in wild nooks like ours

Could you taste of it yet as in its prime,
 And see true castles, with proper towers,
 Young-hearted women, old-minded men, 7c
 And manners now as manners were then.

So, all that the old Dukes had been, without knowing it,
 This Duke would fain know he was, without being it;

'Twas not for the joy's self, but the joy of his showing it,

Nor for the pride's self, but the pride of our seeing it,

He revived all usages thoroughly worn-out,
 The souls of them fumed-forth, the hearts of them torn-out:

And chief in the chase his neck he perilled

On a lathy horse, all legs and length,
 With blood for bone, all speed, no strength; 8c

— They should have set him on red Berold
 With the red eye slow consuming in fire,
 And the thin stiff ear like an abbey-spire!

VI.

Well, such as he was, he must marry, we heard:

And out of a convent, at the word,
 Came the lady, in time of spring.

— Oh, old thoughts they cling, they cling!

That day, I know, with a dozen coats
 I clad myself in thick hunting-clothes
 Fit for the chase of urochs or buffie 9c

In winter-time when you need to muffle.

But the Duke had a mind we should cut a figure,

And so we saw the lady arrive:
 My friend, I have seen a white crane bigger!

She was the smallest lady alive,
 Made in a piece of nature's madness,
 Too small, almost, for the life and gladness

That over-filled her, as some hive
 Out of the bears' reach on the high trees

Is crowded with its safe merry bees: 10c

In truth, she was not hard to please!
Up she looked, down she looked, round at the mead,
Straight at the castle, that's best indeed
To look at from outside the walls:
As for us, styled the "serfs and thralls," She as much thanked me as if she had said it,

(With her eyes, do you understand?)
Because I patted her horse while I led it;
And Max, who rode on her other hand,
10 Said, no bird flew past but she inquired
What its true name was, nor ever seemed tired

If that was an eagle she saw hover,
And the green and grey bird on the field was the plover.

When suddenly appeared the Duke:
And as down she sprung, the small foot pointed

On to my hand, — as with a rebuke,
And as if his backbone were not jointed,
The Duke stepped rather aside than forward,

And welcomed her with his grandest
smile;
20 And, mind you, his mother all the while Chilled in the rear, like a wind to Nor-
ward;

And up, like a weary yawn, with its pullies
Went, in a shriek, the rusty portcullis;
And, like a glad sky the north-wind
sullies,

The lady's face stopped its play,
As if her first hair had grown grey;
For such things must begin some one day.

VII.

In a day or two she was well again;
As who should say, "You labour in vain!"
30 "This is all a jest against God, who meant
"I should ever be, as I am, content "And glad in his sight; therefore, glad I will be."

So, smiling as at first went she.

VIII.

She was active, stirring, all fire —
Could not rest, could not tire —
To a stone she might have given life!
(I myself loved once, in my day)
— For a shepherd's, miner's, huntsman's wife,

(I had a wife, I know what I say)
40 Never in all the world such an one!
And here was plenty to be done,
And she that could do it, great or small,
She was to do nothing at all.
There was already this man in his post,
This in his station, and that in his office,
And the Duke's plan admitted a wife, at
most,

To meet his eye, with the other trophies,

Now outside the hall, now in it,
To sit thus, stand thus, see and be
seen,
At the proper place in the proper minute, 50
And die away the life between.
And it was amusing enough, each infrac-
tion

Of rule — (but for after-sadness that came)

To hear the consummate self-satisfaction
With which the young Duke and the old dame

Would let her advise, and criticise,
And, being a fool, instruct the wise,
And, child-like, parcel out praise or
blame:

They bore it all in complacent guise,
As though an artificer, after contriving 60
A wheel-work image as if it were living,
Should find with delight it could motion to strike him!

So found the Duke, and his mother like
him:

The lady hardly got a rebuff —
That had not been contemptuous enough,
With his cursed smirk, as he nodded
applause,

And kept off the old mother-cat's claws.

IX.

So, the little lady grew silent and thin,
Paling and ever paling,
As the way is with a hid chagrin; 70
And the Duke perceived that she was ailing,

And said in his heart, "'Tis done to spite
me,

"But I shall find in my power to right me!" Don't swear, friend! The old one, many a year,

Is in hell, and the Duke's self . . . you shall hear.

X.

Well, early in autumn, at first winter-warn-
ing,

When the stag had to break with his foot,
of a morning,

A drinking-hole out of the fresh tender ice
That covered the pond till the sun, in a trice,

Loosening it, let out a ripple of gold, 80
And another and another, and faster and faster,

Till, dimpling to blindness, the wide water
rolled;

Then it so chanced that the Duke our master

Asked himself what were the pleasures in season,

And found, since the calendar bade him
be hearty,

He should do the Middle Age no treason
In resolving on a hunting-party.

Always provided, old books showed the way of it!

What meant old poets by their strictures?
And when old poets had said their say of it,
How taught old painters in their pictures?

We must revert to the proper channels,
Workings in tapestry, paintings on panels,
And gather up woodcraft's authentic traditions:

Here was food for our various ambitions,
As on each case, exactly stated —

10 To encourage your dog, now, the proper-est chirrup,

Or best prayer to Saint Hubert on mounting your stirrup —

We of the household took thought and debated.

Blessed was he whose back ached with the jerk in

His sire was wont to do forest-work in;

Blesseder he who nobly sunk "ohs"

And "ahs" while he tugged on his grand-sire's trunk-hose;

What signified hats if they had no rims on,
Each slouching before and behind like the scallop,

And able to serve at sea for a shallop,

20 Loaded with lacquer and looped with crimson?

So that the deer now, to make a short rhyme on't,

What with our Vencerers, Prickers and Verderers,

Might hope for real hunters at length and not murderers,

And oh the Duke's tailor, he had a hot time on't!

XL.

Now you must know that when the first dizziness

Of flap-hats and buff-coats and jack-boots subsided,

The Duke put this question, "The Duke's part provided,

"Had not the Duchess some share in the business?"

For out of the mouth of two or three witnesses

30 Did he establish all fit-or-unfitnesses:
And, after much laying of heads together,
Somebody's cap got a notable feather
By the announcement with proper unction
That he had discovered the lady's function;
Since ancient authors gave this tenet,

"When horns wind a mort and the deer is at siege,

"Let the dame of the castle prick forth on her jennet,

"And, with water to wash the hands of her liege

"In a clean ewer with a fair toweling,

40 "Let her preside at the disemboweling."

Now, my friend, if you had so little religion
As to catch a hawk, some falcon-lanner,

And thrust her broad wings like a banner
Into a coop for a vulgar pigeon;

And if day by day and week by week
You cut her claws, and sealed her eyes,

And clipped her wings, and tied her beak,
Would it cause you any great surprise

If, when you decided to give her an airing,
You found she needed a little preparing? 50

— I say, should you be such a curmudgeon,
If she clung to the perch, as to take it in dudgeon?

Yet when the Duke to his lady signified,
Just a day before, as he judged most dignified,

In what a pleasure she was to participate, —
And, instead of leaping wide in flashes,
Her eyes just lifted their long lashes,

As if pressed by fatigue even he could not dissipate,

And duly acknowledged the Duke's forethought,

But spoke of her health, if her health were 60
worth aught,

Of the weight by day and the watch by
night,

And much wrong now that used to be right,
So, thanking him, declined the hunting, —
Was conduct ever more affronting?

With all the ceremony settled —
With the towel ready, and the sewer Polishing up his eldest ewer,

And the jennet pitched upon, a piebald,
Black-barred, cream-coated and pink eye-balled, —

No wonder if the Duke was nettled! 70
And when she persisted nevertheless, —
Well, I suppose here's the time to confess That there ran half round our lady's chamber

A balcony none of the hardest to clamber;
And that Jacynth the tire-woman, ready in waiting,

Stayed in call outside, what need of relating?

And since Jacynth was like a June rose,
why, a fervent

Adorer of Jacynth of course was your servant;

And if she had the habit to peep through the casement,

How could I keep at any vast distance? 80
And so, as I say, on the lady's persistence,

The Duke, dumb-stricken with amazement,
Stood for a while in a sultry smother,

And then, with a smile that partook of the awful,

Turned her over to his yellow mother
To learn what was held decorous and lawful;

And the mother smelt blood with a cat-like instinct,

As her cheek quick whitened thro' all its quince-tinct.

Oh, but the lady heard the whole truth at
once!

What meant she? — Who was she? —
Her duty and station,

The wisdom of age and the folly of youth,
at once,

Its decent regard and its fitting relation —

In brief, my friend, set all the devils in hell
free

And turn them out to carouse in a belfry
And treat the priests to a fifty-part canon,
And then you may guess how that tongue of hers ran on!

10 Well, somehow or other it ended at last
And, licking her whiskers, out she passed;
And after her, — making (he hoped) a face

Like Emperor Nero or Sultan Saladin, Stalked the Duke's self with the austere
grace

Of ancient hero or modern paladin,
From door to staircase — oh such a solemn Unbending of the vertebral column!

XII.

However, at sunrise our company mustered;

And here was the huntsman bidding
unkennel,

20 And there 'neath his bonnet the pricker
blustered,

With feather dank as a bough of wet
fennel;

For the court-yard walls were filled with fog

You might have cut as an axe chops a log —
Like so much wool for colour and bulki-
ness;

And out rode the Duke in a perfect sulki-
ness,

Since, before breakfast, a man feels but queasily,

And a sinking at the lower abdomen
Begins the day with indifferent omen.

And lo, as he looked around uneasily,

30 The sun ploughed the fog up and drove it asunder

This way and that from the valley under;
And, looking through the court-yard
arch,

Down in the valley, what should meet
him

But a troop of Gipsies on their march?
No doubt with the annual gifts to greet
him.

XIII.

Now, in your land, Gipsies reach you, only After reaching all lands beside;

North they go, South they go, trooping or lonely,

And still, as they travel far and wide,

Catch they and keep now a trace here, a 4
trace there,

That puts you in mind of a place here, a place there.

But with us, I believe they rise out of the
ground,

And nowhere else, I take it, are found
With the earth-tint yet so freshly embrown'd:

Born, no doubt, like insects which breed on
The very fruit they are meant to feed on.
For the earth — not a use to which they don't turn it,

The ore that grows in the mountain's
womb,

Or the sand in the pits like a honeycomb,
They sift and soften it, bake it and burn 50
it —

Whether they weld you, for instance, a snaffle

With side-bars never a brute can baffle;
Or a lock that's a puzzle of wards within wards;

Or, if your colt's fore-foot inclines to curve
inwards,

Horseshoes they hammer which turn on a swivel

And won't allow the hoof to shrivel.

Then they cast bells like the shell of the winkle

That keep a stout heart in the ram with their tinkle;

But the sand — they pinch and pound it like ctters;

Commend me to Gipsy glass-makers and 60 potters!

Glasses they'll blow you, crystal-clear,
Where just a faint cloud of rose shall appear,

As if in pure water you dropped and let die
A bruised black-blooded mulberry;

And that other sort, their crowning pride,
With long white threads distinct inside,

Like the lake-flower's fibrous roots which dangle

Loose such a length and never tangle,
Where the bold sword-lily cuts the clear waters,

And the cup-lily couches with all the white 70
daughters:

Such are the works they put their hand to,
The uses they turn and twist iron and sand

to.

And these made the troop, which our Duke saw sally

Toward his castle from out of the valley,
Men and women, like new-hatched spiders,

Come out with the morning to greet our riders.

And up they wound till they reached the ditch,

Whereat all stopped save one, a witch
That I knew, as she hobbled from the

group,

By her gait directly and her stoop,
I, whom Jacynth was used to importune
To let that same witch tell us our fortune.
The oldest Gipsy then above ground;
And, sure as the autumn season came
round,

She paid us a visit for profit or pastime,
And every time, as she swore, for the last
time.

And presently she was seen to sidle
Up to the Duke till she touched his bridle,
So that the horse of a sudden reared up
As under its nose the old witch peered up
With her worn-out eyes, or rather eye-holes

Of no use now but to gather brine,
And began a kind of level whine
Such as they used to sing to their viols
When their ditties they go grinding
Up and down with nobody minding:
And then, as of old, at the end of the humming

Her usual presents were forthcoming
— A dog-whistle blowing the fiercest of trebles,

(Just a sea-shore stone holding a dozen fine pebbles,)

Or a porcelain mouth-piece to screw on a pipe-end, —

And so she awaited her annual stipend.
But this time, the Duke would scarcely vouchsafe

A word in reply; and in vain she felt
With twitching fingers at her belt

For the purse of sleek pine-marten pelt, Ready to put what he gave in her pouch
safe, —

Till, either to quicken his apprehension,
Or possibly with an after-intention,
She was come, she said, to pay her duty
To the new Duchess, the youthful beauty.
No sooner had she named his lady,
Than a shine lit up the face so shady,
And its smirk returned with a novel mean-
ing —

For it struck him, the babe just wanted weaning;

If one gave her a taste of what life was and
sorrow,

She, foolish to-day, would be wiser tomorrow;

And who so fit a teacher of trouble
As this sordid crone bent well-nigh double?

So, glancing at her wolf-skin vesture,
(If such it was, for they grow so hirsute
That their own fleece serves for natural fur-suit)

He was contrasting, 'twas plain from his gesture,

The life of the lady so flower-like and delicate

With the loathsome squalor of this helicat.
I, in brief, was the man the Duke beckoned

From out of the throng, and while I drew near

He told the crone — as I since have reckoned

By the way he bent and spoke into her ear 50

With circumspection and mystery —
The main of the lady's history,
Her frowardness and ingratitude:

And for all the crone's submissive attitude
I could see round her mouth the loose plaits tightening,

And her brow with assenting intelligence
brightening,

As though she engaged with hearty good-will

Whatever he now might enjoin to fulfil,
And promised the lady a thorough frightening.

And so, just giving her a glimpse 60

Of a purse, with the air of a man who imps
The wing of the hawk that shall fetch the hernshaw,

He bade me take the Gipsy mother
And set her telling some story or other
Of hill or dale, oak-wood or fernshaw,

To wile away a weary hour
For the lady left alone in her bower,
Whose mind and body craved exertion

And yet shrank from all better diversion.

XIV.

Then clapping heel to his horse, the mere 70
curveter,

Out rode the Duke, and after his hollo Horses and hounds swept, huntsman and servitor,

And back I turned and bade the crone
follow.

And what makes me confident what's to be told you

Had all along been of this crone's devising,

Is, that, on looking round sharply, behold
you,

There was a novelty quick as surprising:
For first, she had shot up a full head in stature,

And her step kept pace with mine nor flattered,

As if age had foregone its usurpature, 80

And the ignoble mien was wholly altered,
And the face looked quite of another nature,

And the change reached too, whatever the change meant,

Her shaggy wolf-skin cloak's arrangement:
For where its tatters hung loose like sedges,
Gold coins were glittering on the edges,

Like the band-roll strung with tomans
Which proves the veil a Persian woman's:

And under her brow, like a snail's horn newly

Come out as after the rain he paces, 90

Two unmistakeable eye-points duly

Live and aware looked out of their places.

So, we went and found Jacynth at the entry
Of the lady's chamber standing sentry;
I told the command and produced my companion,

And Jacynth rejoiced to admit any one,
For since last night, by the same token,
Not a single word had the lady spoken:
They went in both to the presence together,
While I in the balcony watched the weather.

XV.

10 And now, what took place at the very first of all,

I cannot tell, as I never could learn it:
Jacynth constantly wished a curse to fall
On that little head of hers and burn it
If she knew how she came to drop so soundly

Asleep of a sudden and there continue
The whole time sleeping as profoundly

As one of the boars my father would pin
you

'Twixt the eyes where life holds garrison,
— Jacynth forgive me the comparison!

20 But where I begin my own narration
Is a little after I took my station
To breathe the fresh air from the balcony,
And, having in these days a falcon eye,
'To follow the hunt thro' the open country,
From where the bushes thinnier crested
The hillocks, to a plain where's not one tree.

When, in a moment, my ear was arrested

By — was it singing, or was it saying,
Or a strange musical instrument playing

30 In the chamber? — and to be certain
I pushed the lattice, pulled the curtain,
And there lay Jacynth asleep,
Yet as if a watch she tried to keep,
In a rosy sleep along the floor
With her head against the door;
While in the midst, on the seat of state,
Was a queen — the Gipsy woman late,
With head and face downbent

On the lady's head and face intent:
40 For, coiled at her feet like a child at ease,
The lady sat between her knees
And o'er them the lady's clasped hands met,

And on these hands her chin was set,
And her upturned face met the face of the crone

Wherein the eyes had grown and grown
As if she could double and quadruple
At pleasure the play of either pupil

— Very like, by her hands' slow fanning,
As up and down like a gor-crow's flappers 50 They moved to measure, or bell-clappers.

I said "Is it blessing, is it banning,
"Do they applaud you or burlesque you —

"Those hands and fingers with no flesh
on?"

But, just as I thought to spring in to the rescue,

At once I was stopped by the lady's expression:

For it was life her eyes were drinking
From the crone's wide pair above unwink-
ing,

— Life's pure fire received without shrink-
ing,

Into the heart and breast whose heaving
Told you no single drop they were leaving, 60

— Life, that filling her, passed redundant
Into her very hair, back swerving

Over each shoulder, loose and abundant,
As her head thrown back showed the white throat curving;

And the very tresses shared in the pleasure,
Moving to the mystic measure,

Bounding as the bosom bounded.
I stopped short, more and more con-
founded,

As still her cheeks burned and eyes
glistened,

As she listened and she listened: 70

When all at once a hand detained me,
The selfsame contagion gained me,

And I kept time to the wondrous chime,
Making out words and prose and rhyme,

Till it seemed that the music furled Its wings like a task fulfilled, and dropped

From under the words it first had propped,

And left them midway in the world:
Word took word as hand takes hand, 80

I could hear at last, and understand,
And when I held the unbroken thread,

The Gipsy said: —

"And so at last we find my tribe.

"And so I set thee in the midst,

"And to one and all of them describe

"What thou saidst and what thou didst,

"Our long and terrible journey through,

"And all thou art ready to say and do

"In the trials that remain:

"I trace them the vein and the other vein 90

"That meet on thy brow and part again,

"Making our rapid mystic mark;

"And I bid my people prove and probe

"Each eye's profound and glorious globe

"Till they detect the kindred spark

"In those depths so dear and dark,

"Like the spots that snap and burst and
flee,

"Circling over the midnight sea.

"And on that round young cheek of thine

"I make them recognise the tinge, 100

"As when of the costly scarlet wine

"They drip so much as will impinge

"And spread in a thinnest scale afloat

"One thick gold drop from the olive's coat

"Over a silver plate whose sheen
 "Still thro' the mixture shall be seen.
 "For so I prove thee, to one and all,
 "Fit, when my people ope their breast,
 "To see the sign, and hear the call,
 "And take the vow, and stand the test
 "Which adds one more child to the
 rest —
 "When the breast is bare and the arms are
 wide,
 "And the world is left outside.
 10 "For there is probation to decree,
 "And many and long must the trials be
 "Thou shalt victoriously endure,
 "If that brow is true and those eyes are
 sure;
 "Like a jewel-finder's fierce assay
 "Of the prize he dug from its mountain-tomb —
 "Let once the vindicating ray
 "Leap out amid the anxious gloom,
 "And steel and fire have done their part
 "And the prize falls on its finder's heart; 20 "So, trial after trial past,
 "Wilt thou fall at the very last
 "Breathless, half in trance
 "With the thrill of the great deliverance,
 "Into our arms for evermore
 "And thou shalt know, those arms once
 curled
 "About thee, what we knew before,
 "How love is the only good in the world.
 "Henceforth be loved as heart can love,
 "Or brain devise, or hand approve!
 30 "Stand up, look below,
 "It is our life at thy feet we throw
 "To step with into light and joy;
 "Not a power of life but we employ
 "To satisfy thy nature's want;
 "Art thou the tree that props the plant,
 "Or the climbing plant that seeks the tree
 "Canst thou help us, must we help thee?
 "If any two creatures grew into one,
 "They would do more than the world has
 done:
 40 "Though each apart were never so weak,
 "Ye vainly through the world should seek
 "For the knowledge and the might
 "Which in such union grew their right:
 "So, to approach at least that end,
 "And blend, — as much as may be, blend
 "Thee with us or us with thee, —
 "As climbing plant or propping tree,
 "Shall some one deck thee, over and down,
 "Up and about, with blossoms and
 leaves?
 50 "Fix his heart's fruit for thy garland-
 crown,
 "Cling with his soul as the gourd-vine
 cleaves,
 "Die on thy boughs and disappear
 "While not a leaf of thine is ere?
 "Or is the other fate in store,

"And art thou fitted to adore,
 "To give thy wondrous self away,
 "And take a stronger nature's sway?
 "I foresee and could foretell
 "Thy future portion, sure and well:
 "But those passionate eyes speak true, 60
 speak true,
 "Let them say what thou shalt do!
 "Only be sure thy daily life,
 "In its peace or in its strife,
 "Never shall be unobserved;
 "We pursue thy whole career,
 "And hope for it, or doubt, or fear, —
 "Lo, hast thou kept thy path or swerved,
 "We are beside thee in all thy ways,
 "With our blame, with our praise,
 "Our shame to feel, our pride to show, 70
 "Glad, angry — but indifferent, no!
 "Whether it be thy lot to go,
 "For the good of us all, where the haters
 meet
 "In the crowded city's horrible street;
 "Or thou step alone through the morass
 "Where never sound yet was
 "Save the dry quick clap of the stork's bill,
 "For the air is still, and the water still,
 "When the blue breast of the dipping coot 80
 "Dives under, and all is mute.
 "So, at the last shall come old age,
 "Decrepit as befits that stage;
 "How else wouldst thou retire apart
 "With the hoarded memories of thy heart,
 "And gather all to the very least
 "Of the fragments of life's earlier feast,
 "Let fall through eagerness to find
 "The crowning dainties yet behind?
 "Ponder on the entire past
 "Laid together thus at last, 90
 "When the twilight helps to fuse
 "The first fresh with the faded hues,
 "And the outline of the whole,
 "As round eve's shades their framework
 roll,
 "Grandly fronts for once thy soul.
 "And then as, 'mid the dark, a gleam
 "Of yet another morning breaks,
 "And like the hand which ends a dream,
 "Death, with the might of his sunbeam,
 "Touches the flesh and the soul awakes, 100
 "Then —"
 Ay, then indeed something would happen!
 But what? For here her voice changed like a bird's;
 There grew more of the music and less of the words;
 Had Jacynth only been by me to clap pen
 To paper and put you down every syllable
 With those clever clerkly fingers
 All I've forgotten as well as what lingers
 In this old brain of mine that's but ill able To give you even this poor version Of the speech I spoil, as it were, with 110 stammering

— More fault of those who had the hammering
Of prosody into me and syntax,
And did it, not with hobnails but tin-tacks!
But to return from this excursion,
Just, do you mark, when the song was sweetest,
The peace most deep and the charm completest,
There came, shall I say, a snap —
And the charm vanished!
And my sense returned, so strangely banished,
40 And, starting as from a nap,
I knew the crone was bewitching my lady,
With Jacynth asleep; and but one spring made I Down from the casement, round to the portal,
Another minute and I had entered,
When the door opened, and more than mortal
Stood, with a face where to my mind centred
All beauties I ever saw or shall see,
The Duchess: I stopped as if struck by palsy.
She was so different, happy and beautiful,
50 I felt at once that all was best,
And that I had nothing to do, for the
rest,
But wait her commands, obey and be dutiful.
Not that, in fact, there was any commanding;
I saw the glory of her eye,
And the brow's height and the breast's expanding,
And I was hers to live or to die.
As for finding what she wanted,
You know God Almighty granted
Such little signs should serve wild creatures
30 To tell one another all their desires,
So that each knows what his friend requires,
And does its bidding without teachers.
I preceded her; the crone
Followed silent and alone;
I spoke to her, but she merely jabbered
In the old style; both her eyes had
slunk
Back to their pits; her stature shrunk;
In short, the soul in its body sunk
Like a blade sent home to its scabbard.
40 We descended, I preceding;
Crossed the court with nobody heeding;
All the world was at the chase,
The courtyard like a desert-place,
The stable emptied of its small fry;
I saddled myself the very palfrey
I remember patting while it carried her,
The day she arrived and the Duke married
her.

And, do you know, though it's easy deceiving Oncelf in such matters, I can't help believing
The lady had not forgotten it either, 54
And knew the poor devil so much beneath
her
Would have been only too glad for her service
To dance on hot ploughshares like a Turk dervise,
But, unable to pay proper duty where owing it,
Was reduced to that pitiful method of showing it:
For though the moment I began setting
His saddle on my own nag of Berold's begetting,
(Not that I meant to be obtrusive)
She stopped me, while his rug was shift-
ing,
By a single rapid finger's lifting, 60
And, with a gesture kind but conclusive,
And a little shake of the head, refused
me, —
I say, although she never used me,
Yet when she was mounted, the Gipsy behind her,
And I ventured to remind her,
I suppose with a voice of less steadiness
Than usual, for my feeling exceeded me, — Something to the effect that I was in readiness
Whenever God should please she needed
me, —
Then, do you know, her face looked down 70
on me
With a look that placed a crown on me,
And she felt in her bosom, — mark, her bosom —
And, as a flower-tree drops its blossom,
Dropped me . . . ah, had it been a purse
Of silver, my friend, or gold that's worse,
Why, you see, as soon as I found myself
So understood, — that a true heart so may gain
Such a reward, — I should have gone home again,
Kissed Jacynth, and soberly drowned
myself!
It was a little plait of hair 80
Such as friends in a convent make
To wear, each for the other's sake, —
This, see, which at my breast I wear,
Ever did (rather to Jacynth's grudging),
And ever shall, till the Day of Judgment.
And then, — and then, — to cut short, —
this is idle,
These are feelings it is not good to foster, —
I pushed the gate wide, she shook the bridle,
And the palfrey bounded, — and so we lost her.

XVI.

When the liquor's out why clink the canni-
kin?

I did think to describe you the panic in The redoubtable breast of our master the mannikin,

And what was the pitch of his mother's yellowness,

How she turned as a shark to snap the spare-rib

Clean off, sailors say, from a pearl-diving
Carib,

When she heard, what she called the flight of the felcness

— But it seems such child's play,

What they said and did with the lady
away!

10 And to dance on, when we've lost the music,

Always made me — and no doubt makes you — sick.

Nay, to my mind, the world's face looked so stern

As that sweet form disappeared through the postern,

She that kept it in constant good humour,
It ought to have stopped; there seemed nothing to do more.

But the world thought otherwise and went
on,

And my head's one that its spite was spent
on:

Thirty years are fled since that morning,
And with them all my head's adorning.

20 Nor did the old Duchess die outright,
As you expect, of suppressed spite,

The natural end of every adder
Not suffered to empty its poison-bladder:

But she and her son agreed, I take it,
That no one should touch on the story to wake it,

For the wound in the Duke's pride rankled fiery,

So, they made no search and small inquiry —

And when fresh Gipsies have paid us a visit, I've

Noticed the couple were never inquisitive, 30 But told them they're folks the Duke don't want here,

And bade them make haste and cross the frontier.

Brief, the Duchess was gone and the Duke
was glad of it,

And the old one was in the young one's
stead,

And took, in her place, the household's
head,

And a blessed time the household had of it!
And were I not, as a man may say, cautious

How I trench, more than needs, on the nauseous,

I could favour you with sundry touches

Of the paint-smatches, with which the Duchess

Heightened the mellowness of her cheek's 40
yellowness

(To get on faster) until at last her

Cheek grew to be one master-plaster

Of mucus and fucus from mere use of ceruse:

In short, she grew from scalp to udder
Just the object to make you shudder.

XVII.

You're my friend —

What a thing friendship is, world without
end!

How it gives the heart and soul a stir-up
As if somebody breached you a glorious runlet,

And poured out, all lovelily, sparkingly, 50
sunlit,

Our green Moldavia, the streaky syrup,
Cotnar as old as the time of the Druids —

Friendship may match with that monarch of fluids;

Each supplies a dry brain, fills you its ins-and-outs,

Gives your life's hour-glass a shake when the thin sand doubts

Whether to run on or stop short, and guarantees

Age is not all made of stark sloth and arrant ease.

I have seen my little lady once more,
Jacynth, the Gipsy, Berold, and the rest

of it,
For to me spoke the Duke, as I told you 60
before;

I always wanted to make a clean breast
of it:

And now it is made — why, my heart's blood, that went trickle,

Trickle, but anon, in such muddy drib-lets,

Is pumped up brisk now, through the main ventricle,

And genially floats me about the giblets.
I'll tell you what I intend to do:

I must see this fellow his sad life through —
He is our Duke, after all,

And I, as he says, but a serf and thrall.
My father was born here, and I inherit 70

His fame, a chain he bound his son
with;

Could I pay in a lump I should prefer it,
But there's no mine to blow up and get done with:

So, I must stay till the end of the chapter.
For, as to our middle-age-mannersadaptor,

Be it a thing to be glad on or sorry on,

Some day or other, his head in a morion
And breast in a hauberk, his heels he'll kick up,

Slain by an onslaught fierce of hiccup.
 And then, when red doth the sword of our Duke rust,
 And its leathern sheath lie o'ergrown with a blue crust,
 Then I shall scrape together my earnings;
 For, you see, in the churchyard Jacynth reposes,
 And our children all went the way of the roses.

It's a long lane that knows no turnings.
 One needs but little tackle to travel in;
 So, just one stout cloak shall I indue:
 To And for a staff, what beats the javelin
 With which his boars my father pinned
 you?

And then, for a purpose you shall hear
 presently,
 Taking some Cotnar, a tight plump
 skinful,
 I shall go journeying, who but I, pleasantly!

Sorrow is vain and despondency sinful.
 What's a man's age? He must hurry more, that's all;
 Cram in a day, what his youth took a year to hold:

When we mind labour, then only, we're too old —

What age had Methusalem when he begat
 Saul?

To And at last, as its haven some buffeted ship sees,
 (Come all the way from the north-parts with sperm oil)

I hope to get safely out of the turmoil
 And arrive one day at the land of the Gipsies,

And find my lady, or hear the last news of
 her

From some old thief and son of Lucifer,
 His forehead chapleted green with wreathy hop,

Sunburned all over like an Æthiop.

And when my Cotnar begins to operate
 And the tongue of the rogue to run at a proper rate,

And our wine-skin, tight once, shows each flaccid dent,

I shall drop in with — as if by accident —
 "You never knew, then, how it all ended,

"What fortune good or bad attended
 "The little lady your Queen befriended?"

— And when that's told me, what's remaining?

This world's too hard for my explaining.
 The same wise judge of matters equine Who still preferred some slim four-year-
 old

To the big-boned stock of mighty Berold,
 And, for strong Cotnar, drank French weak wine,

He also must be such a lady's scorner!
 Smooth Jacob still robs homely Esau:

Now up, now down, the world's one see-saw.

— So, I shall find out some snug corner
 Under a hedge, like Orson the wood-knight, Turn myself round and bid the world good
 night;

And sleep a sound sleep till the trumpet's blowing

Wakes me (unless priests cheat us lay-
 men)

To a world where will be no further throw-
 ing

Pearls before swine that can't value 50 them. Amen!

A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL,

SHORTLY AFTER THE REVIVAL OF LEARNING IN EUROPE.

LET us begin and carry up this corpse,
 Singing together.

Leave we the common crofts, the vulgar thorpes

Each in its tether

Sleeping safe on the bosom of the plain,
 Cared-for till cock-crow:

Look out if yonder be not day again
 Rimming the rock-row!

That's the appropriate country; there,
 man's thought,

Rarer, intenser,

Self-gathered for an outbreak, as it ought,
 Chafes in the censer.

Leave we the unlettered plain its herd and crop;

Seek we sepulture

On a tall mountain, citied to the top,
 Crowded with culture!

All the peaks soar, but one the rest excels;
 Clouds overcome it;

No! yonder sparkle is the citadel's
 Circling its summit.

Thither our path lies; wind we up the heights:

Wait ye the warning?

Our low life was the level's and the night's;
 He's for the morning.

Step to a tune, square chests, erect each
 head,

'Ware the beholders!

This is our master, famous calm and dead,
 Borne on our shoulders

Sleep, crop and herd! sleep, darkling thorpe and croft,

Safe from the weather!

He, whom we convoy to his grave aloft,
 Singing together,

He was a man born with thy face and
 throat,

Lyric Apollo!

Long he lived nameless: how should spring take note

Winter would follow?

Till lo, the little touch, and youth was
gone!

Cramped and diminished,

Moaned he, "New measures, other feet
anon!

"My dance is finished?"

No, that's the world's way: (keep the mountain-side,

Make for the city!)

He knew the signal, and stepped on with
pride

Over men's pity;

Left play for work, and grappled with the world

Bent on escaping:

"What's in the scroll," quoth he, "thou keepest furled?

"Show me their shaping,

"Theirs who most studied man, the bard and sage, —

"Give!" — So, he gowned him,

Straight got by heart that book to its last page:

Learned, we found him.

Yea, but we found him bald too, eyes like lead,

Accents uncertain:

"Time to taste life," another would have
said,

"Up with the curtain!"

This man said rather, "Actual life comes next?

"Patience a moment!

"Grant I have mastered learning's crabbed
text,

"Still there's the comment.

"Let me know all! Prate not of most or
least,

"Painful or easy!

"Even to the crumbs I'd fain eat up the feast,

"Ay, nor feel queasy."

Oh, such a life as he resolved to live,

When he had learned it,

When he had gathered all books had to give!

Sooner, he spurned it.

Image the whole, then execute the parts —
Fancy the fabric

Quite, ere you build, ere steel strike fire from quartz,

Ere mortar dab brick!

(Here's the town-gate reached: there's the market-place

Gaping before us.)

Yea, this in him was the peculiar grace

(Hearten our chorus!)

That before living he'd learn how to live —

No end to learning:

Earn the means first — God surely will contrive

Use for our earning.

Others mistrust and say, "But time escapes:

"Live now or never!"

He said, "What's time? Leave Now for dogs and apes!

"Man has Forever."

Back to his book then: deeper drooped his
head:

Calculus racked him:

Leaden before, his eyes grew dross of lead:
Tussis attacked him.

"Now, master, take a little rest!" — not
he!

(Caution redoubled,

Step two abreast, the way winds narrowly!)
Not a whit troubled

Back to his studies, fresher than at first,
Fierce as a dragon

He (soul-hydroptic with a sacred thirst)
Sucked at the flagon.

Oh, if we draw a circle premature,

Heedless of far gain,

Greedy for quick returns of profit, sure

Bad is our bargain!

Was it not great? did not he throw on
God,

(He loves the burthen) —

God's task to make the heavenly period
Perfect the earthen?

Did not he magnify the mind, show clear
Just what it all meant?

He would not discount life, as fools do here,
Paid by instalment.

He ventured neck or nothing — heaven's success

Found, or earth's failure:

"Wilt thou trust death or not?" He answered "Yes:

"Hence with life's pale lure!"

That low man seeks a little thing to do,
Sees it and does it:

This high man, with a great thing to pursue,
Dies ere he knows it.

That low man goes on adding one to one,
His hundred's soon hit:

This high man, aiming at a million,

Misses an unit.

That, has the world here — should he need the next,

Let the world mind him!

This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed

Seeking shall find him.

So, with the throttling hands of death at strife,

Ground he at grammar;

Still, thro' the rattle, parts of speech were rife:

While he could stammer

He settled Hoti's business — let it be! — Properly based Oun —

Gave us the doctrine of the enclitic De,
Dead from the waist down.
Well, here's the platform, here's the proper
place:

Hail to your purlieus,
All ye highfliers of the feathered race,
Swallows and curlews!

Here's the top-peak; the multitude below
Live, for they can, there:

This man decided not to Live but Know —
Bury this man there?

Here — here's his place, where meteors shoot, clouds form,

Lightnings are loosened, Stars come and go! Let joy break with the storm,

Peace let the dew send!
Lofty designs must close in like effects:

Loftily lying,
Leave him — still loftier than the world suspects,

Living and dying.

THE HERETIC'S TRAGEDY.

A MIDDLE-AGE INTERLUDE.

ROSA MUNDI; SEU, FULCITE ME FLORIBUS.
A CONCEIT OF MASTER GYSBRECHT, CANON-REGULAR OF SAINT JODOCUS-BY-THE-BAR, YPRES CITY. CANTUQUE, Vir-gilius. AND HATH OFTEN BEEN SUNG
AT HOCK-TIDE AND FESTIVALS. GAVISUS
ERAM, Jessides.

(It would seem to be a glimpse from the burning of Jacques du Bourg-Molay, at Paris, A.D. 1314; as distorted by the refraction from Flemish brain to brain, during the course of a couple of centuries.)

[Molay was Grand Master of the Templars when that order was suppressed in 1312.]

I.

PREADMONISHETH THE ABBOT DEODAET.

THE Lord, we look to once for all,
Is the Lord we should look at, all at
once:

He knows not to vary, saith Saint Paul,
Nor the shadow of turning, for the nonce.

See him no other than as he is!
Give both the infinitudes their due — Infinite mercy, but, I wis,
As infinite a justice too.

[Organ: plagal-cadence

As infinite a justice too.

II.

ONE SINGETH.

John, Master of the Temple of God,
Falling to sin the Unknown Sin,

What he bought of Emperor Aldabrod, 36
He sold it to Sultan Saladin:

Till, caught by Pope Clement, a-buzzing
there,

Hornet-prince of the mad wasps' hive,
And clipt of his wings in Paris square,
They bring him now to be burned alive.

[And wanteth there grace of lute or clavicithern, ye shall say to confirm him who singeth —

We bring John now to be burned alive.

III.

In the midst is a goodly gallows built;

'Twixt fork and fork, a stake is stuck;
But first they set divers tumbrels a-tilt,

Make a trench all round with the city 40
muck;

Inside they pile log upon log, good store;
Faggots no few, blocks great and small,
Reach a man's mid-thigh, no less, no
more, —

For they mean he should roast in the sight of all.

CHORUS.

We mean he should roast in the sight of all.

IV.

Good sappy havins ¹ that kindle forthwith;
Billets that blaze substantial and slow;
Pine-stump split deftly, dry as pith;
Larch-heart that chars to a chalk-white
glow:

Then up they hoist me John in a chafe, 50
Sling him fast like a hog to scorch,
Spit in his face, then leap back safe, Sing "Laudes" and bid clap-to the torch.

CHORUS.

Laus Deo — who bids clap-to the torch.

V.

John of the Temple, whose fame so bragged,

Is burning alive in Paris square!
How can he curse, if his mouth is gagged?
Or wriggle his neck, with a collar there?
Or heave his chest, which a band goes
round?

Or threat with his fist, since his arms are 60 spliced?

Or kick with his feet, now his legs are bound?

— Thinks John, I will call upon Jesus Christ.

[Here one crosseth himself.

VI.

Jesus Christ — John had bought and sold, Jesus Christ — John had eaten and drunk;

¹ Faggots.

To him the Flesh meant silver and gold.
(Salvâ reverentiâ.)
Now it was, "Saviour, bountiful lamb,
"I have roasted thee Turks, though men roast me!
"See thy servant, the plight wherein I am!
"Art thou a saviour? Save thou me!"

CHORUS.

'Tis John the mocker cries, "Save thou me!"

VII.

Who maketh God's menace an idle word?
— Saith, it no more means what it pro-
claims,
Than a damsel's threat to her wanton
bird? —
For she too prattles of ugly names.
— Saith, he knoweth but one thing, — what he knows?
That God is good and the rest is breath;
Why else is the same styled Sharon's rose?
Once a rose, ever a rose, he saith.

CHORUS.

O, John shall yet find a rose, he saith!

VIII.

Alack, there be roses and roses, John!
Some, honied of taste like your leman's
tongue:
Some, bitter; for why? (roast gaily on!)
Their tree struck root in devil's-dung.
When Paul once reasoned of righteousness
And of temperance and of judgment to
come,
Good Felix trembled, he could no less:
John, snickering, crook'd his wicked
thumb.

CHORUS.

What cometh to John of the wicked
thumb?

IX.

Ha ha, John plucketh now at his rose
To rid himself of a sorrow at heart!
Lo, — petal on petal, fierce rays enclose;
Anther on anther, sharp spikes outstart;
And with blood for dew, the bosom boils;
And a gust of sulphur is all its smell;
And lo, he is horribly in the toils
Of a coal-black giant flower of hell!

CHORUS.

What maketh heaven, That maketh hell.

X.

So, as John called now, through the fire amain,
On the Name, he had cursed with, all his
life —

To the Person, he bought and sold again —
For the Face, with his daily buffets rife —
Feature by feature It took its place:
And his voice, like a mad dog's choking
bark,
At the steady whole of the Judge's face — 48 Died. Forth John's soul flared into the dark.

SUBJOINETH THE ABBOT DEODAET.

God help all poor souls lost in the dark!

HOLY-CROSS DAY.

ON WHICH THE JEWS WERE FORCED TO ATTEND AN ANNUAL CHRISTIAN SER-MON IN ROME.

["Now was come about Holy-Cross Day, and now must my lord preach his first sermon to the Jews: as it was of old cared for in the merciful bowels of the Church, that, so to speak, a crumb at least from her conspicuous table here in Rome should be, though but once yearly, cast to the famish-ing dogs, under-trampled and bespitten-upon beneath the feet of the guests. And a moving sight in truth, this, of so many of the besotted blind restif and ready-to-perish Hebrews! now maternally brought — nay (for He saith, 'Compel them to come in') haled, as it were, by the head and hair, and against their obstinate hearts, to partake of the heavenly grace. What awakening, what striving with tears, what working of a yeasty conscience! Nor was my lord wanting to himself on so apt an occasion; witness the abundance of conversions which did incontinently reward him: though not to my lord be altogether the glory." — Diary by the Bishop's Secretary, 1600.]

What the Jews really said, on thus being driven to church, was rather to this effect: —

I.

FEE, faw, fum! bubble and squeak!
Blessedest Thursday's the fat of the week.
Rumble and tumble, sleek and rough,
Stinking and savoury, smug and gruff,
Take the church-road, for the bell's due
chime
Gives us the summons — 'tis sermon-time!

II.

Boh, here's Barnabas! Job, that's you?
Up stumps Solomon — bustling too?
Shame, man! greedy beyond your years
To handsel the bishop's shaving-shears?

Fair play's a jewel! Leave friends in the lurch?
Stand on a line ere you start for the church!

III.

Higgledy piggledy, packed we lie,
Rats in a hamper, swine in a sty,
Wasps in a bottle, frogs in a sieve,
Worms in a carcase, fleas in a sleeve.
Hist! square shoulders, settle your thumbs
And buzz for the bishop — here he comes.

IV.

Bow, wow, wow — a bone for the dog!
20 I liken his Grace to an acorned hog.
What, a boy at his side, with the bloom of a lass,
To help and handle my lord's hour-glass!
Didst ever behold so lithe a chine?
His cheek hath laps like a fresh-singed swine.

V.

Aaron's asleep — shove hip to haunch,
Or somebody deal him a dig in the paunch!
Look at the purse with the tassel and knob,
And the gown with the angel and thingumbob!
What's he at, quotha? reading his text!
20 Now you've his curtsy — and what comes next?

VI.

See to our converts — you doomed black dozen —
No stealing away — nor cog nor cozen!
You five, that were thieves, deserve it fairly;
You seven, that were beggars, will live less sparely;
You took your turn and dipped in the hat,
Got fortune — and fortune gets you; mind
that!

VII.

Give your first groan — compunction's at
work;
And soft! from a Jew you mount to a Turk.
Lo, Micah, — the selfsame beard on chin 30 He was four times already converted in!
Here's a knife, clip quick — it's a sign of
grace —
Or he ruins us all with his hanging-face.

VIII.

Whom now is the bishop a-leering at?
I know a point where his text falls pat.
I'll tell him to-morrow, a word just now
Went to my heart and made me vow
I meddle no more with the worst of trades —
Let somebody else pay his serenades.

IX.

Groan all together now, whee — hee — 40
hee!
It's a-work, it's a-work, ah, woe is me!
It began, when a herd of us, picked and placed,
Were spurred through the Corso, stripped to the waist;
Jew brutes, with sweat and blood well spent
To usher in worthily Christian Lent.

X.

It grew, when the hangman entered our bounds,
Yelled, pricked us out to his church like hounds:
It got to a pitch, when the hand indeed
Which gutted my purse would throttle my creed:
And it overflows when, to even the odd, 50 Men I helped to their sins help me to their God.

XI.

But now, while the scapegoats leave our
flock,
And the rest sit silent and count the clock,
Since forced to muse the appointed time
On these precious facts and truths sublime, —
Let us fitly employ it, under our breath,
In saying Ben Ezra's Song of Death.

XII.

For Rabbi Ben Ezra, the night he died,
Called sons and sons' sons to his side,
And spoke, "This world has been harsh 60
and strange;
"Something is wrong: there needeth a
change.
"But what, or where? at the last or first?
"In one point only we sin, at worst.

XIII.

"The Lord will have mercy on Jacob yet,
"And again in his border see Israel set.
"When Judah beholds Jerusalem,
"The stranger seed shall be joined to
them:
"To Jacob's House shall the Gentiles cleave.
"So the Prophet saith and his sons believe.

XIV.

"Ay, the children of the chosen race
"Shall carry and bring them to their place:
"In the land of the Lord shall I ad the
same,
"Bondsmen and handmaids. Who shall
blame,
"When the slaves enslave, the oppressed ones o'er
"The oppressor triumph for evermore?

XV.

"God spoke, and gave us the word to keep,
"Bade never fold the hands nor sleep
"Mid a faithless world, — at watch and ward,
"Till Christ at the end relieve our guard
"By His servant Moses the watch was set.
"Though near upon cock-crow, we keep it yet.

XVI.

"Thou! if thou wast He, who at mid-watch came,
"By the starlight, naming a dubious name!
"And if, too heavy with sleep — too rash
"With fear — O Thou, if that martyr-gash
"Fell on Thee coming to take thine own,
"And we gave the Cross, when we owed the Throne —

XVII.

"Thou art the Judge. We are bruised thus.
"But, the Judgment over, join sides with us!
"Thine too is the cause! and not more thine
"Than ours, is the work of these dogs and swine,
"Whose life laughs through and spits at their creed!
"Who maintain Thee in word, and defy Thee in deed!

XVIII.

"We withstood Christ then? Be mindful how
"At least we withstand Barabbas now!
"Was our outrage sore? But the worst we spared,
"To have called these — Christians, had we dared!
"Let defiance to them pay mistrust of Thee,
"And Rome make amends for Calvary!

XIX.

"By the torture, prolonged from age to age,
"By the infamy, Israel's heritage,
"By the Ghetto's plague, by the garb's disgrace,
"By the badge of shame, by the felon's place,
"By the branding-tool, the bloody whip,
"And the summons to Christian fellowship, —

XX.

"We boast our proof that at least the Jew
"Would wrest Christ's name from the Devil's crew.
"Thy face took never so deep a shade
"But we fought them in it, God our aid!

"A trophy to bear, as we march, thy hand,
"South, East, and on to the Pleasant Land!"

[Pope Gregory XVI. abolished this bad business of the Sermon. — R. B.]

PROTUS.

[This poem is without warrant of history.]

AMONG these latter busts we count by scores,
Half-emperors and quarter-emperors,
Each with his bay-leaf fillet, loose-thonged vest, Loric and low-browed Gorgon on the breast, —
One loves a baby face, with violets there,
Violets instead of laurel in the hair,
As those were all the little locks could bear.

Now read here. "Protus ends a period
"Of empery beginning with a god;
"Born in the porphyry chamber at Byzant,
"Queens by his cradle, proud and ministrant:
"And if he quickened breath there, 'twould like fire
"Pantingly through the dim vast realm transpire.
"A fame that he was missing spread afar: 50
"The world from its four corners, rose in war,
"Till he was borne out on a balcony
"To pacify the world when it should see.
"The captains ranged before him, one, his hand
"Made baby points at, gained the chief command.
"And day by day more beautiful he grew
"In shape, all said, in feature and in hue,
"While young Greek sculptors, gazing on the child,
"Became with old Greek sculpture reconciled.
"Already sages laboured to condense 60
"In easy tomes a life's experience:
"And artists took grave counsel to impart
"In one breath and one hand-sweep, all their art —
"To make his graces prompt as blossoming
"Of plentifully-watered palms in spring:
"Since well becomes it, whoso mounts the throne,
"For beauty, knowledge, strength, should stand alone,
"And mortals love the letters of his name."

— Stop! Have you turned two pages?
Still the same.
New reign, same date, The scribe goes 70
on to say

How that same year, on such a month and day,

"John the Pannonian, groundedly believed
"A blacksmith's bastard, whose hard hand reprieved

"The Empire from its fate the year before, —

"Came, had a mind to take the crown, and wore

"The same for six years (during which the Huns

"Kept off their fingers from us), till his sons
"Put something in his liquor" — and so forth.

Then a new reign. Stay — "Take at its just worth"

10 (Subjoins an annotator) "what I give
"As hearsay. Some think, John let Protus live

"And slip away. 'Tis said, he reached man's age

"At some blind northern court; made, first a page,

"Then tutor to the children; last, of use
"About the hunting-stables. I deduce

"He wrote the little tract 'On worming dogs,'

"Whereof the name in sundry catalogues
"Is extant yet. A Protus of the race

"Is rumoured to have died a monk in Thrace, —

20 "And if the same, he reached senility."

Here's John the Smith's rough-hammered head. Great eye,

Gross jaw and gripped lips do what granite can

To give you the crown-grasper. What a man!

THE STATUE AND THE BUST.

THERE'S a palace in Florence, the world knows well,

And a statue watches it from the square,
And this story of both do our townsmen tell.

Ages ago, a lady there,
At the farthest window facing the East
Asked, "Who rides by with the royal air?"

30 The bridesmaids' prattle around her ceased;
She leaned forth, one on either hand;
They saw how the blush of the bride increased —

They felt by its beats her heart expand —
As one at each ear and both in a breath
Whispered, "The Great-Duke Ferdinand."

That self-same instant, underneath,
The Duke rode past in his idle way,
Empty and fine like a swordless sheath.

Gay he rode, with a friend as gay,
Till he threw his head back — "Who is 40
she?"

— "A bride the Riccardi brings home to-day."

Hair in heaps lay heavily
Over a pale brow spirit-pure —
Carved like the heart of a coal-black tree,

Crisped like a war-steed's encolure¹ —
And vainly sought to dissemble her eyes
Of the blackest black our eyes endure.

And lo, a blade for a knight's emprise
Filled the fine empty sheath of a man, —
The Duke grew straightway brave and 50
wise.

He looked at her, as a lover can;
She looked at him, as one who awakes:
The past was a sleep, and her life began.

Now, love so ordered for both their sakes,
A feast was held that selfsame night
In the pile which the mighty shadow makes.

(For Via Larga is three-parts light,
But the palace overshadows one,
Because of a crime which may God requite !

To Florence and God the wrong was done, 60
Through the first republic's murder there
By Cosimo and his cursed son.)

The Duke (with the statue's face in the square)
Turned in the midst of his multitude
At the bright approach of the bridal pair.

Face to face the lovers stood
A single minute and no more,
While the bridegroom bent as a man subdued —

Bowed till his bonnet brushed the floor —
For the Duke on the lady a kiss conferred, 70
As the courtly custom was of yore.

In a minute can lovers exchange a word?
If a word did pass, which I do not think,
Only one out of the thousand heard.

That was the bridegroom. At day's brink
He and his bride were alone at last
In a bedchamber by a taper's blink.

¹ Neck and shoulder of a horse.

Calmly he said that her lot was cast,
That the door she had passed was shut on
her
Till the final catafalk¹ repassed.

The world meanwhile, its noise and stir,
Through a certain window facing the East,
She could watch like a convent's chronicler.

Since passing the door might lead to a feast,
And a feast might lead to so much beside,
He, of many evils, chose the least.

to "Freely I choose too," said the bride —
"Your window and its world suffice," Replied the tongue, while the heart replied —

"If I spend the night with that devil twice,
"May his window serve as my loop of hell
"Whence a damned soul looks on paradise!

"I fly to the Duke who loves me well,
"Sit by his side and laugh at sorrow
"Ere I count another ave-bell.

to "Tis only the coat of a page to borrow,
"And tie my hair in a horse-boy's trim,
"And I save my soul — but not tomorrow" —

(She checked herself and her eye grew dim)
"My father tarries to bless my state:
"I must keep it one day more for him.

"Is one day more so long to wait?
"Moreover the Duke rides past, I know;
"We shall see each other, sure as fate."

She turned on her side and slept. Just so!
So we resolve on a thing and sleep:
to So did the lady, ages ago.

That night the Duke said, "Dear or cheap
"As the cost of this cup of bliss may prove
"To body or soul, I will drain it deep."

And on the morrow, bold with love,
He beckoned the bridegroom (close on call,
As his duty bade, by the Duke's alcove)

And smiled "'Twas a very funeral,
"Your lady will think, this feast of ours, —
"A shame to efface, whate'er befall!

to "What if we break from the Arno bowers,
"And try if Petraja, cool and green,
"Cure last night's fault with this morn-ing's flowers?"

The bridegroom, not a thought to be seen
On his steady brow and quiet mouth,
Said, "Too much favour for me so mean!

¹ The stage or scaffolding for a coffin whilst in the church.

"But, alas! my lady leaves the South;
"Each wind that comes from the Apennine
"Is a menace to her tender youth:

"Nor a way exists, the wise opine,
"If she quits her palace twice this year, 50
"To avert the flower of life's decline."

Quoth the Duke, "A sage and a kindly fear.
"Moreover Petraja is cold this spring:
"Be our feast to-night as usual here!"

And then to himself — "Which night shall bring
"Thy bride to her lover's embraces, fool —
"Or I am the fool, and thou art the king!

"Yet my passion must wait a night, nor cool —
"For to-night the Envoy arrives from France

"Whose heart I unlock with thyself, my 60 tool.

"I need thee still and might miss per-
chance.

"To-day is not wholly lost, beside,
"With its hope of my lady's countenance:

"For I ride — what should I do but ride?
"And passing her palace, if I list,
"May glance at its window — well betide!"

So said, so done: nor the lady missed
One ray that broke from the ardent brow,
Nor a curl of the lips where the spirit kissed.

Be sure that each renewed the vow, 70
No morrow's sun should arise and set
And leave them then as it left them now.

But next day passed, and next day yet,
With still fresh cause to wait one day more
Ere each leaped over the parapet.

And still, as love's brief morning wore,
With a gentle start, half smile, half sigh,
They found love not as it seemed before.

They thought it would work infallibly,
But not in despite of heaven and earth: 80
The rose would blow when the storm passed by.

Meantime they could profit in winter's dearth

By store of fruits that supplant the rose:
The world and its ways have a certain
worth:

And to press a point while these oppose
Were simple policy; better wait:
We lose no friends and we gain no foes.

Meantime, worse fates than a lover's fate,
Who daily may ride and pass and look
Where his lady watches behind the grate!

And she — she watched the square like a book
Holding one picture and only one,
Which daily to find she undertook:

When the picture was reached the book was done,
And she turned from the picture at night to scheme
Of tearing it out for herself next sun.

10 So weeks grew months, years; gleam by gleam
The glory dropped from their youth and
love,
And both perceived they had dreamed a
dream;

Which hovered as dreams do, still above:
But who can take a dream for a truth?
Oh, hide our eyes from the next remove!

One day as the lady saw her youth
Depart, and the silver thread that streaked
Her hair, and, worn by the serpent's tooth,

The brow so puckered, the chin so peaked, —

20 And wondered who the woman was,
Hollow-eyed and haggard-cheeked,

Fronting her silent in the glass —
"Summon here," she suddenly said,
"Before the rest of my old self pass,

"Him, the Carver, a hand to aid,
"Who fashions the clay no love will
change,
"And fixes a beauty never to fade.

"Let Robbia's craft so apt and strange "Arrest the remains of young and fair, 30 "And rivet them while the seasons range.

"Make me a face on the window there,
"Waiting as ever, mute the while,
"My love to pass below in the square!

"And let me think that it may beguile
"Dreary days which the dead must spend
"Down in their darkness under the aisle,

"To say, 'What matters it at the end?
"I did no more while my heart was warm
"Than does that image, my pale-faced
friend.'

40 "Where is the use of the lip's red charm,
"The heaven of hair, the pride of the brow,
"And the blood that blues the inside
arm —

"Unless we turn, as the soul knows how,
"The earthly gift to an end divine?
"A lady of clay is as good, I trow."

But long ere Robbia's cornice, fine,
With flowers and fruits which leaves enlase,
Was set where now is the empty shrine —

(And, leaning out of a bright blue space,
As a ghost might lean from a chink of sky, 50
The passionate pale lady's face —

Eyeing ever, with earnest eye
And quick-turned neck at its breathless stretch,
Some one who ever is passing by. —)

The Duke had sighed like the simplest wretch

In Florence, "Youth — my dream escapes!

"Will its record stay?" And he bade them fetch

Some subtle moulder of brazen shapes —
"Can the soul, the will, die out of a man
"Ere his body find the grave that gapes? 60

"John of Douay¹ shall effect my plan,
"Set me on horseback here aloft,
"Alive, as the crafty sculptor can,

"In the very square I have crossed so oft:
"That men may admire, when future suns
"Shall touch the eyes to a purpose soft,

"While the mouth and the brow stay brave in bronze —

"Admire and say, 'When he was alive
"How he would take his pleasure once!'

"And it shall go hard but I contrive 70
"To listen the while, and laugh in my tomb

"At idleness which aspires to strive."

So! While these wait the trump of doom,
How do their spirits pass, I wonder,
Nights and days in the narrow room?

Still, I suppose, they sit and ponder
What a gift life was, ages ago,
Six steps out of the chapel yonder.

Only they see not God, I know,
Nor all that chivalry of his, 80
The soldier-saints who, row on row,

Burn upward each to his point of bliss
Since, the end of life being manifest,
He had burned his way thro' the world to
this.

I hear you reproach, "But delay was best,
 "For their end was a crime." — Oh, a crime will do
 As well, I reply, to serve for a test,

As a virtue golden through and through,
 Sufficient to vindicate itself
 And prove its worth at a moment's view!

Must a game be played for the sake of pelf?
 Where a button goes, 'twere an epigram
 To offer the stamp of the very Guelph.

10 The true has no value beyond the sham:
 As well the counter as coin, I submit,
 When your table's a hat, and your prize a dram.

Stake your counter as boldly every whit,
 Venture as warily, use the same skill,
 Do your best, whether winning or losing it,

If you choose to play! — is my principle.
 Let a man contend to the uttermost
 For his life's set prize, be it what it will!

20 The counter our lovers staked was lost
 As surely as if it were lawful coin:
 And the sin I impute to each frustrate ghost

Is — the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin,
 Though the end in sight was a vice, I say.
 You of the virtue (we issue join)
 How strive you? De te, fabula!

PORPHYRIA'S LOVER.

THE rain set early in to-night,
 The sullen wind was soon awake,
 It tore the elm-tops down for spite,
 And did its worst to vex the lake:
 30 I listened with heart fit to break.
 When glided in Porphyria; straight
 She shut the cold out and the storm,
 And kneeled and made the cheerless grate
 Blaze up, and all the cottage warm;
 Which done, she rose, and from her form
 Withdrew the dripping cloak and shawl,
 And laid her soiled gloves by, untied
 Her hat and let the damp hair fall,
 And, last, she sat down by my side
 40 And called me. When no voice replied,
 She put my arm about her waist,
 And made her smooth white shoulder
 bare,
 And all her yellow hair displaced,
 And, stooping, made my cheek lie there,
 And spread, o'er all, her yellow hair,
 Murmuring how she loved me — she Too weak, for all her heart's endeavour,
 To set its struggling passion free
 From pride, and vainer ties dissever, 50 And give herself to me for ever.

But passion sometimes would prevail,
 Nor could to-night's gay feast restrain
 A sudden thought of one so pale
 For love of her, and all in vain:
 So, she was come through wind and rain.
 Be sure I looked up at her eyes
 Happy and proud; at last I knew Porphyria worshipped me; surprise
 Made my heart swell, and still it grew 64 While I debated what to do.
 That moment she was mine, mine, fair,
 Perfectly pure and good: I found
 A thing to do, and all her hair
 In one long yellow string I wound
 Three times her little throat around,
 And strangled her. No pain felt she;
 I am quite sure she felt no pain.
 As a shut bud that holds a bee,
 I warily oped her lids: again
 Laughed the blue eyes without a stain. 70
 And I untightened next the tress
 About her neck; her cheek once more Blushed bright beneath my burning kiss:
 I propped her head up as before,
 Only, this time my shoulder bore
 Her head, which droops upon it still:
 The smiling rosy little head,
 So glad it has its utmost will,
 That all it scorned at once is fled,
 80 And I, its love, am gained instead!
 Porphyria's love: she guessed not how
 Her darling one wish would be heard.
 And thus we sit together now,
 And all night long we have not stirred,
 And yet God has not said a word!

"CHILDE ROLAND TO THE DARK TOWER CAME."

(See Edgar's song in "LEAR.")

I.

My first thought was, he lied in every word,
 That hoary cripple, with malicious eye
 Askance to watch the working of his lie
 On mine, and mouth scarce able to afford 90 Suppression of the glee, that pursed and scored
 Its edge, at one more victim gained thereby.

II.

What else should he be set for, with his staff?
 What, save to waylay with his lies, ensnare
 All travellers who might find him posted
 there,
 And ask the road? I guessed what skull-like laugh
 Would break, what crutch 'gin write my epitaph
 For pastime in the dusty thoroughfare,

III.

If at his counsel I should turn aside
 Into that ominous tract which, all agree, Hides the Dark Tower. Yet acquies-cingly

I did turn as he pointed: neither pride
 Nor hope rekindling at the end descried,
 So much as gladness that some end might
 be.

IV.

For, what with my whole world-wide wandering,
 What with my search drawn out thro'
 years, my hope
 Dwindled into a ghost not fit to cope to With that obstreperous joy success would bring,
 I hardly tried now to rebuke the spring
 My heart made, finding failure in its scope.

V.

As when a sick man very near to death Seems dead indeed, and feels begin and
 end
 The tears and takes the farewell of each
 friend,
 And hears one bid the other go, draw
 breath
 Freelier outside, ("since all is o'er," he saith,
 "And the blow fallen no grieving can amend;")

VI.

While some discuss if near the other graves
 20 Be room enough for this, and when a day
 Suits best for carrying the corpse away,
 With care about the banners, scarves and staves:
 And still the man hears all, and only craves
 He may not shame such tender love and stay.

VII.

Thus, I had so long suffered in this quest, Heard failure prophesied so oft, been writ
 So many times among "The Band" —
 to wit,
 The knights who to the Dark Tower's search addressed
 Their steps — that just to fail as they,
 seemed best,
 30 And all the doubt was now — should I be fit?

VIII.

So, quiet as despair, I turned from him,
 That hateful cripple, out of his highway
 Into the path he pointed. All the day
 Had been a dreary one at best, and dim
 Was settling to its close, yet shot one grim
 Red leer to see the plain catch its estray.

IX.

For mark! no sooner was I fairly found Pledged to the plain, after a pace or two,
 Than, pausing to throw backward a last
 view
 O'er the safe road, 'twas gone; grey plain 41
 all round:
 Nothing but plain to the horizon's bound.
 I might go on; nought else remained to do.

X.

So, on I went. I think I never saw Such starved ignoble nature; nothing
 throve:
 For flowers — as well expect a cedar grove!
 But cockle, spurge, according to their law Might propagate their kind, with none to awe,
 You'd think; a burr had been a treasure-trove.

XI.

No! penury, inertness and grimace,
 In some strange sort, were the land's 54 portion. "See
 "Or shut your eyes," said Nature
 peevishly,
 "It nothing skills: I cannot help my case:
 "'Tis the Last Judgment's fire must cure
 this place,
 "Calcine its clods and set my prisoners free."

XII.

If there pushed any ragged thistle-stalk
 Above its mates, the head was chopped;
 the bents
 Were jealous else. What made those holes and rents
 In the dock's harsh swarth leaves, bruised as to baulk
 All hope of greenness? 'tis a brute must walk
 Pashing their life out, with a brute's 64 intents.

XIII.

As for the grass, it grew as scant as hair
 In leprosy; thin dry blades pricked the mud
 Which underneath looked kneaded up with blood.
 One stiff blind horse, his every bone
 a-stare,
 Stood stupefied, however he came there:
 Thrust out past service from the devil's stud!

XIV.

Alive? he might be dead for aught I know,
 With that red gaunt and colloped neck
 a-strain,
 And shut eyes underneath the rusty mane;

Seldom went such grotesqueness with such woe;

I never saw a brute I hated so;
He must be wicked to deserve such pain.

xv.

I shut my eyes and turned them on my
heart.

As a man calls for wine before he fights,
I asked one draught of earlier, happier
sights,

Er: fity I could hope to play my part.
Think first, fight afterwards — the soldier's art:

One taste of the old time sets all to rights.

xvi.

Not it! I fancied Cuthbert's reddening
face

Beneath its garniture of curly gold,
Dear fellow, till I almost felt him fold
An arm in mine to fix me to the place,
That way he used. Alas, one night's dis-
grace!

Out went my heart's new fire and left it cold.

xvii.

Giles then, the soul of honour — there he stands

Frank as ten years ago when knighted
first.

What honest man should dare (he said)
he durst.

Good — but the scene shifts — faugh!
what hangman hands

Pin to his breast a parchment? His own hands

Read it. Poor traitor, spit upon and curst!

xviii.

Better this present than a past like that;
Back therefore to my darkening path
again!

No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain.

Will the night send a howlet or a bat?

I asked: when something on the dismal flat Came to arrest my thoughts and change their train.

xix.

A sudden little river crossed my path

As unexpected as a serpent comes.

No sluggish tide congenial to the glooms;
This, as it frothed by, might have been a bath

For the fiend's glowing hoof — to see the wrath

Of its black eddy bespate with flakes and spumes.

xx.

So petty yet so spiteful! All along,
Low scrubby alders kneeled down over it;

Drenched willows flung them headlong in a fit

Of mute despair, a suicidal throng:
The river which had done them all the
wrong,

Whate'er that was, rolled by, deterred no whit.

xxi.

Which, while I forded, — good saints, 4c
how I feared

To set my foot upon a dead man's cheek,
Each step, or feel the spear I thrust to seek

For hollows, tangled in his hair or beard!
— It may have been a water-rat I speared,
But, ugh! it sounded like a baby's shriek.

xxii.

Glad was I when I reached the other bank.
Now for a better country. Vain presage!

Who were the strugglers, what war did they wage,

Whose savage trample thus could pad the dank

Soil to a plash? Toads in a poisoned tank, 50
Or wild cats in a red-hot iron cage —

xxiii.

The fight must so have seemed in that fell cirque.

What penned them there, with all the plain to choose?

No foot-print leading to that horrid
mews,

None out of it. Mad brewage set to work
Their brains, no doubt, like galley-slaves
the Turk

Pits for his pastime, Christians against Jews.

xxiv.

And more than that — a furlong on — why, there!

What bad use was that engine for, that wheel,

Or brake, not wheel — that harrow fit to 60 reel

Men's bodies out like silk? with all the air
Of Tophet's tool, on earth left unaware,
Or brought to sharpen its rusty teeth of steel.

xxv.

Then came a bit of stubbed ground, once a wood,

Next a marsh, it would seem, and now mere earth

Desperate and done with; (so a fool finds
mirth,

Makes a thing and then mars it, till his mood

Changes and off he goes!) within a rood — Bog, clay and rubble, sand and stark black dearth.

XXVI.

Now blotches rankling, coloured gay and grim,
 Now patches where some leanness of the soil's
 Broke into moss or substances like boils;
 Then came some palsied oak, a cleft in him
 Like a distorted mouth that splits its rim
 Gaping at death, and dies while it recoils.

XXVII.

And just as far as ever from the end!
 Nought in the distance but the evening,
 nought
 To point my footstep further! At the
 thought,
 10 A great black bird, Apollyon's bosom-
 friend,
 Sailed past, nor beat his wide wing dragon-penned
 That brushed my cap — perchance the guide I sought.

XXVIII.

For, looking up, aware I somehow grew,
 'Spite of the dusk, the plain had given
 place
 All round to mountains — with such name to grace
 Mere ugly heights and heaps now stolen in view.
 How thus they had surprised me, — solve it, you!
 How to get from them was no clearer
 case.

XXIX.

Yet half I seemed to recognise some trick 20 Of mischief happened to me, God knows
 when —
 In a bad dream perhaps. Here ended,
 then,
 Progress this way. When, in the very nick
 Of giving up, one time more, came a click As when a trap shuts — you're inside the den!

XXX.

Burningly it came on me all at once,
 This was the place! those two hills on the right,

Crouched like two bulls locked horn in horn in fight;
 While to the left, a tall scalped mountain
 . . . Duncce,
 Dotard, a-dozing at the very nonce,
 After a life spent training for the sight! 34

XXXI.

What in the midst lay but the Tower itself?
 The round squat turret, blind as the fool's heart,
 Built of brown stone, without a counter-
 part
 In the whole world. The tempest's mocking elf
 Points to the shipman thus the unseen shelf
 He strikes on, only when the timbers start.

XXXII.

Not see? because of night perhaps? — why, day
 Came back again for that! before it left,
 The dying sunset kindled through a
 cleft:
 The hills, like giants at a hunting, lay, 40
 Chin upon hand, to see the game at bay, —
 "Now stab and end the creature — to the heft!"

XXXIII.

Not hear? when noise was everywhere! it tolled Increasing like a bell. Names in my ears
 Of all the lost adventurers my peers, —
 How such a one was strong, and such was
 bold,
 And such was fortunate, yet each of old Lost, lost! one moment knelled the woe of years.

XXXIV.

There they stood, ranged along the hillsides, met
 To view the last of me, a living frame 50
 For one more picture! in a sheet of flame
 I saw them and I knew them all. And
 yet
 Dauntless the slug-horn to my lips I set
 And blew. "Childe Roland to the Dark Tower came."

LURIA.

A TRAGEDY.

1846.

I DEDICATE THIS LAST ATTEMPT FOR THE PRESENT AT DRAMATIC POETRY TO A GREAT DRAMATIC POET;

"WISHING WHAT I WRITE MAY BE READ BY HIS LIGHT:"

IF A PHRASE ORIGINALLY ADDRESSED,

BY NOT THE LEAST WORTHY OF HIS CONTEMPORARIES,

TO SHAKESPEARE,

MAY BE APPLIED HERE, BY ONE WHOSE SOLE PRIVILEGE IS IN A GRATEFUL ADMIRATION,

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

LONDON: 1846.

LURIA.

PERSONS.

LURIA, a Moor, Commander of the Florentine Forces.

HUSAIN, a Moor, his friend.

PUCCIO, the old Florentine Commander, now LURIA's chief officer.

BRACCIO, Commissary of the Republic of Florence.

JACOPO (LAPO), his secretary.

TIBURZIO, Commander of the Pisans.

DOMIZIA, a noble Florentine lady.

SCENE. — LURIA'S Camp between Florence and Pisa.

TIME, 14—.

ACT I.

MORNING.

BRACCIO, as dictating to his Secretary;
PUCCIO standing by.

Braccio [to PUCCIO]. Then, you join battle in an hour?

Puccio.

Not I;

Luria, the captain.

Braccio [to the Secretary]. "In an hour, the battle."

[To PUCCIO.] Sir, let your eye run o'er this loose digest,

And see if very much of your report

Have slipped away through my civilian phrase.

Does this instruct the Signory aright

How army stands with army?

Puccio [taking the paper]. All seems here:

— That Luria, seizing with our city's force
The several points of vantage, hill and plain,

Shuts Pisa safe from help on every side, 10
And, baffling the Lucchese arrived too late,

Must, in the battle he delivers now,
Beat her best troops and first of chiefs.

Braccio. So sure?

Tiburzio's a consummate captain too!

Puccio. Luria holds Pisa's fortune in his hand.

Braccio [to the Secretary]. "The Signory hold Pisa in their hand."

Your own proved soldiership's our warrant, sir:

So, while my secretary ends his task,
Have out two horsemen, by the open roads,
To post with it to Florence!

Puccio [returning the paper]. All seems here; 20

Unless . . . Ser Braccio, 'tis my last report!

Since Pisa's outbreak, and my overthrow,
And Luria's hastening at the city's call

To save her, as he only could, no doubt;
Till now that she is saved or sure to be, —

Whatever you tell Florence, I tell you:
Each day's note you, her Commissary,

make
Of Luria's movements, I myself supply.

No youngster am I longer, to my cost;
Therefore while Florence gloried in her

choice 30

And vaunted Luria, whom but Luria, still,

As if zeal, courage, prudence, conduct,
faith,

Had never met in any man before,
I saw no pressing need to swell the cry.
But now, this last report and I have done;
So, ere to-night comes with its roar of
praise,

'Twere not amiss if some one old i' the
trade
Subscribed with, "True, for once rash counsel's best.

"This Moor of the bad faith and doubtful
race,

"This boy to whose untried sagacity,

10 "Raw valour, Florence trusts without reserve

"The charge to save her, — justifies her
choice;

"In no point has this stranger failed his
friends.

"Now praise!" I say this, and it is not
here.

Braccio [to the Secretary]. Write, "Puc-cio, superseded in the charge,

"By Luria, bears full witness to his worth,
"And no reward our Signory can give

"Their champion but he'll back it cheerfully."

Aught more? Five minutes hence, both messengers! [Puccio goes.]

Braccio [after a pause, and while he slowly tears the paper into shreds].

I think . . . (pray God, I hold in fit
contempt

20 This warfare's noble art and ordering,
And, — once the brace of prizers fairly matched,

Poleaxe with poleaxe, knife with knife as
good, —

Spit properly at what men term their skill! —)

Yet here I think our fighter has the odds.
With Pisa's strength diminished thus and
thus,

Such points of vantage in our hands and such,

Lucca still off the stage, too, — all's assured:

Luria must win this battle. Write the Court,

That Luria's trial end and sentence pass!

20 Secretary. Patron, —

Braccio. Ay, Lapo?

Secretary. If you trip, I fall;

'Tis in self-interest I speak —

Braccio. Nay, nay,

You overshoot the mark, my Lapo! Nay!

When did I say pure love's impossible?

I make you daily write those red cheeks

thin,

Load your young brow with what concerns

it least,

And, when we visit Florence, let you pace

The Piazza by my side as if we talked,

Where all your old acquaintances may see:
You'd die for me, I should not be surprised.

Now then!

Secretary. Sir, look about and love
yourself!

Step after step, the Signory and you Tread gay till this tremendous point's to
pass;

Which pass not, pass not, ere you ask
yourself, —

Bears the brain steadily such draughts of
fire,

Or too delicious may not prove the pride
Of this long secret trial you dared plan,

Dare execute, you solitary here,
With the grey-headed toothless fools at

home,

Who think themselves your lords, such 50 slaves are they?

If they pronounce this sentence as you bid,
Declare the treason, claim its penalty, —

And sudden out of all the blaze of life,
On the best minute of his brightest day,

From that adoring army at his back, Thro' Florence' joyous crowds before his

face,

Into the dark you beckon Luria . . .

Braccio. Then —

Why, Lapo, when the fighting-people
vaunt,

We of the other craft and mystery,
May we not smile demure, the danger 60
past?

Secretary. Sir, no, no, no, — the danger, and your spirit

At watch and ward? Where's danger on your part,

With that thin flitting instantaneous steel
'Gainst the blind bull-front of a bruteforce world?

If Luria, that's to perish sure as fate,
Should have been really guiltless after all?

Braccio. Ah, you have thought that?

Secretary. Here I sit, your scribe,
And in and out goes Luria, days and

nights;

This Puccio comes; the Moor his other
friend,

Husain; they talk — that's all feigned 70
easily;

He speaks (I would not listen if I could),
Reads, orders, counsels: — but he rests sometimes, —

I see him stand and eat, sleep stretched

an hour
On the lynx-skins yonder; hold his bared

black arms
Into the sun from the tent-opening; laugh

When his horse drops the forage from his teeth

And neighs to hear him hum his Moorish songs.

That man believes in Florence, as the saint

Tied to the wheel believes in God.

Braccio. How strange!
You too have thought that!

Secretary. Do but you think too,
And all is saved! I only have to write,
"The man seemed false awhile, proves true at last,

"Bury it" — so I write the Signory —
"Bury this trial in your breast for ever,
"Blot it from things or done or dreamed
about!

"So Luria shall receive his meed to-day
"With no suspicion what reverse was near, —

10 "As if no meteoric finger hushed
"The doom-word just on the destroyer's
lip,

"Motioned him off, and let life's sun fall
straight."

Braccio [looks to the wall of the tent].
Did he draw that?

Secretary. With charcoal, when the
watch

Made the report at midnight; Lady Domizia

Space of the unfinished Duomo, you remember;

That is his fancy how a Moorish front Might join to, and complete, the body,
— a sketch, —

And again where the cloak hangs, yonder in the shadow.

Braccio. He loves that woman.

Secretary. She is sent the spy 20 Of Florence, — spics on you as you on
him:

Florence, if only for Domizia's sake,
Is surely safe. What shall I write?

Braccio. I see —
A Moorish front, nor of such ill design!
Lapo, there's one thing plain and positive;
Man seeks his own good at the whole world's cost.

What? If to lead our troops, stand forth our chiefs,

And hold our fate, and see us at their beck,
Yet render up the charge when peace
return,

Have ever proved too much for Florentines,
30 Even for the best and bravest of ourselves —
If in the struggle when the soldier's sword Should sink its point before the statish's pen,

And the calm head replace the violent
hand,

Virtue on virtue still have fallen away
Before ambition with unvarying fate,
Till Florence' self at last in bitterness
Be forced to own such falls the natural
end,

And, sparing further to expose her sons
To a vain strife and profitless disgrace,

40 Declare, "The foreigner, one not my
child,

"Shall henceforth lead my troops, reach height by height

"The glory, then descend into the shame;
"So shall rebellion be less guilt in him,
"And punishment the easier task for me:"

— If on the best of us such brand she set,
Can I suppose an utter alien here,
This Luria, our inevitable foe,
Confessed a mercenary and a Moor, Born free from many ties that bind the
rest

Of common faith in Heaven or hope on 50
earth,

No past with us, no future, — such a spirit

Shall hold the path from which our stauncest broke,

Stand firm where every famed precursor
fell?

My Lapo, I will frankly say, these proofs
So duly noted of the man's intent,
Are for the doting fools at home, not me.
The charges here, they may be true or
false:

— What is set down? Errors and over-
sights,

A dallying interchange of courtesies
With Pisa's General, — all that, hour by 60
hour,

Puccio's pale discontent has furnished us,
Of petulant speeches, inconsiderate acts,
Now overhazard, overcaution now;

Even that he loves this lady who believes
She outwits Florence, and whom Florence posted

By my procurement here, to spy on me,
Lest I one minute lose her from my sight —

She who remembering her whole House's
fall,

That nest of traitors strangled in the birth,

Now labours to make Luria (poor device 70
As plain) the instrument of her revenge

— That she is ever at his ear to prompt Inordinate conceptions of his worth,

Exorbitant belief in worth's reward,
And after, when sure disappointment
follows,

Proportionable rage at such a wrong —
Why, all these reasons, while I urge them
most,

Weigh with me less than least — as nothing weigh.

Upon that broad man's-heart of his, I go:
On what I know must be, yet, while I live, 80
Shall never be, because I live and know.

Brute-force shall not rule Florence! Intellect

May rule her, bad or good as chance supplies:

But intellect it shall be, pure if bad,
And intellect's tradition so kept up.

Till the good come — 'twas intellect that ruled,

Not brute-force bringing from the battle-field

The attributes of wisdom, foresight's graces

We lent it there to lure its grossness on;
All which it took for earnest and kept safe
To show against us in our market-place,
Just as the plumes and tags and swordsmen's-gear

(Fetched from the camp where, at their foolish best,

When all was done they frightened nobody)
Perk in our faces in the street, forsooth,

10 With our own warrant and allowance.
No!

The whole procedure is overcharged — its end

In too strict keeping with the bad first step.
To conquer Pisa was sheer inspiration?

Well then, to perish for a single fault,
Let that be simple justice! There, my Lapo!

A Moorish front ill suits our Duomo's body:

Blot it out — and bid Luria's sentence come!

[LURIA, who, with DOMIZIA, has entered unobserved at the close of the last phrase, now advances.

Luria. And Luria, Luria, what of Luria now?

Braccio. Ah, you so close, sir? Lady Domizia too?

20 I said it needs must be a busy moment
For one like you: that you were now i' the thick

Of your duties, doubtless, while we idlers sat . . .

Luria. No — in that paper, — it was in that paper

What you were saying!

Braccio. Oh — my day's dispatch! I censure you to Florence: will you see?

Luria. See your dispatch, your last, for the first time?

Well, if I should, now? For in truth, Domizia,

He would be forced to set about another, In his sly cool way, the true Florentine,

30 To mention that important circumstance.
So, while he wrote I should gain time, such time!

Do not send this!

Braccio. And wherefore?

Luria. These Lucchese

Are not arrived — they never will arrive!
And I must fight to-day, arrived or not,

And I shall beat Tiburzio, that is sure:
And then will be arriving his Lucchese,

But slowly, oh so slowly, just in time
Too look upon my battle from the hills,
Like a late moon, of use to nobody!

40 And I must break my battle up, send forth,

Surround on this side, hold in check on that.

Then comes to-morrow, we negotiate,
You make me send for fresh instructions home,

— Incompleteness, incompleteness!
Braccio. Ah, we scribes!

Why, I had registered that very point,
The non-appearance of our foes' ally,

As a most happy fortune; both at once
Were formidable: singly faced, each falls.

Luria. So, no great battle for my Florentines!

No crowning deed, decisive and complete, 50
For all of them, the simple as the wise,

Old, young, alike, that do not understand
Our wearisome pedantic art of war,

By which we prove retreat may be success,
Delay — best speed, — half loss, at times,

— whole gain:
They want results: as if it were their fault!

And you, with warmest wish to be my friend,

Will not be able now to simply say "Your servant has performed his task —

enough!"
"You ordered, he has executed: good! 60

"Now walk the streets in holiday attire,
"Congratulate your friends, till noon strikes fierce,

"Then form bright groups beneath the Duomo's shade!"

No, you will have to argue and explain,

Persuade them, all is not so ill in the end,
Tease, tire them out! Arrive, arrive,

Lucchese!
Domizia. Well, you will triumph for the past enough,

Whatever be the present chance; no service

Falls to the ground with Florence: she awaits

Her saviour, will receive him fittingly. 70

Luria. Ah, Braccio, you know Florence!
Will she, think you,

Receive one . . . what means "fittingly receive"?

— Receive compatriots, doubtless — I am none:

And yet Domizia promises so much!
Braccio. Kind women still give men a woman's prize.

I know not o'er which gate most boughs

will arch,
Nor if the Square will wave red flags or blue.

I should have judged, the fullest of rewards

Our state gave Luria, when she made him

chief
Of her whole force, in her best captain's 80

place.
Luria. That, my reward? Florence

on my account

Relieved Ser Puccio?—mark you, my reward!

And Puccio's having all the fight's true joy—

Goes here and there, gets close, may fight, himself,

While I must order, stand aloof, o'ersee. That was my calling, there was my true place!

I should have felt, in some one over me, Florence impersonate, my visible head, As I am over Puccio,—taking life

Directly from her eye! They give me you: But do you cross me, set me half to work?

I enjoy nothing—though I will, for once! Decide, shall we join battle? may I wait?

Braccio. Let us compound the matter; wait till noon:

Then, no arrival,—

Luria. Ah, noon comes too fast! I wonder, do you guess why I delay Involuntarily the final blow As long as possible? Peace follows it!

Florence at peace, and the calm studious heads

Come out again, the penetrating eyes; As if a spell broke, all's resumed, each art

You boast, more vivid that it slept awhile. 'Gainst the glad heaven, o'er the white palace-front The interrupted scaffold climbs anew;

The walls are peopled by the painter's brush:

The statue to its niche ascends to dwell. The present noise and trouble have retired

And left the eternal past to rule once more; You speak its speech and read its records plain, Greece lives with you, each Roman breathes your friend:

30 But Luria—where will then be Luria's place?

Domizia. Highest in honour, for that past's own sake,

Of which his actions, sealing up the sum By saving all that went before from wreck,

Will range as part, with which be worshipped too.

Luria. Then I may walk and watch you in your streets,

Lead the smooth life my rough life helps no more,

So different, so new, so beautiful— Nor fear that you will tire to see parade

The club that slew the lion, now that crooks

o And shepherd-pipes come into use again? For very lone and silent seems my East

In its drear vastness: still it spreads, and still

No Braccios, no Domizias anywhere— Not ever more! Well, well, to-day is

ours!

Domisia [to BRACCIO]. Should he not have been one of us?

Luria. Oh, no!

Not one of you, and so escape the thrill Of coming into you, of changing thus,—

Feeling a soul grow on me that restricts The boundless unrest of the savage heart!

The sea heaves up, hangs loaded o'er the 50 land,

Breaks there and buries its tumultuous strength;

Horror, and silence, and a pause awhile: Lo, inland glides the gulf-stream, miles away, In rapture of assent, subdued and still,

'Neath those strange banks, those unimagin'd skies.

Well, 'tis not sure the quiet lasts for ever! Your placid heads still find rough hands new work; Some minute's chance—there comes the need of mine: And, all resolved on, I too hear at last.

Oh, you must find some use for me, Ser 60 Braccio!

You hold my strength; 'twere best dispose of it:

What you created, see that you find food for—

I shall be dangerous else! Braccio. How dangerous, sir!

Luria. There are so many ways, Domizia warns me,

And one with half the power that I possess,—Grows very formidable. Do you doubt?

Why, first, who holds the army . . . Domizia. While we talk,

Morn wears; we keep you from your proper place,

The field.

Luria. Nay, to the field I move no more; My part is done, and Puccio's may begin: 70

I cannot trench upon his province longer With any face.—You think yourselves

so safe? Why, see—in concert with Tiburzio, now— One could . . .

Domizia. A trumpet! Luria. My Lucchese at last!

Arrived, as sure as Florence stands! Your leave! [Springs out.]

Domizia. How plainly is true greatness characterized

By such unconscious sport as Luria's here, Strength sharing least the secret of itself!

Be it with head that schemes or hand that acts,

Such save the world which none but they 80 could save,

Yet think whate'er they did, that world could do.

Braccio. Yes: and how worthy note, that these same great ones

In hand or head, with such unconsciousness

And all its due entailed humility,
Should never shrink, so far as I perceive,
From taking up whatever tool there be Effects the whole world's safety or mishap,
Into their mild hands as a thing of course!
The statish finds it natural to lead
The mob who might as easily lead him
The captain marshals troops born skilled in war —

10 Statist and captain verily believe!
While we poor scribes . . . you catch me thinking now,
That I shall in this very letter write
What none of you are able! To it, Lapo!

[DOMIZIA goes.]

This last worst all-affected childish fit
Of Luria's, this be-praised unconsciousness, Convinces me; the past was no child's
play:

It was a man beat Pisa, — not a child.
All's mere dissimulation — to remove
The fear, he best knows we should entertain.

20 The utmost danger was at hand. Is't written?

Now make a duplicate, lest this should fail,
And speak your fullest on the other side.

Secretary. I noticed he was busily repairing

My half-effacement of his Duomo sketch,
And, while he spoke of Florence, turned
to it,

As the Mage Negro king to Christ the babe.
I judge his childishness the mere relapse
To boyhood of a man who has worked lately,

And presently will work, so, meantime,
plays:

30 Whence, more than ever I believe in him.
Braccio [after a pause]. The sword!

At best, the soldier, as he says,
In Florence — the black face, the barbarous
name,

For Italy to boast her show of the age,
Her man of men! To Florence with each letter!

ACT II.

NOON.

Domizia. Well, Florence, shall I reach thee, pierce thy heart

Thro' all its safeguards? Hate is said to help —

Quicken the eye, invigorate the arm;
And this my hate, made up of many hates,
Might stand in scorn of visible instrument,

40 And will thee dead: yet do I trust it not.
Nor man's devices nor Heaven's memory
Of wickedness forgot on earth so soon,
But thy own nature, — hell and thee I
trust,

To keep thee constant in that wickedness,
Where my revenge may meet thee. Turn
aside

A single step, for gratitude or shame, — Grace but this Luria, — this wild mass of rage

I have prepared to launch against thee
now, —

With other payment than thy noblest
found, —

Give his desert for once its due reward, — 50
And past thee would my sure destruction
roll.

But thou, who mad'st our House thy sacrifice,

It cannot be thou wilt except this Moor
From the accustomed fate of zeal and
truth:

Thou wilt deny his looked-for recompense,
And then — I reach thee. Old and trained, my sire

Could bow down on his quiet broken
heart,

Die awe-struck and submissive, when at
last

The strange blow came for the expected wreath;

And Porzio passed in blind bewilderment 60
To exile, never to return, — they say,

Perplexed in his frank simple honest soul,
As if some natural law had changed, — how else

Could Florence, on plain fact pronouncing
thus,

Judge Porzio's actions worthy such reward
But Berto, with the ever-passionate pulse, Oh that long night, its dreadful hour on
hour,

In which no way of getting his fair fame
From their inexplicable charges free,

Was found, save pouring forth the impa- 70
tient blood

To show its colour whether false or no!
My brothers never had a friend like
me

Close in their need to watch the time, then
speak,

— Burst with a wakening laughter on their dream,

Cry, "Florence was all falseness, so, false
here!"

And show them what a simple task remained —

To leave dreams, rise, and punish in God's name

The city wedded to the wickedness.
None stood by them as I by Luria stand.

So, when the stranger cheated of his due 80
Turns on thee as his rapid nature bids,

Then, Florence, think, a hireling at thy throat

For the first outrage, think who bore thy
last,

Yet mutely in forlorn obedience died!

He comes — his friend — black faces in the camp
Where moved those peerless brows and eyes of old.

Enter LURIA and HUSAIN.

Domizia. Well, and the movement — is it as you hope?

'Tis Lucca?

Luria. Ah, the Pisan trumpet merely!
Tiburzio's envoy, I must needs receive.

Domizia. Whom I withdraw before;
tho' if I lingered

You could not wonder, for my time fleets
fast.

The overtaking time brings such reward!
And where will then be room for me?

Yet, praised,

Remember who was first to promise praise,
And envy those who also can perform!

[Goes.

Luria. This trumpet from the Pisans? —

Husain. In the camp;

A very noble presence — Braccio's visage
On Cuccio's body — calm and fixed and
good;

A man I seem as I had seen before:

Most like, it was some statue had the face.

Luria. Admit him! This will prove the last delay.

Husain. Ay, friend, go on, and die thou going on!

Thou heardest what the grave woman said
but now:

To-night rewards thee. That is well to hear;

But stop not therefore: hear it, and go on!

Luria. Oh, their reward and triumph
and the rest

They round me in the ears with, all day
long?

All that, I never take for earnest, friend!
Well would it suit us, — their triumphal
arch

Or storied pillar, — thee and me, the Moors!
But gratitude in those Italian eyes —

That, we shall get?

Husain. It is too cold an air.

Our sun rose out of yonder mound of mist:
Where is he now? So, I trust none of
them.

Luria. Truly?

Husain. I doubt and fear. There stands a wall

'Twixt our expansive and explosive race
And those absorbing, concentrating men.

They use thee.

Luria. And I feel it, Husain! yes,
And care not — yes, an alien force like
mine

Is only called to play its part outside Their different nature; where its sole use
seems

To fight with and keep off an adverse force,

As alien, — which repelled, mine too
withdraws:

Inside, they know not what to do with me. 40
Thus I have told them laughingly and oft,
But long since am prepared to learn the worst.

Husain. What is the worst?

Luria. I will forestall them, Husain,
Will speak the destiny they dare not
speak —

Banish myself before they find the heart.
I will be first to say, "The work rewards!"

"I know, for all your praise, my use is over,
"So may it prove! — meanwhile 'tis best
I go,

"Go carry safe my memories of you all
"To other scenes of action, newer lands." 50

Thus leaving them confirmed in their belief
They would not easily have tired of me.

You think this hard to say?

Husain. Say or not say,
So thou but go, so they but let thee go!

This hating people, that hate each the other,

And in one blandness to us Moors unite —
Locked each to each like slippery snakes,

I say,
Which still in all their tangles, hissing
tongue

And threatening tail, ne'er do each other
harm;

While any creature of a better blood, 60
They seem to fight for, while they circle
safe

And never touch it, — pines without a
wound,

Withers away beside their eyes and breath.
See thou, if Puccio come not safely out

Of Braccio's grasp, this Braccio sworn his foe,

As Braccio safely from Domizia's toils Who hates him most! But thou, the friend of all,

... Come out of them!

Luria. The Pisan trumpet now!

Husain. Breathe free — it is an enemy, no friend! [Goes.

Luria. He keeps his instincts, no new 70 culture mars

Their perfect use in him; just so the brutes
Rest not, are anxious without visible cause,

When change is in the elements at work,
Which man's trained senses fail to apprehend.

But here, — he takes the distant chariot
wheel

For thunder, festal flame for lightning's
flash,

The finer traits of cultivated life
For treachery and malevolence: I see!

Enter TIBURZIO.

Luria. Quick, sir, your message! I but wait your message

To sound the charge. You bring no overture

For truce? I would not, for your General's sake,

You spoke of truce; a time to fight is come, And, whatsoe'er the fight's event, he keeps His honest soldier's name to beat me with, Or leaves me all himself to beat, I trust!

Tiburzio. I am Tiburzio.

Luria. You? 'Tis

yes . . . Tiburzio!

You were the last to keep the ford i' the valley

From Puccio, when I threw in succours there

Why, I was on the heights — through the defile

Ten minutes after, when the prey was lost!

You wore an open skull-cap with a twist Of water-reeds — the plume being hewn away;

While I drove down my battle from the heights,

I saw with my own eyes!

Tiburzio. And you are Luria Who sent my cohort, that laid down its arms

In error of the battle-signal's sense, Back safely to me at the critical time — One of a hundred deeds. I know you. Therefore

To none but you could I . . .

Luria. No truce, Tiburzio!

Tiburzio. Luria, you know the peril imminent

On Pisa, — that you have us in the toils, Us her last safeguard, all that intercepts The rage of her implacablest of foes From Pisa: if we fall to-day, she falls.

Tho' Lucca will arrive, yet, 'tis too late.

You have so plainly here the best of it,

That you must feel, brave soldier as you are, How dangerous we grow in this extreme,

How truly formidable by despair.

Still, probabilities should have their weight:

The extreme chance is ours, but, that chance failing,

You win this battle. Wherefore say I this? To be well apprehended when I add,

This danger absolutely comes from you. Were you, who threaten thus, a Florentine . . .

Luria. Sir, I am nearer Florence than her sons.

I can, and have perhaps obliged the State, Nor paid a mere son's duty.

Tiburzio. Even so.

Were you the son of Florence, yet endued With all your present nobleness of soul,

No question, what I must communicate Would not detach you from her.

Luria. Me, detach?

Tiburzio. Time urges. You will ruin presently

Pisa, you never knew, for Florence' sake You think you know. I have from time to time

Made prize of certain secret missives sent From Braccio here, the Commissary, home:

And knowing Florence otherwise, I piece The entire chain out, from these its scattered links.

Your trial occupies the Signory; They sit in judgment on your conduct now.

When men at home inquire into the acts Which in the field e'en foes appreciate . . .

Brief, they are Florentines! You, saving them,

Seek but the sure destruction saviours find.

Luria. Tiburzio!

Tiburzio. All the wonder is of course. I am not here to teach you, nor direct,

Only to loyally apprise — scarce that.

This is the latest letter, sealed and safe, 60

As it left here an hour ago. One way Of two thought free to Florence, I command.

The duplicate is on its road; but this, — Read it, and then I shall have more to say.

Luria. Florence!

Tiburzio. Now, were yourself a Florentine,

This letter, let it hold the worst it can, Would be no reason you should fall away.

The mother city is the mother still, And recognition of the children's service

Her own affair; reward — there's no 70 reward!

But you are bound by quite another tie. Nor nature shows, nor reason, why at first

A foreigner, born friend to all alike, Should give himself to any special State

More than another, stand by Florence' side

Rather than Pisa; 'tis as fair a city You war against as that you fight for — famed

As well as she in story, graced no less With noble heads and patriotic hearts:

Nor to a stranger's eye would either cause, 80 Stripped of the cumulative loves and hates Which take importance from familiar view,

Stand as the right and sole to be upheld. Therefore, should the preponderating

gift

Of love and trust, Florence was first to throw,

Which made you hers, not Pisa's void the scale, —

Old ties dissolving, things resume their place

And all begins again. Break seal and read!

At least let Pisa offer for you now! And I, as a good Pisan, shall rejoice — 90

Though for myself I lose, in gaining you,
This last light and its opportunity;
The chance it brings of saving Pisa yet,
Or in the turn of battle dying so That shame should want its extreme bitter-
ness.

Luria. Tiburzio, you that fight for Pisa
now

As I for Florence . . . say my chance were yours!

You read this letter, and you find . . .
no, no!

Too mad!

Tiburzio. I read the letter, find they purpose

10 When I have crushed their foe, to crush me: well?

Luria. You, being their captain, what is it you do?

Tiburzio. Why, as it is, all cities are alike;

As Florence pays you, Pisa will pay me.
I shall be as belied, whate'er the event,

As you, or more: my weak head, they will
say,

Prompted this last expedient, my faint
heart

Entailed on them indelible disgrace, Both which defects ask proper punishment.

Another tenure of obedience, mine!

20 You are no son of Pisa's: break and read!

Luria. And act on what I read? What act were fit?

If the firm-fixed foundation of my faith
In Florence, who to me stands for man-
kind,

— If that break up and, disimprisoning
From the abyss . . . Ah friend, it cannot
be!

You may be very sage, yet — all the world
Having to fail, or your sagacity,
You do not wish to find yourself alone!
What would the world be worth? Whose love be sure?

30 The world remains: you are deceived!

Tiburzio. Your hand!

I lead the vanguard. — If you fall, beside,
The better: I am left to speak! For me,
This was my duty, nor would I rejoice
If I could help, it misses its effect;
And after all you will look gallantly Found dead here with that letter in your breast.

Luria. Tiburzio — I would see these people once

And test them ere I answer finally!

At your arrival let the trumpet sound:

40 If mine return not then the wonted cry
It means that I believe — am Pisa's!

Tiburzio. Well!
[Goes.]

Luria. My heart will have it he speaks true! My blood

Beats close to this Tiburzio as a friend.
If he had stept into my watch-tent, night
And the wild desert full of foes around,
I should have broke the bread and given the salt

Secure, and, when my hour of watch was
done,

Taken my turn to sleep between his knees,
Safe in the untroubled brow and honest
cheek.

Oh world, where all things pass and nought 58
abides,

Oh life, the long mutation — is it so?
Is it with life as with the body's change?

— Where, e'en tho' better follow, good must pass,

Nor manhood's strength can mate with boyhood's grace,

Nor age's wisdom, in its turn, find strength,
But silently the first gift dies away,

And though the new stays, never both at
once.

Life's time of savage instinct o'er with me,
It fades and dies away, past trusting more,
As if to punish the ingratitude 60

With which I turned to grow in these new lights,

And learned to look with European eyes.
Yet it is better, this cold certain way,

Where Braccio's brow tells nothing,
Puccio's mouth,

Domizia's eyes reject the searcher: yes!
For on their calm sagacity I lean,

Their sense of right, deliberate choice of
good,

Sure, as they know my deeds, they deal
with me.

Yes, that is better — that is best of all!
Such faith stays when mere wild belief 70 would go.

Yes — when the desert creature's heart,
at fault

Amid the scattering tempest's pillared
sands,

Betrays its step into the pathless drift —
The calm instructed eye of man holds fast

By the sole bearing of the visible star,
Sure that when slow the whirling wreck

subside,
The boundaries, lost now, shall be found

again, —
The palm-trees and the pyramid over all.

Yes: I trust Florence: Pisa is deceived.

Enter BRACCIO, PUCCIO, and DOMIZIA.

Braccio. Noon's at an end: no Lucca? 80
You must fight.

Luria. Do you remember ever, gentle
friends,

I am no Florentine?

Domizia. It is yourself

Who still are forcing us, importunately,
To bear in mind what else we should forget.

Luria. For loss! — for what I lose in being none!

No shrewd man, such as you yourselves respect,

But would remind you of the stranger's loss

In natural friends and advocates at home, Hereditary loves, even rivalships

With precedent for honour and reward.

Still, there's a gain, too! If you take it so,

The stranger's lot has special gain as well.

Do you forget there was my own far East

10 I might have given away myself to, once,

As now to Florence, and for such a gift,

Stood there like a descended deity?

There, worship waits us: what is it waits

here? [Shows the letter.]

See! Chance has put into my hand the

means

Of knowing what I earn, before I work.

Should I fight better, should I fight the

worse,

With payment palpably before me? See!

Here lies my whole reward! Best learn

it now

Or keep it for the end's entire delight?

20 Braccio. If you serve Florence as the vulgar serve,

For swordsman's-pay alone, — break seal and read!

In that case, you will find your full desert.

Luria. Give me my one last happy moment,

friends!

You need me now, and all the graciousness

This letter can contain will hardly balance

The after-feeling that you need no more.

This moment . . . oh, the East has use with you!

Its sword still flashes — is not flung aside

With the past praise, in a dark corner yet!

30 How say you? 'Tis not so with Florentines,

Captains of yours: for them, the ended

war

Is but a first step to the peace begun:

He who did well in war, just earns the

right

To begin doing well in peace, you know:

And certain my precursors, — would not

such

Look to themselves in such a chance as

mine,

Secure the ground they trod upon, perhaps?

For I have heard, by fits, or seemed to hear,

Of strange mishap, mistake, ingratitude,

40 Treachery even. Say that one of you

Surmise this letter carried what might turn

To harm hereafter, cause him prejudice:

What would he do?

Domizia [hastily]. Thank God and take revenge!

Hurl her own force against the city straight!

And, even at the moment when the foe Sounded defiance . . .

[TIBURZIO'S trumpet sounds in the distance.]

Luria. Ah, you Florentines!

So would you do? Wisely for you, no doubt.

Why simple Moorish instinct bids me clench

The obligation you relieve me from,

Still deeper! [To PUCCIO.] Sound our answer, I should say,

And thus: — [tearing the paper.] — The battle! That solves every doubt.

ACT III.

AFTERNOON.

PUCCIO, as making a report to JACOPO.

Puccio. And here, your captain must report the rest;

For, as I say, the main engagement over

And Luria's special part in it performed,

How could a subaltern like me expect

Leisure or leave to occupy the field

And glean what dropped from his wide harvesting?

I thought, when Lucca at the battle's end

Came up, just as the Pisan centre broke,

That Luria would detach me and prevent 60 The flying Pisans seeking what they

found,

Friends in the rear, a point to rally by.

But no, more honourable proved my post!

I had the august captive to escort

Safe to our camp; some other could pursue,

Fight, and be famous; gentler chance was

mine —

Tiburzio's wounded spirit must be soothed!

He's in the tent there.

Jacopo. Is the substance down?

I write — "The vanguard beaten and both

wings

"In full retreat, Tiburzio prisoner" —

70 And now, — "That they fell back and formed again

"On Lucca's coming." Why then, after

all,

'Tis half a victory, no conclusive one?

Puccio. Two operations where a sole had served.

Jacopo. And Luria's fault was —?

Puccio. Oh, for fault — not much!

He led the attack, a thought impetuously,

— There's commonly more prudence;

now, he seemed

To hurry measures, otherwise well judged.

By over-concentrating strength at first

80 Against the enemy's van, both wings escaped:

That's reparable, yet it is a fault.

Enter BRACCIO.

Jacopo. As good as a full victory to Florence,

With the advantage of a fault beside —
What is it, Puccio? — that by pressing forward

With too impetuous . . .

Braccio. The report anon!

Thanks, sir — you have elsewhere a charge, I know. [PUCCIO goes.]

There's nothing done but I would do again;
Yet, Lapo, it may be the past proves nothing,

And Luria has kept faithful to the close.

Jacopo. I was for waiting.

Braccio. Yes: so was not I.

He could not choose but tear that letter — true!

Still, certain of his tones, I mind, and looks: —

You saw, too, with a fresher soul than I. So, Porzio seemed an injured man, they say!

Well, I have gone upon the broad, sure ground.

Enter LURIA, PUCCIO, and DOMIZIA.

Luria [to PUCCIO]. Say, at his pleasure I will see Tiburzio!

All's at his pleasure.

Domizia [to LURIA]. Were I not forewarned

You would reject, as you do constantly, Praise, — I might tell you how you have deserved

Of Florence by this last and crowning feat:

But words offend.

Luria. Nay, you may praise me now. I want instruction every hour, I find, On points where once I saw least need of it;

And praise, I have been used to slight perhaps,

Seems scarce so easily dispensed with now. After a battle half one's strength is gone; The glorious passion in us once appeased, Our reason's calm cold dreadful voice begins.

All justice, power and beauty scarce appear Monopolised by Florence, as of late,

To me, the stranger: you, no doubt, may know

Why Pisa needs must bear her rival's yoke.

And peradventure I grow nearer you,

For I, too, want to know and be assured.

When a cause ceases to reward itself,

Its friend seeks fresh sustainments; praise is one,

And here stand you — you, lady, praise me well.

But yours — (your pardon) — is unlearned praise.

To the motive, the endeavour, the heart's self,

Your quick sense looks: you crown and call aright

The soul o' the purpose, ere 'tis shaped as 40 act,

Takes flesh i' the world, and clothes itself a king.

But when the act comes, stands for what 'tis worth,

— Here's Puccio, the skilled soldier, he's my judge!

Was all well, Puccio?

Puccio. All was . . . must be well: If we beat Lucca presently, as doubtless . . .

— No, there's no doubt, we must — all was well done.

Luria. In truth? Still you are of the trade, my Puccio!

You have the fellow-craftsman's sympathy. There's none cares, like a fellow of the craft,

For the all-unestimated sum of pains 50

That go to a success the world can see: They praise then, but the best they never know

— While you know! So, if envy mix with it,

Hate, even, still the bottom-praise of all, Whatever be the dregs, that drop's pure gold!

— For nothing's like it; nothing else records

Those daily, nightly drippings in the dark Of the heart's blood, the world lets drop away

For ever — so, pure gold that praise must be!

And I have yours, my soldier! yet the best 60 Is still to come. There's one looks on apart Whom all refers to, failure or success; What's done might be our best, our utmost work,

And yet inadequate to serve his need. Here's Braccio now, for Florence — here's our service —

Well done for us, seems it well done for him?

His chosen engine, tasked to its full strength Answers the end? Should he have chosen higher?

Do we help Florence, now our best is wrought?

Braccio. This battle, with the foregone 70 services,

Saves Florence.

Luria. Why then, all is very well! Here am I in the middle of my friends,

Who know me and who love me, one and all.

And yet . . . 'tis like . . . this instant while I speak

Is like the turning-moment of a dream
When . . . Ah, you are not foreigners like
me!

Well then, one always dreams of friends at home;

And always comes, I say, the turning-point

When something changes in the friendly
eyes

That love and look on you . . . so slight, so slight . . .

And yet it tells you they are dead and
gone,

Or changed and enemies, for all their
words,

And all is mockery and a maddening show.

10 You now, so kind here, all you Florentines,

What is it in your eyes . . . those lips,
those brows . . .

Nobody spoke it, yet I know it well!

Come now — this battle saves you, all's
at end,

Your use of me is o'er, for good, for ill, —
Come now, what's done against me, while
I speak,

In Florence? Come! I feel it in my
blood,

My eyes, my hair, a voice is in my ears
That spite of all this smiling and soft speech

30 You are betraying me. What is it you do?

Have it your way, and think my use is
over

Think you are saved and may throw off the mask —

Have it my way, and think more work remains

Which I could do, — so, show you fear
me not!

Or prudent be, or daring, as you cho se,
But tell me — tell what I refused to know

At noon, lest heart should fail me! Well?
That letter?

My fate is sealed at Florence! What is it?

Braccio. Sir, I shall not deny what you divine.

It is no novelty for innocence

30 To be suspected, but a privilege:

The after certain compensation comes.

Charges, I say not whether false or true,
Have been preferred against you some time since,

Which Florence was bound, plainly, to
receive,

And which are therefore undergoing now
The due investigation. That is all.

I doubt not but your innocence will prove Apparent and illustrious, as to me,

To them this evening, when the trial ends.

10 Luria. My trial?

Domizia. Florence, Florence to the end,

My whole heart thanks thee!

Puccio [to BRACCIO]. What is "trial,"
sir?

It was not for a trial — surely, no —
I furnished you those notes from time to
time?

I held myself aggrieved — I am a man —
And I might speak, — ay, and speak mere truth, too,

And yet not mean at bottom of my heart
What should assist a — trial, do you say?

You should have told me!

Domizia. Nay, go on, go on!

His sentence! Do they sentence him?
What is it?

The block — wheel?

Braccio. Sentence there is none as yet, 50
Nor shall I give my own opinion now

Of what it should be, or is like to be.

When it is passed, applaud or disapprove!

Up to that point, what is there to impugn?

Luria. They are right, then, to try me?

Braccio. I assert,

Maintain and justify the absolute right
Of Florence to do all she can have done

In this procedure, — standing on her guard,
Receiving even services like yours

With utmost fit suspicious wariness. 60

In other matters, keep the mummery up!
Take all the experiences of all the world,

Each knowledge that broke through a heart to life,

Each reasoning which, to reach, burnt out a brain,

— In other cases, know these, warrant
these,

And then dispense with these — 'tis very
well!

Let friend trust friend, and love demand love's like,

And gratitude be claimed for benefits, — There's grace in that, — and when the fresh heart breaks,

The new brain proves a ruin, what of them? 70

Where is the matter of one moth the more

Singed in the candle, at a summer's end?

But Florence is no simple John or James

To have his toy, his fancy, his conceit

That he's the one excepted man by fate,
And, when fate shows him he's mistaken

there,
Die with all good men's praise, and yield his place

To Paul and George intent to try their
chance!

Florence exists because these pass away. 80
She's a contrivance to supply a type

Of man, which men's deficiencies refuse;
She binds so many, that she grows out of
them —

Stands steady o'er their numbers, though they change

And pass away — there's always what upholds

Always enough to fashion the great show.
As see, yon hanging city, in the sun,

Of shapely cloud substantially the same!

- A thousand vapours rise and sink again,
Are interfused, and live their life and die,—
Yet ever hangs the steady show i' the air,
Under the sun's straight influence: that is
well,
That is worth heaven should hold, and God should bless!
And so is Florence,—the unseen sun
above,
Which draws and holds suspended all of
us,
Binds transient vapours into a single cloud Differing from each and better than they
all.
- 10 And shall she dare to stake this permanence
On any one man's faith? Man's heart is
weak,
And its temptations many: let her prove
Each servant to the very uttermost
Before she grant him her reward, I say!
Domizia. And as for hearts she chances to mistake,
Wronged hearts, not destined to receive
reward,
Though they deserve it, did she only know,
—What should she do for these?
Braccio. What does she not?
Say, that she gives them but herself to serve
- 20 Here's Luria—what had profited his
strength,
When half an hour of sober fancying
Had shown him step by step the useless-
ness
Of strength exerted for strength's proper
sake?
But the truth is, she did create that strength,
Draw to the end the corresponding means.
The world is wide—are we the only men?
Oh, for the time, the social purpose' sake,
Use words agreed on, bandy epithets,
Call any man the sole great wise and good!
- 30 But shall we therefore, standing by our-
selves,
Insult our souls and God with the same
speech?
There, swarm the ignoble thousands under
him:
What marks us from the hundreds and the tens?
Florence took up, turned all one way the
soul
Of Luria with its fires, and here he glows!
She takes me out of all the world as him,
Fixing my coldness till like ice it checks
The fire! So, Braccio, Luria, which is
best?
Luria. Ah, brave me? And is this indeed the way
- 40 To gain your good word and sincere esteem?
Am I the baited animal that must turn And fight his baiters to deserve their
praise?
- Obedience is mistake then? Be it so!
Do you indeed remember I stand here
The captain of the conquering army,—
mine—
With all your tokens, praise and promise, ready
To show for what their names meant when you gave,
Not what you styled them now you take
away?
If I call in my troops to arbitrate,
And dash the first enthusiastic thrill
Of victory with this you menace now—
Commend to the instinctive popular sense,
My story first, your comment afterward,— Will they take, think you, part with you or
me?
If I say—I, the labourer they saw work, Ending my work, ask pay, and find my lords
Have all this while provided silently
Against the day of pay and proving faith,
By what you call my sentence that's to
come—
Will friends advise I wait complacently? 60
If I meet Florence half way at their head,
What will you do, my mild antagonist?
Braccio. I will rise up like fire, proud and triumphant
That Florence knew you thoroughly and
by me,
And so was saved. "See, Italy," I'll say,
"The crown of our precautions! Here's a man
"Was far advanced, just touched on the belief
"Less subtle cities had accorded long;
"But we were wiser: at the end comes
this!"
And from that minute, where is Luria? 70
Lost!
The very stones of Florence cry against
The all-exacting, nought-enduring fool
Who thus resents her first probation, flouts
As if he, only, shone and cast no shade,
He, only, walked the earth with privilege
Against suspicion, free where angels fear:
He, for the first inquisitive mother's-word, Must turn, and stand on his defence, forsooth!
Reward? You will not be worth punishment!
Luria. And Florence knew me thus! 80
Thus I have lived,—
And thus you, with the clear fine intellect,
Braccio, the cold acute instructed mind,
Out of the stir, so calm and unconfused,
Reported me—how could you otherwise!
Ay?—and what dropped from you, just now, moreover?
Your information, Puccio?—Did your
skill,
Your understanding sympathy approve
Such a report of me? Was this the end?

Or is even this the end? Can I stop here?
 You, lady, with the woman's stand apart,
 The heart to see with, past man's brain and eyes,
 . . . I cannot fathom why you should destroy

The unoffending one, you call your friend —
 Still, lessoned by the good examples here
 Of friendship, 'tis but natural I ask —
 Had you a further aim, in aught you urged,
 Than your friend's profit — in all those instances

10 Of perfidy, all Florence wrought of wrong —
 All I remember now for the first time?

Domizia. I am a daughter of the Traversari,
 Sister of Porzio and of Berto both,
 So, have foreseen all that has come to pass.
 I knew the Florence that could doubt their
 faith,

Must needs mistrust a stranger's — dealing
 them

Punishment, would deny him his reward.
 And I believed, the shame they bore and
 died,

He would not bear, but live and fight against —

20 Seeing he was of other stuff than they.

Luria. Hear them! All these against one foreigner!

And all this while, where is, in the whole
 world,

To his good faith a single witness?

Tiburzio [who has entered unseen during the preceding dialogue]. Here!

Thus I bear witness, not in word but deed.
 I live for Pisa; she's not lost to-day
 By many chances — much prevents from
 that!

Her army has been beaten, I am here,
 But Lucca comes at last, one happy
 chance!

I rather would see Pisa three times lost

30 Than saved by any traitor, even by you;
 The example of a traitor's happy fortune
 Would bring more evil in the end than
 good; —

Pisa rejects the traitor, craves yourself!
 I, in her name, resign forthwith to you My charge, the highest office, sword and shield!

You shall not, by my counsel, turn on Florence

Your army, give her calumny that ground —
 Nor bring one soldier: be you all we gain!
 And all she'll lose, — a head to deck some
 bridge,

40 And save the cost o' the crown should deck
 the head.

Leave her to perish in her perfidy, Plague-stricken and stripped naked to all
 eyes,

A proverb and a by-word in all mouths!
 Go you to Pisa! Florence is my place —

Leave me to tell her of the rectitude,
 I, from the first, told Pisa, knowing it.
 To Pisa!

Domizia. Ah, my Braccio, are you
 caught?

Braccio. Puccio, good soldier and good citizen,

Whom I have ever kept beneath my eye,
 Ready as fit, to serve in this event

50 Florence, who clear foretold it from the first —

Through me, she gives you the command and charge

She takes, through me, from him who held it late!

A painful trial, very sore, was yours:
 All that could draw out, marshal in array
 The selfish passions 'gainst the public
 good —

Slights, scorn, neglects, were heaped on you to bear:

And ever you did bear and bow the head!
 It had been sorry trial, to precede

Your feet, hold up the promise of reward 60
 For luring gleam; your footsteps kept the track

Thro' dark and doubt: take all the light
 at once!

Trial is over, consummation shines;
 Well have you served, as well henceforth command!

Puccio. No, no . . . I dare not! I am grateful, glad;

But Luria — you shall understand he's wronged:

And he's my captain: this is not the way
 We soldiers climb to fortune: think again!
 The sentence is not even passed, beside!
 I dare not: where's the soldier could? 70

Luria. Now, Florence —
 Is it to be? You will know all the strength
 O' the savage — to your neck the proof must go?

You will prove the brute nature? Ah, I
 see!

The savage plainly is impassible:
 He keeps his calm way through insulting
 words,

Sarcastic looks, sharp gestures — one of which

Would stop you, fatal to your finer sense,
 But if he stolidly advance, march mute
 Without a mark upon his callous hide,
 Through the mere brushwood you grow 80 angry with,

And leave the tatters of your flesh upon,
 — You have to learn that when the true bar comes,

The murk mid-forest, the grand obstacle,
 Which when you reach, you give the labour
 up,

Nor dash on, but lie down composed before,

— He goes against it, like the brute he is:

It falls before him, or he dies in his course.
 I kept my course through past ingratitude:
 I saw — it does seem, now, as if I saw,
 Could not but see, those insults as they fell,
 — Ay, let them glance from off me, very
 like,
 Laughing, perhaps, to think the quality
 You grew so bold on, while you so despised
 The Moor's dull mute inapprehensive
 mood,
 Was saving you: I bore and kept my
 course.
 20 Now real wrong fronts me: see if I succumb!
 Florence withstands me? I will punish
 her.

At night my sentence will arrive, you say.
 Till then I cannot, if I would, rebel — Unauthorised to lay my office down,
 Retaining my full power to will and do:
 After — it is to see. Tiburzio, thanks!
 Go; you are free: join Lucca! I suspend
 All further operations till to-night.
 Thank you, and for the silence most of all!
 20 [To BRACCIO.] Let my complacent bland accuser go

Carry his self-approving head and heart Safe through the army which would trample him
 Dead in a moment at my word or sign!
 Go, sir, to Florence; tell friends what I
 say —
 That while I wait my sentence, theirs waits
 them!

[To DOMIZIA.] You, lady, — you have black Italian eyes!
 I would be generous if I might: oh, yes —
 For I remember how so oft you seemed Inclined at heart to break the barrier down 30 Which Florence finds God built between us both.

Alas, for generosity! this hour
 Asks retribution: bear it as you may,
 I must — the Moor — the savage, — pardon you!

Puccio, my trusty soldier, see them forth!

ACT IV.

EVENING.

Enter PUCCIO and JACOPO.

Puccio. What Luria will do? Ah, 'tis yours, fair sir,
 Your and your subtle-witted master's part,
 To tell me that; I tell you what he can.

Jacopo. Friend, you mistake my station: I observe

The game, watch how my betters play,
 no more.

10 Puccio. But mankind are not pieces — there's your fault!

You cannot push them, and, the first move
 made,

Lean back and study what the next shall
 be,

In confidence that, when 'tis fixed upon,
 You find just where you left them, blacks and whites:

Men go on moving when your hand's away.
 You build, I notice, firm on Luria's faith
 This whole time, — firmlier than I choose to build,

Who never doubted it — of old, that is —
 With Luria in his ordinary mind.

But now, oppression makes the wise man 50
 mad:

How do I know he will not turn and stand
 And hold his own against you, as he may?
 Suppose he but withdraw to Pisa —
 well, —

Then, even if all happen to your wish,
 Which is a chance . . .

Jacopo. Nay — 'twas an oversight,
 Not waiting till the proper warrant came:
 You could not take what was not ours to
 give.

But when at night the sentence really
 comes,

Our city authorises past dispute
 Luria's removal and transfers the charge, 60
 You will perceive your duty and accept?

Puccio. Accept what? muster-rolls of soldiers' names?

An army upon paper? I want men,
 The hearts as well as hands — and where's a heart

But beats with Luria, in the multitude
 I come from walking through by Luria's
 side?

You gave them Luria, set him thus to grow, Head-like, upon their trunk; one heart feeds both,

They feel him there, live twice, and well know why.

— For they do know, if you are ignorant, 70
 Who kept his own place and respected

theirs,
 Managed their sweat, yet never spared his
 blood.

All was your act: another might have served —

There's peradventure no such dearth of heads —

But you chose Luria: so, they grew one
 flesh,

And now, for nothing they can understand,
 Luria removed, off is to roll the head;
 The body's mine — much I shall do with
 it!

Jacopo. That's at the worst.

Puccio. No — at the best, it is!
 Best, do you hear? I saw them by his side. 80
 Only we two with Luria in the camp Are left that keep the secret? You think
 that?

Hear what I know: from rear to van, no heart

But felt the quiet patient hero there Was wronged, nor in the moveless ranks an eye

But glancing told its fellow the whole story
Of that convicted silent knot of spies Who passed thro' them to Florence; they might pass —

No breast but gladlier beat when free of such!

Our troops will catch up Luria, close him
round,

Bear him to Florence as their natural
lord,

10 Partake his fortune, live or die with him.

Jaçopo. And by mistake catch up along with him

Puccio, no doubt, compelled in self despite
To still continue second in command!

Puccio. No, sir, no second nor so fortunate!

Your tricks succeed with me too well for
that!

I am as you have made me, live and die
To serve your end — a mere trained fighting-hack,

With words, you laugh at while they leave your mouth

For my life's rule and ordinance of God!

20 I have to do my duty, keep my faith,
And earn my praise, and guard against my
blame,

As I was trained. I shall accept your
charge,

And fight against one better than myself, Spite of my heart's conviction of his
worth —

That, you may count on! — just as hitherto
I have gone on, persuaded I was wronged,

Slighted, insulted, terms we learn by rote, —
All because Luria superseded me —

30 Because the better nature, fresh-inspired,
Mounted above me to its proper place!

What mattered all the kindly graciousness,
The cordial brother's-bearing? This was clear —

I, once the captain, now was subaltern,
And so must keep complaining like a fool!
Go, take the curse of a lost soul, I say!

You neither play your puppets to the end,
Nor treat the real man, — for his realness'
sake

Thrust rudely in their place, — with such regard

As might console them for their altered rank.

40 Me, the mere steady soldier, you depose
For Luria, and here's all your pet deserves!
Of what account, then, is your laughing-
stock?

One word for all: whatever Luria does,
— If backed by his indignant troops he
turn,

Revenge himself, and Florence go to
ground, —

Or, for a signal everlasting shame,
He pardon you, simply seek better friends, Side with the Pisans and Lucchese for
change

— And if I, pledged to ingrates past belief, Dare fight against a man such fools call 54
false,

Who, inasmuch as he was true, fights
me, —

Whichever way he win, he wins for worth,
For every soldier, for all true and good!
Sir, chronicling the rest, omit not this!

As they go, enter LURIA and HUSAIN.

Husain. Saw'st thou? — For they are gone! The world lies bare

Before thee, to be tasted, felt and seen
Like what it is, now Florence goes away!

Thou livest now, with men art man again!
Those Florentines were all to thee of old;

But Braccio, but Domizia, gone is each, 60
There lie beneath thee thine own multitudes!

Saw'st thou?

Luria. I saw.

Husain. Then, hold thy course, my king!

The years return. Let thy heart have its
way:

Ah, they would play with thee as with all
else,

Turn thee to use, and fashion thee anew,
Find out God's fault in thee as in the rest?

Oh watch, oh listen only to these fiends
Once at their occupation! Ere we know,

The free great heaven is shut, their stifling pall

Drops till it frets the very tingling hair, 70
So weighs it on our head, — and, for the
earth,

Our common earth is tethered up and
down,

Over and across — "here shalt thou move," they cry!

Luria. Ay, Husain?

Husain. So have they spoiled all beside!
So stands a man girt round with Floren-
tines,

Priests, greybeards, Braccios, women,
boys and spies,

All in one tale, all singing the same song,
How thou must house, and live at bed and board,

Take pledge and give it, go their every way, Breathe to their measure, make thy blood 84 beat time

With theirs — or, all is nothing — thou art
lost —

A savage, how shouldst thou perceive as they?

Feel glad to stand 'neath God's close naked hand!

Look up to it! Why, down they pull thy neck,
Lest it crush thee, who feel'st it and wouldst kiss,
Without their priests that needs must glove it first,
Lest peradventure flesh offend thy lip.
Love woman! Why, a very beast thou art!

Thou must . . .

Luria. Peace, Husain!

Husain. Ay but, spoiling all,
For all, else true things, substituting false,
That they should dare spoil, of all instincts, thine!

Should dare to take thee with thine instincts up,

10 Thy battle-ardours, like a ball of fire,
And class them and allow them place and play

So far, no farther — unabashed the while!
Thou with the soul that never can take rest —

Thou born to do, undo, and do again,
And never to be still, — wouldst thou make war?

Oh, that is commendable, just and right!
"Come over," say they, "have the honour due

"In living out thy nature! Fight thy best:
"It is to be for Florence, not thyself!

20 "For thee, it were a horror and a plague;
"For us, when war is made for Florence, see,

"How all is changed: the fire that fed on earth

"Now towers to heaven!" —

Luria. And what sealed up so long
My Husain's mouth?

Husain. Oh friend, oh lord — for me,
What am I? — I was silent at thy side,
Who am a part of thee. It is thy hand,
Thy foot that glows when in the heart fresh blood

Boils up, thou heart of me! Now, live again,

Again love as thou likest, hate as free!

30 Turn to no Braccios nor Domizias now,
To ask, before thy very limbs dare move,
If Florence' welfare be concerned thereby!

Luria. So clear what Florence must expect of me?

Husain. Both armies against Florence!
Take revenge!

Wide, deep — to live upon, in feeling now, —

And, after live, in memory, year by year —
And, with the dear conviction, die at last!
She lies now at thy pleasure: pleasure have!

Their vaunted intellect that gilds our sense, 10 And blends with life, to show it better by, — How think'st thou? — I have turned that light on them!

They called our thirst of war a transient thing;

"The battle-element must pass away
"From life," they said, "and leave a tranquil world."

— Master, I took their light and turned it full

On that dull turgid vein they said would burst

And pass away; and as I looked on life,
Still everywhere I tracked this, though it hid

And shifted, lay so silent as it thought,
Changed shape and hue yet ever was the same. 50

Why, 'twas all fighting, all their nobler life!

All work was fighting, every harm — defeat,

And every joy obtained — a victory!

Be not their dupe!

— Their dupe? That hour is past!

Here stand'st thou in the glory and the calm:

All is determined. Silence for me now!
[HUSAIN goes.]

Luria. Have I heard all?

Domizia [advancing from the background.

No, Luria, I remain!

Not from the motives these have urged on thee,

Ignoble, insufficient, incomplete,

And pregnant each with sure seeds of decay, 60

As failing of sustainment from thyself,

— Neither from low revenge, nor selfishness,

Nor savage lust of power, nor one, nor all,

Shalt thou abolish Florence! I proclaim

The angel in thee, and reject the sprites

Which ineffectual crowd about his strength,

And mingle with his work and claim a share!

Inconsciously to the augustest end

Thou hast arisen: second not in rank

So much as time, to him who first ordained 70

That Florence, thou art to destroy, should be.

Yet him a star, too, guided, who broke first

The pride of lonely power, the life apart,

And made the eminences, each to each,

Lean o'er the level world and let it lie

Safe from the thunder henceforth 'neath their tops;

So the few famous men of old combined,

And let the multitude rise underneath,

And reach them and unite — so Florence grew:

Braccio speaks true, it was well worth the 80 price.

But when the sheltered many grew in pride

And grudged the station of the elected ones,

Who, greater than their kind, are truly great

Only in voluntary servitude —

Time was for thee to rise, and thou art here.
Such plague possessed this Florence: who can tell

The mighty girth and greatness at the heart
Of those so perfect pillars of the grove
She pulled down in her envy? Who as I,
The light weak parasite born but to twine Round each of them and, measuring them,
live?

My light love keeps the matchless circle
safe,

My slender life proves what has passed
away.

10 I lived when they departed; lived to cling To thee, the mighty stranger; thou wouldst
rise

And burst the thralldom, and avenge, I knew.

I have done nothing; all was thy strong bole.

But a bird's weight can break the infant
tree

Which after holds an acry in its arms,
And 'twas my care that nought should warp thy spire

From rising to the height; the roof is reached

O' the forest, break through, see extend the sky!

Go on to Florence, Luria! 'Tis man's
cause!

20 Fail thou, and thine own fall were least to dread:

Thou keepest Florence in her evil way,
Encouragest her sin so much the more —

And while the ignoble past is justified,
Thou all the surelier warp'st the future growth,

The chiefs to come, the Lurias yet unborn,

That, greater than thyself, are reached o'er
thee

Who giv'st the vantage-ground their foes require

As o'er my prostrate House thyself wast
reached.

Man calls thee, God requites thee! 'All is
said,

30 The mission of my House fulfilled at last:
And the mere woman, speaking for herself, Reserves speech — it is now no woman's
time.

[DOMIZIA goes.

Luria. Thus at the last must figure Luria, then!

Doing the various work of all his friends,
And answering every purpose save his
own.

No doubt, 'tis well for them to wish; but
him —

After the exploit what were left? Per-
chance

A little pride upon the swarthy brow,
At having brought successfully to bear

40 'Gainst Florence' self her own especial
arms, —

Her craftiness, impelled by fiercer strength From Moorish blood than feeds the northern wit

But after! — once the easy vengeance willed,

Beautiful Florence at a word laid low — (Not in her domes and towers and palaces,

Not even in a dream, that outrage!) — low,

As shamed in her own eyes henceforth for
ever,

Low, for the rival cities round to laugh,
Conquered and pardoned by a hireling

Moor!
— For him, who did the irreparable wrong, 50

What would be left, his life's illusion fled, —
What hope or trust in the forlorn wide

world?
How strange that Florence should mistake

me so!
Whence grew this? What withdrew her faith from me?

Some cause! These fretful-blooded children talk Against their mother, — they are wronged,

they say —
Notable wrongs her smile makes up again!

So, taking fire at each supposed offence,
They may speak rashly, suffer for their

speech:
But what could it have been in word or 60

deed
Thus injured me? Some one word spoken

more
Out of my heart, and all had changed

perhaps.
My fault, it must have been, — for, what gain they?

Why risk the danger? See, what I could do!

And my fault, wherefore visit upon them,

My Florentines? The notable revenge
I meditated! To stay passively,

Attend their summons, be as they dispose!
Why, if my very soldiers keep the rank,

And if my chieftains acquiesce, what then? 70
I ruin Florence, teach her friends mistrust,

Confirm her enemies in harsh belief,
And when she finds one day, as find she

must,
The strange mistake, and how my heart was hers,

Shall it console me, that my Florentines

Walk with a sadder step, in graver guise,
Who took me with such frankness, praised

me so,
At the glad outset? Had they loved me

less,
They had less feared what seemed a change

in me.
And after all, who did the harm? Not 80

they!
How could they interpose with those old

fools

I' the council? Suffer for those old fools' sake —

They, who made pictures of me, sang the songs

About my battles? Ah, we Moors get blind

Out of our proper world, where we can see!

The sun that guides is closer to us! There —

There, my own orb! He sinks from out the sky.

Why, there! a whole day has he blessed the land,

My land, our Florence all about the hills, The fields and gardens, vineyards, olive-grounds,

10 All have been blest: and yet we Florentines

With souls intent upon our battle here, Found that he rose too soon, or set too late, Gave us no vantage, or gave Pisa much — Therefore we wronged him! Does he turn in ire

To burn the earth that cannot understand? Or drop out quietly, and leave the sky, His task once ended? Night wipes blame away.

Another morning from my East shall spring And find all eyes at leisure, all disposed 10 To watch and understand its work, no doubt.

So praise the new sun, the successor praise, Praise the new Luria and forget the old!

(Taking a phial from his breast.)

Strange! This is all I brought from my own land

To help me: Europe would supply the rest,

All needs beside, all other helps save one! I thought of adverse fortune, battle lost, The natural upbraiding of the loser, And then this quiet remedy to seek At end of the disastrous day. (He drinks.)

'Tis sought!

10 This was my happy triumph-morning: Florence

Is saved: I drink this, and ere night, — die! Strange!

ACT V.

NIGHT.

LURIA and PUCCIO.

Luria. I thought to do this, not to talk this: well,

Such were my projects for the city's good, To help her in attack or by defence.

Time, here as elsewhere, soon or late may take

Our foresight by surprise thro' chance and change;

But not a little we provide against

— If you see clear on every point.

Puccio. Most clear.

Luria. Then all is said — not much, if you count words,

Yet to an understanding ear enough 40 And all that my brief stay permits, beside.

Nor must you blame me, as I sought to teach

My elder in command, or threw a doubt Upon the very skill, it comforts me

To know I leave, — your steady soldier-ship

Which never failed me: yet, because it seemed

A stranger's eye might haply note defect That skill, through use and custom, over-looks —

I have gone into the old cares once more, As if I had to come and save again 50

Florence — that May — that morning! 'Tis night now.

Well — I broke off with? . . .

Puccio. Of the past campaign

You spoke — of measures to be kept in mind

For future use.

Luria. True, so . . . but, time — no time!

As well end here: remember this, and me! Farewell now!

Puccio. Dare I speak?

Luria. South o' the river —

How is the second stream called . . . no, — the third?

Puccio. Pesa.

Luria. And a stone's cast from the fording-place,

To the east, — the little mount's name? Puccio. Lupo.

Luria. Ay!

Ay — there the tower, and all that side is 60 safe!

With San Romano, west of Evola,

San Miniato, Scala, Empoli,

Five towers in all, — forget not?

Puccio. Fear not me!

Luria. — Nor to memorialise the Council now,

I' the easy hour, on those battalions' claim, Who forced a pass by Staggia on the hills,

And kept the Sieneſe at check!

Puccio. One word —

Sir, I must speak! That you submit your self

To Florence' bidding, howſoe'er it prove, And give up the command to me — is 70 much,

Too much, perhaps: but what you tell me now,

Even will affect the other course you choose —

Poor as it may be, perils even that!

Refuge you seek at Pisa: yet these plans

All militate for Florence, all conclude

Your formidable work to make her queen
O' the country, — which her rivals rose against

When you began it, — which to interrupt,
Pisa would buy you off at any price!
You cannot mean to sue for Pisa's help,
With this made perfect and on record?

Luria. I —

At Pisa, and for refuge, do you say?

Puccio. Where are you going, then?

You must decide

On leaving us, a silent fugitive, Alone, at night — you, stealing through our lines,

Who were this morning's Luria, — you escape

To painfully begin the world once more,
With such a past, as it had never been!
Where are you going?

Luria. Not so far, my Puccio,
But that I hope to hear, enjoy and
praise

(If you mind praise from your old captain
yet)

Each happy blow you strike for Florence.

Puccio. Ay, —

But ere you gain your shelter, what may
come?

For see — though nothing's surely known as yet,

Still — truth must out — I apprehend the worst.

If mere suspicion stood for certainty
Before, there's nothing can arrest the step Of Florence toward your ruin, once on foot.

Forgive her fifty times, it matters not!
And having disbelieved your innocence,
How can she trust your magnanimity?
You may do harm to her — why then,
you will!

And Florence is sagacious in pursuit.

Have you a friend to count on?

Luria. One sure friend.

Puccio. Potent?

Luria. All-potent.

Puccio. And he is apprised?

Luria. He waits me.

Puccio. So! — Then I, put in your
place,

Making my profit of all done by you,
Calling your labours mine, reaping their
fruit,

To this, the State's gift, now add yours
beside —

That I may take as my peculiar store
These your instructions to work Florence
good.

And if, by putting some few happily
In practice, I should both advantage her And draw down honour on myself, — what
then?

Luria. Do it, my Puccio! I shall know and praise.

Puccio. Though so, men say, "mark what we gain by change

"— A Puccio for a Luria!"

Luria. Even so.

Puccio. Then, not for fifty hundred Florences,

Would I accept one office save my own,
Fill any other than my rightful post

Here at your feet, my captain and my lord!
That such a cloud should break, such trouble be,

Ere a man settle, soul and body, down
Into his true place and take rest for ever!

Here were my wise eyes fixed on your right-
hand,

And so the bad thoughts came and the worse words,

And all went wrong and painfully enough,
No wonder, — till, the right spot stumbled

on,

All the jar stops, and there is peace at
once!

I am yours now, — a tool your right-hand wields!

God's love, that I should live, the man I
am,

On orders, warrants, patents, and the like,
As if there were no glowing eye i' the world

To glance straight inspiration to my brain, No glorious heart to give mine twice the beats!

For, see — my doubt, where is it? — fear?
'tis flown!

And Florence and her anger are a tale
To scare a child. Why, half-a-dozen
words

Will tell her, spoken as I now can speak,
Her error, my past folly — and all's right,
And you are Luria, our great chief again!
Or at the worst — which worst were best
of all —

To exile or to death I follow you.

Luria. Thanks, Puccio! Let me use the privilege

You grant me: if I still command you, —
stay!

Remain here — my vicegerent, it shall be,
And not successor: let me, as of old,

Still serve the State, my spirit prompting
yours —

Still triumph, one for both. There!
Leave me now!

You cannot disobey my first command:
Remember what I spoke of Jacopo,

And what you promised to concert with
him!

Send him to speak with me — nay, no
farewell!

You shall be by me when the sentence comes.

[PUCCIO goes.]

So, there's one Florentine returns again!
Out of the genial morning-company,

One face is left to take into the night.

Enter JACOPO.

Jacopo. I wait for your command, sir.

Luria. What, so soon?

I thank your ready presence and fair word.
I used to notice you in early days
As of the other species, so to speak,
Those watchers of the lives of us who act —
That weigh our motives, scrutinise our thoughts.

So, I propound this to your faculty
As you would tell me, were a town to take . . . That is, of old. I am departing
hence

Under these imputations; that is nought —
I leave no friend on whom they may re-
bound,

Hardly a name behind me in the land,
Being a stranger: all the more behoves
That I regard how altered were the case
With natives of the country, Florentines
On whom the like mischance should fall:
the roots

O' the tree survive the ruin of the trunk —
No root of mine will throb, you understand.
But I had predecessors, Florentines,
Accused as I am now, and punished so —
The Traversari: you know more than I How stigmatised they are, and lost in shame.

Now Puccio, who succeeds me in command Both served them and succeeded, in due
time;

He knows the way, holds proper documents,
And has the power to lay the simple
truth

Before an active spirit, as I count yours:
And also there's Tiburzio, my new friend,
Will, at a word, confirm such evidence,
He being the great chivalric soul we know.
I put it to your tact, sir — were't not well,
— A grace, though but for contrast's sake,
no more, —

If you who witness, and have borne a share
Involuntarily in my mischance, Should, of your proper motion, set your skill

To indicate — that is, investigate
The right or wrong of what mischance befell

Those famous citizens, your countrymen?
Nay, you shall promise nothing: but reflect,
And if your sense of justice prompt you —
good!

Jacopo. And if, the trial past, their fame stand clear
To all men's eyes, as yours, my lord, to
mine —

Their ghosts may sleep in quiet satisfied!
For me, a straw thrown up into the air,
My testimony goes for a straw's worth.
I used to hold by the instructed brain,
And move with Braccio as my master-
wind;

The heart leads surelier: I must move
with you —

As greatest now, who ever were the best.
So, let the last and humblest of your servants

Accept your charge, as Braccio's heretofore,
And tender homage by obeying you!

[JACOPO goes.]

Luria. Another! Luria goes not poorly
forth.

If we could wait! The only fault's with
time;

All men become good creatures: but so slow!

Enter DOMIZIA.

Luria. Ah, you once more?

Domizia. Domizia, whom you knew,
Performed her task, and died with it. 'Tis
I,

Another woman, you have never known.
Let the past sleep now!

Luria. I have done with it.

Domizia. How inexhaustibly the spirit grows!

One object, she seemed erewhile born to
reach

With her whole energies and die content, —
So like a wall at the world's edge it stood,
With nought beyond to live for, — is that reached?

Already are new undreamed energies
Outgrowing under, and extending farther
To a new object; there's another world.
See! I have told the purpose of my life;
'Tis gained: you are decided, well or ill —
You march on Florence, or submit to
her. —

My work is done with you, your brow declares.

But — leave you? More of you seems yet to reach:

I stay for what I just begin to see.

Luria. So that you turn not to the past!

Domizia. You trace
Nothing but ill in it — my selfish impulse,
Which sought its end and disregarded
yours?

Luria. Speak not against your nature:
best, each keep

His own — you, yours — most, now that I keep mine,

— At least, fall by it, having too weakly
stood.

God's finger marks distinctions, all so fine, so
We would confound: the lesser has its use,

Which, when it apes the greater, is forgone.

I; born a Moor, lived half a Florentine;
But, punished properly, can end, a Moor.

Beside, there's something makes me understand

Our nature: I have seen it.

Domizia. Aught like mine?

Luria. In my own East . . . if you would stoop and help
My barbarous illustration! It sounds ill;
Yet there's no wrong at bottom: rather, praise.

Domizia. Well?

Luria. We have creatures there, which if you saw

The first time, you would doubtless marvel at

For their surpassing beauty, craft and strength.

And though it were a lively moment's shock

When you first found the purpose of forked tongues

That seem innocuous in their lambent play,

o Yet, once made know such grace requires such guard,

Your reason soon would acquiesce, I think,
In wisdom which made all things for the best —

So, take them, good with ill, contentedly,
The prominent beauty with the latent sting.
I am glad to have seen you wondrous Florentines:

Yet . . .

Domizia. I am here to listen.

Luria. My own East!

How nearer God we were! He glows above

With scarce an intervention, presses close
And palpitatingly, his soul o'er ours:

20 We feel him, nor by painful reason know!

The everlasting minute of creation

Is felt there; now it is, as it was then;

All changes at his instantaneous will,

Not by the operation of a law

Whose maker is elsewhere at other work.

His hand is still engaged upon his world —

Man's praise can forward it, man's prayer suspend,

For is not God all-mighty? To recast

The world, erase old things and make them new,

30 What costs it Him? So, man breathes nobly there.

And inasmuch as feeling, the East's gift,
Is quick and transient — comes, and lo, is gone —

While Northern thought is slow and durable,
Surely a mission was reserved for me,

Who, born with a perception of the power

And use of the North's thought for us of the East,

Should have remained, turned knowledge to account,

Giving thought's character and permanence
To the too transitory feeling there —

40 Writing God's message plain in mortal words.

Instead of which, I leave my fated field
For this where such a task is needed least,

Where all are born consummate in the art
I just perceive a chance of making mine, —
And then, deserting thus my early post,
I wonder that the men I come among Mistake me! There, how all had under-

stood,
Still brought fresh stuff for me to stamp and keep,

Fresh instinct to translate them into law!
Me, who . . .

Domizia. Who here the greater task achieve,

More needful even: who have brought fresh stuff

For us to mould, interpret and prove
right, —

New feeling fresh from God, which, could we know

O' the instant, where had been our need
of it?

— Whose life re-teaches us what life should
be,

What faith is, loyalty and simpleness,
All, once revealed but taught us so long
since

That, having mere tradition of the fact, —
Truth copied falteringly from copies faint,

The early traits all dropped away, — we 6c
said

On sight of faith like yours, "So looks not
faith

"We understand, described and praised
before."

But still, the feat was dared; and though at first

It suffered from our haste, yet trace by trace

Old memories reappear, old truth returns,
Our slow thought does its work, and all's re-known.

Oh, noble Luria! What you have decreed
I see not, but no animal revenge,

No brute-like punishment of bad by
worse —

It cannot be, the gross and vulgar way 70
Traced for me by convention and mistake,

Has gained that calm approving eye and
brow!

Spare Florence, after all! Let Luria trust
To his own soul, he whom I trust with
mine!

Luria. In time!

Domizia. How, Luria?

Luria. It is midnight now,
And they arrive from Florence with my
fate.

Domizia. I hear no step.

Luria. I feel one, as you say.

Enter HUSAIN.

Husain. The man returned from Florence!

Luria. As I knew

Husain. He seeks thee.

Luria. And I only wait for him.

Aught else?

Husain. A movement of the Luccese troops Southward —

Luria. Toward Florence? Have out instantly . . .

Ah, old use clings! Puccio must care
henceforth.

In — quick — 'tis nearly midnight! Bid him come!

Enter TIBURZIO, BRACCIO, and PUCCIO.

Tiburzio? — not at Pisa?

Tiburzio. I return From Florence: I serve Pisa, and must
think

By such procedure I have served her best.

A people is but the attempt of many

To rise to the completer life of one;

And those who live as models for the mass

Are singly of more value than they all.

Such man are you, and such a time is this,

That your sole fate concerns a nation more

Than much apparent welfare: that to prove

Your rectitude, and duly crown the same,

Imports us far beyond to-day's event,

A battle's loss or gain: man's mass remains, —

Keep but God's model safe, new men will rise

To take its mould, and other days to prove

How great a good was Luria's glory.

True —

I might go try my fortune as you urged

And, joining Lucca, helped by your dis-
grace,

Repair our harm — so were to-day's work
done;

But where leave Luria for our sons to see?

No, I look farther. I have testified

(Declaring my submission to your arms)

Her full success to Florence, making clear

Your probity, as none else could: I spoke,

And out it shone!

Luria. Ah — until Braccio spoke!

Braccio. Till Braccio told in just a word
the whole —

His lapse to error, his return to knowledge:

Which told . . . Nay, Luria, I should droop the head,

I whom shame rests with! Yet I dare

look up,

Sure of your pardon now I sue for it,

Knowing you wholly. Let the midnight
end!

'Tis morn approaches! Still you answer
not?

Sunshine succeeds the shadow past away;

Our faces, which phantasmal grew and

false,

Are all that felt it: they change round you, 40

turn

Truly themselves now in its vanishing.

Speak, Luria! Here begins your true career:

Look up, advance! All now is possible,

Fact's grandeur, no false dreaming!

Dare and do!

And every prophecy shall be fulfilled

Save one — (nay, now your word must come at last)

— That you would punish Florence!

Husain [pointing to LURIA'S dead body].

That is done.

A SOUL'S TRAGEDY.

1846.

ACT FIRST, BEING WHAT WAS CALLED THE POETRY OF CHIAPPINO'S LIFE; AND ACT SECOND, ITS PROSE.

A SOUL'S TRAGEDY.

PERSONS.

LUITOLFO and EULALIA, betrothed lovers.

CHIAPPINO, their friend.

OGNIBEN, the Pope's Legate.

Citizens of Faenza.

TIME, 15—. PLACE, Faenza.

ACT I.

SCENE. — Inside LUITOLFO'S house.

CHIAPPINO, EULALIA.

Eulalia. What is it keeps Luitolfo?

Night's fast falling,

And 'twas scarce sunset . . . had the ave-bell

Sounded before he sought the Provost's
house?

I think not: all he had to say would take
Few minutes, such a very few, to say!

How do you think, Chiappino? If our
lord

The Provost were less friendly to your
friend

Than everybody here professes him,
I should begin to tremble — should not
you?

10 Why are you silent when so many times

I turn and speak to you?

Chiappino.

That's good!

Eulalia.

You laugh!

Chiappino. Yes. I had fancied nothing that bears price

In the whole world was left to call my own;
And, may be, felt a little pride thereat.

Up to a single man's or woman's love,
Down to the right in my own flesh and
blood,

There's nothing mine, I fancied, — till you spoke:

— Counting, you see, as "nothing" the permission

To study this peculiar lot of mine

20 In silence: well, go silence with the rest

Of the world's good! What can I say, shall serve?

Eulalia. This, — lest you, even more than needs, embitter

Our parting: say your wrongs have cast,
for once,

A cloud across your spirit!

Chiappino. How a cloud?

Eulalia. No man nor woman loves you, did you say?

Chiappino. — My God, were't not for thee!

Eulalia. Ay, God remains,
Even did men forsake you.

Chiappino. Oh, not so!
Were't not for God, I mean, what hope of
truth —

Speaking truth, hearing truth, would stay with man?

I, now — the homeless friendless penni- 3
less

Proscribed and exiled wretch who speak
to you, —

Ought to speak truth, yet could not, for my death,

(The thing that tempts me most) help speaking lies

About your friendship and Luitolfo's courage

And all our townsfolk's equanimity —
Through sheer incompetence to rid myself

Of the old miserable lying trick Caught from the liars I have lived with, —

God,
Did I not turn to thee! It is thy prompt-
ing

I dare to be ashamed of, and thy counsel 4
Would die along my coward lip, I know.

But I do turn to thee. This craven tongue, These features which refuse the soul its
way,

Reclaim thou! Give me truth — truth, power to speak —

And after be sole present to approve The spoken truth! Or, stay, that spoken
truth,

Who knows but you, too, may approve?

Eulalia. Ah, well —

Keep silence then, Chiappino!

Chiappino. You would hear,

You shall now, — why the thing we please to style
My gratitude to you and all your friends
For service done me, is just gratitude
So much as yours was service: no whit more.

I was born here, so was Luitolfo; both
At one time, much with the same circumstance

Of rank and wealth; and both, up to this night

Of parting company, have side by side
Still fared, he in the sunshine — I, the shadow.

10 "Why?" asks the world. "Because," replies the world

To its complacent self, "these playfellows,
"Who took at church the holy-water drop
"Each from the other's finger, and so forth, —

"Were of two moods: Luitolfo was the proper

"Friend-making, everywhere friend-finding soul,

"Fit for the sunshine, so, it followed him.

"A happy-tempered bringer of the best

"Out of the worst; who bears with what's past cure,

"And puts so good a face on't — wisely passive

20 "Where action's fruitless, while he remedies

"In silence what the foolish rail against;

"A man to smooch such natures as parade

"Of opposition must exasperate;

"No general gauntlet-gatherer for the weak

"Against the strong, yet over-scrupulous

"At lucky junctures; one who won't forego

"The after-battle work of binding wounds,

"Because, forsooth he'd have to bring himself

"To side with wound-inflictors for their leave!"

30 — Why do you gaze, nor help me to repeat
What comes so glibly from the common mouth,

About Luitolfo and his so-styled friend?

Eulalia. Because that friend's sense is obscured . . .

Chiappino. I thought
You would be readier with the other half
Of the world's story, my half! Yet, 'tis true.

For all the world does say it. Say your worst!

True, I thank God, I ever said "you sin,"
When a man did sin; if I could not say it,

40 I glared it at him; if I could not glare it,
I prayed against him; then my part seemed over.

God's may begin yet: so it will, I trust.

Eulalia. If the world outraged you, did we?

Chiappino. What's "me"?

That you use well or ill? It's man, in me,
All your successes are an outrage to,
You all, whom sunshine follows, as you say!

Here's our Faenza birthplace; they send here

A provost from Ravenna: how he rules,
You can at times be eloquent about.

"Then, end his rule!" — "Ah yes, one stroke does that!

"But patience under wrong works slow 50 and sure.

"Must violence still bring peace forth? He, beside,

"Returns so blandly one's obeisance! ah —

"Some latent virtue may be lingering yet,

"Some human sympathy which, once excite,

"And all the lump were leavened quietly:

"So, no more talk of striking, for this time!"

But I, as one of those he rules, won't bear
These pretty takings-up and layings-down
Our cause, just as you think occasion suits.

Enough of earnest, is there? You'll play, 60 will you?

Diversify your tactics, give submission,
Obsequiousness and flattery a turn,

While we die in our misery patient deaths?

We all are outraged then, and I the first:

I, for mankind, resent each shrug and smirk

Each beck and bend, each . . . all you do and are,

I hate!

Eulalia. We share a common censure, then.

'Tis well you have not poor Luitolfo's part Nor mine to point out in the wide offence.

Chiappino. Oh, shall I let you so escape 70 me, lady?

Come, on your own ground, lady, — from yourself,

(Leaving the people's wrong, which most is mine)

What have I got to be so grateful for?
These three last fines, no doubt, one on the other

Paid by Luitolfo?

Eulalia. Shame, Chiappino!

Chiappino. Shame

Fall presently on who deserves it most!

— Which is to see. He paid my fines — my friend,

Your prosperous smooth lover presently,
Then, scarce your wooer, — soon, your husband: well —

I loved you. 80

Eulalia. Hold!

Chiappino. You knew it, years ago.

When my voice faltered and my eye grew dim

- Because you gave me your silk mask to hold —
 My voice that greatens when there's need to curse
 The people's Provost to their heart's content,
 — My eye, the Provost, who bears all men's eyes,
 Banishes now because he cannot bear, —
 You knew . . . but you do your parts —
 my part, I:
 So be it! You flourish, I decay: all's well.
Eulalia. I hear this for the first time.
Chiappino. The fault's there?
 Then my days spoke not, and my nights of fire
- 10 Were voiceless? Then the very heart may burst, Yet all prove nought, because no mincing speech
 Tells leisurely that thus it is and thus?
Eulalia, truce with toying for this once!
 A banished fool, who troubles you to-night
 For the last time — why, what's to fear from me?
 You knew I loved you!
Eulalia. Not so, on my faith!
 You were my now-affianced lover's friend — Came in, went out with him, could speak as he.
 All praise your ready parts and pregnant wit;
- 20 See how your words come from you in a crowd!
Luitolfo's first to place you o'er himself
 In all that challenges respect and love:
 Yet you were silent then, who blame me now.
 I say all this by fascination, sure:
 I, all but wed to one I love, yet listen!
 It must be, you are wronged, and that the wrongs
Luitolfo pities . . .
Chiappino. — You too pity? Do!
 But hear first what my wrongs are; so began
 This talk and so shall end this talk. I say, 30 Was't not enough that I must strive (I saw)
 To grow so far familiar with your charms
 As next contrive some way to win them —
 which
 To do, an age seemed far too brief — for, see!
 We all aspire to heaven; and there lies heaven
 Above us: go there! Dare we go? no, surely!
 How dare we go without a reverent pause,
 A growing less unfit for heaven? Just so,
 I dared not speak: the greater fool, it seems!
 Was't not enough to struggle with such folly, 40 But I must have, beside, the very man
- Whose slight free loose and incapacious soul Gave his tongue scope to say whate'er he would — Must have him load me with his benefits
 — For fortune's fiercest stroke?
Eulalia. Justice to him
 That's now entreating, at his risk perhaps,
 Justice for you! Did he once call those acts
 Of simple friendship — bounties, benefits?
Chiappino. No: the straight course had been to call them thus.
 Then, I had flung them back, and kept myself
 Unhampered, free as he to win the prize 50 We both sought. But "the gold was dross," he said:
 "He loved me, and I loved him not: why spurn
 "A trifle out of superfluity?
 "He had forgotten he had done as much."
 So had not I! Henceforth, try as I could
 To take him at his word, there stood by you
 My benefactor; who might speak and laugh
 And urge his nothings, even banter me
 Before you — but my tongue was tied. A dream!
 Let's wake: your husband . . . how you 64 shake at that!
 Good — my revenge!
Eulalia. Why should I shake? What forced
 Or forces me to be Luitolfo's bride?
Chiappino. There's my revenge, that nothing forces you.
 No gratitude, no liking of the eye
 Nor longing of the heart, but the poor bond
 Of habit — here so many times he came,
 So much he spoke, — all these compose the tie
 That pulls you from me. Well, he paid my fines,
 Nor missed a cloak from wardrobe, dish
 from table;
 He spoke a good word to the Provost here, 70
 Hel'd me up when my fortunes fell away
 — I had not looked so well to let me drop —
 Men take pains to preserve a tree-stump,
 even,
 Whose boughs they played beneath — much more a friend.
 But one grows tired of seeing, after the first,
 Pains spent upon impracticable stuff Like me. I could not change: you know
 the rest.
 I've spoke my mind too fully out, by
 chance,
 This morning to our Provost; so, ere night
 I leave the city on pain of death. And so
 now
 On my account there's gallant intercession

Goes forward — that's so graceful!
and anon
He'll noisily come back: "the intercession
"Was made and fails; all's over for us
both;
"Tis vain contending; I would better
go."

And I do go — and straight to you he turns
Light of a load; and ease of that permits
His visage to repair the natural bland (Economy, sore broken late to suit My discontent. Thus, all are pleased — you, with him,

10 He with himself, and all of you with me — "Who," say the citizens, "had done far better

"In letting people sleep upon their woes,
"If not possessed with talent to relieve
them

"When once awake; — but then I had,"
they'll say,

"Doubtless some unknown compensating
pride

"In what I did; and as I seem content
"With ruining myself, why, so should they
be."

And so they are, and so be with his prize
The devil, when he gets them speedily!

20 Why does not your Luitolfo come? I long
To don this cloak and take the Lugo path.
It seems you never loved me, then?

Eulalia. Chiappino!

Chiappino. Never?

Eulalia. Never.

Chiappino. That's sad.

Say what I might,
There was no help from being sure this
while

You loved me. Love like mine must have return,

I thought: no river starts but to some sea.
And had you loved me, I could soon devise
Some specious reason why you stifled love,
Some fancied self-denial on your part,

30 Which made you choose Luitolfo; so, excepting

From the wide condemnation of all here,
One woman. Well, the other dream may break!

If I knew any heart, as mine loved you,
Loved me, though in the vilest breast 'twere lodged,

I should, I think, be forced to love again:
Else there's no right nor reason in the
world.

Eulalia. "If you knew," say you, — but I did not know.

That's where you're blind, Chiappino! — a disease

Which if I may remove, I'll not repent
40 The listening to. You cannot, will not, see How, place you but in every circumstance
Of us, you are just now indignant at,
You'd be as we.

Chiappino. I should be? . . . that;
again!

I, to my friend, my country and my —
Be as Luitolfo and these Faentines?

Eulalia. As we.

Chiappino. Now, I'll say something to remember.

I trust in nature for the stable laws
Of beauty and utility. — Spring shall plant,
And Autumn garner to the end of time: 50
I trust in God — the right shall be the
right

And other than the wrong, while he endures:

I trust in my own soul, that can perceive
The outward and the inward, nature's good And God's: 'so, seeing these men and
myself,

Having a right to speak, thus do I speak.
I'll not curse — God bears with them, well may I —

But I — protest against their claiming me.
I simply say, if that's allowable,

I would not (broadly) do as they have done. 60

— God curse this townful of born slaves,
bred slaves,

Branded into the blood and bone, slaves!
Curse

Whoever loves, above his liberty,

House, land or life! and . . .

[A knocking without.

— bless my hero-friend,

Luitolfo!

Eulalia. How he knocks!

Chiappino. The peril, lady!

"Chiappino, I have run a risk — a risk!

"For when I prayed the Provost (he's my
friend)

"To grant you a week's respite of the sentence

"That confiscates your goods, exiles yourself,

"He shrugged his shoulder — I say, 70
shrugged it! Yes,

"And fright of that drove all else from my
head.

"Here's a good purse of scudi: off with
you,

"Lest of that shrug come what God only knows!

"The scudi — friend, they're trash — no
thanks, I beg!

"Take the north gate, — for San Vitale's suburb,

"Whose double taxes you appealed against,
"In discomposure at your ill-success

"Is apt to stone you: there, there — only
go!

"Beside, Eulalia here looks sleepily.

"Shake . . . oh, you hurt me, so you 80 squeeze my wrist!"

— Is it not thus you'll speak, adventurous
friend?

[As he opens the door, LUITOLFO rushes in, his garments disordered.

Eulalia. Luitolfo! Blood?

Luitolfo. There's more — and more of it!

Eulalia — take the garment! No — you, friend!

You take it and the blood from me — you dare!

Eulalia. Oh, who has hurt you? where's the wound?

Chiappino. "Who," say you?

The man with many a touch of virtue yet! The Provost's friend has proved too frank of speech,

And this comes of it. Miserable hound!

This comes of temporising, as I said!

Here's fruit of your smooth speeches and soft looks!

10 Now see my way! As God lives, I go straight

To the palace and do justice, once for all!

Luitolfo. What says he?

Chiappino. I'll do justice on him.

Luitolfo. Him?

Chiappino. The Provost.

Luitolfo. I've just killed him.

Eulalia. Oh, my God!

Luitolfo. My friend, they're on my trace; they'll have me — now!

They're round him, busy with him: soon they'll find

He's past their help, and then they'll be on me!

Chiappino, save Eulalia! I forget . . .

Were you not bound for . . .

Chiappino. Lugo?

Luitolfo. Ah — yes — yes!

That was the point I prayed of him to change.

20 Well, go — be happy! Is Eulalia safe? They're on me!

Chiappino. 'Tis through me they reach you, then!

Friend, seem the man you are! Lock arms — that's right!

Now tell me what you've done; explain how you

That still professed forbearance, still preached peace,

Could bring yourself . . .

Luitolfo. What was peace for, Chiappino?

I tried peace: did that promise, when peace failed,

Strife should not follow? All my peaceful days

Were just the prelude to a day like this.

I cried "You call me 'friend'; save my true friend!

30 "Save him, or lose me!"

Chiappino. But you never said You meant to tell the Provost thus and thus.

Luitolfo. Why should I say it? What else did I mean?

Chiappino. Well? He persisted?

Luitolfo. — "Would so order it "You should not trouble him too soon again."

I saw a meaning in his eye and lip;

I poured my heart's store of indignant words

Out on him: then — I know not! He retorted,

And I . . . some staff lay there to hand — I think

He bade his servants thrust me out — I struck . . .

Ah, they come! Fly you, save yourselves, 40 you two!

The dead back-weight of the beheading axe!

The glowing trip-hook, thumbscrews and the gadge!

Eulalia. They do come! Torches in the Place! Farewell,

Chiappino! You can work no good to us —

Much to yourself; believe not, all the world

Must needs be cursed henceforth!

Chiappino. And you?

Eulalia. I stay.

Chiappino. Ha, ha! Now, listen! I am master here!

This was my coarse disguise; this paper shows

My path of flight and place of refuge — see —

Lugo, Argenta, past San Nicolo, 50 Ferrara, then to Venice and all's safe!

Put on the cloak! His people have to fetch A compass round about. There's time enough Ere they can reach us, so you straightway make For Lugo . . . nay, he hears not! On with it — The cloak, Luitolfo, do you hear me?

See — He obeys he knows not how. Then, if I must — Answer me! Do you know the Lugo gate?

Eulalia. The north-west gate, over the bridge?

Luitolfo. I know.

Chiappino. Well, there — you are not 60 frightened? all my route

Is traced in that: at Venice you escape Their power. Eulalia, I am master here!

[Shouts from without. He pushes out LUITOLFO, who complies mechanically.

In time! Nay, help me with him — so! He's gone.

Eulalia. What have you done? On you, perchance, all know

The Provost's hater, will men's vengeance fall

As our accomplice.

Chiappino. Mere accomplice? See!
[Putting on LUITOLFO's vest.]

Now, lady, am I true to my profession,
Or one of these?

Eulalia. You take Luitolfo's place?

Chiappino. Die for him.

Eulalia. Well done!

[Shouts increase.]

Chiappino. How the people tarry!

I can't be silent; I must speak: or sing —
How natural to sing now!

Eulalia. Hush and pray!

We are to die; but even I perceive

'Tis not a very hard thing so to die.

My cousin of the pale-blue tearful eyes,

10 Poor Cesca, suffers more from one day's
life

With the stern husband; Tisbe's heart goes forth

Each evening after that wild son of hers,
To track his thoughtless footstep through
the streets:

How easy for them both to die like this!

I am not sure that I could live as they.

Chiappino. Here they come, crowds!

They pass the gate? Yes! — No! —

One torch is in the courtyard. Here flock
all.

Eulalia. At least Luitolfo has escaped.

What cries!

Chiappino. If they would drag one to the market-place,

20 One might speak there!

Eulalia. List, list!

Chiappino. They mount the steps.

Enter the Populace.

Chiappino. I killed the Provost!

The Populace [speaking together]. 'Twas Chiappino, friends!

Our saviour! The best man at last as
first!

He who first made us feel what chains we
wore,

He also strikes the blow that shatters them,
At last saves us — our best citizen!

Oh, have you only courage to speak
now?

My eldest son was christened a year since
"Cino" to keep Chiappino's name in
mind —

Cino, for shortness merely, you observe!
30 The city's in our hands. The guards are fled.

Do you, the cause of all, come down —
come up —

Come out to counsel us, our chief, our king, Whate'er rewards you! Choose your own reward!

The peril over, its reward begins!

Come and harangue us in the market-
place!

Eulalia. Chiappino?

Chiappino. Yes — I understand your eyes!

You think I should have promptlier disowned

This deed with its strange unforeseen
success,

In favour of Luitolfo. But the peril,
So far from ended, hardly seems begun. 40

To-morrow, rather, when a calm succeeds,

We easily shall make him full amends:

And meantime — if we save them as they
pray,

And justify the deed by its effects?

Eulalia. You would, for worlds, you had denied at once.

Chiappino. I know my own intention,
be assured!

All's well. Precede us, fellow-citizens!

ACT II.

SCENE. — The Market-place. LUITOLFO in disguise mingling with the Populace assembled opposite the Provost's Palace.

1st Bystander [to LUITOLFO]. You, a friend of Luitolfo's? Then, your friend is vanished, — in all probability killed on the 50 night that his patron the tyrannical Provost was loyally suppressed here, exactly a month ago, by our illustrious fellow-citizen, thrice-noble saviour, and new Provost that is like to be, this very morning, — Chiappino!

Luitolfo. He the new Provost?

2nd Bystander. Up those steps will he go, and beneath yonder pillar stand, while Ogniben, the Pope's Legate from Ravenna, 60 reads the new dignitary's title to the people, according to established custom: for which reason, there is the assemblage you inquire
about.

Luitolfo. Chiappino — the late Provost's successor? Impossible! But tell me of that presently. What I would know first of all is, wherefore Luitolfo must so necessarily have been killed on that memorable night? 70

3rd Bystander. You were Luitolfo's friend? So was I. Never, if you will credit me, did there exist so poor-spirited a milk-sop. He, with all the opportunities in the world, furnished by daily converse with our oppressor, would not stir a finger to help us: and, when Chiappino rose in solitary majesty and . . . how does one go on saying? . . . dealt the godlike blow,
— this Luitolfo, not unreasonably fearing 80
the indignation of an aroused and liberated people, fled precipitately. He may have got trodden to death in the press at the south-east gate, when the Provost's guards fled through it to Ravenna, with their wounded master, — if he did not rather hang himself under some hedge.

Luitolfo. Or why not simply have lain perdue in some quiet corner, — such as San Cassiano, where his estate was, — receiving daily intelligence from some sure friend, meanwhile, as to the turn matters were taking here — how, for instance, the 10 Provost was not dead, after all, only wounded — or, as to-day's news would seem to prove, how Chiappino was not Brutus the Elder, after all, only the new Provost — and thus Luitolfo be enabled to watch a favourable opportunity for returning? Might it not have been so?

3rd Bystander. Why, he may have taken that care of himself, certainly, for he came of a cautious stock. I'll tell you how his 20 uncle, just such another gingerly treader on tiptoes with finger on lip, — how he met his death in the great plague-year: dico vobis! Hearing that the seventeenth house in a certain street was infected, he calculates to pass it in safety by taking plentiful breath, say, when he shall arrive at the eleventh house; then scouring by, holding that breath, till he be got so far on the other side as number twenty-three, and thus elude the danger. — And so did he begin; but, as he
30 arrived at thirteen, we will say, — thinking to improve on his precaution by putting up a little prayer to St. Nepomucene¹ of Prague, this exhausted so much of his lungs' reserve, that at sixteen it was clean spent, — consequently at the fatal seventeen he inhaled with a vigour and persistence enough to suck you any latent venom out of the heart of a stone — Ha, ha!

40 Luitolfo [aside]. (If I had not lent that man the money he wanted last spring, I should fear this bitterness was attributable to me.) Luitolfo is dead then, one may conclude?

3rd Bystander. Why, he had a house here, and a woman to whom he was affianced; and as they both pass naturally to the new Provost, his friend and heir . . .

Luitolfo. Ah, I suspected you of imposing on me with your pleasantries! I know 50 Chiappino better.

1st Bystander. (Our friend has the bile! After all, I do not dislike finding somebody vary a little this general gape of admiration at Chiappino's glorious qualities.) Pray, how much may you know of what has taken place in Faenza since that memorable night?

Luitolfo. It is most to the purpose, that I 60 know Chiappino to have been by profession a hater of that very office of Provost, you now charge him with proposing to accept.

1st Bystander. Sir, I'll tell you. That night was indeed memorable. Up we rose, a mass of us, men, women, children; out fled the guards with the body of the tyrant; we were to defy the world: but, next grey morning, "What will Rome say?" began everybody. You know we are governed by Ravenna, which is governed by Rome. And quietly into the town, by the Ravenna road, comes on muleback a portly personage, Ogniben by name, with the quality of Pontifical Legate; trots briskly through the streets humming a "Cur fremuere gentes," and makes directly for the Provost's Palace — there it faces you. "One Messer Chiappino is your leader? I have known three-and-twenty leaders of re- 80 volts!" (laughing gently to himself) — "Give me the help of your arm from my mule to yonder steps under the pillar — So! And now, my revolvers and good friends, what do you want? The guards burst into Ravenna last night bearing your wounded Provost; and, having had a little talk with him, I take on myself to come and try appease the disorderliness, before Rome, hearing of it, resort to another method: 'tis I come, and not 90 another, from a certain love I confess to, of composing differences. So, do you understand, you are about to experience this unheard-of tyranny from me, that there shall be no heading nor hanging, no confiscation nor exile: I insist on your simply pleasing yourselves. And now, pray, what does please you? To live without any government at all? Or having decided for one, to see its minister murdered by the first of your body that chooses to find himself wronged, or disposed for reverting to first principles and a justice anterior to all institutions, — and so will you carry matters, that the rest of the world must at length unite and put down such a den of wild beasts? As for vengeance on what has just taken place, — once for all, the wounded man assures me he cannot conjecture who struck him; and this so earnestly, that one may be sure he knows perfectly well what intimate acquaintance could find admission to speak with him late last evening. I come not for vengeance therefore, but from pure curiosity to hear what you will do next." And thus he ran on, on, easily and volubly, till he seemed to arrive quite naturally at the praise of law, order, and paternal government by some- 120 body from rather a distance. All our citizens were in the snare, and about to be friends with so congenial an adviser; but that Chiappino suddenly stood forth, spoke out indignantly, and set things right again.

Luitolfo. Do you see? I recognise him there!

3rd Bystander. Ay but, mark you, at the end of Chiappino's longest period in praise of a pure republic, — "And by whom do I desire such a government should be administered, perhaps, but by one like yourself?" — returns the Legate: thereupon speaking for a quarter of an hour together, on the natural and only legitimate government by the best and wisest. And it should seem there was soon discovered to be no such vast discrepancy at bottom between this and Chiappino's theory, place but each in its proper light. "Oh, are you there?" quoth Chiappino: "Ay, in that, I agree," returns Chiappino: and so on.

Luitolfo. But did Chiappino cede at once to this?

1st Bystander. Why, not altogether at once. For instance, he said that the difference between him and all his fellows was, that they seemed all wishing to be kings in one or another way, — "whereas what right," asked he, "has any man to wish to be superior to another?" — whereat, "Ah, sir," answers the Legate, "this is the death of me, so often as I expect something is really going to be revealed to us by you clearer-seers, deeper-thinkers — this — that your right-hand (to speak by a figure) should be found taking up the weapon it displayed so ostentatiously, not to destroy any dragon in our path, as was prophesied, but simply to cut off its own fellow left-hand: yourself set about attacking yourself. For see now! Here are you who, I make sure, glory exceedingly in knowing the noble nature of the soul, its divine impulses, and so forth; and with such a knowledge you stand, as it were, armed to encounter the natural doubts and fears as to that same inherent nobility, which are apt to waylay us, the weaker ones, in the road of life. And when we look eagerly to see them fall before you, lo, round you wheel, only the left-hand gets the blow; one proof of the soul's nobility destroys simply another proof, quite as good, of the same, for you are found delivering an opinion like this! Why, what is this perpetual yearning to exceed, to subdue, to be better than, and a king over, one's fellows, — all that you so disclaim, — but the very tendency yourself are most proud of, and under another form, would oppose to it, — only in a lower stage of manifestation? You don't want to be vulgarly superior to your fellows after their poor fashion — to have me hold solemnly up your gown's tail, or hand you an express of the last importance from the Pope, with all these bystanders noticing how unconcerned you look the while: but neither does our gaping friend, the burgesse yonder, want the other kind of kingship, that consists in understanding better than his fellows this and similar points of human nature, nor to roll under his tongue this sweeter morsel still, — the feeling that, through immense philosophy, he does not feel, he rather thinks, above you and me!" And so chaffing, they glided off arm-in-arm.

Luitolfo. And the result is . . .

1st Bystander. Way that, a month having gone by, the indomitable Chiappino, marrying as he will Luitolfo's love — at all events succeeding to Luitolfo's wealth — becomes the first inhabitant of Faenza, and a proper aspirant to the Provostship; which we assemble here to see conferred on him this morning. The Legate's Guard to clear the way! He will follow presently.

Luitolfo [withdrawing a little]. I understand the drift of Eulalia's communications less than ever. Yet she surely said, in so many words, that Chiappino was in urgent danger: wherefore, disregarding her injunction to continue in my retreat and await the result of — what she called, some experiment yet in process — I hastened here without her leave or knowledge: how could I else? But if this they say be true — if it were for such a purpose, she and Chiappino kept me away . . . Oh, no, no! I must confront him and her before I believe this of them. And at the word, see!

Enter CHIAPPINO and EULALIA.

Eulalia. We part here, then? The change in your principles would seem to be complete.

Chiappino. Now, why refuse to see that in my present course I change no principles, only re-adapt them and more adroitly? I had despaired of, what you may call the material instrumentality of life; of ever being able to rightly operate on mankind through such a deranged machinery as the existing modes of government: but now, if I suddenly discover how to inform these perverted institutions with fresh purpose, bring the functionary limbs once more into immediate communication with, and subjection to, the soul I am about to bestow on them — do you see? Why should one desire to invent, as long as it remains possible to renew and transform? When all further hope of the old organisation shall be extinct, then, I grant you, it may be time to try and create another.

Eulalia. And there being discoverable some hope yet in the hitherto much-abused old system of absolute government by a

Provost here, you mean to take your time about endeavouring to realise those visions of a perfect State, we once heard of?

Chiappino. Say, I would fain realise my conception of a palace, for instance, and that there is, abstractedly, but a single way of erecting one perfectly. Here, in the market-place is my allotted building-ground; here I stand without a stone to lay or a labourer to help me, — stand, too, during a short day of life, close on which the night comes. On the other hand, circumstances suddenly offer me (turn and see it!) the old Provost's house to experiment upon — ruinous, if you please, wrongly constructed at the beginning, and ready to tumble now. But materials abound, a crowd of workmen offer their services; here, exists yet a Hall of Audience of originally noble proportions, there a Guest-chamber of symmetrical design enough: and I may restore, enlarge, abolish or unite these to heart's content. Ought I not make the best of such an opportunity, rather than continue to gaze disconsolately with folded arms on the flat pavement here, while the sun goes slowly down, never to rise again? Since you cannot understand this nor me, it is better we should part as you desire.

Eulalia. So, the love breaks away too!

Chiappino. No, rather my soul's capacity for love widens — needs more than one object to content it, — and, being better instructed, will not persist in seeing all the component parts of love in what is only a single part, — nor in finding that so many and so various loves are all united in the love of a woman, — manifold uses in one instrument, as the savage has his sword, staff, sceptre and idol, all in one club-stick. Love is a very compound thing. The intellectual part of my love I shall give to men, the mighty dead or the illustrious living; and determine to call a mere sensual instinct by as few fine names as possible. What do I lose?

Eulalia. Nay, I only think, what do I lose? and, one more word — which shall complete my instruction — does friendship go too? What of Luitolfo, the author of your present prosperity?

Chiappino. How the author?

Eulalia. That blow now called yours . . .

Chiappino. Struck without principle or purpose, as by a blind natural operation: yet to which all my thought and life directly and advisedly tended. I would have struck it, and could not: he would have done his utmost to avoid striking it, yet did so. I dispute his right to that deed of mine — a final action with him, from the first effect of which he fled away, — a mere first step with me, on which I base a whole mighty superstructure of good to follow. Could he get good from it?

Eulalia. So we profess, so we perform!

Enter OGNIBEN. EULALIA stands apart.

Ogniben. I have seen three-and-twenty leaders of revolts. By your leave, sir! Perform? What does the lady say of performing?

Chiappino. Only the trite saying, that we must not trust profession, only performance.

Ogniben. She'll not say that, sir, when she knows you longer; you'll instruct her better. Ever judge of men by their professions! For though the bright moment of promising is but a moment and cannot be prolonged, yet, if sincere in its moment's extravagant goodness, why, trust it and know the man by it, I say — not by his performance; which is half the world's work, interfere as the world needs must, with its accidents and circumstances: the profession was purely the man's own. I judge people by what they might be, — not are, nor will be.

Chiappino. But have there not been found, too, performing natures, not merely promising?

Ogniben. Plenty. Little Bindo of our town, for instance, promised his friend, great ugly Masaccio, once, "I will repay you!" — for a favour done him. So, when his father came to die, and Bindo succeeded to the inheritance, he sends straightway for Masaccio and shares all with him — gives him half the land, half the money, half the kegs of wine in the cellar. "Good," say you: and it is good. But had little Bindo found himself possessor of all this wealth some five years before — on the happy night when Masaccio procured him that interview in the garden with his pretty cousin Lisa — instead of being the beggar he then was, — I am bound to believe that in the warm moment of promise he would have given away all the wine-kegs and all the money and all the land, and only reserved to himself some hut on a hill-top hard by, whence he might spend his life in looking and seeing his friend enjoy himself: he meant fully that much, but the world interfered. — To our business! Did I understand you just now within-doors? You are not going to marry your old friend's love, after all?

Chiappino. I must have a woman that can sympathise with, and appreciate me, I told you.

Ogniben. Oh, I remember! you, the greater nature, needs must have a lesser one — avowedly lesser — contest with you on that score would never do) — such a nature must comprehend you, as the phrase is, accompany and testify of your greatness from point to point onward. Why, that were being not merely as great as yourself, but greater considerably! Meantime, might not the more bounded nature as reasonably count on your appreciation of it, rather? — on your keeping close by it, so far as you both go together, and then going on by yourself as far as you please? Thus God serves us.

Chiappino. And yet a woman that could understand the whole of me, to whom I could reveal alike the strength and the weakness —

Ogniben. Ah, my friend, wish for nothing so foolish! Worship your love, give her the best of you to see; be to her like the western lands (they bring us such strange news of) to the Spanish Court; send her only your lumps of gold, fans of feathers, your spirit-like birds, and fruits and gems! So shall you, what is unseen of you, be supposed altogether a paradise by her, — as these western lands by Spain: though I warrant there is filth, red baboons, ugly reptiles and squalor enough, which they bring Spain as few samples of as possible. Do you want your mistress to respect your body generally? Offer her your mouth to kiss: don't strip off your boot and put your foot to her lips! You understand my humour by this time? I help men to carry out their own principles: if they please to say two and two make five, I assent, so they will but go on and say, four and four make ten.

Chiappino. But these are my private affairs; what I desire you to occupy yourself about, is my public appearance presently: for when the people hear that I am appointed Provost, though you and I may thoroughly discern — and easily, too — the right principle at bottom of such a movement, and how my republicanism remains thoroughly unaltered, only takes a form of expression hitherto commonly judged (and heretofore by myself) incompatible with its existence, — when thus I reconcile myself to an old form of government instead of proposing a new one . . .

Ogniben. Why, you must deal with people broadly. Begin at a distance from this matter and say, — New truths, old truths! sirs, there is nothing new possible to be revealed to us in the moral world; we know all we shall ever know: and it is for simply reminding us, by their various respective expedients, how we do know this and the other matter, that men get called prophets, poets and the like. A philosopher's life is spent in discovering that, of the half-dozen truths he knew when a child, such an one is a lie, as the world states it in set terms; and then, after a weary lapse of years, and plenty of hard-thinking, it becomes a truth again after all, as he happens to newly consider it and view it in a different relation with the others: and so he restates it, to the confusion of somebody else in good time. As for adding to the original stock of truths, — impossible! Thus, you see the expression of them is the grand business: — you have got a truth in your head about the right way of governing people, and you took a mode of expressing it which now you confess to be imperfect. But what then? There is truth in falsehood, falsehood in truth. No man ever told one great truth, that I know, without the help of a good dozen of lies at least, generally unconscious ones. And as when a child comes in breathlessly and relates a strange story, you try to conjecture from the very falsities in it, what the reality was, — do not conclude that he saw nothing in the sky, because he assuredly did not see a flying horse there as he says, — so, through the contradictory expression, do you see, men should look painfully for, and trust to arrive eventually at, what you call the true principle at bottom. Ah, what an answer is there! to what will it not prove applicable? — “Contradictions? Of course there were,” say you!

Chiappino. Still, the world at large may call it inconsistency, and what shall I urge in reply?

Ogniben. Why, look you, when they tax you with tergiversation or duplicity, you may answer — you begin to perceive that, when all's done and said, both great parties in the State, the advocates of change in the present system of things, and the opponents of it, patriot and anti-patriot, are found working together for the common good; and that in the midst of their efforts for and against its progress, the world somehow or other still advances: to which result they contribute in equal proportions, those who spend their life in pushing it onward, as those who give theirs to the business of pulling it back. Now, if you found the world stand still between the opposite forces, and were glad, I should conceive you: but it steadily advances, you rejoice to see! By the side of such a rejoicer, the man who only winks as he keeps cunning and quiet, and says, “Let yonder hot-headed fellow fight out my battle! I, for one, shall win in the end by the blows he gives, and which I ought to be giving” — even he seems graceful in his avowal, when one considers that he might say, “I shall win quite as much by the blows our antagonist gives him, blows from which he saves me—I thank the antagonist equally!” Moreover, you may enlarge on the loss of the edge of party-animosities with age and experience . . .

Chiappino. And naturally time must wear off such asperities: the bitterest adversaries get to discover certain points of similarity between each other, common sympathies—do they not?

10 Ogniben. Ay, had the young David but sat first to dine on his cheeses with the Philistine, he had soon discovered an abundance of such common sympathies. He of Gath, it is recorded, was born of a father and mother, had brothers and sisters like another man,—they, no more than the sons of Jesse, were used to eat each other. But, for the sake of one broad antipathy that had existed from the beginning, 20 David slung the stone, cut off the giant's head, made a spoil of it, and after ate his cheeses alone, with the better appetite, for all I can learn. My friend, as you, with a quickened eye-sight, go on discovering much good on the worse side, remember that the same process should proportionably magnify and demonstrate to you the much more good on the better side! And when I profess no sympathy 30 for the Goliaths of our time, and you object that a large nature should sympathise with every form of intelligence, and see the good in it, however limited—I answer, “So I do; but preserve the proportions of my sympathy, however finelier or wider I may extend its action.” I desire to be able, with a quickened eye-sight, to descry beauty in corruption where others see foulness only: but I hope I shall also 40 continue to see a redoubled beauty in the higher forms of matter, where already everybody sees no foulness at all. I must retain, too, my old power of selection, and choice of appropriation, to apply to such new gifts; else they only dazzle instead of enlightening me. God has his arch-angels and consorts with them: though he made too, and intimately sees what is good in, the worm. Observe, I speak only 50 as you profess to think and, so, ought to speak: I do justice to your own principles, that is all.

Chiappino. But you very well know that the two parties do, on occasion, assume each other's characteristics. What more disgusting, for instance, than to see how promptly the newly emancipated slave will adopt, in his own favour, the very measures of precaution, which pressed 60 soreliest on himself as institutions of the tyranny he has just escaped from? Do the classes, hitherto without opinion, get leave to express it? there follows a confederacy immediately, from which—exercise your individual right and dissent, and woe be to you!

Ogniben. And a journey over the sea to you! That is the generous way. Cry—“Emancipated slaves, the first excess, and off I go!” The first time a poor devil, 70 who has been bastinadoed steadily his whole life long, finds himself let alone and able to legislate, so, begins pettishly, while he rubs his soles, “Woe be to whoever brings anything in the shape of a stick this way!”—you, rather than give up the very innocent pleasure of carrying one to switch flies with,—you go away, to everybody's sorrow. Yet you were quite reconciled to staying at home while the governors 80 used to pass, every now and then, some such edict as “Let no man indulge in owning a stick which is not thick enough to chastise our slaves, if need require!” Well, there are pre-ordained hierarchies among us, and a profane vulgar subjected to a different law altogether; yet I am rather sorry you should see it so clearly: for, do you know what is to—all but save you at the Day of Judgment, all 90 you men of genius? It is this: that, while you generally began by pulling down God, and went on to the end of your life, in one effort at setting up your own genius in his place,—still, the last, bitterest concession wrung with the utmost unwillingness from the experience of the very loftiest of you, was invariably—would one think it?—that the rest of mankind, down to the lowest of the mass, stood not, nor ever 100 could stand, just on a level and equality with yourselves. That will be a point in the favour of all such, I hope and believe.

Chiappino. Why, men of genius are usually charged, I think, with doing just the reverse; and at once acknowledging the natural inequality of mankind, by themselves participating in the universal craving after, and deference to, the civil distinctions which represent it. You 110 wonder they pay such undue respect to titles and badges of superior rank.

Ogniben. Not I (always on your own ground and showing, be it noted!). Who doubts that, with a weapon to brandish, a man is the more formidable? Titles and badges are exercised as such a weapon, to which you and I look up wistfully. We could pin lions with it moreover, while in its present owner's hands it hardly prods 120 rats. Nay, better than a mere weapon of easy mastery and obvious use, it is a mysterious divining rod that may serve us in undreamed-of ways. Beauty, strength, intellect—men often have none of these, and yet conceive pretty accurately what kind of advantages they would bestow on the possessor. We know at least what it is we make up our mind to forego, and so can apply the fittest substitute in our power. Wanting beauty, we cultivate good humour; missing wit, we get riches: but the mystic unimaginable operation of that gold collar and string of Latin names which suddenly turned poor stupid little peevish Cecco of our town into natural lord of the best of us—a Duke, he is now—there indeed is a virtue to be revered!

Chiappino. Ay, by the vulgar: not by Messere Stiatta the poet, who pays more assiduous court to him than anybody.

Ogniben. What else should Stiatta pay court to? He has talent, not honour and riches: men naturally covet what they have not.

Chiappino. No, or Cecco would covet talent, which he has not, whereas he covets more riches, of which he has plenty, already.

Ogniben. Because a purse added to a purse makes the holder twice as rich: but just such another talent as Stiatta's, added to what he now possesses, what would that profit him? Give the talent a purse indeed, to do something with! But lo, how we keep the good people waiting! I only desired to do justice to the noble sentiments which animate you, and which you are too modest to duly enforce. Come, to our main business: shall we ascend the steps? I am going to propose you for Provost to the people; they know your antecedents, and will accept you with a joyful unanimity: whereon I confirm their choice. Rouse up! Are you nerving yourself to an effort? Beware the disaster of Messere Stiatta we were talking of! who, determining to keep an equal mind and constant face on whatever might be the fortune of his last new poem with our townsmen, heard too plainly "hiss, hiss, hiss," increase every moment. Till at last the man fell senseless: not perceiving that the portentous sounds had all the while been issuing from between his own nobly clenched teeth, and nostrils narrowed by resolve.

Chiappino. Do you begin to throw off the mask?—to jest with me, having got me effectually into your trap?

Ogniben. Where is the trap, my friend? You hear what I engage to do, for my part: you, for yours, have only to fulfil your promise made just now within doors, of professing unlimited obedience to Rome's authority in my person. And I shall authorise no more than the simple re-establishment of the Provostship and the conferment of its privileges upon yourself: the only novel stipulation being a birth of the peculiar circumstances of the time.

Chiappino. And that stipulation?

Ogniben. Just the obvious one—that in the event of the discovery of the actual assailant of the late Provost . . .

Chiappino. Ha!

Ogniben. Why, he shall suffer the proper penalty, of course; what did you expect?

Chiappino. Who heard of this?

Ogniben. Rather, who needed to hear of this?

Chiappino. Can it be, the popular rumour never reached you . . .

Ogniben. Many more such rumours reach me, friend, than I choose to receive; those which wait longest have best chance. Has the present one sufficiently waited? Now is its time for entry with effect. See the good people crowding about yonder palace-steps—which we may not have to ascend, after all. My good friends! (nay, two or three of you will answer every purpose)—who was it fell upon and proved nearly the death of your late Provost? His successor desires to hear, that his day of inauguration may be graced by the act of prompt bare justice we all anticipate. Who dealt the blow that night, does anybody know?

Luitolfo [coming forward]. I!

All. Luitolfo!

Luitolfo. I avow the deed, justify and approve it, and stand forth now, to relieve my friend of an unearned responsibility. Having taken thought, I am grown stronger: I shall shrink from nothing that awaits me. Nay, Chiappino—we are friends still: I dare say there is some proof of your superior nature in this starting aside, strange as it seemed at first. So, they tell me, my horse is of the right stock, because a shadow in the path frightens him into a frenzy, makes him dash my brains out. I understand only the dull mule's way of standing stockishly, plodding soberly, suffering on occasion a blow or two with due patience.

Eulalia. I was determined to justify my choice, Chiappino,—to let Luitolfo's nature vindicate itself. Henceforth we are undivided, whatever be our fortune.

Ogniben. Now, in these last ten minutes of silence, what have I been doing, deem you? Putting the finishing stroke to a homily of mine, I have long taken thought to perfect, on the text, "Let whoso thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." To your house, Luitolfo! Still silent, my patriotic friend? Well, that is a good sign however. And you will go aside for a time? That is better still. I understand: it would be easy for you to die of remorse here on the spot and shock us all, but you mean to live and grow worthy of coming back to us one day. There, I will tell everybody; and you only do right to believe you must get better as you get older. All men do so: they are worst in childhood, improve in manhood, and get ready in old age for another world. Youth, with its beauty and grace, would seem bestowed on us for some such reason as to make us partly endurable till we have 10 time for really becoming so of ourselves, without their aid; when they leave us. The sweetest child we all smile on for his pleasant want of the whole world to break up, or suck in his mouth, seeing no other good in it,— would be rudely handled by that world's inhabitants, if he retained those, angelic infantine desires when he had grown six feet high, black and bearded. But, little by little, he sees fit to forego claim after claim on the world, puts up 20 with a less and less share of its good as his proper portion; and when the octogenarian asks barely a sup of gruel and a fire of dry sticks, and thanks you as for his full allowance and right in the common good of life,— hoping nobody may murder him,— he who began by asking and expecting the whole of us to bow down in worship to him,— why, I say he is advanced, far onward, very far, nearly out 30 of sight like our friend Chiappino yonder. And now — (ay, good-bye to you! He turns round the north-west gate: going to Lugo again? Good-bye!) — and now give thanks to God, the keys of the Provost's palace to me, and yourselves to profitable meditation at home! I have known Four-and-twenty leaders of revolts.

CHRISTMAS-EVE AND EASTER-DAY.

1850.

CHRISTMAS-EVE.

I.

OUT of the little chapel I burst
 Into the fresh night-air again.
 Five minutes full, I waited first
 In the doorway, to escape the rain
 That drove in gusts down the common's
 centre

At the edge of which the chapel stands,
 Before I plucked up heart to enter.

Heaven knows how many sorts of hands
 Reached past me, groping for the latch
 Of the inner door that hung on catch
 More obstinate the more they fumbled,

Till, giving way at last with a scold
 Of the crazy hinge, in squeezed or tumbled

One sheep more to the rest in fold,
 And left me irresolute, standing sentry
 In the sheepfold's lath-and-plaster entry,
 Six feet long by three feet wide,
 Partitioned off from the vast inside —

I blocked up half of it at least.

20 No remedy; the rain kept driving.

They eyed me much as some wild beast,
 That congregation, still arriving,
 Some of them by the main road, white
 A long way past me into the night,
 Skirting the common, then diverging;
 Not a few suddenly emerging From the common's self thro' the palinggaps,

— They house in the gravel-pits perhaps,
 Where the road stops short with its safeguard border

30 Of lamps, as tired of such disorder; —
 But the most turned in yet more abruptly
 From a certain squalid knot of alleys,
 Where the town's bad blood once slept corruptly,

Which now the little chapel rallies
 And leads into day again, — its priestli-
 ness

Lending itself to hide their beastliness
 So cleverly (thanks in part to the mason),
 And putting so cheery a whitewashed face
 on

Those neophytes too much in lack of it, 40 That, where you cross the common as I did,

And meet the party thus presided,
 "Mount Zion" with Love-lane at the back
 of it,

They front you as little disconcerted
 As, bound for the hills, her fate averted,
 And her wicked people made to mind him,
 Lot might have marched with Gomorrah behind him.

II.

Well, from the road, the lanes or the common,

In came the flock: the fat weary woman,
 Panting and bewildered, down-clapping

Her umbrella with a mighty report, 50
 Grounded it by me, wry and flapping,

A wreck of whalebones; then, with a snort,

Like a startled horse, at the interloper
 (Who humbly knew himself improper,
 But could not shrink up small enough)

— Round to the door, and in, — the gruff
 Hinge's invariable scold

Making my very blood run cold.

Prompt in the wake of her, up-pattered
 On broken clogs, the many-tattered

60 Little old-faced peaking sister-turned-mother

Of the sickly babe she tried to smother
 Somehow up, with its spotted face,
 From the cold, on her breast, the one warm place;

She too must stop, wring the poor ends dry
 Of a draggled shawl, and add thereby
 Her tribute to the deer-rat, sopping Already from my own clothes' dropping,
 Which yet she seemed to grudge I should stand on:

Then, stooping down to take off her 70
 pattens,

She bore them defiantly, in each hand
 one,

Planted together before her breast
 And its babe, as good as a lance in rest.

Close on her heels, the dingy satins
 Of a female something, past me flitted,

With lips as much too white, as a streak
 Lay far too red on each hollow cheek;

And it seemed the very door-hinge pitied
 That was left of a woman once,

Holding at least its tongue for the nonce. 80
 Then a tall yellow man, like the Penitent

Thief,

With his jaw bound up in a handkerchief,
 And eyelids screwed together tight,
 Led himself in by some inner light.

And, except from him, from each that entered,

I got the same interrogation —

"What, you the alien, you have ventured

"To take with us, the elect, your station?"

"A carer for none of it, a Gallio!" —

Thus, plain as print, I read the glance

At a common prey, in each countenance

As of huntsman giving his hounds the tallyho.

And, when the door's cry drowned their wonder,

10 The draught, it always sent in shutting,

Made the flame of the single tallow candle

In the cracked square lantern I stood under,

Shot its blue lip at me, rebutting

As it were, the luckless cause of scandal:

I verily fancied the zealous light

(In the chapel's secret, too!) for spite

Would shudder itself clean off the wick,

With the airs of a Saint John's Candlestick.¹

There was no standing it much longer.

20 "Good folks," thought I, as resolve grew stronger,

"This way you perform the Grand-Inquisitor

"When the weather sends you a chance visitor?

"You are the men, and wisdom shall die with you,

"And none of the old Seven Churches vie with you!

"But still, despite the pretty perfection

"To which you carry your trick of exclusiveness,

"And, taking God's word under wise protection,

"Correct its tendency to diffusiveness,

"And bid one reach it over hot ploughshares, —

30 "Still, as I say, though you've found salvation,

"If I should choose to cry, as now, 'Shares!' —

"See if the best of you bars me my ration!

"I prefer, if you please, for my expounder

"Of the laws of the feast, the feast's own Founder;

"Mine's the same right with your poorest and sickliest

"Supposing I don the marriage vestment:

"So, shut your mouth and open your Testament,

"And carve me my portion at your quickliest!"

10 Accordingly, as a shoemaker's lad

With wizened face in want of scap,

And wet apron wound round his waist like a rope,

(After stopping outside, for his cough was bad,

To get the fit over, poor gentle creature, And so avoid disturbing the preacher)

— Passed in, I sent my elbow spikewise

At the shutting door, and entered likewise,

Received the hinge's accustomed greeting,

And crossed the threshold's magic pentacle,

And found myself in full conventicle,

— To wit, in Zion Chapel Meeting,

On the Christmas-Eve of 'Forty-nine,

Which, calling its flock to their special clover,

Found all assembled and one sheep over,

Whose lot, as the weather pleased, was mine.

III.

I very soon had enough of it.

The hot smell and the human noises,

And my neighbour's coat, the greasy cuff of it,

Were a pebble-stone that a child's hand poises,

Compared with the pig-of-lead-like pressure

Of the preaching man's immense stupidity,

As he poured his doctrine forth, full measure,

To meet his audience's avidity.

You needed not the wit of the Sibyl

To guess the cause of it all, in a twinkling:

No sooner our friend had got an inkling

Of treasure hid in the Holy Bible,

(When'er 'twas the thought first struck him,

How death, at unawares, might duck him

Deeper than the grave, and quench

The gin-shop's light in hell's grim drench) 70

Than he handled it so, in fine irreverence,

As to hug the book of books to pieces:

And, a patchwork of chapters and texts in severance,

Not improved by the private dog's-ears and creases,

Having clothed his own soul with, he'd fain see equipt yours, —

So tossed you again your Holy Scriptures.

And you picked them up, in a sense, no doubt:

Nay, had but a single face of my neighbours

Appeared to suspect that the preacher's labours

Were help which the world could be saved 80 without.

'Tis odds but I might have borne in quiet

A qualm or two at my spiritual dict,

Or (who can tell?) perchance even mustered

Somewhat to urge in behalf of the sermon:

But the flock sat on, divinely flustered,

Sniffing, methought, its dew of Hermon
With such content in every snuffle,
As the devil inside us loves to ruffle.
My old fat woman purred with pleasure,
And thumb round thumb went twirling
faster,

While she, to his periods keeping measure,
Maternally devoured the pastor.

The man with the handkerchief untied it,
Showed us a horrible wen inside it,
Gave his eyelids yet another screwing,
And rocked himself as the woman was doing.

The shoemaker's lad, discreetly choking, Kept down his cough. 'Twas too provoking!

My gorge rose at the nonsense and stuff
of it;

So, saying like Eve when she plucked the apple,

"I wanted a taste, and now there's enough of it,"

I flung out of the little chapel.

IV.

There was a lull in the rain, a lull

In the wind too; the moon was risen,

And would have shone out pure and full,

But for the ramparted cloud-prison,

Block on block built up in the West,

For what purpose the wind knows best,

Who changes his mind continually,

And the empty other half of the sky

Seemed in its silence as if it knew

What, any moment, might lock through

A chance gap in that fortress massy:—

Through its fissures you get hints

Of the flying moon, by the shifting tints,

Now, a dull lion-colour, now, brassy

Burning to yellow, and whitest yellow,

Like furnace-smoke just ere flames bellow,

All a-simmer with intense strain

To let her through, — then blank again,

At the hope of her appearance failing.

Just by the chapel, a break in the railing

Shows a narrow path directly across;

'Tis ever dry walking there, on the moss —

Besides, you go gently all the way uphill.

I stooped under and soon felt better;

My head grew lighter, my limbs more supple,

As I walked on, glad to have slipt the fetter.

My mind was full of the scene I had left,

That placid flock, that pastor vociferant,

— How this outside was pure and different!

The sermon, now — what a mingled weft

Of good and ill! Were either less,

Its fellow had coloured the whole distinctly;

But alas for the excellent earnestness,

And the truths, quite true if stated succinctly,

But as surely false, in their quaint present-
ment,

However to pastor and flock's content-
ment!

Say rather, such truths looked false to your
eyes,

With his provings and parallels twisted and twined,

Till how could you know them, grown double their size

In the natural fog of the good man's
mind,

Like yonder spots of our roadside lamps,
Haloed about with the common's damps?

Truth remains true, the fault's in the prover; 60

The zeal was good, and the aspiration;

And yet, and yet, yet, fifty times over,

Pharaoh received no demonstration,

By his Baker's dream of Baskets Three,
Of the doctrine of the Trinity, —

Although, as our preacher thus embellished
it,

Apparently his hearers relished it

With so unfeigned a gust — who knows if

They did not prefer our friend to Joseph?

But so it is everywhere, one way with all 70 of them!

These people have really felt, no doubt,

A something, the motion they style the Call of them;

And this is their method of bringing
about,

By a mechanism of words and tones,

(So many texts in so many groans)

A sort of reviving and reproducing,

More or less perfectly, (who can tell?)

The mood itself, which strengthens by using;

And how that happens, I understand
well.

A tune was born in my head last week, 80

Out of the thump-thump and shriek-
shriek

Of the train, as I came by it, up from Manchester;

And when, next week, I take it back again,

My head will sing to the engine's clack
again,

While it only makes my neighbour's haunches stir,

— Finding no dormant musical sprout

In him, as in me, to be jolted out.

'Tis the taught already that profits by teaching;

He gets no more from the railway's preaching

Than, from this preacher who does the 90
rail's office, I:

Whom therefore the flock cast a jealous eye on.

Still, why paint over their door "Mount Zion,"

To which all flesh shall come, saith the prophecy?

v.

- But wherefore be harsh on a single case?
 After how many modes, this Christmas-
 Eve,
 Does the self-same weary thing take place?
 The same endeavour to make you believe,
 And with much the same effect, no more:
 Each method abundantly convincing,
 As I say, to those convinced before,
 But scarce to be swallowed without wincing
 By the not-as-yet-convinced. For me,
 10 I have my own church equally:
 And in this church my faith sprang first!
 (I said, as I reached the rising ground,
 And the wind began again, with a burst
 Of rain in my face, and a glad rebound
 From the heart beneath, as if, God speeding me,
 I entered his church-door, nature leading
 me)
 — In youth I looked to these very skies,
 And probing their immensities,
 I found God there, his visible power;
 20 Yet felt in my heart, amid all its sense
 Of the power, an equal evidence
 That his love, there too, was the nobler dower.
 For the loving worm within its clod,
 Were diviner than a loveless god
 Amid his worlds, I will dare to say.
 You know what I mean: God's all,
 man's nought:
 But also, God, whose pleasure brought Man into being, stands away
 As it were a handbreadth off, to give 30 Room for the newly-made to live,
 And look at him from a place apart,
 And use his gifts of brain and heart,
 Given, indeed, but to keep for ever.
 Who speaks of man, then, must not sever
 Man's very elements from man,
 Saying, "But all is God's" — whose plan
 Was to create man and then leave him
 Able, his own word saith, to grieve him,
 But able to glorify him too,
 40 As a mere machine could never do,
 That prayed or praised, all unaware Of its fitness for aught but praise and prayer,
 Made perfect as a thing of course.
 Man, therefore, stands on his own stock
 Of love and power as a pin-point rock:
 And, looking to God who ordained divorce
 Of the rock from his boundless continent,
 Sees, in his power made evident,
 Only excess by a million-fold
 50 O'er the power God gave man in the mould.
 For, note: man's hand, first formed to carry
 A few pounds' weight, when taught to marry
- Its strength with an engine's, lifts a mountain,
 — Advancing in power by one degree;
 And why count steps through eternity?
 But love is the ever-springing fountain:
 Man may enlarge or narrow his bed
 For the water's play, but the water-head —
 How can he multiply or reduce it?
 As easy create it, as cause it to cease; 6
 He may profit by it, or abuse it,
 But 'tis not a thing to bear increase
 As power does: be love less or more
 In the heart of man, he keeps it shut
 Or opes it wide, as he pleases, but Love's sum remains what it was before.
 So, gazing up, in my youth, at love
 As seen through power, ever above
 All modes which make it manifest,
 70 My soul brought all to a single test —
 That he, the Eternal First and Last,
 Who, in his power, had so surpassed
 All man conceives of what is might, — Whose wisdom, too, showed infinite,
 — Would prove as infinitely good;
 Would never, (my soul understood,)
 With power to work all love desires,
 Bestow e'en less than man requires;
 That he who endlessly was teaching, 80 Above my spirit's utmost reaching,
 What love can do in the leaf or stone,
 (So that to master this alone,
 This done in the stone or leaf for me,
 I must go on learning endlessly)
 Would never need that I, in turn,
 Should point him out defect unheeded,
 And show that God had yet to learn What the meanest human creature needed,
 — Not life, to wit, for a few short years,
 Tracking his way through doubts and 90
 fears,
 While the stupid earth on which I stay
 Suffers no change, but passive adds
 Its myriad years to myriads,
 Though I, he gave it to, decay,
 Seeing death come and choose about me,
 And my dearest ones depart without me.
 No: love which, on earth, amid all the shows of it,
 Has ever been seen the sole good of life
 in it,
 The love, ever growing there, spite of the strife in it,
 Shall arise, made perfect, from death's 100
 repose of it.
 And I shall behold thee, face to face,
 O God, and in thy light retrace
 How in all I loved here, still wast
 thou!
 Whom pressing to, then, as I fain would
 now,
 I shall find as able to satiate
 The love, thy gift, as my spirit's wonder
 Thou art able to quicken and sublimiate,

With this sky of thine, that I now walk
under,
And glory in thee for, as I gaze
Thus, thus! Oh, let men keep their ways
Of seeking thee, in a narrow shrine —
Be this my way! And this is mine!

VI.

For lo, what think you? suddenly
The rain and the wind ceased, and the sky
Received at once the full fruition
Of the moon's consummate apparition.
The black cloud barricade was riven,
Ruined beneath her feet, and driven Deep in the West; while, bare and breath-
less,

North and South and East lay ready For a glorious thing that, dauntless, death-
less,

Sprang across them and stood steady.
'Twas a moon-rainbow, vast and perfect,
From heaven to heaven extending, perfect
As the mother-moon's self, full in face.
It rose, distinctly at the base

With its seven proper colours chorded,
Which still, in the rising, were compressed,
Until at last they coalesced,
And supreme the spectral creature
lorded

In a triumph of whitest white, —
Above which intervened the night.

But above night too, like only the next,
The second of a wondrous sequence,
Reaching in rare and rarer frequency,
Till the heaven of heavens were circum-
flexed,

Another rainbow rose, a mightier,
Fainter, flushier and flightier, —
Rapture dying along its verge.
Oh, whose foot shall I see emerge,
Whose, from the straining topmost dark,
On to the keystone of that arc?

VII.

This sight was shown me, there and then, —
Me, one out of a world of men,
Singled forth, as the chance might hap
To another if, in a thunderclap
Where I heard noise and you saw flame,
Some one man knew God called his name.
For me, I think I said, "Appear!
"Good were it to be ever here.

"If thou wilt, let me build to thee

"Service-tabernacles three,

"Where, for ever in thy presence,

"In ecstatic acquiescence,

"Far alike from thriftless learning

"And ignorance's undiscerning,

"I may worship and remain!"

Thus at the show above me, gazing
With upturned eyes, I felt my brain

Glutted with the glory, blazing Throughout its whole mass, over and under Until at length it burst asunder

And out of it bodily there streamed,
The too-much glory, as it seemed,
Passing from out me to the ground,
Then palely serpentine round
Into the dark with mazy error.

VIII.

All at once I looked up with terror.
He was there.

He himself with his human air.

On the narrow pathway, just before.

I saw the back of him, no more —

He had left the chapel, then, as I.

I forgot all about the sky.

No face: only the sight

Of a sweepy garment, vast and white,

With a hem that I could recognise.

I felt terror, no surprise;

My mind filled with the cataract,

At one bound of the mighty fact.

"I remember, he did say

"Doubtless that, to this world's end,

"Where two or three should meet and
pray,

"He would be in the midst, their friend;

"Certainly he was there with them!"

And my pulses leaped for joy

Of the golden thought without alloy, 80

That I saw his very vesture's hem.

Then rushed the blood back, cold and
clear,

With a fresh enhancing shiver of fear;

And I hastened, cried out while I pressed

To the salvation of the vest,

"But not so, Lord! It cannot be

"That thou, indeed, art leaving me —

"Me, that have despised thy friends!

"Did my heart make no amends?"

"Thou art the love of God — above

"His power, didst hear me place his love, 90

"And that was leaving the world for thee.

"Therefore thou must not turn from me

"As I had chosen the other part!

"Folly and pride o'ercame my heart.

"Our best is bad, nor bears thy test;

"Still, it should be our very best.

"I thought it best that thou, the spirit,

"Be worshipped in spirit and in truth,

"And in beauty, as even we require it — 100

"Not in the forms burlesque, uncouth,

"I left but now, as scarcely fited

"For thee: I knew not what I pitied.

"But, all I felt there, right or wrong,

"What is it to thee, who curest sinning?

"Am I not weak as thou art strong?

"I have looked to thee from the beginning,

"Straight up to thee through all the world

"Which, like an idle scroll, lay furled

"To nothingness on either side: 110

"And since the time thou was descried,

"Spite of the weak heart, so have I

"Lived ever, and so fain would die,

"Living and dying, thee before!

"But if thou leavest me —"

IX.

Less or more,

I suppose that I spoke thus.

When, — have mercy, Lord, on us!

The whole face turned upon me full.

And I spread myself beneath it,

As when the bleacher spreads, to see the it

In the cleansing sun, his wool, —

Steeps in the flood of noontide whiteness

Some defiled, discoloured web —

10 So lay I, saturate with brightness.

And when the flood appeared to ebb,

Lo, I was walking, light and swift,

With my senses settling fast and steadying,But my body caught up in the whirl and drift

Of the vesture's amplitude, still eddying

On, just before me, still to be followed,

As it carried me after with its motion:

What shall I say? — as a path were hol-lowedAnd a man went weltering through the ocean,

20 Sucked along in the flying wake

Of the luminous water-snake.

Darkness and cold were cloven, as through

I passed, upborne yet walking too.

And I turned to myself at intervals, —

"So he said, so it befalls.

"God who registers the cup

"Of mere cold water, for his sake

"To a disciple rendered up,

"Disdains not his own thirst to slake

30 "At the poorest love was ever offered:

"And because my heart I proffered,

"With true love trembling at the brim,

"He suffers me to follow him

"For ever, my own way, — dispensed

"From seeking to be influenced

"By all the less immediate ways

"That earth, in worships manifold,

"Adopts to reach, by prayer and praise,

"The garment's hem, which, lo, I hold!"

X.

40 And so we crossed the world and stopped.

For where am I, in city or plain,

Since I am 'ware of the world again?

And what is this that rises propped

With pillars of prodigious girth?

Is it really on the earth,

This miraculous Dome of God?

Has the angel's measuring-rod

Which numbered cubits, gem from gem,

'Twixt the gates of the New Jerusalem,

50 Meted it out, — and what he meted,

Have the sons of men completed?

— Binding, ever as he bade,

Columns in the colonnade

With arms wide open to embrace

The entry of the human race

To the breast of . . . what is it, yon building,Ablaze in front, all paint and gilding,
With marble for brick, and stones of price
For garniture of the edifice?

Now I see; it is no dream;

It stands there and it does not seem;

For ever, in pictures, thus it looks,

And thus I have read of it in books

Often in England, leagues away,

And wondered how these fountains play,

Growing up eternally

Each to a musical water-tree,

Whose blossoms drop, a glittering boon,

Before my eyes, in the light of the moon,

To the granite lavers underneath.

Liar and dreamer in your teeth!

I, the sinner that speak to you,

Was in Rome this night, and stood, and
knew

Both this and more. For see, for see,

The dark is rent, mine eye is free

To pierce the crust of the outer wall,

And I view inside, and all there, all,

As the swarming hollow of a hive,

The whole Basilica alive!

Men in the chancel, body and nave,

Men on the pillars' architrave,

Men on the statues, men on the tombs

With popes and kings in their porphyry
wombs,

All famishing in expectation

Of the main-altar's consummation.

For see, for see, the rapturous moment

Approaches, and earth's best endowment

Blends with heaven's; the taper-fires

Pant up, the winding brazen spires

Heave loftier yet the baldachin;¹

The incense-gaspings, long kept in,

Supsire in clouds; the organ blatant

Holds his breath and grovels latent,

As if God's hushing finger grazed him,

(Like Behemoth when he praised him)

At the silver bell's shrill tinkling,

Quick cold drops of terror sprinkling

On the sudden pavement strewed

With faces of the multitude.

Earth breaks up, time drops away,

In flows heaven, with its new day

Of endless life, when He who trod,

Very man and very God,

This earth in weakness, shame and pain,

Dying the death whose signs remain

Up yonder on the accursed tree, —

Shall come again, no more to be

Of captivity the thrall,

But the one God, All in all,

King of kings, Lord of lords,

As His servant John received the words,

"I died, and live for evermore!"

XI.

Yet I was left outside the door.

"Why sit I here on the threshold-stone

"Left till He return, alone
 "Save for the garment's extreme fold
 "Abandoned still to bless my hold?"
 My reason, to my doubt, replied,
 As if a book were opened wide,
 And at a certain page I traced
 Every record undefaced,
 Added by successive years, —
 The harvestings of truth's stray ears
 Singly gleaned, and in one sheaf
 Bound together for belief.
 Yes, I said — that he will go
 And sit with these in turn, I know.
 Their faith's heart beats, though her head swims
 Too giddily to guide her limbs,
 Disabled by their palsy-stroke
 From propping mine. Though Rome's gross yoke
 Drops off, no more to be endured,
 Her teaching is not so obscured
 By errors and perversities,
 That no truth shines athwart the lies:
 And he, whose eye detects a spark Even where, to man's, the whole seems
 dark,
 May well see flame where each beholder
 Acknowledges the embers smoulder.
 But I, a mere man, fear to quit
 The clue God gave me as most fit
 To guide my footsteps through life's maze,
 Because himself discerns all ways
 Open to reach him: I, a man
 Able to mark where faith began
 To swerve aside, till from its summit
 Judgment drops her damning plummet,
 Pronouncing such a fatal space
 Departed from the founder's base:
 He will not bid me enter too,
 But rather sit, as now I do,
 Awaiting his return outside.
 — 'Twas thus my reason straight replied
 And joyously I turned, and pressed
 The garment's skirt upon my breast,
 Until, afresh its light suffusing me,
 My heart cried — What has been abusing
 me
 That I should wait here lonely and coldly,
 Instead of rising, entering boldly,
 Baring truth's face, and letting drift
 Her veils of lies as they choose to shift?
 Do these men praise him? I will raise
 My voice up to their point of praise!
 I see the error; but above
 The scope of error, see the love. —
 Oh, love of those first Christian days!
 — Fanned so soon into a blaze,
 From the spark preserved by the trampled
 sect,
 That the antique sovereign Intellect
 Which then sat ruling in the world,
 Like a change in dreams, was hurled
 From the throne he reigned upon:
 You looked up and he was gone.

Gone, his clay and the pen!
 — Love, with Greece and Rome in ken,
 Bade her scribes abhor the trick
 Of poetry and rhetoric,
 And exult with hearts set free,
 In blessed imbecility
 Scrawled, perchance, on some torn sheet
 Leaving Sallust incomplete.
 Gone, his pride of sculptor, painter!
 — Love, while able to acquaint her
 While the thousand statues yet
 Fresh from chisel, pictures wet
 From brush, she saw on every side,
 Chose rather with an infant's pride
 To frame those portents which impart
 Such unction to true Christian Art.
 Gone, music too! The air was stirred
 By happy wings: Terpander's¹ bird
 (That, when the cold came, fled away)
 Would tarry not the wintry day, —
 As more enduring sculpture must,
 Till filthy saints rebuked the gust
 With which they chanced to get a sight
 Of some dear naked Aphrodite
 They glanced a thought above the toes of,
 By breaking zealously her nose off.
 Love, surely, from that music's lingering Might have filched her organ-fingering,
 Nor chosen rather to set prayers
 To hog-grunts, praises to horse-neighings.
 Love was the startling thing, the new:
 Love was the all-sufficient too;
 And seeing that, you see the rest:
 As a babe can find its mother's breast
 As well in darkness as in light,
 Love shut our eyes, and all seemed right.
 True, the world's eyes are open now:
 — Less need for me to disallow
 Some few that keep Love's zone unbuckled
 Peevish as ever to be suckled,
 Lulled by the same old baby-prattle
 With intermixture of the rattle,
 When she would have them creep, stand steady
 Upon their feet, or walk already,
 Not to speak of trying to climb.
 I will be wise another time,
 And not desire a wall between us,
 When next I see a church-roof cover
 So many species of one genus,
 All with foreheads bearing lover
 Written above the earnest eyes of them; IT
 All with breasts that beat for beauty,
 Whether sublimed, to the surprise of them,
 In noble daring, steadfast duty,
 The heroic in passion, or in action, —
 Or, lowered for sense's satisfaction,
 To the mere outside of human creatures,
 Mere perfect form and faultless features.
 What? with all Rome here, whence to levy
 Such contributions to their appetite,

With women and men in a gorgeous bevy,
They take, as it were, a padlock, clap it tight

On their southern eyes, restrained from feeding

On the glories of their ancient reading,
On the beauties of their modern singing,
On the wonders of the builder's bringing,
On the majesties of Art around them, —

And, all these loves, late struggling incessant,

When faith has at last united and bound them,

10 They offer up to God for a present?

Why, I will, on the whole, be rather proud of it, —

And, only taking the act in reference
To the other recipients who might have allowed it,

I will rejoice that God had the preference.

XII.

So I summed up my new resolves:

Too much love there can never be.

And where the intellect devolves

Its function on love exclusively,

I, a man who possesses both,

6 Will accept the provision, nothing loth,

— Will feast my love, then depart elsewhere,

That my intellect may find its share.

And ponder, O soul, the while thou departest,

And see thou applaud the great heart of the artist,

Who, examining the capabilities

Of the block of marble he has to fashion

Into a type of thought or passion, —

Not always, using obvious facilities,

Shapes it, as any artist can,

30 Into a perfect symmetrical man,

Complete from head to foot of the life-size,

Such as old Adam stood in his wife's eyes —

But, now and then, bravely aspires to consummate

A Colossus by no means so easy to come at,

And uses the whole of his block for the bust,

Leaving the mind of the public to finish it,

Since cut it ruefully short he must:

On the face alone he expends his devotion,

He rather would mar than resolve to diminish it,

40 — Saying, "Applaud me for this grand notion "Of what a face may be! As for completing it

"In breast and body and limbs, do that, you!"

All hail! I fancy how, happily meeting it,

A trunk and legs would perfect the statue,

Could man carve so as to answer volition.

And how much nobler than petty cavils,

Were a hope to find, in my spirit-travels,
Some artist of another ambition,

Who having a block to carve, no bigger,
Has spent his power on the opposite quest,

And believed to begin at the feet was best —

For so may I see, ere I die, the whole figure!

XIII.

No sooner said than out in the night!

My heart beat lighter and more light:

And still, as before, I was walking swift,

With my senses settling fast and steady ing,

But my body caught up in the whirl and drift

Of the vesture's amplitude, still eddying

On just before me, still to be followed,

As it carried me after with its motion, —
— What shall I say? — as a path were hollowed,

And a man went weltering through the ocean,

Sucked along in the flying wake

Of the luminous water-snake.

XIV.

Alone! I am left alone once more —

(Save for the garment's extreme fold

Abandoned still to bless my hold)

Alone, beside the entrance-door

Of a sort of temple, — perhaps a college,

— Like nothing I ever saw before

At home in England, to my knowledge.

The tall old quaint irregular town!

It may be . . . though which, I can't affirm . . . any

Of the famous middle-age towns of Germany;

And this flight of stairs where I sit down,

Is it Halle, Weimar, Cassel, Frankfurt

Or Göttingen, I have to thank for?

It may be Göttingen, — most likely.

Through the open door I catch obliquely

Glimpses of a lecture-hall;

And not a bad assembly neither,

Ranged decent and symmetrical

On benches, waiting what's to see there;

Which, holding still by the vesture's hem,

I also resolve to see with them,

Cautious this time how I suffer to slip

The chance of joining in fellowship

With any that call themselves his friends;

As these folk do, I have a notion.

But hist — a buzzing and emotion!

All settle themselves, the while ascends

By the creaking rail to the lecture-desk,

Step by step, deliberate

Because of his cranium's over-freight,

Three parts sublime to one grotesque,

If I have proved an accurate guesser,

The hawk-nosed high-cheek-boned Professor.

I felt at once as if there ran
 A shoot of love from my heart to the man —
 That sallow virgin-minded studious
 Martyr to mild enthusiasm,
 As he uttered a kind of cough-preludious
 That woke my sympathetic spasm,
 (Beside some spitting that made me sorry)
 And stood, surveying his auditory
 With a wan pure look, well nigh celestial, — 10 Those blue eyes had survived so much!
 While, under the foot they could not smutch,
 Lay all the fleshly and the bestial.
 Over he bowed, and arranged his notes,
 Till the auditory's clearing of throats
 Was done with, died into a silence;
 And, when each glance was upward sent,
 Each bearded mouth composed intent,
 And a pin might be heard drop half a mile
 hence, —
 He pushed back higher his spectacles, 20 Let the eyes stream out like lamps from cells,
 And giving his head of hair — a hake
 Of undressed tow, for colour and quantity —
 One rapid and impatient shake,
 (As our own Young England adjusts a jaunty tie
 When about to impart, on mature digestion,
 Some thrilling view of the surplice-question)
 — The Professor's grave voice, sweet though hoarse,
 Broke into his Christmas-Eve discourse.

XV.

And he began it by observing 30 How reason dictated that men
 Should rectify the natural swerving,
 By a reversion, now and then,
 To the well-heads of knowledge, few
 And far away, whence rolling grew
 The life-stream wide whereat we drink,
 Commingled, as we needs must think,
 With waters alien to the source;
 To do which, aimed this eve's discourse;
 Since, where could be a fitter time 40 For tracing backward to its prime
 This Christianity, this lake,
 This reservoir, whereat we slake,
 From one or other bank, our thirst?
 So, he proposed inquiring first
 Into the various sources whence
 'This Myth of Christ is derivable;
 Demanding from the evidence,
 (Since plainly no such life was livable)
 How these phenomena should class?
 50 Whether 'twere best opine Christ was,
 Or never was at all, or whether
 He was and was not, both together —
 It matters little for the name,
 So the idea be left the same.

Only, for practical purpose' sake,
 'Twas obviously as well to take
 The popular story, — understanding
 How the ineptitude of the time,
 And the penman's prejudice, expanding
 Fact into fable fit for the clime, 60 Had, by slow and sure degrees, translated
 it
 Into this myth, this individuum — Which, when reason had strained and abated it
 Of foreign matter, left, for residuum,
 A Man! — a right true man, however,
 Whose work was worthy a man's endeavour:
 Work, that gave warrant almost sufficient
 To his disciples, for rather believing
 He was just omnipotent and omniscient,
 As it gives to us, for as frankly receiving 70
 His word, their tradition, — which, though it meant
 Something entirely different
 From all that those who only heard it,
 In their simplicity thought and averred it,
 Had yet a meaning quite as respectable:
 For, among other doctrines delectable,
 Was he not surely the first to insist on
 The natural sovereignty of our race? —
 Here the lecturer came to a pausing-
 place.
 And while his cough, like a drouthy piston, 80
 Tried to dislodge the husk that grew to him,
 I seized the occasion of bidding adieu to
 him,
 The vesture still within my hand.

XVI.

I could interpret its command.
 This time he would not bid me enter
 The exhausted air-bell of the Critic.
 Truth's atmosphere may grow mephitic
 When Papist struggles with Dissenter, Impregnating its pristine clarity,
 90 — One, by his daily fare's vulgarity,
 Its gust of broken meat and garlic;
 — One, by his soul's too-much presuming
 To turn the frankincense's fuming
 And vapours of the candle starlike
 Into the cloud her wings she buoys on.
 Each, that thus sets the pure air seething,
 May poison it for healthy breathing —
 But the Critic leaves no air to poison;
 Pumps out with ruthless ingenuity
 Atom by atom, and leaves you — vacuity. 100
 Thus much of Christ does he reject?
 And what retain? His intellect?
 What is it I must reverence duly?
 Poor intellect for worship, truly,
 Which tells me simply what was told (If mere morality, bereft
 Of the God in Christ, be all that's left)
 Elsewhere by voices manifold;
 With this advantage, that the stater
 Made nowise the important stumblle 110

Of adding, he, the sage and humble,
Was also one with the Creator.
You urge Christ's followers' simplicity:
But how does shifting blame, evade it?
Have wisdom's words no more felicity?

The stumbling-block, his speech — who laid it?

How comes it that for one found able
To sift the truth of it from fable,
Millions believe it to the letter?

10 Christ's goodness, then — does that fare
better?

Strange goodness, which upon the score

Of being goodness, the mere due

Of man to fellow-man, much more

To God, — should take another view

Of its possessor's privilege,

And bid him rule his race! You pledge

Your fealty to such rule? What, all —

From heavenly John and Attic Paul,

And that brave weather-battered Peter,

20 Whose stout faith only stood completer

For buffets, sinning to be pardoned,

As more his hands hauled nets, they hardened, —

All, down to you, the man of men,

Professing here at Göttingen,

Compose Christ's flock! They, you and I,

Are sheep of a good man! And why?

The goodness, — how did he acquire it?

Was it self-gained, did God inspire it?

Choose which: then tell me, on what ground

30 Should its possessor dare propound

His claim to rise o'er us an inch?

Were goodness all some man's invention,

Who arbitrarily made mention

What we should follow, and whence flinch, —

What qualities might take the style

Of right and wrong, — and had such guessing

Met with as general acquiescing

As graced the alphabet erewhile,

When A got leave an Ox to be,

40 No Camel (quoth the Jews) like G,¹ —

For thus inventing thing and title

Worship were that man's fit requital.

But if the common conscience must

Be ultimately judge, adjust

Its apt name to each quality

Already known, — I would decree

Worship for such mere demonstration

And simple work of nomenclature,

Only the day I praised, not nature,

50 But Harvey, for the circulation.

I would praise such a Christ, with pride

And joy, that he, as none beside,

Had taught us how to keep the mind

God gave him, as God gave his kind,

Freer than they from fleshly taint:

I would call such a Christ our Saint,

As I declare our Poet, him

Whose insight makes all others dim:

A thousand poets pried at life,

And only one amid the strife

Rose to be Shakespeare: each shall take

His crown, I'd say, for the world's sake —

Though some objected — "Had we seen

"The heart and head of each, what screen

"Was broken there to give them light,

"While in ourselves it shuts the sight,

"We should no more admire, perchance,

"That these found truth out at a glance,

"Than marvel how the bat discerns

"Some pitch-dark cavern's fifty turns, 70

"Led by a finer tact, a gift

"He boasts, which other birds must shift

"Without, and grope as best they can."

No, freely I would praise the man, —

Nor one whit more, if he contended

That gift of his, from God descended.

Ah friend, what gift of man's does not?

No nearer something, by a jot,

Rise an infinity of nothings

Than one: take Euclid for your teacher: 80

Distinguish kinds: do crownings, cloth-

ings,

Make that creator which was creature?

Multiply gifts upon man's head,

And what, when all's done, shall be said

But — the more gifted he, I ween!

That one's made Christ, this other,
Pilate,

And this might be all that has been, —

So what is there to frown or smile at?

What is left for us, save, in growth

Of soul, to rise up, far past both, 90

From the gift looking to the giver,

And from the cistern to the river,

And from the finite to infinity,

And from man's dust to God's divinity?

XVII.

Take all in a word: the truth in God's breast

Lies trace for trace upon ours impressed:

Though he is so bright and we so dim,

We are made in his image to witness him:

And were no eye in us to tell,

Instructed by no inner sense, 100

The light of heaven from the dark of hell,

That light would want its evidence, —

Though justice, good and truth were still

Divine, if, by some demon's will,

Hatred and wrong had been proclaimed

Law through the worlds, and right misnamed.

No mere exposition of morality

Made or in part or in totality,

Should win you to give it worship, therefore:

And, if no better proof you will care for, 110

— Whom do you count the worst man upon
earth?

Be sure, he knows, in his conscience, more
Of what right is, than arrives at birth

In the best man's acts that we bow before:
This last knows better — true, but my fact is,
'Tis one thing to know, and another to practise.

And thence I conclude that the real God-function

Is to furnish a motive and injunction
For practising what we know already.
And such an injunction and such a motive
As the God in Christ, do you waive, and
"heady,

"High-minded," hang your tablet-votive
Outside the fane on a finger-post?

Morality to the uttermost,
Supreme in Christ as we all confess,
Why need we prove would avail no jot
To make him God, if God he were not?
What is the point where himself lays stress?
Does the precept run "Believe in good,
"In justice, truth, now understood
"For the first time?" — or, "Believe in
me,

"Who lived and died, yet essentially
"Am Lord of Life?" Whoever can take The same to his heart and for mere love's
sake

Conceive of the love, — that man obtains
A new truth; no conviction gains
Of an old one only, made intense
By a fresh appeal to his faded sense.

XVIII.

Can it be that he stays inside?

Is the vesture left me to commune with?
Could my soul find aught to sing in tune
with

Even at this lecture, if she tried?
Oh, let me at lowest sympathise
With the lurking drop of blood that lies
In the desiccated brain's white roots
Without throb for Christ's attributes,
As the lecturer makes his special boast!
If love's dead there, it has left a ghost.
Admire we, how from heart to brain (Though to say so strike the doctors dumb)

One instinct rises and falls again,
Restoring the equilibrium.

And how when the Critic had done his
best,

And the pearl of price, at reason's test,
Lay dust and ashes levigable
On the Professor's lecture-table, —
When we looked for the inference and monition

That our faith, reduced to such condition,
Be swept forthwith to its natural dust-hole, —

He bids us, when we least expect it, Take back our faith, — if it be not just
whole,

Yet a pearl indeed, as his tests affect
it,

Which fact pays damage done reward- 50
ingly,

So, prize we our dust and ashes accordingly!

"Go home and venerate the myth

"I thus have experimented with —

"This man, continue to adore him

"Rather than all who went before him,

"And all who ever followed after!" —

Surely for this I may praise you, my brother!

Will you take the praise in tears or laughter?

That's one point gained: can I compass
another?

Unlearned love was safe from spurning — 60

Can't we respect your loveless learning?

Let us at least give learning honour!

What laurels had we showered upon her,

Girding her loins up to perturb

Our theory of the Middle Verb;

Or Turk-like brandishing a scimitar

O'er anapæsts in comic-trimeter;

Or curing the halt and maimed 'Iketides,'¹

While we lounged on at our indebted ease:

Instead of which, a tricky demon 70

Sets her at Titus or Philemon!

When ignorance wags his ears of leather

And hates God's word, 'tis altogether;

Nor leaves he his congenial thistles

To go and browse on Paul's Epistles.

— And you, the audience, who might ravage

The world wide, enviably savage,

Nor heed the cry of the retriever,

More than Herr Heine (before his fever), —

I do not tell a lie so arrant 80

As say my passion's wings are furled up,

And, without plainest heavenly warrant,

I were ready and glad to give the world
up —

But still, when you rub brow meticulous,

And ponder the profit of turning holy

If not for God's, for your own sake solely,

— God forbid I should find you ridiculous!

Deduce from this lecture all that eases you,

Nay, call yourselves, if the calling pleases
you,

"Christians," — abhor the deist's pravity, — 90

Go on, you shall no more move my gravity

Than, when I see boys ride a-cockhorse.

I find it in my heart to embarrass them

By hinting that their stick's a mock horse,

And they really carry what they say carries
them.

XIX.

So sat I talking with my mind.

I did not long to leave the door

And find a new church, as before,

But rather was quiet and inclined

To prolong and enjoy the gentle resting 100

¹ The Suppliants, a fragment of a play by Æschylus.

From further tracking and trying and testing.

"This tolerance is a genial mood!"

(Said I, and a little pause ensued).

"One trims the bark 'twixt shoal and shelf,
"And sees, each side, the good effects of it,

"A value for religion's self,

"A carelessness about the sects of it.

"Let me enjoy my own conviction,

"Not watch my neighbour's faith with fretfulness,

10 "Still spying there some dereliction

"Of truth, perversity, forgetfulness!

"Better a mild indifferentism,

"Teaching that both our faiths (though duller

"His shine through a dull spirit's prism)

"Originally had one colour!

"Better pursue a pilgrimage

"Through ancient and through modern times

"To many peoples, various climes,

"Where I may see saint, savage, sage 20 "Fuse their respective creeds in one

"Before the general Father's throne!"

XX.

— 'Twas the horrible storm began afresh!

The black night caught me in his mesh,

Whirled me up, and flung me prone.

I was left on the college-step alone.

I looked, and far there, ever fleeting

Far, far away, the receding gesture,

And looming of the lessening vesture! —

Swept forward from my stupid hand,

30 While I watched my foolish heart expand

In the lazy glow of benevolence,

O'er the various modes of man's belief.

I sprang up with fear's vehemence.

Needs must there be one way, our chief

Best way of worship: let me strive

To find it, and when found, contrive

My fellows also take their share!

This constitutes my earthly care:

God's is above it and distinct.

40 For I, a man, with men am linked

And not a brute with brutes; no gain

That I experience, must remain

Unshared; but should my best endeavour

To share it, fail — subsisteth ever

God's care above, and I exult

That God, by God's own ways occult,

May — doth, I will believe — bring back

All wanderers to a single track.

Meantime, I can but testify

50 God's care for me — no more, can I —

It is but for myself I know;

The world rolls witnessing around me

Only to leave me as it found me;

Men cry there, but my ear is slow:

Their races flourish or decay

— What boots it, while yon lucid way

Loaded with stars divides the vault?

But soon my soul repairs its fault
When, sharpening sense's hebetude,
She turns on my own life! So viewed, 60
No mere mote's-breadth but teems immense

With witnessings of providence:

And woe to me if when I look

Upon that record, the sole book

Unsealed to me, I take no heed

Of any warning that I read!

Have I been sure, this Christmas-eve,

God's own hand did the rainbow weave,

Whereby the truth from heaven slid

Into my soul? — I cannot bid 70

The world admit he stooped to heal

My soul, as if in a thunder-peal

Where one heard noise, and one saw flame,

I only knew he named my name:

But what is the world to me, for sorrow

Or joy in its censure, when to-morrow

It drops the remark, with just-turned head

Then, on again, 'That man is dead'?

Yes, but for me — my name called, —

drawn

As a conscript's lot from the lap's black 80

yawn,

He has dipt into on a battle-dawn:

Bid out of life by a nod, a glance, —

Stumbling, mute-mazed, at nature's

chance, —

With a rapid finger circled round,

Fixed to the first poor inch of ground

To fight from, where his foot was found;

Whose ear but a minute since lay free

To the wide camp's buzz and gossipry —

Summoned, a solitary man

To end his life where his life began, 90

From the safe glad rear, to the dreadful van!

Soul of mine, hadst thou caught and held

By the hem of the vesture! —

XXI.

And I caught

At the flying robe, and unrepelled

Was lapped again in its folds full-fraught

With warmth and wonder and delight,

God's mercy being infinite.

For scarce had the words escaped my

tongue,

When, at a passionate bound, I sprung,

Out of the wandering world of rain, 100

Into the little chapel again.

XXII.

How else was I found there, bolt upright

On my bench, as if I had never left it?

— Never flung out on the common at night,

Nor met the storm and wedge-like cleft

it,

Seen the raree-show of Peter's successor,

Or the laboratory of the Professor!

For the Vision, that was true, I wist,

True as that heaven and earth exist.

There sat my friend, the yellow and tall,
With his neck and its wen in the self-same place;
Yet my nearest neighbour's cheek showed gall.

She had slid away a contemptuous space:
And the old fat woman, late so placable, Eyed me with symptoms, hardly mistakable,

Of her milk of kindness turning rancid.
In short, a spectator might have fancied
That I had nodded, betrayed by slumber,
Yet kept my seat, a warning ghastly,
Through the heads of the sermon, nine in number,

And woke up now at the tenth and lastly.
But again, could such disgrace have happened?

Each friend at my elbow had surely nudged it;
And, as for the sermon, where did my nap
end?

Unless I heard it, could I have judged it?
Could I report as I do at the close,
First, the preacher speaks through his nose:
Second, his gesture is too emphatic:

Thirdly, to waive what's pedagogic,
The subject-matter itself lacks logic:
Fourthly, the English is ungrammatical.
Great news! the preacher is found no

Pascal,
Whom, if I pleased, I might to the task call
Of making square to a finite eye

The circle of infinity,
And find so all-but-just-succeeding!
Great news! the sermon proves no reading
Where bee-like in the flowers I bury me,

Like Taylor's the immortal Jeremy!
And now that I know the very worst of him,
What was it I thought to obtain at first of
him?

Ha! Is God mocked, as he asks?
Shall I take on me to change his tasks,
And dare, dispatched to a river-head

For a simple draught of the element,
Neglect the thing for which he sent,
And return with another thing instead? —

Saying, "Because the water found
"Welling up from underground,
"Is mingled with the taints of earth,
"While thou, I know, dost laugh at dearth,
"And couldst, at wink or word, convulse
"The world with the leap of a river-pulse, —

"Therefore I turned from the oozeings muddy,

"And bring thee a chalice I found, instead:

"See the brave veins in the breccia ruddy!
"One would suppose that the marble bled.

"What matters the water? A hope I have nursed:

"The waterless cup will quench my thirst." 50
— Better have knelt at the poorest stream
That trickles in pain from the straitest rift!

For the less or the more is all God's gift,
Who blocks up or breaks wide the granite-seam.

And here, is there water or not, to drink?
I then, in ignorance and weakness,

Taking God's help, have attained to think My heart does best to receive in meek-
ness

That mode of worship, as most to his mind,
Where earthly aids being cast behind, 60
His All in All appears serene

With the thinnest human veil between,
Letting the mystic lamps, the seven,

The many motions of his spirit,
Pass, as they list, to earth from heaven.

For the preacher's merit or demerit,
It were to be wished the flaws were fewer

In the earthen vessel, holding treasure
Which lies as safe in a golden ewer;

But the main thing is, does it hold good 70
measure?

Heaven soon sets right all other matters! —

Ask, else, these ruins of humanity,
This flesh worn out to rags and tatters,

This soul at struggle with insanity,
Who thence take comfort — can I
doubt? —

Which an empire gained, were a loss without.

May it be mine! And let us hope
That no worse blessing befall the Pope,

Turned sick at last of to-day's buffoonery,
Of posturings and petticoatings, 80

Beside his Bourbon bully's gloatings
In the bloody orgies of drunk poltroonery!

Nor may the Professor forego its peace
At Göttingen presently, when, in the dusk

Of his life, if his cough, as I fear, should increase,

Prophesied of by that horrible husk —
When thicker and thicker the darkness fills

The world through his misty spectacles,
And he gropes for something more substantial

Than a fable, myth or personification, — 90

May Christ do for him what no mere man
shall,

And stand confessed as the God of salvation!

Meantime, in the still recurring fear
Lest myself, at unawares, be found,

While attacking the choice of my neighbours round,

With none of my own made — I choose
here!

The giving out of the hymn reclaims me;
I have done: and if any blames me,

Thinking that merely to touch in brevity
The topics I dwell on, were unlawful, — 100

Or worse, that I trench, with undue levity, On the bounds of the holy and the awful, —

I praise the heart, and pity the head of
him,

And refer myself to THEE, instead of him,
Who head and heart alike discernest,

Looking below light speech we utter,
When frothy spume and frequent sputter

Prove that the soul's depths boil in earnest!
May truth shine out, stand ever before us!

10. I put up pencil and join chorus

To Hepzibah Tune, without further apology,

The last five verses of the third section
Of the seventeenth hymn of Whitfield's Collection,

To conclude with the doxology.

EASTER-DAY.

I.

How very hard it is to be

A Christian! Hard for you and me, — Not the mere task of making real
That duty up to its ideal;

Effecting thus, complete and whole,

20 A purpose of the human soul —

For that is always hard to do;

But hard, I mean, for me and you

To realise it, more or less,

With even the moderate success

Which commonly repays our strife

To carry out the aims of life.

"This aim is greater," you will say,

"And so more arduous every way."

— But the importance of their fruits

30 Still proves to man, in all pursuits,
Proportional encouragement.

"Then, what if it be God's intent

"That labour to this one result

"Should seem unduly difficult?"

Ah, that's a question in the dark —

And the sole thing that I remark

Upon the difficulty, this;

We do not see it where it is,

At the beginning of the race:

40 As we proceed, it shifts its place,

And where we looked for crowns to fall,

We find the tug's to come, — that's all.

II.

At first you say, "The whole, or chief

"Of difficulties, is belief.

"Could I believe once thoroughly,

"The rest were simple. What? Am I

"An idiot, do you think, — a beast?

"Prove to me, only that the least

"Command of God is God's indeed,

50 "And what injunction shall I need "To pay obedience? Death so nigh

"When time must end, eternity

"Begin, — and cannot I compute,

"Weigh loss and gain together, suit

"My actions to the balance drawn,

"And give my body to be sawn

"Asunder, hacked in pieces, tied

"To horses, stoned, burned, crucified,

"Like any martyr of the list?

"How gladly! — if I make acquist,

"Through the brief minute's fierce annoy,

"Of God's eternity of joy."

III.

— And certainly you name the point

Whereon all turns: for could you joint

This flexile finite life once tight

Into the fixed and infinite,

You, safe inside, would spurn what's out,

With carelessness enough, no doubt —

Would spurn mere life: but when time brings

To their next stage your reasonings,

Your eyes, late wide, begin to wink

Nor see the path so well, I think.

IV.

You say, "Faith may be, one agrees,

"A touchstone for God's purposes,

"Even as ourselves conceive of them.

"Could he acquit us or condemn

"For holding what no hand can loose,

"Rejecting when we can't but choose?

"As well award the victor's wreath

"To whosoever should take breath

"Duly each minute while he lived —

"Grant heaven, because a man contrived

"To see its sunlight every day

"He walked forth on the public way.

"You must mix some uncertainty

"With faith, if you would have faith be.

"Why, what but faith, do we abhor

"And idolise each other for —

"Faith in our evil or our good,

"Which is or is not understood

"Aright by those we love or those "We hate, thence called our friends or foes?

"Your mistress saw your spirit's grace,

"When, turning from the ugly face,

"I found belief in it too hard;

"And she and I have our reward.

"— Yet here a doubt peeps: well for us

"Weak beings, to go using thus

"A touchstone for our little ends,

"Trying with faith the foes and friends; 100

"— But God, bethink you! I would fain

"Conceive of the Creator's reign

"As based upon exacter laws

"Than creatures build by with applause.

"In all God's acts — (as Plato cries

"He doth) — he should geometrise.

"Whence, I desiderate . . ."

V.

I see!

You would grow as a natural tree,

Stand as a rock, soar up like fire.
 The world's so perfect and entire,
 Quite above faith, so right and fit!
 Go there, walk up and down in it!
 No. The creation travails, groans — Contrive your music from its moans,
 Without or let or hindrance, friend!
 That's an old story, and its end
 As old — you come back (be sincere)
 With every question you put here (Here where there once was, and is still,
 We think, a living oracle, Whose answers you stand carping at)
 This time flung back unanswered flat, —
 Beside, perhaps, as many more
 As those that drove you out before,
 Now added, where was little need.
 Questions impossible, indeed,
 To us who sat still, all and each Persuaded that our earth had speech,
 Of God's, writ down, no matter if
 In cursive type or hieroglyph, —
 Which one fact freed us from the yoke
 Of guessing why He never spoke.
 You come back in no better plight
 Than when you left us, — am I right?

VI.

So, the old process, I conclude,
 Goes on, the reasoning's pursued Further. You own, "Tis well averred,
 "A scientific faith's absurd,
 "— Frustrates the very end 'twas meant
 "To serve. So, I would rest content
 "With a mere probability,
 "But, probable; the chance must lie,
 "Clear on one side, — lie all in rough,
 "So long as there be just enough
 "To pin my faith to, though it hap
 "Only at points: from gap to gap
 "One hangs up a huge curtain so,
 "Grandly, nor seeks to have it go
 "Foldless and flat along the wall.
 "What care I if some interval
 "Of life less plainly may depend "On God? I'd hang there to the end;
 "And thus I should not find it hard
 "To be a Christian and debarred
 "From trailing on the earth, till furled
 "Away by death. — Renounce the world!
 "Were that a mighty hardship? Plan
 "A pleasant life, and straight some man
 "Beside you, with, if he thought fit,
 "Abundant means to compass it,
 "Shall turn deliberate aside
 "To try and live as, if you tried
 "You clearly might, yet most despise.
 "One friend of mine wears out his eyes,
 "Slighting the stupid joys of sense,
 "In patient hope that, ten years hence,
 "Somewhat completer,* he may say,
 "My list of coleoptera!"

* Beetles.

"While just the other who most laughs
 "At him, above all epitaphs
 "Aspires to have his tomb describe
 "Himself as sole among the tribe
 "Of snuffbox-fanciers, who possessed
 "A Grignon with the Regent's crest.
 "So that, subduing, as you want,
 "Whatever stands predominant
 "Among my earthly appetites
 "For tastes and smells and sounds and sights,
 "I shall be doing that alone,
 "To gain a palm-branch and a throne.
 "Which fifty people undertake "To do, and gladly, for the sake
 "Of giving a Semitic guess,
 "Or playing pawns at blindfold chess."

VII.

Good: and the next thing is, — look round
 For evidence enough! 'Tis found,
 No doubt: as is your sort of mind,
 So is your sort of search: you'll find 83
 What you desire, and that's to be A Christian. What says history?
 How comforting a point it were
 To find some mummy-scrap declare
 There lived a Moses! Better still,
 Prove Jonah's whale translatable
 Into some quicksand of the seas,
 Isle, cavern, rock, or what you please,
 That faith might flap her wings an crow
 From such an eminence! Or, no — 90
 The human heart's best; you prefer Making that prove the minister
 To truth; you probe its wants and needs,
 And hopes and fears, then try what creeds
 Meet these most aptly, — resolute
 That faith plucks such substantial fruit
 Wherever these two correspond,
 She little needs to look beyond,
 And puzzle out who Orpheus was,
 Or Dionysius Zagrias.¹ 100
 You'll find sufficient, as I say,
 To satisfy you either way;
 You wanted to believe; your pains
 Are crowned — you do: and what remains?
 "Renounce the world!" — Ah, were it
 done
 By merely cutting one by one
 Your limbs off, with your wise head last,
 How easy were it! — how soon past,
 If once in the believing mood!
 "Such is man's usual gratitude,
 "Such thanks to God do we return,
 "For not exacting that we spurn 114
 "A single gift of life, forego
 "One real gain, — only taste them so
 "With gravity and temperance,
 "That those mild virtues may enhance
 "Such pleasures, rather than abstract —

* A name for the god.

"Last spice of which, will be the fact
 "Of love discerned in every gift;
 "While, when the scene of life shall shift,
 "And the gay heart be taught to ache,
 "As sorrows and privations take "The place of joy, — the thing that seems
 "Mere misery, under human schemes,
 "Becomes, regarded by the light
 "Of love, as very near, or quite 10 "As good a gift as joy before.
 "So plain is it that, all the more
 "A dispensation's merciful,
 "More pettishly we try and cull
 "Briers, thistles, from our private plot,
 "To tar God's ground where thorns are not!"

VIII.

Do you say this, or I? — Oh, you!
 Then, what, my friend? — (thus I pursue Our parley) — you indeed opine
 That the Eternal and Divine
 20 Did, eighteen centuries ago,
 In very truth . . . Enough! you know
 The all-stupendous tale, — that Birth,
 That Life, that Death! And all, the earth Shuddered at, — all, the heavens grew
 black
 Rather than see; all, nature's rack
 And throe at dissolution's brink
 Attested, — all took place, you think,
 Only to give our joys a zest,
 And prove our sorrows for the best?
 30 We differ, then! Where I, still pale
 And heartstruck at the dreadful tale,
 Waiting to hear God's voice declare
 What horror followed for my share,
 As implicated in the deed,
 Apart from other sins, — concede
 That if He blacked out in a blot
 My brief life's pleasantness, 'twere not
 So very disproportionate!
 Or there might be another fate —
 40 I certainly could understand
 (If fancies were the thing in hand)
 How God might save, at that day's price,
 The impure in their impurities,
 Give licence formal and complete
 To choose the fair and pick the sweet.
 But there be certain words, broad, plain,
 Uttered again and yet again,
 Hard to mistake or overgloss —
 Announcing this world's gain for loss,
 50 And bidding us reject the same:
 The whole world lieth (they proclaim)
 In wickedness, — come out of it!
 Turn a deaf ear, if you think fit,
 But I who thrill through every nerve
 At thought of what deaf ears deserve —
 How do you counsel in the case?

IX.

"I'd take, by all means, in your place,
 "The safe side, since it so appears:

"Deny myself, a few brief years,
 "The natural pleasure, leave the fruit 6 "Or cut the plant up by the root.
 "Remember what a martyr said
 "On the rude tablet overhead!
 "I was born sickly, poor and mean,
 "A slave: no misery could screen
 "The holders of the pearl of price
 "From Caesar's envy; therefore twice
 "I fought with beasts, and three times
 saw
 "My children suffer by his law;
 "At last my own release was earned:
 7 "I was some time in being burned,
 "But at the close a Hand came through
 "The fire above my head, and drew
 "My soul to Christ, whom now I see.
 "Sergius, a brother, writes for me
 "This testimony on the wall —
 "For me, I have forgot it all."
 "You say right; this were not so hard!
 "And since one nowise is debarred
 "From this, why not escape some sins
 "By such a method?"

X.

Then begins

To the old point revulsion new — (For 'tis just this I bring you to)
 If after all we should mistake,
 And so renounce life for the sake
 Of death and nothing else? You hear
 Each friend we jeered at, send the jeer Back to ourselves with good effect —
 "There were my beetles to collect!
 "My box — a trifle, I confess,
 "But here I hold it, ne'ertheless!"
 Poor idiots, (let us pluck up heart And answer) we, the better part
 Have chosen, though 'twere only hope, — Nor envy moles like you that grope
 Amid your veritable muck,
 More than the grasshoppers would truck,
 For yours, their passionate life away,
 That spends itself in leaps all day
 To reach the sun, you want the eyes
 To see, as they the wings to rise
 And match the noble hearts of them!
 Thus the contemner we condemn, —
 And, when doubt strikes us, thus we ward
 Its stroke off, caught upon our guard, — Not struck enough to overturn
 Our faith, but shake it — make us learn
 What I began with, and, I wis, End, having proved, — how hard it is To be a Christian!

XI.

"Proved, or not,
 "Howe'er you wis, small thanks, I wot,
 "You get of mine, for taking pains
 "To make it hard to me Who gains
 "By that, I wonder? Here I live
 "In trusting ease; and here you drive

"At causing me to lose what most
 "Yourself would mourn for had you lost!"

XII.

But, do you see, my friend, that thus
 You leave Saint Paul for Æschylus?
 — Who made his Titan's arch-device
 The giving men blind hopes to spice
 The meal of life with, else devoured
 In bitter haste, while lo, death loured
 Before them at the platter's edge!
 If faith should be, as I allege,
 Quite other than a condiment
 To heighten flavours with, or meant (Like that brave curry of his Grace)
 To take at need the victuals' place?
 If, having dined, you would digest
 Besides, and turning to your rest
 Should find instead . . .

XIII.

Now, you shall see
 And judge if a mere popery
 Pricks on my speaking! I resolve
 To utter — yes, it shall devolve
 On you to hear as solemn, strange
 And dread a thing as in the range Of facts, — or fancies, if God will — E'er happened to our kind! I still Stand in the cloud and, while it wraps
 My face, ought not to speak perhaps;
 Seeing that if I carry through My purpose, if my words in you Find a live actual listener,
 My story, reason must aver
 False after all — the happy chance!
 While, if each human countenance
 I meet in London day by day,
 Be what I fear, — my warnings fray
 No one, and no one they convert,
 And no one helps me to assert How hard it is to really be
 A Christian, and in vacancy
 I pour this story!

XIV.

I commence
 By trying to inform you, whence
 It comes that every Easter-night
 As now, I sit up, watch, till light,
 Upon those chimney-stacks and roofs,
 Give, through my window-pane, grey proofs
 That Easter-day is breaking slow.
 On such a night three years ago,
 It chanced that I had cause to cross
 The common, where the chapel was,
 Our friend spoke of, the other day —
 You've not forgotten, I dare say.
 I fell to musing of the time
 So close, the blessed matin-prime
 All hearts leap up at, in some guise —
 One could not well do otherwise.
 Insensibly my thoughts were bent

Toward the main point; I overwent
 Much the same ground of reasoning
 As you and I just now. One thing Remained, however — one that tasked
 My soul to answer; and I asked,
 Fairly and frankly, what might be
 That History, that Faith, to me
 — Me there — not me in some domain
 Built up and peopled by my brain,
 Weighing its merits as one weighs Mere theories for blame or praise,
 — The kingcraft of the Lucumons,¹
 Or Fourier's scheme, its pros and cons, —
 But my faith there, or none at all.
 "How were my case, now, did I fall
 "Dead here, this minute — should I lie
 "Faithful or faithless?" Note that I Inclined thus ever! — little prone
 For instance, when I lay alone
 In childhood, to go calm to sleep
 And leave a closet where might keep His watch perdue some murderer
 Waiting till twelve o'clock to stir,
 As good authentic legends tell:
 "He might: but how improbable!
 "How little likely to deserve
 "The pains and trial to the nerve
 "Of thrusting head into the dark!" — Urged my old nurse, and bade me mark
 Beside, that, should the dreadful scout Really lie hid there, and leap out
 At first turn of the rusty key,
 Mine were small gain that she could see,
 Killed not in bed but on the floor,
 And losing one night's sleep the more.
 I tell you, I would always burst
 The door ope, know my fate at first.
 This time, indeed, the closet penned
 No such assassin: but a friend
 Rather, peeped out to guard me, fit
 For counsel, Common Sense, to wit,
 Who said a good deal that might pass, —
 Heartening, impartial too, it was, Judge else: "For, soberly now, — who "Should be a Christian if not you?" (Hear how he smoothed me down.)
 "One takes
 "A whole life, sees what course it makes
 "Mainly, and not by fits and starts —
 "In spite of stoppage which imparts
 "Fresh value to the general speed.
 "A life, with none, would fly indeed:
 "Your progressing is slower — right!
 "We deal with progress and not flight.
 "Through baffling senses passionate,
 "Fancies as restless, — with a freight
 "Of knowledge cumbersome enough
 "To sink your ship when waves grow
 rough,
 "Though meant for ballast in the hold, —
 "I find, 'mid dangers manifold,
 "The good bark answers to the helm

"Where faith sits, easier to o'erwhelm
 "Than some stout peasant's heavenly guide,
 "Whose hard head could not, if it tried,
 "Conceive a doubt, nor understand
 "How senses hornier than his hand
 "Should 'tice the Christian off his guard.
 "More happy! But shall we award
 "Less honour to the hull which, dogged
 "By storms, a mere wreck, waterlogged, 10 "Masts by the board, her bulwarks gone
 "And stanchions going, yet bears on, —
 "Than to mere life-boast, built to save,
 "And triumph o'er the breaking wave?
 "Make perfect your good ship as these,
 "And what were her performances!"
 I added — "Would the ship reach home!
 "I wish indeed 'God's kingdom come —'
 "The day when I shall see appear
 "His bidding, as my duty, clear 20 "From doubt! And it shall dawn, that
 day,
 "Some future season; Easter may "Prove, not impossibly, the time —
 "Yes, that were striking — fates would chime
 "So aptly! Easter-morn, to bring
 "The Judgment! — deeper in the spring
 "Than now, however, when there's snow
 "Capping the hills; for earth must show
 "All signs of meaning to pursue
 "Her tasks as she was wont to do 30 "— The skylark, taken by surprise
 "As we ourselves, shall recognise "Sudden the end. For suddenly
 "It comes; the dreadful must be
 "In that; all warrants the belief —
 "At night it cometh like a thief."
 "I fancy why the trumpet blows;
 "— Plainly, to wake one. From repose
 "We shall start up, at last awake
 "From life, that insane dream we take 40 "For waking now, because it seems.
 "And as, when now we wake from dreams,
 "We laugh, while we recall them, 'Fool,
 "'To let the chance slip, linger cool
 "'When such adventure offered! Just "'A bridge to cross, a dwarf to thrust
 "'Aside, a wicked mage to stab —
 "'And, lo ye, I had kissed Queen Mab!'
 "So shall we marvel why we grudged
 "Our labour here, and idly judged 50 "Of heaven, we might have gained, but lose!
 "Lose? Talk of loss, and I refuse "To plead at all! You speak no worse
 "Nor better than my ancient nurse
 "When she would tell me in my youth
 "I well deserved that shapes uncouth
 "Frighted and teased me in my sleep:
 "Why could I not in memory keep
 "Her precept for the evil's cure?
 "Pinch your own arm, boy, and be sure
 "You'll wake forthwith!"

XV.

And as I said 61

This nonsense, throwing back my head
 With light complacent laugh, I found
 Suddenly all the midnight round
 One fire. The dome of heaven had stood
 As made up of a multitude
 Of handbreadth cloudlets, one vast rack
 Of ripples infinite and black,
 From sky to sky. Sudden there went,
 Like horror and astonishment,
 A fierce vindictive scribble of red 70
 Quick flame across, as if one said
 (The angry scribe of Judgment) "There —
 "Burn it!" And straight I was aware That the whole ribwork round, minute
 Cloud touching cloud beyond compute,
 Was tinted, each with its own spot
 Of burning at the core, till clot
 Jammed against clot, and spilt its fire
 Over all heaven, which 'gan expire
 As fanned to measure equable, — 80
 Just so great conflagrations kill Night overhead, and rise and sink, Reflected. Now the fire would shrink
 And wither off the blasted face
 Of heaven, and I distinct might trace
 The sharp black ridgy outlines left Unburned like network — then, each cleft
 The fire had been sucked back into,
 Regorged, and out it surging flew Furiously, and night writhed inflamed, 90
 Till, tolerating to be tamed
 No longer, certain rays world-wide Shot downwardly. On every side
 Caught past escape, the earth was lit;
 As if a dragon's nostril split
 And all his famished ire o'erflowed;
 Then, as he winced at his lord's goad,
 Back he inhaled: whereat I found
 The clouds into vast pillars bound,
 Based on the corners of the earth, 100
 Propping the skies at top: a dearth
 Of fire in the violet intervals,
 Leaving exposed the utmost walls
 Of time, about to tumble in
 And end the world.

XVI.

I felt begin

The Judgment-Day: to retrocede
 Was too late now. "In very deed,"
 (I uttered to myself) "that Day!"
 The intuition burned away
 All darkness from my spirit too: 110
 There, stood I, found and fixed, I knew, Choosing the world. The choice was
 made;
 And naked and disguiseless stayed,
 And unevadable, the fact.
 My brain held all the same compact
 Its senses, nor my heart declined
 Its office; rather, both combined

To help me in this juncture. I Lost not a second, — agony
 Gave boldness: since my life had end
 And my choice with it — best defend,
 Applaud both! I resolved to say,
 "So was I framed by thee, such way
 "I put to use thy senses here!
 "It was so beautiful, so near,
 "Thy world, — what could I then but
 choose

10 "My part there? Nor did I refuse "To look above the transient boon
 "Of time; but it was hard so soon
 "As in a short life, to give up
 "Such beauty: I could put the cup
 "Undrained of half its fulness, by;
 "But, to renounce it utterly,
 "— That was too hard! Nor did the cry
 "Which bade renounce it, touch my brain
 "Authentically deep and plain 20 "Enough to make my lips let go.
 "But Thou, who knowest all, dost know "Whether I was not, life's brief while,
 "Endeavouring to reconcile
 "Those lips (too tardily, alas!)
 "To letting the dear remnant pass,
 "One day, — some drops of earthly good
 "Untasted! Is it for this mood,
 "That Thou, whose earth delights so well,
 "Hast made its complement a hell?"

XVII.

30 A final belch of fire like blood,
 Overbroke all heaven in one flood
 Of doom. Then fire was sky, and sky
 Fire, and both, one brief ecstasy,
 Then ashes. But I heard no noise
 (Whatever was) because a voice Beside me spoke thus, "Life is done,
 "Time ends, Eternity's begun,
 "And thou art judged for evermore."

XVIII.

I looked up; all seemed as before;
 Of that cloud-Tophet overhead
 40 No trace was left: I saw instead
 The common round me, and the sky
 Above, stretched drear and empty
 Of life. 'Twas the last watch of night,
 Except what brings the morning quite;
 When the armed angel, conscience-clear,
 His task nigh done, leans o'er his spear
 And gazes on the earth he guards,
 Safe one night more through all its wards,
 50 Till God relieve him at his post.
 "A dream — a waking dream at most!"
 (I spoke out quick, that I might shake The horrid nightmare off, and wake.)
 "The world gone, yet the world is here?
 "Are not all things as they appear?
 "Is Judgment past for me alone?
 "— And where had place the great white throne?
 "The rising of the quick and dead?"

"Where stood they, small and great?
 Who read
 "The sentence from the opened book?" 60
 So, by degrees, the blood forsook
 My heart, and let it beat afresh;
 I knew I should break through the mesh
 Of horror, and breathe presently:
 When, lo, again, the voice by me!

XIX.

I saw . . . Oh brother, 'mid far sands
 The palm-tree-cinctured city stands, Bright-white beneath, as heaven, bright-
 blue,
 Leans o'er it, while the years pursue
 Their course, unable to abate 70
 Its paradisaal laugh at fate!
 One morn, — the Arab staggers blind
 O'er a new tract of death, calcined
 To ashes, silence, nothingness, —
 And strives, with dizzy wits, to guess Whence fell the blow. What if, 'twixt
 skies
 And prostrate earth, he should surprise
 The imaged vapour, head to foot,
 Surveying, motionless and mute,
 Its work, ere, in a whirlwind rapt 80
 It vanish up again? — So hapt
 My chance. HE stood there. Like the smoke
 Pillared o'er Sodōm, when day broke, —
 I saw Him. One magnific pall Mantled in massive fold and fall
 His head, and coiled in snaky swathes
 About His feet: night's black, that bathes
 All else, broke, grizzled with despair,
 Against the soul of blackness there.
 A gesture told the mood within — 90
 That wrapped right hand which bared the
 chin,
 That intense meditation fixed
 On His procedure, — pity mixed
 With the fulfilment of decree.
 Motionless, thus, He spoke to me,
 Who fell before His feet, a mass,
 No man now.

XX.

"All is come to pass.
 "Such shows are over for each soul
 "They had respect to. In the roll
 "Of judgment which convinced mankind 100
 "Of sin, stood many, bold and blind,
 "Terror must burn the truth into:
 "Their fate for them! — thou hadst to do
 "With absolute omnipotence,
 "Able its judgments to dispense
 "To the whole race, as every one
 "Were its sole object. Judgment done,
 "God is, thou art, — the rest is hurled
 "To nothingness for thee. This world,
 "This finite life, thou hast preferred, 110
 "In disbelief of God's plain word,
 "To heaven and to infinity.

"Here the probation was for thee,
 "To show thy soul the earthly mixed
 "With heavenly, it must choose betwixt.
 "The earthly joys lay palpable, —
 "A taint, in each, distinct as well;
 "The heavenly flitted, faint and rare,
 "Above them, but as truly were
 "Taintless, so, in their nature, best.
 "Thy choice was earth: thou didst attest 10 "Twas fitter spirit should subserve
 "The flesh, than flesh refine to nerve "Beneath the spirit's play. Advance
 "No claim to their inheritance
 "Who chose the spirit's fugitive
 "Brief gleams, and yearned, 'This were to live

"Indeed, if rays, completely pure
 "From flesh that dulls them, could endure, —
 "Not shoot in meteor-light athwart
 "Our earth, to show how cold and swart 20 "It lies beneath their fire, but stand
 "As stars do, destined to expand,
 "Prove veritable worlds, our home!"
 "Thou saidst, — 'Let spirit star the dome
 "Of sky, that flesh may miss no peak,
 "No nook of earth, — I shall not seek
 "Its service further!' Thou art shut "Out of the heaven of spirit; glut
 "Thy sense upon the world: 'tis thine
 "For ever — take it!"

XXI.

"How? Is mine.
 30 "The world?" (I cried, while my soul
 broke
 Out in a transport.) "Hast Thou spoke
 "Plainly in that? Earth's exquisite "Treasures of wonder and delight,
 "For me?"

XXII.

The austere voice returned, —
 "So soon made happy? Hadst thou learned
 "What God accounteth happiness,
 "Thou wouldst not find it hard to guess
 "What hell may be his punishment
 "For those who doubt if God invent 40 "Better than they. Let such men rest "Content with what they judged the best.
 "Let the unjust usurp at will:
 "The filthy shall be filthy still:
 "Miser, there waits the gold for thee!
 "Hater, indulge thine enmity!
 "And thou, whose heaven self-ordained
 "Was, to enjoy earth unrestrained,
 "Do it! Take all the ancient show!
 "The woods shall wave, the rivers flow, 50 "And men apparently pursue
 "Their works, as they were wont to do,
 "While living in probation yet.
 "I promise not thou shalt forget
 "The past, now gone to its account;

"But leave thee with the old amount
 "Of faculties, nor less nor more,
 "Unvisited, as heretofore,
 "By God's free spirit, that makes an end.
 "So, once more, take thy world! Expend "Eternity upon its shows, 60
 "Flung thee as freely as one rose
 "Out of a summer's opulence,
 "Over the Eden-barrier whence
 "Thou art excluded. Knock in vain!"

XXIII.

I sat up. All was still again.
 I breathed free: to my heart, balm
 The warmth. "But, all the world!" —
 I said.

I stooped and picked a leaf of fern,
 And recollected I might learn
 From books, how many myriad sorts 70
 Of fern exist, to trust reports,
 Each as distinct and beautiful
 As this, the very first I cull.
 Think, from the first leaf to the last!
 Conceive, then, earth's resources! Vast Exhaustless beauty, endless change
 Of wonder! And this foot shall range Alps, Andes, — and this eye devour
 The bee-bird and the aloë-flower?

XXIV.

Then the voice, "Welcome so to rate 80
 "The arras-folds that variegates
 "The earth, God's antechamber, well!
 "The wise, who waited there, could tell
 "By these, what royalties in store
 "Lay one step past the entrance-door.
 "For whom, was reckoned, not too much,
 "This life's munificence? For such "As thou, — a race, whereof scarce one
 "Was able, in a million, 90
 "To feel that any marvel lay
 "In objects round his feet all day;
 "Scarce one, in many millions more,
 "Willing, if able, to explore
 "The secreter, minuter charm!
 "— Brave souls, a fern-leaf could disarm
 "Of power to cope with God's intent, —
 "Or scared if the south firmament
 "With north-fire did its wings reflex!
 "All partial beauty was a pledge "Of beauty in its plenitude: 100
 "But since the pledge sufficed thy mood,
 "Retain it! plenitude be theirs
 "Who looked above!"

XXV.

Though sharp despair's Shot through me, I held up, bore on.
 "What matter though my trust were gone "From natural things? Henceforth my
 part
 "Be less with nature than with art!
 "For art supplants, gives mainly worth "To nature; 'tis man stamps the earth —

"And I will seek his impress, seek
 "The statuary of the Greek,
 "Italy's painting — there my choice
 "Shall fix!"

XXVI.

"Obtain it!" said the voice,

"— The one form with its single act,
 "Which sculptors laboured to abstract,
 "The one face, painters tried to draw,
 "With its one look, from throngs they saw.
 "And that perfection in their soul, 15 "These only hinted at? The whole,
 "They were but parts of? What each laid "His claim to glory on? — afraid
 "His fellow-men should give him rank
 "By mere tentatives which he shrank
 "Smitten at heart from, all the more,
 "That gazers pressed in to adore!
 "Shall I be judged by only these?"
 "If such his soul's capacities,
 "Even while he trod the earth, — think,

now,
 20 "What pomp in Buonarroti's brow,
 "With its new palace-brain where dwells
 "Superb the soul, unvexed by cells
 "That crumbled with the transient clay!
 "What visions will his right hand's sway
 "Still turn to forms, as still they burst
 "Upon him? How will he quench thirst,
 "Titanically infantine,
 "Laid at the breast of the Divine?
 "Does it confound thee, — this first page 30 "Emblazoning man's heritage? —
 "Can this alone absorb thy sight,
 "As pages were not infinite, —
 "Like the omnipotence which tasks
 "Itself to furnish all that asks
 "The soul it means to satiate?
 "What was the world, the starry state
 "Of the broad skies, — what, all displays
 "Of power and beauty intermixed,
 "Which now thy soul is chained betwixt, — 40 "What else than needful furniture "For life's first stage? God's work, be
 sure,

"No more spreads wasted, than falls scant!
 "He filled, did not exceed, man's want "Of beauty in this life. But through "Life pierce, — and what has earth to do,
 "Its utmost beauty's appanage,
 "With the requirement of next stage?
 "Did God pronounce earth 'very good'?
 "Needs must it be, while understood 50 "For man's preparatory state;
 "Nought here to heighten nor abate;
 "Transfer the same completeness here,
 "To serve a new state's use, — and drear
 "Deficiency gapes every side!
 "The good, tried once, were bad, re-
 tried.

"See the enwrapping rocky niche,
 "Sufficient for the sleep in which
 "The lizard breathes for ages safe:

"Split the mould — and as light would chafe

"The creature's new world-widened sense, 6-
 "Dazzled to death at evidence
 "Of all the sounds and sights that broke "Innumerable at the chisel's stroke, —
 "So, in God's eye, the earth's first stuff
 "Was, neither more nor less, enough
 "To house man's soul, man's need fulfil.
 "Man reckoned it immeasurable?
 "So thinks the lizard of his vault!
 "Could God be taken in default,
 "Short of contrivances, by you, — 70
 "Or reached, ere ready to pursue
 "His progress through eternity?
 "That chambered rock, the lizard's world,
 "Your easy mallet's blow has hurled
 "To nothingness for ever; so,
 "Has God abolished at a blow
 "This world, wherein his saints were pent, —
 "Who, though found grateful and content,
 "With the provision there, as thou,
 "Yet knew he would not disallow 80
 "Their spirit's hunger, felt as well, —
 "Unsated, — not unsatable,
 "As paradise gives proof. Deride
 "Their choice now, thou who sit'st outside!"

XXVII.

I cried in anguish, "Mind, the mind,
 "So miserably cast behind,
 "To gain what had been wisely lost!
 "Oh, let me strive to make the most "Of the poor stunted soul, I nipped
 "Of budding wings, else now equipped 90
 "For voyage from summer isle to isle!
 "And though she needs must reconcile
 "Ambition to the life on ground,
 "Still, I can profit by late found
 "But precious knowledge. Mind is best —
 "I will seize mind, forego the rest,
 "And try how far my tethered strength
 "May crawl in this poor breadth and length.

"Let me, since I can fly no more,
 "At least spin dervish-like about 100
 "(Till giddy rapture almost doubt
 "I fly) through circling sciences,
 "Philosophies and histories
 "Should the whirl slacken there, then verse
 "Fining to music, shall asperse
 "Fresh and fresh fire-dew, till I strain
 "Intoxicate, half-break my chain!
 "Not joyless, though more favoured feet
 "Stand calm, where I want wings to beat "The floor. At least earth's bond is 110 broke!"

XXVIII.

Then, (sickening even while I spoke)
 "Let me alone! No answer, pray,
 "To this! I know what Thou wilt say!

"All still is earth's, — to know, as much
 "As feel its truths, which if we touch
 "With sense, or apprehend in soul,
 "What matter? I have reached the goal —

"Where to does knowledge serve! will burn

"My eyes, too sure, at every turn!

"I cannot look back now, nor stake

"Bliss on the race, for running's sake.

"The goal's a ruin like the rest! —

10 "And so much worse thy latter quest," (Added the voice) "that even on earth —

"Whenever, in man's soul, had birth

"Those intuitions, grasps of guess,

"Which pull the more into the less,

"Making the finite comprehend

"Infinity, — the bard would spend

"Such praise alone, upon his craft,

"As, when wind-lyres obey the waft,

"Goes to the craftsman who arranged

20 "The seven strings, changed them and rechanged —

"Knowing it was the South that harped.

"He felt his song, in singing, warped;

"Distinguished his and God's part:
 whence

"A world of spirit as of sense

"Was plain to him, yet not too plain,

"Which he could traverse, not remain

"A guest in: — else were permanent

"Heaven on the earth its gleams were meant

"To sting with hunger for full light, —

30 "Made visible in verse, despite "The veiling weakness, — truth by means "Of fable, showing while it screens, —

"Since highest truth, man e'er supplied,

"Was ever fable on outside.

"Such gleams made bright the earth an
 age;

"Now the whole sun's his heritage!

"Take up thy world, it is allowed,

"Thou who hast entered in the cloud!"

XXIX.

Then I — "Behold, my spirit bleeds,

40 "Catches no more at broken reeds, —

"But lilies flower those reeds above:

"I let the world go, and take love!

"Love survives in me, albeit those

"I love be henceforth masks and shows,

"Not living men and women: still

"I mind how love repaired all ill,

"Cured wrong, soothed grief, made earth
 amends

"With parents, brothers, children, friends!

"Some semblance of a woman yet

50 "With eyes to help me to forget,
 "Shall look on me; and I will match
 "Departed love with love, attach
 "Old memories to new dreams, nor scorn

"The poorest of the grains of corn

"I save from shipwreck on this isle,

"Trusting its barrenness may smile
 "With happy foodful green one day,
 "More precious for the pains. I pray, —
 "Leave to love, only!"

XXX.

At the word,

The form, I looked to have been stirred 60

With pity and approval, rose

O'er me, as when the headman throws

Axe over shoulder to make end —

I fell prone, letting Him expend

His wrath, while thus the inflicting voice

Smote me. "Is this thy final choice?"

"Love is the best? 'Tis somewhat late!

"And all thou dost enumerate

"Of power and beauty in the world,

"The mightiness of love was curled 70

"Inextricably round about.

"Love lay within it and without,

"To clasp thee, — but in vain! Thy soul

"Still shrunk from Him who made the
 whole,

"Still set deliberate aside

"His love! — Now take love! Well be-
 tide

"Thy tardy conscience! Haste to take "The show of love for the name's sake,

"Remembering every moment Who,

"Beside creating thee unto 80

"These ends, and these for thee, was said

"To undergo death in thy stead

"In flesh like thine: — so ran the tale.

"What doubt in thee could countervail

"Belief in it? Upon the ground

"That in the story had been found

"Too much love! How could God love
 so?"

"He who in all his works below

"Adapted to the needs of man,

"Made love the basis of the plan, — 90

"Did love, as was demonstrated:

"While man, who was so fit instead

"To hate, as every day gave proof, —

"Man thought man, for his kind's behoof,

"Both could and did invent that scheme

"Of perfect love: 'twould well be seem

"Cain's nature thou wast wont to praise,

"Not tally with God's usual ways!"

XXXI.

And I cowered deprecatingly —

"Thou Love of God! Or let me die, 100

"Or grant what shall seem heaven almost!

"Let me not know that all is lost,

"Though lost it be — leave me not tied

"To this despair, this corpse-like bride!

"Let that old life seem mine — no more —

"With limitation as before,

"With darkness, hunger, toil, distress:

"Be all the earth a wilderness!

"Only let me go on, go on,

"Still hoping ever and anon

"To reach one eve the Better Land!" 110

xxxii.

Then did the form expand, expand —
 I knew Him through the dread disguise
 As the whole God within His eyes Embraced me.

xxxiii.

When I lived again,
 The day was breaking, — the grey plain
 I rose from, silvered thick with dew.
 Was this a vision? False or true?
 Since then, three varied years are spent,
 And commonly my mind is bent
 10 To think it was a dream — be sure
 A mere dream and distemperature —
 The last day's watching: then the night, —
 The shock of that strange Northern Light
 Set my head swimming, bred in me
 A dream. And so I live, you see,
 Go through the world, try, prove, reject,
 Prefer, still struggling to effect

My warfare; happy that I can Be crossed and thwarted as a man,
 Not left in God's contempt apart,
 20 With ghastly smooth life, dead at heart,
 Tame in earth's paddock as her prize.
 Thank God, she still each method tries
 To catch me, who may yet escape,
 She knows, — the fiend in angel's shape!
 Thank God, no paradise stands barred
 To entry, and I find it hard
 To be a Christian, as I said!
 Still every now and then my head Raised glad, sinks mournful — all grows 30
 drear
 Spite of the sunshine, while I fear
 And think, "How dreadful to be grudged
 "No ease henceforth, as one that's judged.
 "Condemned to earth for ever, shut
 "From heaven!"
 But Easter-Day breaks! But Christ rises! Mercy every way
 Is infinite, — and who can say?

MEN AND WOMEN.

184- TO 185-.

"TRANSCENDENTALISM: A POEM IN TWELVE BOOKS."

STOP playing, poet! May a brother
speak?

'Tis you speak, that's your error. Song's our art:

Whereas you please to speak these naked
thoughts

Instead of draping them in sights and sounds.

— True thoughts, good thoughts, thoughts fit to treasure up!

But why such long proclusion and display,
Such turning and adjustment of the harp,
And taking it upon your breast, at length,
Only to speak dry words across its strings?

10 Stark-naked thought is in request enough:
Speak prose and hollo it till Europe hears!
The six-foot Swiss tube, braced about with
bark,

Which helps the hunter's voice from Alp to Alp —

Exchange our harp for that, — who hinders you?

But here's your fault; grown men want thought, you think;

Thought's what they mean by verse, and seek in verse.

Boys seek for images and melody, Men must have reason — so, you aim at
men.

Quite otherwise! Objects throng our youth, 'tis true;

20 We see and hear and do not wonder much:
If you could tell us what they mean, indeed!

As German Boehme¹ never cared for plants

Until it happened, a-walking in the fields,
He noticed all at once that plants could
speak,

Nay, turned with loosened tongue to talk
with him.

That day the daisy had an eye indeed — Colloquised with the cowslip on such themes!

We find them extant yet in Jacob's prose.
But by the time youth slips a stage or two 30 While reading prose in that tough book he wrote

(Collating and emendating the same And settling on the sense most to our
mind),

We shut the clasps and find life's summer
past.

Then, who helps more, pray, to repair our loss —

Another Boehme with a tougher book
And subtler meanings of what roses say. — Or some stout Mage like him of Halberstadt,²

John, who made things Boehme wrote thoughts about?

He with a "look you!" vents a brace of
rhymes,

And in there breaks the sudden rose her- 40
self,

Over us, under, round us every side,
Nay, in and out the tables and the chairs
And musty volumes, Boehme's book and
all, —

Buries us with a glory, young once more,
Pouring heaven into this shut house of life.

So come, the harp back to your heart
again!

You are a poem, though your poem's naught.

The best of all you showed before, believe,
Was your own boy-face o'er the finer chords

Bent, following the cherub at the top 50
That points to God with his paired half-moon wings.

HOW IT STRIKES A CON- TEMPORARY.

I ONLY knew one poet in my life:
And this, or something like it, was his way.

You saw go up and down Valladolid,
A man of mark, to know next time you saw.
His very serviceable suit of black
Was courtly once and conscientious still,
And many might have worn it, though none
did:

The cloak, that somewhat shone and showed the threads,
Had purpose, and the ruff, significance. 60
He walked and tapped the pavement with his cane,

¹ Jacob Boehme, a mystical writer (died 1624), who turned William Law's head.

² John of Halberstadt, a magician botanist and a chymist.

- Scenting the world, looking it full in face,
 An old dog, bald and blindish, at his heels,
 They turned up, now, the alley by the
 church,
 That leads nowhither; now, they breathed themselves
 On the main promenade just at the wrong
 time:
 You'd come upon his scrutinising hat,
 Making a peaked shade blacker than itself Against the single window spared some
 house
 Intact yet with its mouldered Moorish
 work, —
 10 Or else surprise the ferrel of his stick Trying the mortar's temper 'tween the chinks
 Of some new shop a-building, French and
 fine.
 He stood and watched the cobbler at his
 trade,
 The man who slices lemons into drink,
 The coffee-roaster's brazier, and the boys
 That volunteer to help him turn its winch.
 He glanced o'er books on stalls with half
 an eye,
 And fly-leaf ballads on the vendor's string,
 And broad-edge bold-print posters by the wall.
 20 He took such cognisance of men and things,
 If any beat a horse, you felt he saw;
 If any cursed a woman, he took note;
 Yet stared at nobody, — you stared at him,
 And found, less to your pleasure than surprise,
 He seemed to know you and expect as
 much.
 So, next time that a neighbour's tongue was loosed,
 It marked the shameful and notorious fact,
 We had among us, not so much a spy,
 As a recording chief-inquisitor, 30 The town's true master if the town but knew!
 We merely kept a governor for form, While this man walked about and took account
 Of all thought, said and acted, then went
 home,
 And wrote it fully to our Lord the King
 Who has an itch to know things, he knows
 why,
 And reads them in his bedroom of a night.
 Oh, you might smile! there wanted not a
 touch,
 A tang of . . . well, it was not wholly ease
 As back into your mind the man's look
 came.
 40 Stricken in years a little, — such a brow
 His eyes had to live under! — clear as flint
 On either side the formidable nose Curved, cut and coloured like an eagle's claw.
 Had he to do with A.'s surprising fate?
 When altogether old B. disappeared
 And young C. got his mistress, — was't our friend,
 His letter to the King, that did it all?
 What paid the bloodless man for so much pains?
 Our Lord the King has favourites mani-
 fold,
 And shifts his ministry some once a month; 50
 Our city gets new governors at whiles, —
 But never word or sign, that I could hear,
 Notified to this man about the streets
 The King's approval of those letters conned
 The last thing duly at the dead of night.
 Did the man love his office? Frowned our
 Lord,
 Exhorting when none heard — "Beseech
 me not!
 "Too far above my people, — beneath me!
 "I set the watch, — how should the people
 know?
 "Forget them, keep me all the more in 60
 mind!"
 Was some such understanding 'twixt the two?
 I found no truth in one report at least —
 That if you tracked him to his home, down lanes
 Beyond the Jewry, and as clean to pace,
 You found he ate his supper in a room Blazing with lights, four Titians on the
 wall,
 And twenty naked girls to change his plate!
 Poor man, he lived another kind of life
 In that new stuccoed third house by the bridge,
 Fresh-painted, rather smart than other- 70
 wise!
 The whole street might o'erlook him as he sat,
 Leg crossing leg, one foot on the dog's
 back,
 Playing a decent cribbage with his maid (Jacynth, you're sure her name was) o'er the cheese
 And fruit, three red halves of starved winter-pears,
 Or treat of radishes in April. Nine, Ten, struck the church clock, straight to bed went he.
 My father, like the man of sense he was,
 Would point him out to me a dozen times;
 "St — 'St," he'd whisper, "the Corre- 80 gidor!"
 I had been used to think that personage
 Was one with lacquered breeches, lustrous
 belt,
 And feathers like a forest in his hat,
 Who blew a trumpet and proclaimed the news,
 Announced the bull-fights, gave each church its turn,

And memorised the miracle in vogue!
He had a great observance from us boys;
We were in error; that was not the man.

I'd like now, yet had haply been afraid,
To have just looked, when this man came to die,

And seen who lined the clean gay garret-
sides

And stood about the neat low truckle-bed,
With the heavenly manner of relieving guard.

Here had been, mark, the general-in-chief, Thro' a whole campaign of the world's life and death,

Doing the King's work all the dim day
long,

In his old coat and up to knees in mud,
Smoked like a herring, dining on a crust, —
And, now the day was won, relieved at
once!

No further show or need for that old coat,
You are sure, for one thing! Bless us, all the while

How sprucely we are dressed out, you and
I!

A second, and the angels alter that.

Well, I could never write a verse, — could
you?

Let's to the Prado and make the most of
time.

ARTEMIS PROLOGISES.

I AM a goddess of the ambrosial courts,
And save by Here, Queen of Pride, sur-
passed

By none whose temples whiten this the
world.

Through heaven I roll my lucid moon
along;

I shed in hell o'er my pale people peace;
On earth I, caring for the creatures, guard

Each pregnant yellow wolf and fox-bitch sleek,

And every feathered mother's callow
brood,

And all that love green haunts and loneli-
ness.

Of men, the chaste adore me, hanging crowns

Of poppies red to blackness, bell and stem,
Upon my image at Athenai here;

And this dead Youth, Asclepios bends
above,

Was dearest to me. He, my buskined step
To follow through the wild-wood leafy
ways,

And chase the panting stag, or swift with darts

Stop the swift ounce, or lay the leopard
low,

Neglected homage to another god:

Whence Aphrodite, by no midnight smoke
Of tapers lulled, in jealousy dispatched
A noisome lust that, as the gadbee stings, 41
Possessed his stepdame Phaidra for himself
The son of Theseus her great absent spouse.
Hippolutes exclaiming in his rage
Against the fury of the Queen, she judged Life insupportable; and, pricked at heart
An Amazonian stranger's race should dare
To scorn her, perished by the murderous cord:

Yet, ere she perished, blasted in a scroll
The fame of him her swerving made not 50 swerve.

And Theseus read, returning, and believed,
And exiled, in the blindness of his wrath,
The man without a crime who, last as first,
Loyal divulged not to his sire the truth.

Now Theseus from Poseidon had obtained

That of his wishes should be granted three,
And one he imprecated straight — "Alive
"May ne'er Hippolutes reach other lands!"

Poseidon heard, ai ai! And scarce the prince

Had stepped into the fixed boots of the car 60
That give the feet a stay against the
strength

Of the Henetian horses, and around His body flung the rein, and urged their speed

Along the rocks and shingles of the shore,
When from the gaping wave a monster
flung

His obscene body in the coursers' path.
These, mad with terror, as the sea-bull sprawled

Wallowing about their feet, lost care of him
That reared them; and the master-chariotpole

Snapping beneath their plunges like a reed, 70
Hippolutes, whose feet were trammelled
fast,

Was yet dragged forward by the circling rein

Which either hand directed; nor they quenched

The frenzy of their flight before each trace,
Wheel-spoke and splinter of the woeful car,

Each boulder-stone, sharp stub and spiny
shell,

Hugh fish-bone wrecked and wreathed amid the sands

On that detested beach, was bright with
blood

And morsels of his flesh: then fell the steeds

Head foremost, crashing in their mooned 80 fronts.

Shivering with sweat, each white eye horror-fixed.

His people, who had witnessed all afar
Bore back the ruins of Hippolutes.

But when his sire, too swoln with pride, rejoiced
 (Indomitable as a man foredoomed)
 That vast Poseidon had fulfilled his prayer,
 I, in a flood of glory visible,
 Stood o'er my dying votary and, deed
 By deed, revealed, as all took place, the truth.
 Then Theseus lay the woofullest of men,
 And worthily; but ere the death-veils hid
 His face, the murdered prince full pardon
 breathed
 10 To his rash sire. Whereat Athenai wails.
 So I, who ne'er forsake my votaries,
 Lest in the cross-way none the honey-cake
 Should tender, nor pour out the dog's hot
 life;
 Lest at my fane the priests disconsolate
 Should dress my image with some faded
 poor
 Few crowns, made favours of, nor dare object
 Such slackness to my worshippers who
 turn Elsewhere the trusting heart and loaded
 hand,
 As they had climbed Olumpus to report 20 Of Artemis and nowhere found her throne —
 I interposed: and, this eventful night, —
 (While round the funeral pyre the populace Stood with fierce light on their black robes which bound
 Each sobbing head, while yet their hair they clipped
 O'er the dead body of their withered prince,
 And, in his palace, Theseus prostrated
 On the cold hearth, his brow cold as the slab
 'Twas bruised on, groaned away the heavy grief —
 As the pyre fell, and down the cross logs crashed
 30 Sending a crowd of sparkles through the
 night,
 And the gay fire, elate with mastery,
 Towered like a serpent o'er the clotted jars
 Of wine, dissolving oils and frankincense, And splendid gums like gold), — my pcter.cy
 Conveyed the perished man to my retreat
 In the thrice-venerable forest here.
 And this white-bearded sage who squeezes
 now
 The berried plant, is Phoibos' son of fame, Asclepius, whom my radiant brother taught 40 The doctrine of each herb and flower and root,
 To know their secret'st virtue and express
 The saving soul of all: who so has soothed
 With lavers the torn brow and murdered cheeks,
 Composed the hair and brought its gloss
 again,

And called the red bloom to the pale skin
 back,
 And laid the strips and jagged ends of flesh
 Even once more, and slacked the sinew's knot
 Of every tortured limb — that now he lies
 As if mere sleep possessed him underneath
 These interwoven oaks and pines. Oh 50 cheer
 Divine presenter of the healing rod, Thy snake, with ardent throat and lulling
 eye,
 Twines his lithe spires around! I say,
 much cheer!
 Proceed thou with thy wisest pharmacies!
 And ye, white crowd of woodland sisternymphs,
 Ply, as the sage directs, these buds and
 leaves
 That strew the turf around the twain!
 While I
 Await, in fitting silence, the event.

AN EPISTLE

CONTAINING THE STRANGE MEDICAL EXPERIENCE OF KARSHISH, THE ARAB PHYSICIAN.

KARSHISH, the picker-up of learning's crumbs,
 The not-incurious in God's handiwork 60
 (This man's-flesh he hath admirably made,
 Blown like a bubble, kneaded like a paste
 To coop up and keep down on earth a space
 That puff of vapour from his mouth, man's
 soul)
 — To Abib, all-sagacious in our art,
 Breeder in me of what poor skill I boast,
 Like me inquisitive how pricks and cracks Befall the flesh through too much stress and strain,
 Whereby the wily vapour fain would slip Back and rejoin its source before the 70
 term, —
 And aptest in contrivance (under God)
 To baffle it by deftly stopping such: —
 The vagrant Scholar to his Sage at home Sends greeting (health and knowledge, fame with peace)
 Three samples of true snakestone — rarer
 still,
 One of the other sort, the melon-shaped, (But fitter, potted fine, for charms than drugs)
 And writeth now the twenty-second time.

My journeyings were brought to Jericho:
 Thus I resume. Who studious in our art 80
 Shall count a little labour unrepaid?
 I have shed sweat enough, left flesh and bone
 On many a flinty furlong of this land.

Also, the country-side is all on fire
With rumours of a marching hitherward:
Some say Vespasian cometh, some, his son.
A black lynx snarled and pricked a tufted
ear;

Lust of my blood inflamed his yellow balls:
I cried and threw my staff and he was gone.
Twice have the robbers stripped and beaten me,

And once a town declared me for a spy;
But at the end, I reach Jerusalem,

10 Since this poor covert where I pass the
night,

This Bethany, lies scarce the distance
thence

A man with plague-sores at the third degree

Runs 'till he drops down dead. Thou laughest here!

'Sooth, it elates me, thus reposed and safe,
To void the stuffing of my travel-scrip

And share with thee whatever Jewry yields.
A viscid choler is observable

In tertians, I was nearly bold to say;

And falling-sickness hath a happier cure 20 Than our school wots of: there's a spider
here

Weaves no web, watches on the ledge of tombs,

Sprinkled with mottles on an ash-grey back;
Take five and drop them . . . but who knows his mind.

The Syrian runagate I trust this to?

His service payeth me a sublimate

Blown up his nose to help the ailing eye.

Best wait: I reach Jerusalem at morn,

There set in order my experiences,

Gather what most deserves, and give thee
all —

30 Or I might add, Judæa's gum-tragacanth¹ Scales off in purer flakes, shines clearer-grained,

Cracks 'twixt the pestle and the porphyry,
In fine exceeds our produce. Scalp-disease

Confounds me, crossing so with leprosy —
Thou hadst admired one sort I gained at

40 'Zoar —
But zeal outruns discretion. Here I end.

Yet stay: my Syrian blinketh gratefully,
Protesteth his devotion is my price —

Suppose I write what harms not, though he steal?

40 I half resolve to tell thee, yet I blush,
What set me off a-writing first of all.

An itch I had, a sting to write, a tang!

For, be it this town's barrenness — or else
The Man had something in the look of

him —

His case has struck me far more than 'tis
worth.

¹ A thick mucilage useful in pharmacy and trade.

So, pardon if — (lest presently I lose
In the great press of novelty at hand
The care and pains this somehow stole from me)

I bid thee take the thing while fresh in
mind,

Almost in sight — for, wilt thou have the 50
truth?

The very man is gone from me but now,
Whose ailment is the subject of discourse.

Thus then, and let thy better wit help all!

'Tis but a case of mania — subinduced
By epilepsy, at the turning-point

Of trance prolonged unduly some three
days:

When, by the exhibition of some drug
Or spell, exorcization, stroke of art

Unknown to me and which 'twere well to
know,

The evil thing out-breaking all at once 60
Left the man whole and sound of body indeed, —

But, flinging (so to speak) life's gates too
wide,

Making a clear house of it too suddenly,
The first conceit that entered might inscribe

Whatever it was minded on the wall
So plainly at that vantage, as it were,

(First come, first served) that nothing subsequent

Attaineth to erase those fancy-scraws
The just-returned and new-established soul

Hath gotten now so thoroughly by heart 70
That henceforth she will read or these or none.

And first — the man's own firm conviction rests

That he was dead (in fact they buried him)
— That he was dead and then restored

to life

By a Nazarene physician of his tribe:
— 'Sayeth, the same bade "Rise," and he did rise.

"Such cases are diurnal," thou wilt cry:
Not so this figment! — not, that such a fume,

Instead of giving way to time and health,
Should eat itself into the life of life, 80

As saffron tingeth flesh, blood, bones and
all!

For see, how he takes up the after-life.
The man — it is one Lazarus a Jew,

Sanguine, proportioned, fifty years of age,
The body's habit wholly laudable,

As much, indeed, beyond the common health

As he were made and put aside to show.
Think, could we penetrate by any drug

And bathe the wearied soul and worried
flesh,

And bring it clear and fair, by three days' 90
sleep!

- Whence has the man the balm that brightens all?
 This grown man eyes the world now like a child.
 Some elders of his tribe, I should premise,
 Led in their friend, obedient as a sheep,
 To bear my inquisition. While they spoke,
 Now sharply, now with sorrow, — told the case, —
 He listened not except I spoke to him,
 But folded his two hands and let them talk,
 Watching the flies that buzzed: and yet no fool.
- 10 And that's a sample how his years must go.
 Look, if a beggar, in fixed middle-life,
 Should find a treasure, — can he use the same
 With straitened habits and with tastes starved small,
 And take at once to his impoverished brain
 The sudden element that changes things,
 That sets the undreamed-of rapture at his hand
 And puts the cheap old joy in the scorned dust?
- Is he not such an one as moves to mirth —
 Warily parsimonious, when no need,
 20 Wasteful as drunkenness at undue times?
 All prudent counsel as to what befits
 The golden mean, is lost on such an one:
 The man's fantastic will is the man's law.
 So here — we call the treasure knowledge,
 say,
 Increased beyond the fleshly faculty —
 Heaven opened to a soul while yet on earth,
 Earth forced on a soul's use while seeing heaven:
- The man is witless of the size, the sum,
 The value in proportion of all things,
 30 Or whether it be little or be much.
 Discourse to him of prodigious armaments
 Assembled to besiege his city now,
 And of the passing of a mule with gourds —
 'Tis one! Then take it on the other side,
 Speak of some trifling fact, — he will gaze rapt
 With stupor at its very littleness,
 (Far as I see) as if in that indeed
 He caught prodigious import, whole results;
- And so will turn to us the bystanders
 40 In ever the same stupor (note this point)
 That we too see not with his opened eyes.
 Wonder and doubt come wrongly into play,
 Preposterously, at cross purposes.
 Should his child sicken unto death, —
 why, look
 For scarce abatement of his cheerfulness,
 Or prepermission of the daily craft!
 While a word, gesture, glance from that same child
 At play or in the school or laid asleep,
 Will startle him to an agony of fear,
- Exasperation, just as like. Demand
 The reason why — "'tis but a word,"
 object —
 "A gesture" — he regards thee as our lord
 Who lived there in the pyramid alone,
 Looked at us (dost thou mind?) when, being young,
 We both would unadvisedly recite
 Some charm's beginning, from that book of his,
 Able to bid the sun throb wide and burst
 All into stars, as suns grown old are wont.
 Thou and the child have each a veil alike Thrown o'er your heads, from under which ye both
 Stretch your blind hands and trifle with a match
 Over a mine of Greek fire, did ye know!
 He holds on firmly to some thread of life —
 (It is the life to lead perforceably)
 Which runs across some vast distracting orb
 Of glory on either side that meagre thread,
 Which, conscious of, he must not enter yet —
 The spiritual life around the earthly life:
 The law of that is known to him as this,
 His heart and brain move there, his feet stay here.
 So is the man perplexed with impulses
 Sudden to start off crosswise, not straight on,
 Proclaiming what is right and wrong across,
 And not along, this black thread through the blaze —
 "It should be" baulked by "here it cannot be."
 And oft the man's soul springs into his face
 As if he saw again and heard again
 His sage that bade him "Rise" and he did rise.
 Something, a word, a tick o' the blood within Admonishes: then back he sinks at once 80 To ashes, who was very fire before,
 In sedulous recurrence to his trade
 Whereby he earneth him the daily bread;
 And studiously the humbler for that pride,
 Professedly the faultier that he knows God's secret, while he holds the thread of life.
- Indeed the especial marking of the man
 Is prone submission to the heavenly will — Seeing it, what it is, and why it is.
 'Sayeth, he will wait patient to the last 90 For that same death which must restore his being
 To equilibrium, body loosening soul
 Divorced even now by premature full growth:
 He will live, nay, it pleaseth him to live
 So long as God please, and just how God please.

He even seeketh not to please God more (Which meaneth, otherwise) than as God
please.

Hence, I perceive not he affects to preach
The doctrine of his sect whate'er it be,
Make proselytes as madmen thirst to do:
How can he give his neighbour the real
ground,

His own conviction? Ardent as he is — Call his great truth a lie, why, still the
old

"Be it as God please" reassureth him.

10 I probed the sore as thy disciple should:
"How, beast," said I, "this stolid careless-
ness

"Sufficeth thee, when Rome is on her
march

"To stamp out like a little spark thy town,
"Thy tribe, thy crazy tale and thee at
once?"

He merely looked with his large eyes on
me.

The man is apathetic, you deduce?
Contrariwise, he loves both old and young,
Able and weak, affects the very brutes
And birds — how say I? flowers of the field —

20 As a wise workman recognises tools
In a master's workshop, loving what they make.

Thus is the man as harmless as a lamb:
Only impatient, let him do his best,
At ignorance and carelessness and sin —
An indignation which is promptly curbed:
As when in certain travel I have feigned
To be an ignoramus in our art

According to some preconceived design,
And happened to hear the land's practitioners
30 Steeped in conceit sublimed by ignorance,
Prattle fantastically on disease,
Its cause and cure — and I must hold my
peace!

Thou wilt object — Why have I not ere this

Sought out the sage himself, the Nazarene Who wrought this cure, inquiring at the source,

Conferring with the frankness that befits?
Alas! it grieveth me, the learned leech Perished in a tumult many years ago, Accused, — our learning's fate, — of wizardry,

40 Rebellion, to the setting up a rule
And creed prodigious as described to me.
His death, which happened when the earthquake fell

(Prefiguring, as soon appeared, the loss
To occult learning in our lord the sage
Who lived there in the pyramid alone)
Was wrought by the mad people — that's their wont!

On vain recourse, as I conjecture it,
To his tried virtue, for miraculous help —

How could he stop the earthquake?

That's their way!

The other imputations must be lies, 50
But take one, though I loathe to give it
thee,

In mere respect for any good man's fame.
(And after all, our patient Lazarus Is stark mad; should we count on what he says?

Perhaps not: though in writing to a leech
'Tis well to keep back nothing of a case.)
This man so cured regards the curer, then,
As — God forgive me! who but God him-
self,

Creator and sustainer of the world,
That came and dwelt in flesh on it awhile! 60
— Sayeth that such an one was born and
lived,

Taught, healed the sick, broke bread at his own house,

Then died, with Lazarus by, for aught I
know,

And yet was . . . what I said nor choose repeat,

And must have so avouched himself, in
fact,

In hearing of this very Lazarus
Who saith — but why all this of what he saith?

Why write of trivial matters, things of price

Calling at every moment for remark?

I noticed on the margin of a pool 70
Blue-flowering borage, the Aleppo sort,
Aboundeth, very nitrous. It is strange!

Thy pardon for this long and tedious
case,

Which, now that I review it, needs must seem

Unduly dwelt on, prolixly set forth!

Nor I myself discern in what is writ

Good cause for the peculiar interest

And awe indeed this man has touched me
with.

Perhaps the journey's end, the weariness
Had wrought upon me first. I met him 80
thus:

I crossed a ridge of short sharp broken hills
Like an old lion's cheek teeth. Out there came

A moon made like a face with certain spots
Multiform, manifold and menacing:

Then a wind rose behind me. So we met
In this old sleepy town at unaware,

The man and I. I send thee what is writ Regard it as a chance, a matter risked

To this ambiguous Syrian — he may lose,
Or steal, or give it thee with equal good. 90

Jerusalem's repose shall make amends
For time this letter wastes, thy time and
mine;

Till when, once more thy pardon and
farewell!

The very God! think, Abib; dost thou think?
 So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too —
 So, through the thunder comes a human voice Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!
 "Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
 "Thou hast no power nor mayst conceived of mine,
 ' But love I gave thee, with myself to love,
 "And thou must love me who have died for thee!"
 The madman saith He said so: it is strange.

JOHANNES AGRICOLA IN MEDITATION.

10 THERE'S heaven above, and night by night
 I look right through its gorgeous roof;
 No suns and moons though e'er so bright
 Avail to stop me: splendour-proof
 I keep the broods of stars aloof:
 For I intend to get to God,
 For 'tis to God I speed so fast,
 For in God's breast, my own abode,
 Those shoals of dazzling glory, passed,
 I lay my spirit down at last.
 20 I lie where I have always lain,
 God smiles as he has always smiled;
 Ere suns and moons could wax and wane,
 Ere stars were thundergirt, or piled
 The heavens, God thought on me his child;
 Ordained a life for me, arrayed
 Its circumstances every one
 To the minutest; ay, God said
 This head this hand should rest upon
 Thus, ere he fashioned star or sun.
 30 And having thus created me,
 Thus rooted me, he bade me grow,
 Guiltless for ever, like a tree
 That buds and blooms, nor seeks to know
 The law by which it prospers so:
 But sure that thought and word and deed
 All go to swell his love for me,
 Me, made because that love had need
 Of something irreversibly Pledged solely its content to be.
 40 Yes, yes, a tree which must ascend,
 No poison-gourd foredoomed to stoop!
 I have God's warrant, could I blend
 All hideous sins, as in a cup,
 To drink the mingled venoms up;
 Secure my nature will convert
 The draught to blossoming gladness fast:
 While sweet dews turn to the gourd's hurt.
 And bloat, and while they bloat it, blast,

As from the first its lot was cast.
 For as I lie, smiled on, full-fed
 By unexhausted power to bless,
 I gaze below on hell's fierce bed,
 And those its waves of flame oppress,
 Swarming in ghastly wretchedness;
 Whose life on earth aspired to be
 One altar-smoke, so pure! — to win
 If not love like God's love for me,
 At least to keep his anger in;
 And all their striving turned to sin.
 Priest, doctor, hermit, monk grown white 60
 With prayer, the broken-hearted nun,
 The martyr, the wan acolyte,
 The incense-swinging child, — undone
 Before God fashioned star or sun!
 God, whom I praise; how could I praise,
 If such as I might understand,
 Make out and reckon on his ways,
 And bargain for his love, and stand,
 Paying a price, at his right hand?

PICTOR IGNOTUS.

FLORENCE, 15—.

I COULD have painted pictures like that 70 youth's
 Ye praise so. How my soul springs up!
 No bar
 Stayed me — ah, thought which saddens while it soothes!
 — Never did fate forbid me, star by star,
 To outburst on your night with all my gift
 Of fires from God: nor would my flesh have shrunk
 From seconding my soul, with eyes uplift
 And wide to heaven, or, straight like thunder, sunk
 To the centre, of an instant; or around Turned calmly and inquisitive, to scan
 The licence and the limit, space and bound, 80
 Allowed to truth made visible in man.
 And, like that youth ye praise so, all I saw,
 Over the canvas could my hand have
 flung,
 Each face obedient to its passion's law,
 Each passion clear proclaimed without a tongue;
 Whether Hope rose at once in all the blood,
 A-tiptoe for the blessing of embrace,
 Or Rapture drooped the eyes, as when her brood
 Pull down the nesting dove's heart to its
 place;
 Or Confidence lit swift the forehead up, 90
 And locked the mouth fast, like a castle braved, —
 O human faces, hath it spilt, my cup?
 What did ye give me that I have not saved?
 Nor will I say I have not dreamed (how
 well!)

Of going — I, in each new picture, —
 forth,
 As, making new hearts beat and bosoms
 swell,
 To Pope or Kaiser, East, West, South, or North,
 Bound for the calmly-satisfied great State,
 Or glad aspiring little burgh, it went,
 Flowers cast upon the car which bore the freight,
 Through old streets named afresh from the event,
 Till it reached home, where learned age should greet
 My face, and youth, the star not yet distinct
 10 Above his hair, lie learning at my feet! —
 Oh, thus to live, I and my picture, linked With love about, and praise, till life should
 end,
 And then not go to heaven, but linger
 here,
 Here on my earth, earth's every man my
 friend, —
 The thought grew frightful, 'twas so wildly dear!
 But a voice changed it. Glimpses of such sights
 Have scared me, like the revels through a door
 Of some strange house of idols at its rites!
 This world seemed not the world it was
 before:
 15 Mixed with my loving trusting ones, there trooped
 . . . Who summoned those cold faces that begun
 To press on me and judge me? Though
 I stooped
 Shrinking, as from the soldiery a nun,
 They drew me forth, and spite of me . . .
 enough!
 These buy and sell our pictures, take and give,
 Count them for garniture and household-
 stuff,
 And where they live needs must our pictures live
 And see their faces, listen to their prate,
 Partakers of their daily pettiness, 30 Discussed of, — "This I love, or this I hate,
 "This likes me more, and this affects me
 less!"
 Wherefore I chose my portion. If at whiles
 My heart sinks, as monotonous I paint
 These endless cloisters and eternal aisles
 With the same series, Virgin, Babe and Saint,
 With the same cold calm beautiful regard —
 At least no merchant traffics in my
 heart;
 The sanctuary's gloom at least shall ward

Vain tongues from where my pictures stand apart:
 Only prayer breaks the silence of the shrine 40
 While, blackening in the daily candle-
 smoke,
 They moulder on the damp wall's travertine,¹
 'Mid echoes the light footstep never woke.
 So, die my pictures! surely, gently die!
 O youth, men praise so, — holds their praise its worth?
 Blown harshly, keeps the trump its golden
 cry?
 Tastes sweet the water with such specks of earth?

FRA LIPPO LIPPI.

[Florentine painter, 1412-1469. See Vasari.]

I AM poor brother Lippo, by your leave!
 You need not clap your torches to my face.
 Zooks, what's to blame? you think you 50 see a monk!
 What, 'tis past midnight, and you go the rounds,
 And here you catch me at an alley's end
 Where sportive ladies leave their doors ajar?
 The Carmine's my cloister: hunt it up,
 Do, — harry out, if you must show your zeal,
 Whatever rat, there, haps on his wrong hole,
 And nip each softling of a wee white mouse,
Weke, weke, that's crept to keep him company!
 Aha, you know your betters! Then, you'll
 take
 Your hand away that's fiddling on my 60
 throat,
 And please to know me likewise. Who
 am I?
 Why, one, sir, who is lodging with a friend
 Three streets off — he's a certain . . .
 how d'ye call?
 Master — a . . . Cosimo of the Medici,
 I' the house that caps the corner. Boh!
 you were best!
 Remember and tell me, the day you're hanged,
 How you affected such a gullet's-gripe!
 But you, sir, it concerns you that your knaves
 Pick up a manner nor discredit you:
 Zooks, are we pilchards, that they sweep 70
 the streets
 And count fair prize what comes into their
 net?
 He's Judas to a tittle, that man is!
 Just such a face! Why, sir, you make amends.
 Lord, I'm not angry! Bid your hangdogs

Drink out this quarter-florin to the health
Of the munificent House that harbours me (And many more beside, lads! more beside!)

And all's come square again. I'd like his face —

His, elbowing on his comrade in the door
With the pike and lantern, — for the slave that holds

John Baptist's head a-dangle by the hair With one hand ("Look you, now," as who should say)

And his weapon in the other, yet unwiped!

10 It's not your chance to have a bit of chalk,
A wood-coal or the like? or you should
see!

Yes, I'm the painter, since you style me so.
What, brother Lippo's doings, up and
down,

You know them and they take you? like
enough!

I saw the proper twinkle in your eye —
'Tell you, I liked your looks at very first.

Let's sit and set things straight now, hip to haunch.

Here's spring come, and the nights one makes up bands

To roam the town and sing out carnival, 20 And I've been three weeks shut within my mew,

A-painting for the great man, saints and saints

And saints again. I could not paint all
night —

Ouf! I leaned out of window for fresh air.
There came a hurry of feet and little feet,
A sweep of lute-strings, laughs, and whiffs of song, —

*Flower o' the broom,
Take away love, and our earth is a tomb!*

*Flower o' the quince,
I let Lisa go, and what good in life since?*

30 Flower o' the thyme — and so on. Round they went.

Scarce had they turned the corner when a titter

Like the skipping of rabbits by moonlight,
— three slim shapes,

And a face that looked up . . . zooks, sir
flesh and blood,

That's all I'm made of! Into shreds it
went,

Curtain and counterpane and coverlet,
All the bed-furniture — a dozen knots,
There was a ladder! Down I let myself, Hands and feet, scrambling somehow,
and so dropped,

And after them. I came up with the fun 40 Hard by Saint Laurence, hail fellow, well met, —

*Flower o' the rose,
If I've been merry, what matter who knows?
So so as I was stealing back again
To get to bed and have a bit of sleep*

Ere I rise up to-morrow and go work
On Jerome knocking at his poor old breast
With his great round stone to subdue the
flesh,

You snap me of the sudden. Ah, I see!
Though your eye twinkles still, you shake
your head —

Mine's shaved — a monk, you say — the 50
sting's in that!

If Master Cosimo announced himself,
Mum's the word naturally; but a monk!
Come, what am I a beast for? tell us, now!
I was a baby when my mother died

And father died and le't me in the street.
I starved there, God knows how, a year or two

On fig-skins, melon-parings, rinds and shucks,

Refuse and rubbish. One fine frosty day,
My stomach being empty as your hat,
The wind doubled me up and down I went. 60

Old Aunt Lapaccia trussed me with one
hand,

(Its fellow was a stinger as I knew)
And so along the wall, over the bridge,
By the straight cut to the convent. Six words there,

While I stood munching my first bread that month:

"So, boy, you're minded," quoth the good fat father

Wiping his own mouth, 'twas refection-
time, —

"To quit this very miserable world?
"Will you renounce" . . . "the mouthful of bread?" thought I;

By no means! Brief, they made a monk 70
of me;

I did renounce the world, its pride and greed,

Palace, farm, villa, shop and banking-house,
Trash, such as these poor devils of Medici
Have given their hearts to — all at eight years old.

Well, sir, I found in time, you may be sure,
'Twas not for nothing — the good bellyful,
The warm serge and the rope that goes all
round,

And day-long blessed idleness beside!
"Let's see what the urchin's fit for" — that came next.

Not overmuch their way, I must confess. 80 Such a to-do! They tried me with their books:

Lord, they'd have taught me Latin in pure waste!

*Flower o' the clove,
All the Latin I construe is, "amo" I love!*
But, mind you, when a boy starves in the streets

Eight years together, as my fortune was,
Watching folk's faces to know who will fling
The bit of half-stripped grape-bunch he desires,

And who will curse or kick him for his pains, —
 Which gentleman processional and fine,
 Holding a candle to the Sacrament,
 Will wink and let him lift a plate and catch
 The droppings of the wax to sell again,
 Or holla for the Eight and have him whipped, —
 How say I? — nay, which dog bites, which lets drop
 His bone from the heap of offal in the street, —
 Why, soul and sense of him grow sharp
 alike,
 10 He learns the look of things, and none the
 less
 For admonition from the hunger-pinch.
 I had a store of such remarks, be sure,
 Which, after I found leisure, turned to use.
 I drew men's faces on my copy-books,
 Scrawled them within the antiphonary's¹
 marge,
 Joined legs and arms to the long music-
 notes,
 Found eyes and nose and chin for A's and B's,
 And made a string of pictures of the world
 Betwixt the ins and outs of verb and noun, 20 On the wall, the bench, the door. The monks looked black.
 "Nay," quoth the Prior, "turn him out, d'ye say?"
 "In no wise. Lose a crow and catch a lark.
 "What if at last we get our man of parts,
 "We Carmelites, like those Camaldolese
 "And Preaching Friars, to do our church up fine
 "And put the front on it that ought to be!"
 And hereupon he bade me daub away.
 Thank you! my head being crammed, the walls a blank,
 Never was such prompt disemburdening.
 30 First, every sort of monk, the black and
 white,
 I drew them, fat and lean: then, folk at
 church,
 From good old gossips waiting to confess their cribs of barrel-droppings, candle-
 ends, —
 To the breathless fellow at the altar-foot, Fresh from his murder, safe and sitting
 there
 With the little children round him in a row of admiration, half for his beard and half
 For that white anger of his victim's son
 Shaking a fist at him with one fierce arm, 40 Signing himself with the other because of Christ
 (Whose sad face on the cross sees only this After the passion of a thousand years)
 Till some poor girl, her apron o'er her
 head,

(Which the intense eyes looked through) came at eve
 On tiptoe, said a word, dropped in a loaf,
 Her pair of earrings and a bunch of flowers
 (The brute took growling), prayed, and so was gone.
 I painted all, then cried "'Tis ask and have;
 "Choose, for more's ready!" — laid the ladder flat,
 And showed my covered bit of cloister- 50
 wall.
 The monks closed in a circle and praised
 loud
 Till checked, taught what to see and not
 to see,
 Being simple bodies, — "That's the very
 man!
 "Look at the boy who stoops to pat the dog!
 "That woman's like the Prior's niece who comes
 "To care about his asthma: it's the life!"
 But there my triumph's straw-fire flared and fumed;
 Their betters took their turn to see and
 say:
 The Prior and the learned pulled a face
 And stopped all that in no time. "How? 60 what's here?"
 "Quite from the mark of painting, bless
 us all!
 "Faces, arms, legs and bodies like the true
 "As much as pea and pea! it's devil's-
 game!
 "Your business is not to catch men with show,
 "With homage to the perishable clay,
 "But lift them over it, ignore it all,
 "Make them forget there's such a thing as flesh.
 "Your business is to paint the souls of
 men —
 "Man's soul, and it's a fire, smoke . . .
 no, it's not . . .
 "It's vapour done up like a new-born 70
 babe —
 "(In that shape when you die it leaves your mouth)
 "It's . . . well, what matters talking,
 it's the soul!
 "Give us no more of body than shows
 soul!
 "Here's Giotto, with his Saint a-praising
 God,
 "That sets us praising, — why not stop
 with him?
 "Why put all thoughts of praise out of our
 head
 "With wonder at lines, colours, and what
 not?
 "Paint the soul, never mind the legs and
 arms!
 "Rub all out, try at it a second time.

"Oh, that white smallish female with the breasts,
 "She's just my niece . . . Herodias, I would say, —
 "Who went and danced and got men's heads cut off!
 "Have it all out!" Now, is this sense, I ask?
 A fine way to paint soul, by painting body
 So ill, the eye can't stop there, must go further
 And can't fare worse! Thus, yellow does for white
 When what you put for yellow's simply black,
 And any sort of meaning looks intense
 When all beside itself means and looks nought.
 Why can't a painter lift each foot in turn,
 Left foot and right foot, go a double step,
 Make his flesh liker and his soul more like,
 Both in their order? Take the prettiest face,
 The Prior's niece . . . patron-saint — is it so pretty
 You can't discover if it means hope, fear, Sorrow or joy? won't beauty go with these?
 Suppose I've made her eyes all right and blue,
 Can't I take breath and try to add life's flash,
 And then add soul and heighten them threefold?
 Or say there's beauty with no soul at all — (I never saw it — put the case the same —)
 If you get simple beauty and nought else,
 You get about the best thing God invents:
 That's somewhat: and you'll find the soul you have missed,
 Within yourself, when you return him thanks.
 "Rub all out!" Well, well, there's my life, in short,
 And so the thing has gone on ever since.
 I'm grown a man no doubt, I've broken bounds:
 You should not take a fellow eight years old
 And make him swear to never kiss the girls.
 I'm my own master, paint now as I please—
 Having a friend, you see, in the Corner-house!
 Lord, it's fast holding by the rings in front —
 Those great rings serve more purposes than just
 To plant a flag in, or tie up a horse!
 And yet the old schooling sticks, the old grave eyes
 Are peeping o'er my shoulder as I work,
 The heads shake still — "It's art's decline, my son!

"You're not of the true painters, great and old;
 "Brother Angelico's the man, you'll find;
 "Brother Lorenzo¹ stands his single peer:
 "Fag on at flesh, you'll never make the third!"
*Flower o' the pine,
 You keep your mistr . . . manners, and I'll stick to mine!*
 I'm not the third, then: bless us, they must know!
 Don't you think they're the likeliest to know,
 They with their Latin? So, I swallow my rage,
 Clench my teeth, suck my lips in tight, and paint
 To please them — sometimes do and sometimes don't;
 For, doing most, there's pretty sure to come
 A turn, some warm eve finds me at my saints
 A laugh, a cry, the business of the world —
(Flower o' the peach, Death for us all, and his own life for each!)
 And my whole soul revolves, the cup runs over,
 The world and life's too big to pass for a dream,
 And I do these wild things in sheer despite,
 And play the fooleries you catch me at,
 In pure rage! The old mill-horse, out at grass
 After hard years, throws up his stiff heels so,
 Although the miller does not preach to him
 The only good of grass is to make chaff.
 What would men have? Do they like grass or no —
 May they or mayn't they? all I want's the thing Settled for ever one way. As it is,
 You tell too many lies and hurt yourself:
 You don't like what you only like too much,
 You do like what, if given you at your word
 You find abundantly detestable.
 For me, I think I speak as I was taught;
 I always see the garden and God there
 A-making man's wife: and, my lesson learned,
 The value and significance of flesh,
 I can't unlearn ten minutes afterward's.

You understand me: I'm a beast, I know.
 But see, now — why, I see as certainly
 As that the morning-star's about to shine,

¹ Lorenzo Monaco, an eminent painter, a monk.

What will hap some day. We've a youngster here Comes to our convent, studies what I do,
 Slouches and stares and lets no atom drop:
 His name is Guidi¹ — he'll not mind the monks —
 They call him Hulking Tom, he lets them talk —
 He picks my practice up — he'll paint apace,
 I hope so — though I never live so long,
 I know what's sure to follow. You be judge!
 You speak no Latin more than I, belike;
 10 However, you're my man, you've seen the world
 — The beauty and the wonder and the power,
 The shapes of things, their colours, lights and shades,
 Changes, surprises, — and God made it all!
 — For what? Do you feel thankful, ay or no,
 For this fair town's face, yonder river's line,
 The mountain round it and the sky above,
 Much more the figures of man, woman, child,
 These are the frame to? What's it all about?
 To be passed over, despised? or dwelt upon,
 20 Wondered at? oh, this last of course! — you say.
 But why not do as well as say, — paint these
 Just as they are, careless what comes of it?
 God's works — paint anyone, and count it crime
 To let a truth slip. Don't object, "His works
 "Are here already; nature is complete:
 "Suppose you reproduce her — (which you can't)
 "There's no advantage! you must beat her, then."
 For, don't you mark? we're made so that we love
 First when we see them painted, things we have passed 30 Perhaps a hundred times nor cared to see;
 And so they are better, painted — better to us,
 Which is the same thing. Art was given for that;
 God uses us to help each other so,
 Lending our minds out. Have you noticed, now,
 Your cullion's hanging face? A bit of chalk,
 And trust me but you should, though!
 How much more,

If I drew higher things with the same truth!
 That were to take the Prior's pulpit-place,
 Interpret God to all of you! Oh, oh,
 It makes me mad to see what men shall do
 And we in our graves! This world's no blot for us,
 Nor blank; it means intensely, and means good:
 To find its meaning is my meat and drink.
 "Ay, but you don't so instigate to prayer!"
 Strikes in the Prior: "when your meaning's plain
 "It does not say to folk — remember matins,
 "Or, mind you fast next Friday!" Why, for this What need of art at all? A skull and bones,
 Two bits of stick nailed crosswise, or, what's best,
 A bell to chime the hour with, does as well.
 I painted a Saint Laurence six months since
 At Prato, splashed the fresco in fine style:
 "How looks my painting, now the scaffold's down?"
 I ask a brother: "Hugely," he returns —
 "Already not one phiz of your three slaves
 "Who turn the Deacon off his toasted side,
 "But's scratched and prodded to our heart's content.
 "The pious people have so eased their own
 "With coming to say prayers there in a rage:
 "We get on fast to see the bricks beneath.
 "Expect another job this time next year,
 "For pity and religion grow i' the crowd —
 "Your painting serves its purpose!"
 Hang the fools!
 — That is — you'll not mistake an idle word
 Spoke in a huff by a poor monk, God wot,
 Tasting the air this spicy night which turns
 The unaccustomed head like Chianti wine!
 Oh, the church knows! don't misreport me, now!
 It's natural a poor monk out of bounds
 Should have his apt word to excuse himself:
 And hearken how I plot to make amends.
 I have bethought me: I shall paint a piece
 . . . There's for you! Give me six months, then go, see Something in Sant' Ambrogio's! Bless the nuns!
 They want a cast o' my office. I shall paint
 God in the midst, Madonna and her babe,
 Ringed by a bowery flowery angel-brood,

Lilies and vestments and white faces,
sweet
As puff on puff of grated orris-root
When ladies crowd to Church at midsummer.
And then i' the front, of course a saint or two —
Saint John, because he saves the Floren-
tines,
Saint Ambrose, who puts down in black and white
The convent's friends and gives them a long day,
And Job, I must have him there past mis-
take,
The man of Uz (and Us without the z, Painters who need his patience). Well, all these
Secured at their devotion, up shall come Out of a corner when you least expect,
As one by a dark stair into a great light,
Music and talking, who but Lippo! I! — Mazed, motionless and moonstruck — I'm the man!
Back I shrink — what is this I see and
hear?
I, caught up with my monk's-things by mistake,
My old serge gown and rope that goes all
round,
I, in this presence, this pure company!
Where's a hole, where's a corner for escape?
Then steps a sweet angelic slip of a thing Forward, puts out a soft palm — "Not so fast!"
— Addresses the celestial presence, "nay —
"He made you and devised you, after all,
"Though he's none of you! Could Saint John there draw —
"His camel-hair make up a painting-brush?
"We come to brother Lippo for all that,
"Iste perfecit opus!" So, all smile —
I shuffle sideways with my blushing face
Under the cover of a hundred wings Thrown like a spread of kirtles when you're gay
And play hot cockles, all the doors being shut,
Till, wholly unexpected, in there pops
The hothead husband! Thus I scuttle
off
To some safe bench behind, not letting go
The palm of her, the little lily thing That spoke the good word for me in the nick,
Like the Prior's niece . . . Saint Lucy, I would say.
And so all's saved for me, and for the church
A pretty picture gained. Go, six months
hence!
Your hand, sir, and good-bye: no lights,
no lights!

The street's hushed, and I know my own way back,
Don't fear me! There's the grey beginning. Zooks!

ANDREA DEL SARTO.

(CALLED "THE FAULTLESS PAINTER.")

[Famous painter, died 1531, aged 43.]

BUT do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once:
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish.
You turn your face, but does it bring your
heart?

I'll work then for your friend's friend,
never fear,

Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too his own price, 50
And shut the money into this small hand When next it takes mine. Will it?
tenderly?

Oh, I'll content him, — but to-morrow,
Love!

I often am much wearier than you think,
This evening more than usual, and it
seems

As if — forgive now — should you let me sit

Here by the window with your hand in
mine

And look a half-hour forth on Fiesole,
Both of one mind, as married people use, 60
Quietly, quietly the evening through,
I might get up to-morrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever. Let us try.
To-morrow, how you shall be glad for
this!

Your soft hand is a woman of itself,
And mine the man's bared breast she curls inside.

Don't count the time lost, neither; you must serve

For each of the five pictures we require:
It saves a model. So! keep looking so —
My serpentining beauty, rounds on rounds!

— How could you ever prick those perfect 70
ears,

Even to put the pearl there! oh, so
sweet —

My face, my moon, my everybody's moon,
Which everybody looks on and calls his,
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn,
While she looks — no one's: very dear,
no less.

You smile? why, there's my picture ready
made,

There's what we painters call our harmony!

A common greyness silvers everything, —
All in a twilight, you and I alike

— You, at the point of your first pride in 80
me

(That's gone you know), — but I, at every point;
 My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned down
 To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole.
 There's the bell clinking from the chapel-top;
 That length of convent-wall across the way
 Holds the trees safer, huddled more inside;
 The last monk leaves the garden; days decrease,
 And autumn grows, autumn in everything.
 Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape
 10 As if I saw alike my work and self
 And all that I was born to be and do,
 A twilight piece. Love, we are in God's hand.
 How strange now, looks the life he makes us lead;
 So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
 I feel he laid the fetter: let it lie!
 This chamber for example — turn your head —
 All that's behind us! You don't understand Nor care to understand about my art,
 But you can hear at least when people speak:
 20 And that cartoon, the second from the door
 — It is the thing, Love! so such things should be — Behold Madonna! — I am bold to say.
 I can do with my pencil what I know,
 What I see, what at bottom of my heart
 I wish for, if I ever wish so deep —
 Do easily, too — when I say, perfectly,
 I do not boast, perhaps: yourself are judge,
 Who listened to the Legate's talk last week,
 And just as much they used to say in France.
 30 At any rate 'tis easy, all of it!
 No sketches first, no studies, that's long past:
 I do what many dream of, all their lives,
 — Dream? strive to do, and agonise to do,
 And fail in doing. I could count twenty such
 On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,
 Who strive — you don't know how the others strive
 To paint a little thing like that you smeared
 Carelessly passing with your robes afloat, —
 Yet do much less, so much less, Someone says, 40 (I know his name, no matter) — so much less!
 Well, less is more, Lucrezia: I am judged.
 There burns a truer light of God in them,
 In their vexed beating stuffed and stopped-up brain,
 Heart, or whate'er else, than goes on to prompt

This love-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine.
 Their works drop groundward, but themselves, I know,
 Reach many a time a heaven that's shut to me,
 Enter and take their place there sure enough,
 Though they come back and cannot tell the world.
 My works are nearer heaven, but I sit here.
 The sudden blood of these men! at a word —
 Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too.
 I, painting from myself and to myself,
 Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame
 Or their praise either. Somebody remarks
 Morello's outline there is wrongly traced,
 His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,
 Rightly traced and well ordered; what of that?
 Speak as they please, what does the mountain care?
 Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
 Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-grey Placid and perfect with my art: the worse!
 I know both what I want and what might gain,
 And yet how profitless to know, to sigh
 "Had I been two, another and myself,
 "Our head would have overlooked the world!" No doubt.
 Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth
 The Urbinate who died five years ago.
 ('Tis copied, George Vasari sent it me.)
 Well, I can fancy how he did it all,
 Pouring his soul, with kings and popes to see,
 Reaching, that heaven might so replenish him,
 Above and through his art — for it gives way;
 That arm is wrongly put — and there again —
 A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines,
 Its body, so to speak: its soul is right,
 He means right — that, a child may understand.
 Still, what an arm! and I could alter it:
 But all the play, the insight and the stretch —
 Out of me, out of me! And wherefore 8
 out?
 Had you enjoined them on me, given me soul,
 We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!
 Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think —
 More than I merit, yes, by many times.
 But had you — oh, with the same perfect brow,

And perfect eyes, and more than perfect mouth,
 And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird
 The fowler's pipe, and follows to the snare —
 Had you, with these the same, but I brought a mind!
 Some women do so. Had the mouth there urged
 "God and the glory! never care for gain.
 "The present by the future, what is that?
 "Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo!
 "Rafael is waiting: up to God, all three!"
 I might have done it for you. So it seems:
 Perhaps not. All is as God over-rules.
 Beside, incentives come from the soul's
 self;
 The rest avail not. Why do I need you?
 What wife had Rafael, or has Agnolo?
 In this world, who can do a thing, will not;
 And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:
 Yet the will's somewhat — somewhat, too,
 the power —
 And thus we half-men struggle. At the
 end,
 God, I conclude, compensates, punishes.
 'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
 That I am something underrated here,
 Poor this long while, despised, to speak
 the truth.
 I dared not, do you know, leave home all
 day,
 For fear of chancing on the Paris lords.
 The best is when they pass and look aside;
 But they speak sometimes; I must bear it
 all.
 Well may they speak! That Francis,
 that first time,
 And that long festal year at Fontainebleau!
 I surely then could sometimes leave the
 ground,
 Put on the glory, Rafael's daily wear,
 In that humane great monarch's golden
 look, —
 One finger in his beard or twisted curl
 Over his mouth's good mark that made the
 smile,
 One arm about my shoulder, round my
 neck,
 The jingle of his gold chain in my ear,
 I painting proudly with his breath on me,
 All his court round him, seeing with his
 eyes,
 Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of souls
 Profuse, my hand kept plying by those hearts, —
 And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond, This in the background, waiting on my
 work,
 To crown the issue with a last reward!
 A good time, was it not, my kingly days?
 And had you not grown restless . . . but
 I know —

'Tis done and past; 'twas right, my instinct said;
 Too live the life grew, golden and not grey,
 And I'm the weak-eyed bat no sun should tempt
 Out of the grange whose four walls make his world.
 How could it end in any other way?
 You called me, and I came home to your 58
 heart.
 The triumph was — to reach and stay there; since
 I reached it ere the triumph, what is lost?
 Let my hands frame your face in your hair's gold,
 You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
 "Rafael did this, Andrea painted that;
 "The Roman's is the better when you prave,
 "But still the other's Virgin was his wife —"
 Men will excuse me. I am glad to judge Both pictures in your presence; clearer
 grows
 My better fortune, I resolve to think. 60
 For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
 Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
 'To Rafael . . . I have known it all these years . . .
 (When the young man was flaming out his thoughts
 Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
 Too lifted up in heart because of it)
 "Friend, there's a certain scrry little scrub "Goes up and down our Florence, none cares how,
 "Who, were he set to plan and execute
 "As you are, pricked on by your popes and 70
 kings,
 "Would bring the sweat into that brow of
 yours!"
 To Rafael's! — And indeed the arm is wrong.
 I hardly dare . . . yet, only you to see,
 Give the chalk here — quick, thus the line should go!
 Ay, but the soul! he's Rafael! rub it out!
 Still, all I care for, if he specke the truth,
 (What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
 Do you forget already words like those?)
 If really there was such a chance, so lost, —
 Is, whether you're — not grateful — but 80 more pleased.
 Well, let me think so. And you smile
 indeed!
 This hour has been an hour! Another
 smile?
 If you would sit thus by me every night
 I should work better, do you comprehend?
 I mean that I should earn more, give you
 more.
 See, it is settled dusk now; there's a star:
 Morello's¹ gone, the watch-lights show the
 wall,

The cue-owls speak the name we call them by.
 Come from the window, love, — come in, at last,
 Inside the melancholy little house
 We built to be so gay with. God is just.
 King Francis may forgive me: oft at nights
 When I look up from painting, eyes tired out,
 The walls become illumined, brick from brick Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright gold,
 That gold of his I did cement them with!
 10 Let us but love each other. Must you go?
 That Cousin here again? he waits outside?
 Must see you — you, and not with me?
 Those loans?
 More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for that?
 Well, let smiles buy me? have you more to spend?
 While hand and eye and something of a heart
 Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth?
 I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
 The grey remainder of the evening out,
 Idle, you call it, and muse perfectly 20 How I could paint, were I but back in France,
 One picture, just one more — the Virgin's face,
 Not yours this time! I want you at my side
 To hear them — that is, Michel Agnolo —
 Judge all I do and tell you of its worth.
 Will you? To-morrow, satisfy your friend.
 I take the subjects for his corridor,
 Finish the portrait out of hand — there, there,
 And throw him in another thing or two
 If he demurs; the whole should prove enough
 30 To pay for this same Cousin's freak.
 Beside,
 What's better and what's all I care about,
 Get you the thirteen scudi for the ruff!
 Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does he,
 The Cousin! what does he to please you more?
 I am grown peaceful as old age to-night.
 I regret little, I would change still less.
 Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
 The very wrong to Francis! — it is true
 I took his coin, was tempted and complied, 40 And built this house and sinned, and all is said.
 My father and my mother died of want.
 Well, had I riches of my own? you see How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot.

They were born poor, lived poor, and poor they died:
 And I have laboured somewhat in my time
 And not been paid profusely. Some good son Paint my two hundred pictures — let him try!
 No doubt, there's something strikes a balance. Yes,
 You loved me quite enough, it seems to-night.
 This must suffice me here.* What would one have?
 In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more chance —
 Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,
 Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
 For Leonard, Rafael, Agnolo and me
 To cover — the three first without a wife,
 While I have mine! So — still they overcome Because there's still Lucrezia, — as I choose.

Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love.

THE BISHOP ORDERS HIS TOMB AT SAINT PRAXED'S CHURCH.

ROME, 15—.

VANITY, saith the preacher, vanity!
 Draw round my bed: is Anselm keeping back?
 Nephews — sons mine . . . ah God, I know not! Well —
 She, men would have to be your mother once, Old Gandolf envied me, so fair she was!
 What's done is done, and she is dead beside,
 Dead long ago, and I am Bishop since,
 And as she died so must we die ourselves,
 And thence ye may perceive the world's a dream.
 Life, how and what is it? As here I lie
 In this state-chamber, dying by degrees,
 Hours and long hours in the dead night,
 I ask
 "Do I live, am I dead?" Peace, peace seems all.
 Saint, Praxed's ever was the church for peace;
 And so, about this tomb of mine. I fought With tooth and nail to save my niche, ye know:
 — Old Gandolf cozened me, despite my care;
 Shrewd was that snatch from out the corner South
 He graced his carrion with, God curse the same!
 Yet still my niche is not so cramped but thence

One sees the pulpit o' the epistle-side,
 And somewhat of the choir, those silent seats,
 And up into the aery dome where live
 The angels, and a sunbeam's sure to lurk:
 And I shall fill my slab of basalt there,
 And 'neath my tabernacle take my rest,
 With those nine columns round me, two and two,
 The odd one at my feet where Anselm
 stands:
 Peach-blossom marble all, the rare, the ripe
 As fresh-poured red wine of a mighty pulse.
 — Old Gandolf with his paltry onion-
 stone,
 Put me where I may look at him! True
 peach,
 Rosy and flawless: how I earned the prize!
 Draw close: that conflagration of my church
 — What then? So much was saved if aught were missed!
 My sons, ye would not be my death? Go dig
 The white-grape vineyard where the oil-press stood,
 Drop water gently till the surface sink,
 And if ye find . . . Ah God, I know not,
 I! . . .
 Bedded in store of rotten fig-leaves soft,
 And corded up in a tight olive-frail,
 Some lump, ah God, of lapis lazuli,
 Big as a Jew's head cut off at the nape,
 Blue as a vein o'er the Madonna's breast . .
 Sons, all have I bequeathed you, villas,
 all,
 That brave Frascati villa with its bath,
 So, let the blue lump poise between my
 knees,
 Like God the Father's globe on both his hands
 Ye worship in the Jesu Church so gay,
 For Gandolf shall not chose but see and burst!
 Swift as a weaver's shuttle fleet our years:
 Man goeth to the grave, and where is
 he?
 Did I say basalt for my slab, sons? Black — 'Twas ever antique-black I meant! How
 else
 Shall ye contrast my frieze to come beneath?
 The bas-relief in bronze ye promised me,
 Those Pans and Nymphs ye wot of, and perchance
 Some tripod, thyrsus, with a vase or so,
 The Saviour at his sermon on the mount,
 Saint Praxed in a glory, and one Pan Ready to twitch the Nymph's last garment
 off,
 And Moses with the tables . . . but I
 know

Ye mark me not! What do they whisper
 thee,
 Child of my bowels, Anselm? Ah, ye
 hope
 To revel down my villas while I gasp Bricked o'er with beggar's mouldy travertine
 Which Gandolf from his tomb-top chuckles at!
 Nay, boys, ye love me — all of jasper,
 then!
 'Tis jasper ye stand pledged to, lest I
 grieve.
 My bath must needs be left behind, alas! 50
 One block, pure green as a pistachio-nut, There's plenty jasper somewhere in the
 world —
 And have I not Saint Praxed's ear to pray Horses for ye, and brown Greek manuscripts,
 And mistresses with great smooth marbly
 limbs?
 — That's if ye carve my epitaph aright, Choice Latin, picked phrase, Tully's every
 word,
 No gaudy ware like Gandolf's second line —
 Tully, my masters? Ulpian serves his need!
 And then how I shall lie through centuries, 60
 And hear the blessed mutter of the mass,
 And see God made and eaten all day long,
 And feel the steady candle-flame, and taste
 Good strong thick stupefying incense-
 smoke!
 For as I lie here, hours of the dead night,
 Dying in state and by such slow degrees,
 I fold my arms as if they clasped a crook,
 And stretch my feet forth straight as stone
 can point,
 And let the bedclothes, for a mortcloth, drop Into great laps and folds of sculptor's- 70
 work:
 And as yon tapers dwindle, and strange
 thoughts
 Grow, with a certain humming in my ears,
 About the life before I lived this life,
 And this life too, popes, cardinals and priests,
 Saint Praxed at his sermon on the mount,
 Your tall pale mother with her talking
 eyes,
 And new-found agate urns as fresh as day,
 And marble's language, Latin pure, discreet,
 — Aha, ELUCESCEBAT quoth our friend?
 No Tully, said I, Ulpian at the best! 80
 Evil and brief hath been my pilgrimage.
 All lapis, all, sons! Else I give the Pope
 My villas! Will ye ever eat my heart?
 Ever your eyes were as a lizard's quick,
 They glitter like your mother's for my soul,
 Or ye would heighten my impoverished frieze,

Piece out its starved design, and fill my vase

With grapes, and add a vizor and a Term,¹
And to the tripod ye would tie a lynx
That in his struggle throws the thyrsus
down,

To comfort me on my entablature
Whereon I am to lie till I must ask "Do I live, am I dead?" There, leave me, there!

For ye have stabbed me with ingratitude
To death — ye wish it — God, ye wish it!
Stone —

10 Gritstone, a-crumble! Clammy squares which sweat

As if the corpse they keep were oozing
through —

And no more lapis to delight the world!
Well go! I bless ye. Fewer tapers there,
But in a row: and, going, turn your backs —
Ay, like departing altar-ministrants,
And leave me in my church, the church for
peace,

That I may watch at leisure if he leers —
Old Gandolf, at me, from his onion-stone,
As still he envied me, so fair she was!

BISHOP BLOUGRAM'S APOLOGY.

20 No more wine? then we'll push back chairs and talk.

A final glass for me, though: cool, i' faith!
We ought to have our Abbey back, you see.
It's different, preaching in basilicas,
And doing duty in some masterpiece Like this of brother Pugin's, bless his
heart!

I doubt if they're half baked, those chalk rosettes,

Ciphers and stucco-twiddlings everywhere;
It's just like breathing in a lime-kiln: eh?
These hot long ceremonies of our church

30 Cost us a little — oh, they pay the price,
You take me — amply pay it! Now, we'll talk

So you despise me, Mr. Gigadibs.

No deprecation, — nay, I beg you, sir!
Beside 'tis our engagement: don't you
know,

I promised, if you'd watch a dinner out,
We'd see truth dawn together? — truth that peeps

Over the glasses' edge when dinner's done,
And body gets its sop and holds its noise And leaves soul free a little. Now's the
time:

40 Truth's break of day! You do despise me
then.

And if I say, "despise me," — never fear!
I know you do not in a certain sense —

* A bust ending in a square block of stone, like those of the god Terminus.

Not in my arm-chair, for example: here.
I well imagine you respect my place
(Status, entourage, worldly circumstance)
Quite to its value — very much indeed:
— Are up to the protesting eyes of you
In pride at being seated here for once —
You'll turn it to such capital account!
When somebody, through years and years

to come,
Hints of the bishop, — names me — that's
enough:

"Blougram? I knew him" — (into it you slide)

"Dined with him once, a Corpus Christi
Day,

"All alone, we two; he's a clever man:

"And after dinner, — why, the wine you
know, —

"Oh, there was wine, and good! — what with the wine . . .

"Faith, we began upon all sorts of talk!

"He's no bad fellow, Blougram; he had seen

"Something of mine he relished, some review:

"He's quite above their humbug in his
heart,

"Half-said as much, indeed — the thing's his trade.

"I warrant, Blougram's sceptical at times:
"How otherwise? I liked him, I confess!"

Che che, my dear sir, as we say at Rome, Don't you protest now! It's fair give and
take;

You have had your turn and spoken your home-truths:

The hand's mine now, and here you follow.
suit.

Thus much conceded, still the first fact stays —

You do despise me; your ideal of life
Is not the bishop's: you would not be I. ;

You would like better to be Goethe, now,
Or Buonaparte, or, bless me, lower still,

Count D'Orsay, — so you did what you preferred,

Spoke as you thought, and, as you cannot
help,

Believed or disbelieved, no matter what,
So long as on that point, whate'er it was,

You loosed your mind, were whole and sole
yourself.

— That, my ideal never can include,
Upon that element of truth and worth

Never be based! for say they make me
Pope —

(They can't — suppose it for our argument!)

Why, there I'm at my tether's end, I've
reached

My height, and not a height which pleases
you:

An unbelieving Pope won't do, you say

It's like those eerie stories nurses tell,
Of how some actor on a stage played
Death,
With pasteboard crown, sham orb and tinsel-delt dart,
And called himself the monarch of the
world;
Then, going in the tire-room afterward,
Because the play was done, to shift him-
self,
Got touched upon the sleeve familiarly,
The moment he had shut the closet door,
By Death himself. Thus God might touch
a Pope

10 At unawares, ask what his baubles mean,
And whose part he presumed to play just
now.
Best be yourself, imperial, plain and true!

So, drawing comfortable breath again,
You weigh and find, whatever more or less
I boast of my ideal realised
Is nothing in the balance when opposed
To your ideal, your grand simple life,
Of which you will not realise one jot.
I am much, you are nothing; you would be
all,

20 I would be merely much: you beat me
there.

No, friend, you do not beat me: hearken
why!

The common problem, yours, mine, every one's,

Is — not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be, — but, finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means: a very different thing!
No abstract intellectual plan of life
Quite irrespective of life's plainest laws,
But one, a man, who is man and nothing
more,

30 May lead within a world which (by your leave)

Is Rome or London, not Fool's-paradise.
Embellish Rome, idealise away,
Make paradise of London if you can,
You're welcome, nay, you're wise.

A simile!

We mortals cross the ocean of this world
Each in his average cabin of a life;
The best's not big, the worst yields elbow-
room.

Now for our six months' voyage — how prepare?

You come on shipboard with a landsman's list

10 Of things he calls convenient: so they are!

An India screen is pretty furniture,
A piano-forte is a fine resource,
All Balzac's novels occupy one shelf,
The new edition fifty volumes long;
And little Greek books, with the funny type
They get up well at Lipsic, fill the next:

Go on! slabbed marble, what a bath it makes!

And Parma's pride, the Jerome, let us add!
"Twere pleasant could Correggio's fleeting
glow

Hang full in face of one where'er one roams, 50
Since he more than the others brings with
him

Italy's self, — the marvellous Modenese! —
Yet was not on your list before, perhaps.
— Alas, friend, here's the agent . . . is't
the name?

The captain, or whoever's master here —
You see him screw his face up; what's his
cry

Ere you set foot on shipboard? "Six feet
square!"

If you won't understand what six feet mean, Compute and purchase stores accordingly —

And if, in pique because he overhauls 60
Your Jerome, piano, bath, you come on board

Bare — why, you cut a figure at the first
While sympathetic landsmen see you off;
Not afterward, when long ere half seas
over,

You peep up from your utterly naked boards

Into some snug and well-appointed berth,
Like mine for instance (try the cooler jug —

Put back the other, but don't jog the ice!)
And mortified you mutter "Well and
good;

"He sits enjoying his sea-furniture; 70
"Tis stout and proper, and there's store of
it:

"Though I've the better notion, all agree,
"Of fitting rooms up. Hang the carpenter,

"Neat ship-shape fixings and contrivances —

"I would have brought my Jerome, frame
and all!"

And meantime you bring nothing: never
mind —

You've proved your artist-nature: what you don't

You might bring, so despise me, as I say.

Now come, let's backward to the starting place.

See my way: we're two college friends, 80
suppose.

Prepare together for our voyage, then;
Each note and check the other in his
work, —

Here's mine, a bishop's outfit; criticise!
What's wrong? why won't you be a bishop
too?

Why first, you don't believe, you don't and can't;

(Not stately, that is, and fixedly
And absolutely and exclusively)
In any revelation called divine.
No dogmas nail your faith; and what remains

But say so, like the honest man you are?
First, therefore, overhaul theology!
Nay, I too, not a fool, you please to think,
Must find believing every whit as hard:
And if I do not frankly say as much,
10 The ugly consequence is clear enough.

Now wait, my friend: well, I do not believe

If you'll accept no faith that is not fixed,
Absolute and exclusive, as you say.

You're wrong — I mean to prove it in due
time.

Meanwhile, I know where difficulties lie
I could not, cannot solve, nor ever shall,
So give up hope accordingly to solve — (To you, and over the wine). Our dogmas then

With both of us, though in unlike degree, 20 Missing full credence — overboard with
them!

I mean to meet you on your own premise:
Good, there go mine in company with
yours!

And now what are we? unbelievers both,
Calm and complete, determinately fixed
To-day, to-morrow and for ever, pray?
You'll guarantee me that? Not so, I
think!

In no wise! all we've gained is, that belief,
As unbelief before, shakes us by fits,
Confounds us like its predecessor. Where's 30 The gain? how can we guard our unbelief,
Make it bear fruit to us? — the problem
here.

Just when we are safest, there's a sunset-
touch,

A fancy from a flower-bell, some one's
death,

A chorus-ending from Euripides, —
And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears
As old and new at once as nature's self,
To rap and knock and enter in our soul,
Take hands and dance there, a fantastic
ring,

Round the ancient idol, on his base
again, —

40 The grand Perhaps! We look on helplessly.

There the old misgivings, crooked questions are —

This good God, — what he could do, if he would,

Would, if he could — then must have done
long since:

If so, when, where and how? some way must be, —

Once feel about, and soon or late you hit

Some sense, in which it might be, after all.
Why not, "The Way, the Truth, the Life?"

— That way

Over the mountain, which who stands upon
Is apt to doubt if it be meant for a road;
While, if he views it from the waste itself, 50
Up goes the line there, plain from base to
brow,

Not vague, mistakeable! what's a break
or two

Seen from the unbroken desert either side?
And then (to bring in fresh philosophy)

What if the breaks themselves should prove
at last

The most consummate of contrivances
To train a man's eye, teach him what is faith?

And so we stumble at truth's very test!
All we have gained then by our unbelief
Is a life of doubt diversified by faith, 60
For one of faith diversified by doubt:

We called the chess-board white, — we call it black.

"Well," you rejoin, "the end's no worse,
at least

"We've reason for both colours on the board:

"Why not confess then, where I drop the faith

"And you the doubt, that I'm as right as
you?"

Because, friend, in the next place, this being so,

And both things even, — faith and unbelief Left to a man's choice, — we'll proceed a
step,

Returning to our image, which I like. 70

A man's choice, yes — but a cabinpassenger's —

The man made for the special life o' the
world —

Do you forget him? I remember though!
Consult our ship's conditions and you find
One and but one choice suitable to all;
The choice, that you unluckily prefer,
Turning things topsy-turvy — they or it Going to the ground. Belief or unbelief Bears upon life, determines its whole
course,

Begins at its beginning. See the world 80
Such as it is, — you made it not, nor I;

I mean to take it as it is, — and you,
Not so you'll take it, — though you get nought else.

I know the special kind of life I like,
What suits the most my idiosyncrasy, Brings out the best of me and bears me
fruit

In power, peace, pleasantness and length of days.

I find that positive belief does this.
 For me, and unbelief, no whit of this.
 — For you, it does, however? — that, we'll try!

"Tis clear, I cannot lead my life, at least,
 Induce the world to let me peaceably,
 Without declaring at the outset, "Friends,
 "I absolutely and peremptorily
 "Believe!" — I say, faith is my waking life:

One sleeps, indeed, and dreams at intervals,
 We know, but waking's the main point with us,
 And my provision's for life's waking part.
 Accordingly, I use heart, head and hand
 All day, I build, scheme, study, and make friends;
 And when night overtakes me, down I lie,
 Sleep, dream a little, and get done with it,
 The sooner the better, to begin afresh.
 What's midnight doubt before the day-spring's faith?

You, the philosopher, that disbelieve,
 That recognise the night, give dreams their weight —

To be consistent you should keep your bed,
 Abstain from healthy acts that prove you man,
 For fear you drowse perhaps at unawares!
 And certainly at night you'll sleep and dream,
 Live through the day and bustle as you please.

And so you live to sleep as I to wake,
 To unbelieve as I to still believe?
 Well, and the common sense o' the world calls you
 Bed-ridden, — and its good things come to me.

Its estimation, which is half the fight,
 That's the first-cabin comfort I secure:
 The next . . . but you perceive with half an eye!
 Come, come, it's best believing, if we may;
 You can't but own that!

Next, concede again,
 If once we choose belief, on all accounts
 We can't be too decisive in our faith,
 Conclusive and exclusive in its terms,
 To suit the world which gives us the good things.

In every man's career are certain points
 Whereon he dares not be indifferent;
 The world detects him clearly, if he dare
 As baffled at the game, and losing life.
 He may care little or he may care much
 For riches, honour, pleasure, work, repose,
 Since various theories of life and life's Success are extant which might easily Comport with either estimate of these;
 And whoso chooses wealth or poverty,
 Labour or quiet, is not judged a fool

Because his fellow would choose otherwise:
 We let him choose upon his own account 50
 So long as he's consistent with his choice.
 But certain points, left wholly to himself,
 When once a man has arbitrated on,
 We say he must succeed there or go hang.
 Thus, he should wed the woman he loves
 most
 Or needs most, whatso'er the love or need —
 For he can't wed twice. Then, he must avouch,
 Or follow, at the least, sufficiently,
 The form of faith his conscience holds the best,
 Whate'er the process of conviction was: 6
 For nothing can compensate his mistake
 On such a point, the man himself being judge:
 He cannot wed twice, nor twice lose his soul.

Well now, there's one great form of Christian faith
 I happened to be born in — which to teach
 Was given me as I grew up, on all hands,
 As best and readiest means of living by;
 The same on examination being proved
 The most pronounced moreover, fixed, precise
 And absolute form of faith in the whole 70
 world —
 Accordingly, most potent of all forms
 For working on the world. Observe, my friend!

Such as you know me, I am free to say,
 In these hard latter days which hamper one,
 Myself — by no immoderate exercise
 Of intellect and learning, but the tact
 To let external forces work for me,
 — Bid the street's stones be bread and they are bread;
 Bid Peter's creed, or rather, Hildebrand's,
 Exalt me o'er my fellows in the world 80
 And make my life an ease and joy and pride;
 It does so, — which for me's a great point gained,
 Who have a soul and body that exact
 A comfortable care in many ways.
 There's power in me and will to dominate
 Which I must exercise, they hurt me else:
 In many ways I need mankind's respect,
 Obedience, and the love that's born of fear:
 While at the same time, there's a taste I have,
 A toy of soul, a titillating thing, 90
 Refuses to digest these dainties crude.
 The naked life is gross till clothed upon:
 I must take what men offer, with a grace
 As though I would not, could I help it, take!
 An uniform I wear though over-rich —

Something imposed on me, no choice of mine;

No fancy-dress worn for pure fancy's sake
And despicable therefore! now folk kneel
And kiss my hand—of course the Church's hand.

Thus I am made, thus life is best for me,
And thus that it should be I have procured;
And thus it could not be another way,
I venture to imagine.

You'll reply,

So far my choice, no doubt, is a success;
10 But were I made of better elements,
With nobler instincts, purer tastes, like you,
I hardly would account the thing success
Though it did all for me I say.

But, friend,

We speak of what is; not of what might be,
And how 'twere better if 'twere otherwise.
I am the man you see here plain-enough:
Grant I'm a beast, why, beasts must lead beasts' lives!

Suppose I own at once to tail and claws;
The tailless man exceeds me: but being tailed

20 I'll lash out lion fashion, and leave apes
To dock their stump and dress their haunches up.

My business is not to remake myself,
But make the absolute best of what God
made.

Or—our first simile—though you prove me doomed

To a viler berth still, to the steerage-hole,
The sheep-pen or the pig-stye, I should strive

To make what use of each were possible;
And as this cabin gets upholstery,
That hutch should rustle with sufficient straw.

30 But, friend, I don't acknowledge quite so fast

I fail of all your manhood's lofty tastes
Enumerated so complacently,
On the mere ground that you forsooth can find

In this particular life I choose to lead
No fit provision for them. Can you not?
Say you, my fault is I address myself
To grosser estimators than should judge?
And that's no way of holding up the soul,
Which, nobler, needs men's praise perhaps, yet knows

40 One wise man's verdict outweighs all the fools'—

Would like the two, but, forced to choose, takes that.

I pine among my million imbeciles (You think) aware some dozen men of sense

Eye me and know me, whether I believe
In the last winking Virgin, as I vow,

And am a fool, or disbelieve in her
And am a knave,—approve in neither
case,

Withhold their voices though I look their
way:

Like Verdi when, at his worst opera's end
(The thing they gave at Florence,— what's its name?)

While the mad houseful's plaudits near outbang

His orchestra of salt-box, tongs and bones,
He looks through all the roaring and the wreaths

Where sits Rossini patient in his stall.

Nay, friend, I meet you with an answer
here—

That even your prime men who appraise their kind

Are men still, catch a wheel within a wheel,
See more in a truth than the truth's simple
self,

Confuse themselves. You see lads walk the street

Sixty the minute; what's to note in that? 6
You see one lad o'erstride a chimney-stack;
Him you must watch—he's sure to fall,
yet stands!

Our interest's on the dangerous edge of
things.

The honest thief, the tender murderer,
The superstitious atheist, demirep
That loves and saves her soul in new French books—

We watch while these in equilibrium keep
The giddy line midway: one step aside, They're classed and done with. I, then,
keep the line

Before your sages,—just the men to shrink 7
From the gross weights, coarse scales and labels broad

You offer their refinement. Fool or knave.
Why needs a bishop be a fool or knave
When there's a thousand diamond weights between?

So, I enlist them. Your picked twelve, you'll find,

Profess themselves indignant, scandalised
At thus being held unable to explain
How a superior man who disbelieves
May not believe as well: that's Schelling's
way!

It's through my coming in the tail of time, 8
Nicking the minute with a happy tact.

Had I been born three hundred years ago They'd say, "What's strange? Blougram of course believes;"

And, seventy years since, "disbelieves of
course."

But now, "He may believe; and yet, and
yet

"How can he?" All eyes turn with interest.

Whereas, step off the line on either side—

You, for example, clever to a fault,
 The rough and ready man who write apace,
 Read somewhat seldomer, think perhaps even less —
 You disbelieve! Who wonders and who cares?
 Lord So-and-so — his coat bedropped with wax,
 All Peter's chains about his waist, his back Brave with the needlework of Noodledom — Believes! Again, who wonders and who
 cares?
 But I, the man of sense and learning too,
 The able to think yet act, the this, the that,
 I, to believe at this late time of day!
 Enough; you see, I need not fear contempt.

— Except it's yours! Admire me as these may,
 You don't. But whom at least do you admire?
 Present your own perfection, your ideal,
 Your pattern man for a minute — oh,
 make haste,
 Is it Napoleon you would have us grow?
 Concede the means; allow his head and
 hand,
 (A large concession, clever as you are)
 Good! In our common primal element Of unbelief (we can't believe, you know — We're still at that admission, recollect!)
 Where do you find — apart from, towering o'er
 The secondary temporary aims
 Which satisfy the gross taste you despise —
 Where do you find his star? — his crazy
 trust
 God knows through what or in what? it's alive
 And shines and leads him, and that's all we want.
 Have we aught in our sober night shall point
 Such ends as his were, and direct the means Of working out our purpose straight as his,
 Nor bring a moment's trouble on success
 With after-care to justify the same?
 — Be a Napoleon, and yet disbelieve —
 Why, the man's mad, friend, take his light
 away!
 What's the vague good o' the world, for which you dare
 With comfort to yourself blow millions up?
 We neither of us see it! we do see The blown-up millions — spatter of their brains
 And writhing of their bowels and so forth,
 In that bewildering entanglement
 Of horrible eventualities
 Past calculation to the end of time!
 Can I mistake for some clear word of God

(Which were my ample warrant for it all)
 His puff of hazy instinct, idle talk,
 "The State, that's I," quack-nonsense about crowns,
 And (when one beats the man to his last
 hold)
 A vague idea of setting things to rights,
 Policing people efficaciously,
 More to their profit, most of all to his own;
 The whole to end that dismaldest of ends
 By an Austrian marriage, cant to us the Church,
 And resurrection of the old régime?
 Would I, who hope to live a dozen years,
 Fight Austerlitz for reasons such and such?
 No: for, concede me but the merest chance Doubt may be wrong — there's judgment, life to come!
 With just that chance, I dare not. Doubt proves right?
 This present life is all? — you offer me
 Its dozen noisy years, without a chance That wedding an archduchess, wearing lace,
 And getting called by divers new-coined
 names,
 Will drive off ugly thoughts and let me dine,
 Sleep, read and chat in quiet as I like!
 Therefore I will not.

Take another case;
 Fit up the cabin yet another way.
 What say you to the poets? shall we write Hamlet, Othello — make the world our
 own,
 Without a risk to run of either sort?
 I can't! — to put the strongest reason first.
 "But try," you urge, "the trying shall
 suffice;
 "The aim, if reached or not, makes great the life:
 "Try to be Shakespeare, leave the rest to
 fate!"
 Spare my self-knowledge — there's no
 fooling me!
 If I prefer remaining my poor self,
 I say so not in self-dispraise but praise.
 If I'm a Shakespeare, let the well alone;
 Why should I try to be what now I am?
 If I'm no Shakespeare, as too probable, — His power and consciousness and self-delight
 And all we want in common, shall I find — Trying for ever? while on points of taste
 Wherewith, to speak it humbly he and I,
 Are dowered alike — I'll ask you, I or he,
 Which in our two lives realises most?
 Much, he imagined — somewhat, I possess.
 He had the imagination; stick to that!
 Let him say, "In the face of my soul's works
 "Your world is worthless and I touch it not "Lest I should wrong them" — I'll withdraw my plea.

But does he say so? look upon his life!
Himself, who only can, gives judgment
there.
He leaves his towers and gorgeous palaces
To build the trimmest house in Stratford
town;
Saves money, spends it, owns the worth of
things,
Giulio Romano's pictures, Dowland's lute;
Enjoys a show, respects the puppets, too,
And none more, had he seen its entry once,
Than "Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal." 10 Why then should I who play that person-
age,
The very Pandulph Shakespeare's fancy
made,
Be told that had the poet chanced to start From where I stand now (some degree like
mine
Being just the goal he ran his race to
reach)
He would have run the whole race back,
forsooth,
And left being Pandulph, to begin write plays?
Ah, the earth's best can be but the earth's
best!
Did Shakespeare live, he could but sit at
home
And get himself in dreams the Vatican, 20 Greek busts, Venetian paintings, Roman
walls,
And English books, none equal to his own,
Which I read, bound in gold (he never did).
— Terni's fall, Naples' bay and Gothard's
top — Eh, friend? I could not fancy one of
these;
But, as I pour this claret, there they are:
I've gained them — crossed St. Gothard last July
With ten mules to the carriage and a bed Slung inside; is my hap the worse for
that?
We want the same things, Shakespeare and
myself,
30 And what I want, I have: he, gifted more,
Could fancy he too had them when he liked,
But not so thoroughly that, if fate allowed,
He would not have them also in my sense.
We play one game; I send the ball afloat
No less adroitly that of fifty strokes Scarce five go o'er the wall so wide and high
Which sends them back to me: I wish and
get.
He struck balls higher and with better skill,
But at a poor fence level with his head, 40 And hit — his Stratford house, a coat of
arms,
Successful dealings in his grain and wool, —
While I receive heaven's incense in my nose

And style myself the cousin of Queen Bess.
Ask him, if this life's all, who wins the
game?

Believe — and our whole argument
breaks up.
Enthusiasm's the best thing, I repeat;
Only, we can't command it; fire and life
Are all, dead matter's nothing, we agree:
And be it a mad dream or God's very
breath,
The fact's the same, — belief's fire, once in
us,
Makes of all else mere stuff to show itself:
We penetrate our life with such a glow
As fire lends wood and iron — this turns steel,
That burns to ash — all's one, fire proves its power
For good or ill, since men call flare success.
But paint a fire, it will not therefore burn.
Light one in me, I'll find it food enough!
Why, to be Luther — that's a life to lead,
Incomparably better than my own.
He comes, reclaims God's earth for God,
he says,
Sets up God's rule again by simple means,
Re-opens a shut book, and all is done.
He flared out in the flaring of mankind;
Such Luther's luck was: how shall such be
mine?
If he succeeded, nothing's left to do:
And if he did not altogether — well, Strauss is the next advance. All Strauss should be
I might be also. But to what result?
He looks upon no future: Luther did.
What can I gain on the denying side?
Ice makes no conflagration. State the facts,
Read the text right, emancipate the
world —
The emancipated world enjoys itself
With scarce a thank-you: Blougram told it first
It could not owe a farthing, — not to him
More than Saint Paul! 'twould press its pay, you think?
Then add there's still that plaguy hundredth chance
Strauss may be wrong. And so a risk is run —
For what gain? not for Luther's, who secured
A real heaven in his heart throughout his
life,
Supposing death a little altered things.
"Ay, but since really you lack faith,"
you cry,
"You run the same risk really on all sides,
"In cool indifference as bold unbelief."
"As well be Strauss as swing 'twixt Paul and him.

"It's not worth having, such imperfect faith,
 "No more able to do faith's work
 "Than unbelief like mine. Whole faith, or none!"

Softly, my friend! I must dispute that point.

Once own the use of faith, I'll find you faith.

We're back on Christian ground. You call for faith:

I show you doubt, to prove that faith exists.

The more of doubt, the stronger faith, I say,

If faith o'ercomes doubt. How I know it does?

By life and man's free will, God gave for that!

To mould life as we choose it, shows our choice:

That's our one act, the previous work's his own.

You criticise the soul? It reared this tree —

This broad life and whatever fruit it bears!

What matter though I doubt at every pore,

Head-doubts, heart-doubts, doubts at my fingers' ends,

Doubts in the trivial work of every day,

Doubts at the very bases of my soul

In the grand moments when she probes her self —

o If finally I have a life to show,

The thing I did, brought out in evidence

Against the thing done to me underground

By hell and all its brood, for aught I know?

I say, whence sprang this? shows it faith or doubt?

All's doubt in me; where's break of faith in this?

It is the idea, the feeling and the love,

God means mankind should strive for and show forth

Whatever be the process to that end, —

And not historic knowledge, logic sound,

And metaphysical acumen, sure!

"What think ye of Christ," friend? when all's done and said,

Like you this Christianity or not?

It may be false, but will you wish it true?

Has it your vote to be so if it can?

Trust you an instinct silenced long ago

That will break silence and enjoin you love

What mortified philosophy is hoarse,

And all in vain, with bidding you despise?

If you desire faith — then you've faith enough:

What else seeks God — nay, what else seek ourselves?

You form a notion of me, we'll suppose,

On hearsay; it's a favourable one:

"But still" (you add), "there was no such good man,

"Because of contradiction in the facts.

"One proves, for instance, he was born in Rome,

"This Blougram; yet throughout the tales of him

"I see he figures as an Englishman."

Well, the two things are reconcilable.

But would I rather you discovered that, Subjoining — "Still, what matter though 53 they be?

"Blougram concerns me nought, born here or there."

Pure faith indeed — you know not what you ask!

Naked belief in God the Omnipotent,

Omniscient, Omnipresent, sears too much

The sense of conscious creatures to be borne.

It were the seeing him, no flesh shall dare.

Some think, Creation's meant to show him forth:

I say it's meant to hide him all it can,

And that's what all the blessed evil's for.

Its use in Time is to environ us,

Our breath, our drop of dew, with shield enough

Against that sight till we can bear its stress.

Under a vertical sun, the exposed brain

And lidless eye and disemprisoned heart

Less certainly would wither up at once

Than mind, confronted with the truth of him.

But time and earth case-harden us to live;

The feeblest sense is trusted most; the child

Feels God a moment, ichors o'er the place,

Plays on and grows to be a man like us, 70

With me, faith means perpetual unbelief

Kept quiet like the snake 'neath Michael's foot

Who stands calm just because he feels it writhe.

Or, if that's too ambitious, — here's my box —

I need the excitation of a pinch

Threatening the torpor of the inside-nose

Nigh on the imminent sneeze that never comes.

"Leave it in peace" advise the simple folk:

Make it aware of peace by itching-fits,

Say I — let doubt occasion still more faith! 80

You'll say, once all believed, man, woman, child,

In that dear middle-age these noodles

praise.

How you'd exult if I could put you back

Six hundred years, blot out cosmogony,

Geology, ethnology, what not,

(Greek endings, each the little passing-bell

That signifies some faith's about to die),

And set you square with Genesis again, —

When such a traveller told you his last news,
He saw the ark a-top of Ararat
But did not climb there since 'twas getting dusk
And robber-bands infest the mountain's foot!
How should you feel, I ask, in such an age,
How act? As other people felt and did;
With soul more blank than this decanter's knob,
Believe — and yet lie, kill, rob, fornicate
Full in belief's face, like the beast you'd be!

10 No, when the fight begins within himself,
A man's worth something. God stoops
O'er his head,
Satan looks up between his feet — both tug —
He's left, himself, i' the middle: the soul wakes
And grows. Prolong that battle through his life!
Never leave growing till the life to come!
Here, we've got callous to the Virgin's winks
That used to puzzle people wholesomely:
Men have outgrown the shame of being fools.

What are the laws of nature, not to bend
20 If the Church bid them? — brother Newman asks.

Up with the Immaculate Conception, then —
On to the rack with faith! — is my advice.
Will not that hurry us upon our knees,
Knocking our breasts, "It can't be — yet it shall!

"Who am I, the worm, to argue with my Pope?

"Low things confound the high things!"
and so forth.

That's better than acquitting God with grace

As some folk do. He's tried — no case is proved,

Philosophy is lenient — he may go!

30 You'll say, the old system's not so obsolete

But men believe still: ay, but who and where?

King Bomba's lazzaroni fester yet

The sacred flame, so Antonelli writes;

But even of these, what ragamuffin-saint

Believes God watches him continually,

As he believes in fire that it will burn,

Or rain that it will drench him? Break fire's law,

Sin against rain, although the penalty
Be just a singe or soaking? "No," he smiles;

40 "These laws are laws that can enforce themselves."

The sum of all is — yes, my doubt is great,
My faith's still greater, then my faith's enough.

I have read much, thought much, experienced much,

Yet would die rather than avow my fear

The Naples' liquefaction may be false,

When set to happen by the palace-clock

According to the clouds or dinner-time.

I hear you recommend, I might at least

Eliminate, declassify my faith

Since I adopt it; keeping what I must

And leaving what I can — such points as this.

I won't — that is, I can't throw one away.

Supposing there's no truth in what I hold

About the need of trial to man's faith,

Still, when you bid me purify the same,

To such a process I discern no end.

Clearing off one excrescence to see two,

There's ever a next in size, now grown as big,

That meets the knife: I cut and cut again!

First cut the Liquefaction, what comes last

But Fichte's clever cut at God himself?

Experimentalise on sacred things!

I trust nor hand nor eye nor heart nor brain

To stop betimes: they all get drunk alike.

The first step, I am master not to take.

You'd find the cutting-process to your taste

As much as leaving growths of lies unpruned,

Nor see more danger in it, — you retort.

Your taste's worth mine; but my taste proves more wise

When we consider that the steadfast hold

On the extreme end of the chain of faith

Gives all the advantage, makes the difference

With the rough purblind mass we seek to rule;

We are their lords, or they are free of us,
Just as we tighten or relax our hold.

So, other matters equal, we'll revert

To the first problem — which, if solved my way

And thrown into the balance, turns the scale —

How we may lead a comfortable life,

How suit our luggage to the cabin's size.

Of course you are remarking all this time

How narrowly and grossly I view life,

Respect the creature-comforts, care to rule

The masses, and regard complacently

"The cabin," in our old phrase. Well, I do.

I act for, talk for, live for this world now,
As this world prizes action, life and talk:

No prejudice to what next world may
prove,

Whose new laws and requirements, my best pledge

To observe then, is that I observe these
now

Shall do hereafter what I do meanwhile.

Let us concede (gratuitously though)

Next life relieves the soul of body, yields

Pure spiritual enjoyment: well, my friend,

Why lose this life if the meantime, since its use

May be to make the next life more intense?

10 Do you know, I have often had a dream
(Work it up in your next month's article)

Of man's poor spirit in its progress, still

Losing true life for ever and a day

Through ever trying to be and ever being —

In the evolution of successive spheres —

Before its actual sphere and place of life,

Halfway into the next, which having

reached,

It shoots with corresponding foolery

Halfway into the next still, on and off!

10 As when a traveller, bound from North to South,

Scouts fur in Russia: what's its use in France?

In France spurns flannel: where's its need in Spain?

In Spain drops cloth, too cumbrous for Algiers!

Lines goes next, and last the skin itself,

A superfluity at Timbuctoo.

When, through his journey, was the fool

at ease?

I'm at ease now, friend; worldly in this

world,

I take and like its way of life; I think

My brothers, who administer the means,

Live better for my comfort — that's good

too;

And God, if he pronounce upon such life,

Approves my service, which is better still.

If he keeps silence, — why, for you or me

Or that brute beast pulled-up in to-day's

"Times,"

What odds is't, save to ourselves, what life

we lead?

You meet me at this issue: you declare, —

All special-pleading done with — truth is

truth,

And justifies itself by undreamed ways.

You don't fear but it's better, if we doubt,

To say so, act up to our truth perceived

However feebly. Do then, — act away!

'Tis there I'm on the watch for you. How one acts

Is, both of us agree, our chief concern:

And how you'll act is what I fain would

see

If, like the candid person you appear,
You dare to make the most of your life's scheme

As I of mine, live up to its full law

Since there's no higher law that counter-checks.

Put natural religion to the test

You've just demolished the revealed with 50
— quick,

Down to the root of all that checks your will

All prohibition to lie, kill and thief,

Or even to be an atheistic priest!

Suppose a pricking to incontinence —

Philosophers deduce you chastity

Or shame, from just the fact that at the
first

Whoso embraced a woman in the field,

Threw club down and forewent his brains
beside,

So, stood a ready victim in the reach

Of any brother savage, club in hand; 60

Hence saw the use of going out of sight

In wood or cave to prosecute his loves:

I read this in a French book t'other day.

Does law so analysed coerce you much?

Oh, men spin clouds of fuzz where matters

end,

But you who reach where the first thread

begins,

You'll soon cut that! — which means you can, but won't,

Through certain instincts, blind, unreasoned-out,

You dare not set aside, you can't tell why,

But there they are, and so you let them 70
rule.

Then, friend, you seem as much a slave

as I,

A liar, conscious coward and hypocrite,

Without the good the slave expects to get,

In case he has a master after all!

You own your instincts? why, what else do

I,

Who want, am made for, and must have a

God

Ere I can be aught, do aught? — no mere

name

Want, but the true thing with what proves its truth,

To wit, a relation from that thing to me,

Touching from head to foot — which 80 touch I feel,

And with it take the rest, this life of ours!

I live my life here; yours you dare not live.

— Not as I state it, who (you please subjoin)

Disfigure such a life and call it names:

While, to your mind, remains another way

For simple men: knowledge and power

have rights,

But ignorance and weakness have rights

too.

There needs no crucial effort to find truth

If here or there or anywhere about:

We ought to turn each side, try hard and see,

And if we can't, be glad we've earned at least

The right, by one laborious proof the more,
To graze in peace earth's pleasant pasturage.

Men are not angels, neither are they brutes:
Something we may see, all we cannot see.
What need of lying? I say, I see all,

And swear to each detail the most minute
10 In what I think a Pan's face — you, mere cloud:

I swear I hear him speak and see him wink,

For fear, if once I drop the emphasis,
Mankind may doubt there's any cloud at all.

You take the simple life — ready to see,
Willing to see (for no cloud's worth a face) —

And leaving quiet what no strength can move,

And which, who bids you move? who has the right?

I bid you: but you are God's sheep, not mine:

"Pastor est tui Dominus." You find 20 In this the pleasant pasture of our life
Much you may eat without the least offence,

Much you don't eat because your maw objects,

Much you would eat but that your fellow-flock

Open great eyes at you and even butt,
And thereupon you like your mates so well
You cannot please yourself, offending them;

Though when they seem exorbitantly sheep,

You weigh your pleasure with their butts and bleats

And strike the balance. Sometimes certain fears

30 Restrain you, real checks since you find them so;

Sometimes you please yourself and nothing checks:

And thus you graze through life with not one lie,

And like it best.

But do you, in truth's name?
If so, you beat — which means you are not I —

Who needs must make earth mine and feed my fill

Not simply unbutted at, unbickered with,
But motioned to the velvet of the sward

By those obsequious wethers' very selves.
Look at me, sir; my age is double yours.

40 At yours, I knew beforehand, so enjoyed,

What now I should be — as, permit the word,

I pretty well imagine your whole range
And stretch of tether twenty years to come.

We both have minds and bodies much alike:

In truth's name, don't you want my bishopric,

My daily bread, my influence and my state?

You're young. I'm old; you must be old one day;

Will you find then, as I do hour by hour,
Women their lovers kneel to, who cut curls
From your fat lap-dog's ear to grace a brooch —

Dukes, who petition just to kiss your ring —
With much beside you know or may conceive?

Suppose we die to-night: well, here am I,
Such were my gains, life bore this fruit to me,

While writing all the same my articles
On music, poetry, the fictile vase

Found at Albano, chess, Anacreon's Greek.
But you — the highest honour in your life,

The thing you'll crown yourself with, all your days,

Is — dining here and drinking this last glass

I pour you out in sign of amity
Before we part for ever. Of your power

And social influence, worldly worth in short,

Judge what's my estimation by the fact,
I do not condescend to enjoin, beseech,

Hint secrecy on one of all these words!
You're shrewd and know that should you publish one

The world would brand the lie — my enemies first,

Who'd sneer — "the bishop's an arch-hypocrite

"And knave perhaps, but not so frank a fool."

Whereas I should not dare for both my

ears Breathe one such syllable, smile one such

smile,
Before the chaplain who reflects myself —

My shade's so much more potent than your flesh.

What's your reward, self-abnegating friend?

Stood you confessed of those exceptional
And privileged great natures that dwarf

mine —
A zealot with a mad ideal in reach,

A poet just about to print his ode,
A statesman with a scheme to stop this

war,
An artist whose religion is his art —

I should have nothing to object: such men
Carry the fire, all things grow warm to them,

Their druggets' worth my purple, they beat me.
But you, — you're just as little those as I —
You, Gigadibs, who, thirty years of age,
Write stately for Blackwood's Magazine,
Believe you see two points in Hamlet's soul Unseized by the Germans yet — which view you'll print —
Meantime the best you have to show being
still
That lively lightsome article we took Almost for the true Dickens, — what's its
name?
"The Slum and Cellar, or Whitechapel life
"Limned after dark!" it made me laugh,
I know,
And pleased a month, and brought you in ten pounds.
— Success I recognise and compliment,
And therefore give you, if you choose, three
words
(The card and pencil-scratch is quite
enough)
Which whether here, in Dublin or New York,
Will get you, prompt as at my eyebrow's
wink,
Such terms as never you aspired to get
In all our own reviews and some not ours.
Go write your lively sketches! be the first
"Blougram, or The Eccentric Confidence" Or better simply say, "The Outward-
bound."
Why, men as soon would throw it in my teeth
As copy and quote the infamy chalked broad
About me on the church-door opposite.
You will not wait for that experience though,
I fancy, howsoever you decide,
To discontinue — not detesting, not Defaming, but at least — despising me!

Over his wine so smiled and talked his
hour
Sylvester Blougram, styled in partibus Episcopus, nec non — (the deuce knows
what
It's changed to by our novel hierarchy)
With Gigadibs the literary man, Who played with spoons, explored his plate's design,
And ranged the olive-stones about its edge,
While the great bishop rolled him out a
mind
Long crumpled, till creased consciousness lay smooth.

For Blougram, he believed, say, half he spoke.
The other portion, as he shaped it thus
For argumentary purposes,

He felt his foe was foolish to dispute.
Some arbitrary accidental thoughts That crossed his mind, amusing because
new,
He chose to represent as fixtures there, Invariable convictions (such they seemed Beside his interlocutor's loose cards Flung daily down, and not the same way twice)
While certain hell-deep instincts, man's weak tongue
Is never bold to utter in their truth Because styled hell-deep ('tis an old mis-
take
To place hell at the bottom of the earth)
He ignored these, — not having in readiness
Their nomenclature and philosophy:
He said true things, but called them by wrong names.
"On the whole," he thought, "I justify
myself
"On every point where cavillers like this
"Oppugn my life: he tries one kind of fence,
"I close, he's worsted, that's enough for
him.
"He's on the ground: if ground should break away
"I take my stand on, there's a firmer yet
"Beneath it, both of us may sink and reach.
"His ground was over mine and broke the
first:
"So, let him sit with me this many a year!"
He did not sit five minutes. Just a week
Sufficed his sudden healthy vehemence.
Something had struck him in the "Outward-bound"
Another way than Blougram's purpose
was:
And having bought, not cabin-furniture
But settler's-implements (enough for three)
And started for Australia — there, I hope,
By this time he has tested his first plough,
And studied his last chapter of St. John.

CLEON.

"As certain also of your own poets have said" —

[An imaginary person. The poet quoted by St. Paul was Aratus, a native of Tarsus.]

CLEON the poet (from the sprinkled isles,
Lily on lily, that o'erlace the sea,
And laugh their pride when the light wave lisps "Greece") —
To Protus in his Tyranny: much health!

They give thy letter to me, even now:
I read and seem as if I heard thee speak.
The master of thy galley still unladen
Gift after gift; they block my court at last
And pile themselves along its portico
Royal with sunset, like a thought of thee:

And one white she-slave from the group dispersed
Of black and white slaves (like the chequer-
work

Pavement, at once my nation's work and gift,
Now covered with this settle-down of doves),
One lyric woman, in her crocus vest Woven of sea-wools, with her two white
hands

Commends to me the strainer and the cup
Thy lip hath bettered ere it blesses mine.

Well-counselled, king, in thy munificence!

- 10 For so shall men remark, in such an act
Of love for him whose song gives life its joy,
Thy recognition of the use of life;
Nor call thy spirit barely adequate
To help on life in straight ways, broad
enough

For vulgar souls, by ruling and the rest.
Thou, in the daily building of thy tower, —
Whether in fierce and sudden spasms of toil,
Or through dim lulls of unapparent growth,
Or when the general work 'mid good acclaim

- 20 Climbed with the eye to cheer the architect, — Didst ne'er engage in work for mere work's
sake —

Hadst ever in thy heart the luring hope
Of some eventual rest a-top of it, Whence, all the tumult of the building hushed,

Thou first of men mightst look out to the East:

The vulgar saw thy tower, thou sawest the sun.

For this, I promise on thy festival
To pour libation, looking o'er the sea,
Making this slave narrate thy fortunes,
speak

- 30 Thy great words, and describe thy royal
face —

Wishing thee wholly where Zeus lives the
most,

Within the eventual element of calm.

Thy letter's first requirement meets me
here.

It is as thou hast heard: in one short life
I, Cleon, have effected all those things
Thou wonderingly dost enumerate.

That epos on thy hundred plates of gold
Is mine, — and also mine the little chant,
So sure to rise from every fishing-bark

- 40 When, lights at prow, the seamen haul their
net.

The image of the sun-god on the phare,
Men turn from the sun's self to see, is mine;
The Pœcile,¹ o'er-storied its whole length,
As thou didst hear, with painting, is mine
too.

I know the true proportions of a man
And woman also, not observed before;
And I have written three books on the soul,
Proving absurd all written hitherto,
And putting us to ignorance again.
For music, — why, I have combined the
moods,

Inventing one. In brief, all arts are mine;
Thus much the people know and recognise,
Throughout our seventeen islands. Marvel not.

We of these latter days, with greater mind
Than our forerunners, since more composite,

Look not so great, beside their simple way,
To a judge who only sees one way at once,
One mind-point and no other at a time, —
Compares the small part of a man of us
With some whole man of the heroic age, 60 Great in his way — not ours, nor meant for ours.

And ours is greater, had we skill to know:
For, what we call this life of men on earth,
This sequence of the soul's achievements
here

Being, as I find much reason to conceive, Intended to be viewed eventually
As a great whole, not analysed to parts,
But each part having reference to all, —
How shall a certain part, pronounced
complete,

Endure effacement by another part? 70
Was the thing done? — then, what's to do again?

See, in the chequered pavement opposite,
Suppose the artist made a perfect rhomb,
And next a lozenge, then a trapezoid —
He did not overlay them, superimpose
The new upon the old and blot it out,
But laid them on a level in his work,
Making at last a picture; there it lies.

So, first the perfect separate forms were
made,

The portions of mankind; and after, so, 80
Occurred the combination of the same.
For where had been a progress, otherwise?
Mankind, made up of all the single men, —
In such a synthesis the labour ends.

Now mark me! those divine men of old
time

Have reached, thou sayest well, each at one point

The outside verge that rounds our faculty;
And where they reached, who can do more than reach?

It takes but little water just to touch
At some one point the inside of a sphere, 90
And, as we turn the sphere, touch all the
rest

In due succession: but the finer air
Which not so palpably nor obviously,
Though no less universally, can touch
The whole circumference of that emptied
sphere,

Fills it more fully than the water did;
Holds thrice the weight of water in itself
Resolved into a subtler element.
And yet the vulgar call the sphere first full
Up to the visible height — and after, void;
Not knowing air's more hidden properties.
And thus our soul, misknown, cries out to Zeus

To vindicate his purpose in our life:
Why stay we on the earth unless to grow?
Long since, I imaged, wrote the fiction out,
That he or other god descended here
And, once for all, showed simultaneously
What, in its nature, never can be shown, Piccemeal or in succession; — showed, I
say,

The worth both absolute and relative
Of all his children from the birth of time,
His instruments for all appointed work.
I now go on to image, — might we hear
The judgment which should give the due to each,

Show where the labour lay and where the
ease,

And prove Zeus' self, the latent everywhere!
This is a dream: — but no dream, let us
hope,

That years and days, the summers and the springs,

Follow each other with unwaning powers.
The grapes which dye thy wine are richer
far,

Through culture, than the wild wealth of the rock;

The suave plum than the savage-tasted
drupe;

The pastured honey-bee drops choicer
sweet;

The flowers turn double, and the leaves turn flowers;

That young and tender crescent-moon,
thy slave,

Sleeping above her robe as buoyed by clouds,

Refines upon the women of my youth.
What, and the soul alone deteriorates?

I have not chanted verse like Homer, no —
Nor swept string like Terpander, no —

nor carved
And painted men like Phidias and his
friend:

I am not great as they are, point by point.
But I have entered into sympathy

With these four, running these into one soul,
Who, separate, ignored each other's art.

Say, is it nothing that I know them all?
The wild flower was the larger; I have dashed

Rose-blood upon its petals, prick'd its cup's
Honey with wine, and driven its seed to fruit,

And show a better flower if not so large:
I stand myself. Refer this to the gods

Whose gift alone it is! which, shall I dare
(All pride apart) upon the absurd pretext

That such a gift by chance lay in my hand,
Discourse of lightly or depreciate? 50
It might have fallen to another's hand:
what then?
I pass too surely: let at least truth stay!

And next, of what thou followest on to ask.
This being with me as I declare, O king,
My works, in all these varicoloured kinds,
So done by me, accepted so by men — Thou askest, if (my soul thus in men's hearts)

I must not be accounted to attain
The very crown and proper end of life?
Inquiring thence how, now life closeth up, 64
I face death with success in my right hand:
Whether I fear death less than dost thyself
The fortunate of men? "For" (writest
thou)

"Thou leavest much behind, while I leave
nought.

"Thy life stays in the poems men shall sing,
"The pictures men shall study; while my
life,

"Complete and whole now in its power and joy,

"Dies altogether with my brain and arm,
"Is lost indeed; since, what survives
myself?

"The brazen statue to o'erlook my grave, 70
"Set on the promontory which I named.

"And that — some supple courtier of my
heir

"Shall use its robed and sceptred arm,
perhaps,

"To fix the rope to, which best drags it
down.

"I go then: triumph thou, who dost not go!"

Nay, thou art worthy of hearing my whole mind.

Is this apparent, when thou turn'st to muse Upon the scheme of earth and man in chief,

That admiration grows as knowledge
grows?

That imperfection means perfection hid, 80
Reserved in part, to grace the after-time?

If, in the morning of philosophy, Ere aught had been recorded, nay per-
ceived,

Thou, with the light now in thee, couldst
have looked

On all earth's tenantry, from worm to bird, Ere man, her last, appeared upon the stage —

Thou wouldst have seen them perfect, and deduced

The perfectness of others yet unseen.
Conceding which, — had Zeus then questioned thee

"Shall I go on a step, improve on this, 90
"Do more for visible creatures than is done?"

Thou wouldst have answered, "Ay, by making each

"Grow conscious in himself — by that alone.

'All's perfect else: the shell sucks fast the rock,

"The fish strikes through the sea, the snake both swims

"And slides, forth range the beasts, the birds take flight,

"Till life's mechanics can no further go —

"And all this joy in natural life is put

"Like fire from off thy finger into each,

"So exquisitely perfect is the same.

14 "But 'tis pure fire, and they mere matter are;

"It has them, not they it: and so I choose

"For man, thy last premeditated work

("If I might add a glory to the scheme)

"That a third thing should stand apart from both,

"A quality arise within his soul,

"Which, intro-active, made to supervise

"And feel the force it has, may view itself,

"And so be happy." Man might live at first

The animal life: but is there nothing more?

20 In due time, let him critically learn

How he lives; and, the more he gets to know

Of his own life's adaptabilities,

The more joy-giving will his life become.

Thus man, who hath this quality, is best.

But thou, king, hadst more reasonably said:

"Let progress end at once, — man make no step

"Beyond the natural man, the better beast,

"Using his senses, not the sense of sense."

30 In man there's failure, only since he left

The lower and unconscious forms of life.

We called it an advance, the rendering plain

Man's spirit might grow conscious of man's life,

And, by new lore so added to the old,

Take each step higher over the brute's head.

This grew the only life, the pleasure-house,

Watch-tower and treasure-fortress of the soul,

Which whole surrounding flats of natural life

Seemed only fit to yield subsistence to;

A tower that crowns a country. But alas,

40 The soul now climbs it just to perish there!

For thence we have discovered ('tis no dream —

We know this, which we had not else perceived)

That there's a world of capability

For joy, spread round about us, meant for us,

Inviting us; and still the soul craves all,

And still the flesh replies, "Take no jot more

"Than ere thou clombst the tower to look abroad!

"Nay, so much less as that fatigue has brought "Deduction to it." We struggle, fain to enlarge

Our bounded physical recipiency,

Increase our power, supply fresh oil to life,

Repair the waste of age and sickness: no,

It skills not! life's inadequate to joy,

As the soul sees joy, tempting life to take.

They praise a fountain in my garden here

Wherein a Naiad sends the water-bow

Thin from her tube; she smiles to see it rise.

What if I told her, it is just a thread

From that great river which the hills shut up,

And mock her with my leave to take the same?

The artificer has given her one small tube

Past power to widen or exchange — what boots

To know she might spout oceans if she could?

She cannot lift beyond her first thin thread:

And so a man can use but a man's joy

While he sees God's. Is it for Zeus to boast,

"See, man, how happy I live, and despair —

"That I may be still happier — for thy use!"

If this were so, we could not thank our lord,

As hearts beat on to doing; 'tis not so —

Malice it is not. Is it carelessness?

Still, no. If care — where is the sign? I ask,

And get no answer, and agree in sum,

O king, with thy profound discouragement,

Who seest the wider but to sigh the more.

Most progress is most failure: thou sayest well.

The last point now: — thou dost except a case —

Holding joy not impossible to one

With artist-gifts — to such a man as I

Who leave behind me living works indeed; 8

For, such a poem, such a painting lives.

What? dost thou verily trip upon a word,

Confound the accurate view of what joy is (Caught somewhat clearer by my eyes than thine)

With feeling joy? confound the knowing how

And showing how to live (my faculty)

With actual living? — Otherwise
 Where is the artist's vantage o'er the king?
 Because in my great epos I display
 How divers men young, strong, fair, wise, can act —
 Is this as though I acted? if I paint, Carve the young Phœbus, am I therefore young?
 Methinks I'm older that I bowed myself
 The many years of pain that taught me
 art!
 Indeed, to know is something, and to prove 20 How all this beauty might be enjoyed, is
 more:
 But, knowing nought, to enjoy is something
 too.
 Yon rower, with the moulded muscles
 there,
 Lowering the sail, is nearer it than I.
 I can write love-odes: thy fair slave's an ode.
 I get to sing of love, when grown too grey
 For being beloved: she turns to that young
 man,
 The muscles all a-ripple on his back.
 I know the joy of kingship: well, thou art
 king!

"But," sayest thou — (and I marvel, I
 repeat,
 20 To find thee trip on such a mere word)
 "what
 "Thou writest, paintest, stays; that does not die:
 "Sappho survives, because we sing her
 songs,
 "And Æschylus, because we read his plays!"
 Why, if they live still, let them come and
 take Thy slave in my despite, drink from thy
 cup,
 Speak in my place. Thou diest while I survive?
 Say rather that my fate is deadlier still,
 In this, that every day my sense of joy Grows more acute, my soul (intensified 30 By power and insight) more enlarged, more keen;
 While every day my hairs fall more and
 more,
 My hand shakes, and the heavy years increase —
 The horror quickening still from year to
 year,
 The consummation coming past escape
 When I shall know most, and yet least enjoy —
 When all my works wherein I prove my
 worth,
 Being present still to mock me in men's mouths,
 Alive still, in the praise of such as thou,
 I, I the feeling, thinking, acting man,

The man who loved his life so over-much, 40
 Sleep in my urn. It is so horrible,
 I dare at times imagine to my need
 Some future state revealed to us by Zeus, Unlimited in capability
 For joy, as this is in desire for joy,
 — To seek which, the joy-hunger forces us:
 That, stung by straitness of our life, made strait
 On purpose to make prized the life at large —
 Freed by the throbbing impulse we call
 death,
 We burst there as the worm into the fly, 50
 Who, while a worm still, wants his wings.
 But no!
 Zeus has not yet revealed it; and alas,
 He must have done so, were it possible!

Live long and happy, and in that thought
 die:
 Glad for what was! Farewell. And for
 the rest,
 I cannot tell thy messenger aright
 Where to deliver what he bears of thine
 To one called Paulus; we have heard his fame
 Indeed, if Christus be not one with him —
 I know not, nor am troubled much to 60
 know.
 Thou canst not think a mere barbarian
 Jew,
 As Paulus proves to be, one circumcised,
 Hath access to a secret shut from us?
 Thou wrongest our philosophy, O king,
 In stooping to inquire of such an one,
 As if his answer could impose at all!
 He writeth, doth he? well, and he may write.
 Oh, the Jew findeth scholars! certain slaves
 Who touched on this same isle, preached him and Christ;
 And (as I gathered from a bystander) 70
 Their doctrine could be held by no sane
 man.

RUDEL TO THE LADY OF TRIPOLI

I.

I KNOW a Mount, the gracious Sun perceives
 First, when he visits, last, too, when he leaves
 The world; and, vainly favoured, it repays
 The day-long glory of his steadfast gaze
 By no change of its large calm front of snow.
 And underneath the Mount, a Flower I
 know,
 He cannot have perceived, that changes
 ever
 At his approach; and, in the lost endeavour

To live his life, has parted, one by one,
With all a flower's true graces, for the grace
Of being but a foolish mimic sun,
With ray-like florets round a disk-like
face.

Men nobly call by many a name the Mount
As over many a land of theirs its large Calm front of snow like a triumphal targe
Is reared, and still with old names, fresh names vie,

Each to its proper praise and own account:

10 Men call the Flower, the Sunflower, sportively.

II.

Oh, Angel of the East, one, one gold look Across the waters to this twilight nook,
— The far sad waters, Angel, to this nook!

III.

Dear Pilgrim, art thou for the East indeed?

Go! — saying ever as thou dost proceed,
That I, French Rudel, choose for my device

20 A sunflower outspread like a sacrifice
Before its idol. See! These inexpert
And hurried fingers could not fail to hurt
The woven picture; 'tis a woman's skill
Indeed; but nothing baffled me, so, ill Or well, the work is finished. Say, men feed

On songs I sing, and therefore bask the bees

On my flower's breast as on a platform
broad:

But, as the flower's concern is not for these
But solely for the sun, so men applaud
In vain this Rudel, he not looking here
But to the East — the East! Go, say this, Pilgrim dear!

ONE WORD MORE.¹

TO E. B. B.

1855.

I.

30 THERE they are, my fifty men and women
Naming me the fifty poems finished!
Take them, Love, the book and me together:

Where the heart lies, let the brain lie also.

II.

Rafael made a century of sonnets,²
Made and wrote them in a certain volume

¹ [Originally appended to the collection of Poems called "Men and Women," the greater portion of which has now been, more correctly, distributed under the other titles of this edition. — R. B.]

² There is no reason to believe this to be the fact.

Dinted with the silver-pointed pencil
Else he only used to draw Madonnas:
These, the world might view — but one,
the volume.

Who that one, you ask? Your heart instructs you.

Did she live and love it all her life-time?

Did she drop, his lady of the sonnets³

Die, and let it drop beside her pillow

Where it lay in place of Rafael's glory,

Rafael's cheek so duteous and so loving —

Cheek, the world was wont to hail a

painter's,

Rafael's cheek, her love had turned a poet's?

III.

You and I would rather read that volume,

(Taken to his beating bosom by it)

Lean and list the bosom-beats of Rafael,

Would we not? than wonder at Madonnas —

Her, San Sisto⁴ names, and Her, Foligno,⁵

Her, that visits Florence⁶ in a vision,

Her, that's left with lilies in the Louvre⁷ —

Seen by us and all the world in circle.

IV.

You and I will never read that volume.⁸

Guido Reni, like his own eye's apple

Guarded long the treasure-book and loved

it.

Guido Reni dying, all Bologna

Cried, and the world cried too, "Ours, the treasure!"

Suddenly, as rare things will, it vanished.

V.

Dante once prepared to paint an angel: 60

Whom to please? You whisper "Beatrice."

While he mused and traced it and retraced

it,

(Peradventure with a pen corroded

Still by drops of that hot ink he dipped for,

When, his left-hand i' the hair o' the

wicked,

Back he held the brow and pricked its stigma,

Bit into the live man's flesh for parchment,

Loosed him, laughed to see the writing

rankle,

Let the wretch go festering through

Florence) —

Dante, who loved well because he hated, 7

Hated wickedness that hinders loving,

Dante standing, studying his angel, —

³ La Fornarina.

⁴ In Dresden.

⁵ In the Vatican.

⁶ In the Pitti Palace.

⁷ La Belle Jardinière, in the Louvre.

⁸ Really a book of drawings, not sonnets.

In there broke the folk of his Inferno.
Says he — "Certain people of importance" (Such he gave his daily dreadful line to) "Entered and would seize, forsooth, the poet."
Says the poet — "Then I stopped my painting."

VI.

You and I would rather see that angel,
Painted by the tenderness of Dante,
Would we not? — than read a fresh Inferno.

VII.

You and I will never see that picture.
While he mused on love and Beatrice,
While he softened o'er his outlined angel,
In they broke, those "people of importance."
We and Bice¹ bear the loss for ever.

VIII.

What of Rafael's sonnets, Dante's picture?
This: no artist lives and loves, that longs
not
Once, and only once, and for one only,
(Ah, the prize!) to find his love a language
Fit and fair and simple and sufficient —
Using nature that's an art to others,
Not, this one time, art that's turned his nature.
Ay of all the artists living, loving,
None but would forego his proper dowry, —
Does he paint? he fain would write a poem, —
Does he write? he fain would paint a picture,
Put to proof art alien to the artist's,
Once, and only once, and for one only,
So to be the man and leave the artist,
Gain the man's joy, miss the artist's sorrow.

IX.

Wherefore? Heaven's gift takes earth's abatement!
He who smites the rock and spreads the water,
Bidding drink and live a crowd beneath him,
Even he, the minute makes immortal, Proves, perchance, but mortal in the minute,
Desecrates, belike, the deed in doing.
While he smites, how can he but remember,
So he smote before, in such a peril,
When they stood and mocked — "Shall smiting help us?"
When they drank and sneered — "A stroke is easy!"
When they wiped their mouths and went their journey,
Throwing him for thanks — "But drought was pleasant."

¹ Beatrice.

Thus old memories mar the actual triumph;
Thus the doing savours of disrelish;
Thus achievement lacks a gracious somewhat;
O'er-importuned brows becloud the mandate,
Carelessness or consciousness — the gesture.
For he bears an ancient wrong about him,
Sees and knows again those phalanxed
faces,
Hears, yet one time more, the 'customed prelude —
"How shouldst thou, of all men, smite, and save us?"
Guesses what is like to prove the sequel —
"Egypt's flesh-pots — nay, the drought was better."

X.

Oh, the crowd must have emphatic
warrant!
Theirs, the Sinai-forehead's cloven brilliance,
Right-arm's rod-sweep, tongue's imperial fiat.
Never dares the man put off the prophet.

XI.

Did he love one face from out the thousands,
(Were she Jethro's daughter, white and wisely,
Were she but the Æthiopian bondslave,)
He would envy yon dumb patient camel,
Keeping a reserve of scanty water
Meant to save his own life in the desert
Ready in the desert to deliver (Kneeling down to let his breast be opened)
Hoard and life together for his mistress.

XII.

I shall never, in the years remaining,
Paint you pictures, no, nor carve you statues,
Make you music that should all-express
me;
So it seems: I stand on my attainment.
This of verse alone, one life allows me;
Verse and nothing else have I to give you.
Other heights in other lives, God willing:
All the gifts from all the heights, your own,
Love!

XIII.

Yet a semblance of resource avails us — Shade so finely touched, love's sense must seize it.
Take these lines, look lovingly and nearly,
Lines I write the first time and the last
time.
He who works in fresco, steals a hair-brush

Curbs the liberal hand, subservient proudly,
Cramps his spirit, crowds its all in little,
Makes a strange art of an art familiar,
Fills his lady's missal-marge with flowerets.
He who blows thro' bronze, may breathe
thro' silver,
Fitably serenade a slumbrous princess.
He who writes, may write for once as I do.

XIV.

Love, you saw me gather men and women,
Live or dead or fashioned by my fancy,
10 Enter each and all, and use their service, Speak from every mouth, — the speech, a poem.

Hardly shall I tell my joys and sorrows,
Hopes and fears, belief and disbelieving:
I am mine and yours — the rest be all
men's,
Karshish, Cleon, Norbert and the fifty.
Let me speak this once in my true person,
Not as Lippo, Roland or Andrea,
Though the fruit of speech be just this
sentence:

Pray you, look on these my men and women,

20 Take and keep my fifty poems finished;
Where my heart lies, let my brain lie also!
Poor the speech; be how I speak, for all things.

XV.

Not but that you know me! Lo, the moon's
self!

Here in London, yonder late in Florence, Still we find her face, the thrice-transfigured.

Curving on a sky imbrued with colour,
Drifted over Fiesole by twilight,
Came she, our new crescent of a hair'sbreadth.

Full she flared it, lamping Samminiato,¹ 30 Rounder 'twixt the cypresses and rounder,
Perfect till the nightingales applauded.
Now, a piece of her old self, impoverished,
Hard to greet, she traverses the house-roofs,

Hurries with unhandsome thrift of silver,
Goes dispiritedly, glad to finish.

XVI.

What, there's nothing in the moon noteworthy?

Nay: for if that moon could love a mortal,
Use, to charm him (so to fit a fancy),
All her magic ('tis the old sweet mythos),

40 She would turn a new side to her mortal, Side unseen of herdsman, huntsman, steersman —

Blank to Zoroaster on his terrace,
Blind to Galileo on his turret,
Dumb to Homer, dumb to Keats — him,
even!

Think, the wonder of the moonstruck
mortal —

When she turns round, comes again in
heaven,

Opens out anew for worse or better!
Proves she like some portent of an iceberg
Swimming full upon the ship it founders, Hungry with huge teeth of splintered 5 crystals?

Proves she as the paved work of a sapphire Seen by Moses when he climbed the mountain?

Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu Climbed and saw the very God, the Highest,

Stand upon the paved work of a sapphire.
Like the bodied heaven in his clearness

Shone the stone, the sapphire of that paved work,

When they ate and drank and saw God also!

XVII.

What were seen? None knows, none ever shall know.

Only this is sure — the sight were other, 6
Not the moon's same side, born late in Florence,

Dying now impoverished here in London.
God be thanked, the meanest of his creatures

Boasts two soul-sides, one to face the world with,

One to show a woman when he loves her!

XVIII.

This I say of me, but think of you, Love!
This to you — yourself my moon of poets!
Ah, but that's the world's side, there's the wonder,

Thus they see you, praise you, think they know you!

There, in turn I stand with them and praise you —

Out of my own self, I dare to phrase it.
But the best is when I glide from out them,
Cross a step or two of dubious twilight,
Come out on the other side, the novel Silent silver lights and darks undreamed of,
Where I hush and bless myself with silence.

XIX.

Oh, their Rafael of the dear Madonnas,
Oh, their Dante of the dread Inferno, Wrote one song — and in my brain I sing
it,

Drew one angel — borne, see, on my bosom!

R. B.

IN A BALCONY.

1855.

IN A BALCONY.

PERSONS.

NORBERT.
 CONSTANCE.
 THE QUEEN.

CONSTANCE and NORBERT.

Norbert. Now!

Constance. Not now!

Norbert. Give me them again, those hands:

Put them upon my forehead, how it throbs!
 Press them before my eyes, the fire comes through!

You cruellest, you dearest in the world,
 Let me! The Queen must grant whate'er I ask —

How can I gain you and not ask the Queen?

There she stays waiting for me, here stand you;

Some time or other this was to be asked;
 Now is the one time — what I ask, I gain:

Let me ask now, Love! Constance. Do, and ruin us.

Norbert. Let it be now, Love! All my soul breaks forth.

How I do love you! Give my love its way!
 A man can have but one life and one death,
 One heaven, one hell. Let me fulfil my fate —

Grant me my heaven now! Let me know you mine,

Prove you mine, write my name upon your brow,

Hold you and have you, and then die away,
 If God please, with completion in my soul!

Constance. I am not yours then? How content this man!

I am not his — who change into himself,
 Have passed into his heart and beat its beats,

Who give my hands to him, my eyes, my hair,

Give all that was of me away to him —
 So well, that now, my spirit turned his own,

Takes part with him against the woman here,

Bids him not stumble at so mere a straw
 As caring that the world be cognisant

How he loves her and how she worships him,

You have this woman, not as yet that world.

Go on, I bid, nor stop to care for me 30
 By saving what I cease to care about,

The courtly name and pride of circumstance —

The name you'll pick up and be cumbered with

Just for the poor parade's sake, nothing more;

Just that the world may slip from under you —

Just that the world may cry "So much for him —

"The man predestined to the heap of crowns:

"There goes his chance of winning one, at least!"

Norbert. The world!

Constance. You love it. Love me quite as well,

And see if I shall pray for this in vain! 40
 Why must you ponder what it knows or thinks?

Norbert. You pray for — what, in vain?

Constance. Oh my heart's heart,
 How I do love you, Norbert! That is right:

But listen, or I take my hands away!

You say, "let it be now": you would go now

And tell the Queen, perhaps six steps from us,

You love me — so you do, thank God!

Norbert. Thank God!

Constance. Yes, Norbert, — but you fain would tell your love,

And, what succeeds the telling, ask of her My hand. Now take this rose and look 50 at it,

Listening to me. You are the minister,
 The Queen's first favourite, nor without a cause.

To-night completes your wonderful year's-work

(This palace-feast is held to celebrate)
 Made memorable by her life's success,

The junction of two crowns, on her sole head,

Her house had only dreamed of anciently:
 That this mere dream is grown a stable truth,

To-night's feast makes authentic. Whose the praise?

Whose genius, patience, energy, achieved
What turned the many heads and broke the hearts?

You are the fate, your minute's in the
heaven.

Next comes the Queen's turn. "Name your own reward!"

With leave to clench the past, chain the
to-come,

Put out an arm and touch and take the sun
And fix it ever full-faced on your earth,
Possess yourself supremely of her life, —
You choose the single thing she will not grant;

10 Nay, very declaration of which choice
Will turn the scale and neutralise your
work:

At best she will forgive you, if she can.
You think I'll let you choose — her cousin's
hand?

Norbert. Wait. First, do you retain your old belief

The Queen is generous, — nay, is just?

Constance. There, there!
So men make women love them, while they
know

No more of women's hearts than . . .
look you here,

You that are just and generous beside,
Make it your own case! For example
now,

20 I'll say — I let you kiss me, hold my hands —

Why? do you know why? I'll instruct you, then —

The kiss, because you have a name at
court;

This hand and this, that you may shut in
each

A jewel, if you please to pick up such.
That's horrible? Apply it to the Queen — Suppose I am the Queen to whom you
speak:

"I was a nameless man; you needed me:
"Why did I proffer you my aid? there
stood

"A certain pretty cousin at your side.

30 "Why did I make such common cause
with you?

"Access to her had not been easy else.
"You give my labour here abundant
praise?

"Faith, labour, which she overlooked, grew play.

"How shall your gratitude discharge
itself?

"Give me her hand!"

Norbert. And still I urge the same.
Is the Queen just? just — generous or no!

Constance. Yes, just. You love a rose;
no harm in that:

But was it for the rose's sake or mine
You put it in your bosom? mine, you
said —

Then, mine you still must say or else be
false. 40

You told the Queen you served her for herself;

If so, to serve her was to serve yourself,
She thinks, for all your unbelieving face!
I know her. In the hall, six steps from us,
One sees the twenty pictures; there's a
life

Better than life, and yet no life at all.
Conceive her born in such a magic dome,
Pictures all round her! why, she sees the
world,

Can recognise its given things and facts,
The fight of giants or the feast of gods, 50
Sages in senate, beauties at the bath, Chases and battles, the whole earth's display,

Landscape and sea-piece, down to flowers and fruit —

And who shall question that she knows
them all,

In better semblance than the things out-
side?

Yet bring into the silent gallery
Some live thing to contrast in breath and
blood,

Some lion, with the painted lion there —
You think she'll understand composedly?

— Say, "that's his fellow in the hunting-piece 60

"Yonder, I've turned to praise a hundred
times?"

Not so. Her knowledge of our actual
earth,

Its hopes and fears, concerns and sympathies,

Must be too far, too mediate, too unreal.
The real exists for us outside, not her:

How should it, with that life in these four walls —

That father and that mother, first to last No father and no mother — friends, a
heap,

Lovers, no lack — a husband in due time,
And every one of them alike a lie! 70

Things painted by a Rubens out of nought Into what kindness, friendship, love should
be;

All better, all more grandiose than the life,
Only no life; mere cloth and surface-
paint,

You feel, while you admire. How should she feel?

Yet now that she has stood thus fifty years
The sole spectator in that gallery,

You think to bring this warm real struggling love

In to her of a sudden, and suppose She'll keep her state untroubled? Here's 80

the truth —
She'll apprehend truth's value at a glance,
Prefer it to the pictured loyalty?

You only have to say, "so men are made,

"For this they act; the thing has many names,

"But this the right one: and now, Queen, be just!"

Your life slips back; you lose her at the word:

You do not even for amends gain me.

He will not understand; oh, Norbert, Norbert,

Do you not understand?

Norbert. The Queen's the Queen: I am myself — no picture, but alive

In every nerve and every muscle, here

At the palace-window o'er the people's street,

As she in the gallery where the pictures glow:

The good of life is precious to us both. She cannot love; what do I want with rule?

When first I saw your face a year ago

I knew my life's good, my soul heard one voice —

"The woman yonder, there's no use of life
"But just to obtain her! heap earth's woes in one

"And bear them — make a pile of all earth's joys

"And spurn them, as they help or help not this;

"Only, obtain her!" How was it to be?

I found you were the cousin of the Queen;

I must then serve the Queen to get to you. No other way. Suppose there had been one,

And I, by saying prayers to some white star With promise of my body and my soul,

Might gain you, — should I pray the star or no?

Instead, there was the Queen to serve! I served,

Helped, did what other servants failed to do.

Neither she sought nor I declared my end. Her good is hers, my recompense be mine, —

I therefore name you as that recompense. She dreamed that such a thing could never be?

Let her wake now. She thinks there was more cause

In love of power, high fame, pure loyalty? Perhaps she fancies men wear out their lives

Chasing such shades. Then, I've a fancy too;

I worked because I want you with my soul:

I therefore ask your hand. Let it be now!

Constance. Had I not loved you from the very first,

Were I not yours, could we not steal out thus

So wickedly, so wildly, and so well,

So wickedly, so wildly, and so well,

You might become impatient. What's conceived

Of us without here, by the folk within?

Where are you now? immersed in cares of state —

Where am I now? intent on festal robes — We two, embracing under death's spread hand!

What was this thought for, what that scruple of yours

Which broke the council up? — to bring about

One minute's meeting in the corridor! And then the sudden sleights, strange secrecies,

Complots inscrutable, deep telegraphs, Long-planned chance-meetings, hazards of a lock,

"Does she know? does she not know? saved or lost?"

A year of this compression's ecstasy All goes for nothing! you would give this up

For the old way, the open way, the world's, His way who beats, and his who sells his wife!

What tempts you? — their notorious happiness

Makes you ashamed of ours? The best you'll gain

Will be — the Queen grants all that you require,

Concedes the cousin, rids herself of you And me at once, and gives us ample leave

To live like our five hundred happy friends.

The world will show us with officious hand Our chamber-entry, and stand sentinel

Where we so oft have stolen across its traps! Get the world's warrant, ring the falcons' feet,

And make it duty to be bold and swift, Which long ago was nature. Have it so!

We never hawked by rights till flung from fist?

Oh, the man's thought! no woman's such a fool.

Norbert. Yes, the man's thought and my thought, which is more —

One made to love you, let the world take note!

Have I done worthy work? be love's the praise,

Though hampered by restrictions, barred against

By set forms, blinded by forced secrecies! Set free my love, and see what love can do

Shown in my life — what work will spring from that!

The world is used to have its business done On other grounds, find great effects produced

For power's sake, fame's sake, motives in men's mouth.

For power's sake, fame's sake, motives in men's mouth.

So, good: but let my low ground shame their high!
 Truth is the strong thing. Let man's life be true!
 And love's the truth of mine. Time prove
 the rest!
 I choose to wear you stamped all over me,
 Your name upon my forehead and my
 breast,
 You, from the sword's blade to the ribbon's
 edge,
 That men may see, all over, you in me —
 That pale loves may die out of their pretence
 In face of mine, shames thrown on love fall
 off.
 10 Permit this, Constance! Love has been so long Subdued in me, eating me through and
 through,
 That now 'tis all of me and must have way.
 Think of my work, that chaos of intrigues, Those hopes and fears, surprises and delays,
 That long endeavour, earnest, patient,
 slow,
 Trembling at last to its assured result:
 Then think of this revulsion! I resume Life after death, (it is no less than life, After such long unlovely labouring days)
 20 And liberate to beauty life's great need O' the beautiful, which, while it prompted
 work, Suppressed itself erewhile. This eve's the
 time,
 This eve intense with yon first trembling
 star
 We seem to pant and reach; scarce aught
 between
 The earth that rises and the heaven that bends;
 All nature self-abandoned, every tree
 Flung as it will, pursuing its own thoughts
 And fixed so, every flower and every weed,
 No pride, no shame, no victory, no defeat;
 30 All under God, each measured by itself.
 These statues round us stand abrupt, distinct,
 The strong in strength, the weak in weakness fixed,
 The Muse for ever wedded to her lyre, Nymph to her fawn, and Silence to her
 rose:
 See God's approval on his universe!
 Let us do so — aspire to live as these In harmony with truth, ourselves being
 true!
 Take the first way, and let the second come!
 My first is to possess myself of you;
 40 The music sets the march-step — forward,
 then!
 And there's the Queen, I go to claim you of,
 The world to witness, wonder and applaud.
 Our flower of life breaks open. No delay!

Constance. And so shall we be ruined,
 both of us.
 Norbert, I know her to the skin and bone:
 You do not know her, were not born to it,
 To feel what she can see or cannot see.
 Love, she is generous, — ay, despite your
 smile,
 Generous as you are: for, in that thin frame Pain-twisted, punctured through and 5 through with cares,
 There lived a lavish soul until it starved, Debarred of healthy food. Look to the
 soul —
 Pity that, stoop to that, ere you begin (The true man's-way) on justice and your rights,
 Exactions and acquittance of the past!
 Begin so — see what justice she will deal!
 We women hate a debt as men a gift.
 Suppose her some poor keeper of a school Whose business is to sit thro' summer months
 And dole out children leave to go and play, 60 Herself superior to such lightness — she
 In the arm-chair's state and pedagogic
 pomp —
 To the life, the laughter, sun and youth
 outside:
 We wonder such a face looks black on us?
 I do not bid you wake her tenderness, (That were vain truly — none is left to wake)
 But let her think her justice is engaged
 To take the shape of tenderness, and mark
 If she'll not coldly pay its warmest debt!
 Does she love me, I ask you? not a whit: 70
 Yet, thinking that her justice was engaged
 To help a kinswoman, she took me up — Did more on that bare ground than other loves
 Would do on greater argument. For me,
 I have no equivalent of such cold kind
 To pay her with, but love alone to give
 If I give anything. I give her love:
 I feel I ought to help her, and I will.
 So, for her sake, as yours, I tell you twice
 That women hate a debt as men a gift. 80
 If I were you, I could obtain this grace —
 Could lay the whole I did to love's account,
 Nor yet be very false as courtiers go —
 Declaring my success was recompense;
 It would be so, in fact: what were it else?
 And then, once loose her generosity, —
 Oh, how I see it! — then, were I but you,
 To turn it, let it seem to move itself,
 And make it offer what I really take,
 Accepting just, in the poor cousin's hand, 90
 Her value as the next thing to the Queen's —
 Since none love Queens directly, none dare
 that,
 And a thing's shadow or a name's mere echo
 Suffices those who miss the name and thing!

You pick up just a ribbon she has worn,
To keep in proof how near her breath you
came.

Say, I'm so near I seem a piece of her — Ask for me that way — (oh, you under stand)

You'd find the same gift yielded with a
grace,

Which, if you make the least show to extort . . .

— You'll see! and when you have ruined
both of us,

Dissertate on the Queen's ingratitude!

Norbert. Then, if I turn it that way, you consent?

o 'Tis not my way; I have more hope in
truth:

Still, if you won't have truth — why, this
indeed,

Were scarcely false, as I'd express the sense.
Will you remain here?

Constance. O best heart of mine,
How I have loved you! then, you take my
way?

Are mine as you have been her minister,
Work out my thought, give it effect for me,
Paint plain my poor conceit and make it
serve?

I owe that withered woman everything — Life, fortune, you, remember! Take my
part —

20 Help me to pay her! Stand upon your rights?

You, with my rose, my hands, my heart on
you?

Your rights are mine — you have no rights but mine.

Norbert. Remain here. How you know
me!

Constance. Ah, but still — [He breaks from her: she remains.
Dance-music from within.

Enter the QUEEN.

Queen. Constance? She is here as he said. Speak quick!

Is it so? Is it true or false? One word!

Constance. True.

Queen. Mercifullest Mother, thanks to thee!

Constance. Madam?

Queen. I love you, Constance, from my soul.

Now say once more, with any words you
will,

'Tis true, all true, as true as that I speak.

30 Constance. Why should you doubt it?

Queen. Ah, why doubt?
why doubt?

Dear, make me see it! Do you see it so?
None see themselves; another sees them
best.

You say "why doubt it?" — you see him
and me.

It is because the Mother has such grace
That if we had but faith — wherein we fail —

Whate'er we yearn for would be granted us;
Yet still we let our whims prescribe despair,
Our fancies thwart and cramp our will and
power,

And while, accepting life, abjure its use.
Constance. I had abjured the hope of love 40

And being loved, as truly as yon palm
The hope of seeing Egypt from that plot.

Constance. Heaven!

Queen. But it was so, Constance,
it was so!

Men say — or do men say it? fancies
say —

"Stop here, your life is set, you are grown
old.

"Too late — no love for you, too late for
love —

"Leave love to girls. Be queen: let Constance love."

One takes the hint — half meets it like a
child,

Ashamed at any feelings that oppose.
"Oh love, true, never think of love 50

again!

"I am a queen: I rule, not love forsooth."
So it goes on; so a face grows like this,

Hair like this hair, poor arms as lean as
these,

Till, — nay, it does not end so, I thank
God!

Constance. I cannot understand —
Queen. The happier you!

Constance. I know not how it is with men:
For women (I am a woman now like you)

There is no good of life but love — but
love!

What else looks good, is some shade flung from love;

Love gilds it, gives it worth. Be warned 60
by me,

Never you cheat yourself one instant!
Love,

Give love, ask only love, and leave the
rest!

O Constance, how I love you!

Constance. I love you.

Queen. I do believe that all is come through you.

I took you to my heart to keep it warm
When the last chance of love seemed dead

in me;
I thought your fresh youth warmed my withered heart.

Oh, I am very old now, am I not?
Not so! it is true and it shall be true!

Constance. Tell it me: let me judge if 70 true or false.

Queen. Ah, but I fear you! you will look at me,

And say, "she's old, she's grown unlovely
quite

"Who ne'er was beauteous: men want beauty still."

Well, so I feared — the curse! so I felt sure!

Constance. Be calm. And now you feel not sure, you say?

Queen. Constance, he came, — the coming was not strange

Do not I stand and see men come and go? I turned a half-look from my pedestal

Where I grow marble — "one young man the more!

"He will love some one; that is nought to me:

"What would he with my marble stateliness?"

10 Yet this seemed somewhat worse than heretofore;

The man more gracious, youthful, like a god,

And I still older, with less flesh to change — We two those dear extremes that long to touch.

It seemed still harder when he first began To labour at those state-affairs, absorbed

The old way for the old end — interest. Oh, to live with a thousand beating hearts

Around you, swift eyes, serviceable hands, Professing they've no care but for your cause,

20 Thought but to help you, love but for yourself, —

And you the marble statue all the time They praise and point at as preferred to life,

Yet leave for the first breathing woman's smile,

First dancer's, gipsy's, or street baladine's!¹

Why, how I have ground my teeth to hear men's speech

Stifled for fear it should alarm my ear, Their gait subdued lest step should startle me,

Their eyes declined, such queendom to respect,

Their hands alert, such treasure to preserve,

30 While not a man of them broke rank and spoke,

Wrote me a vulgar letter all of love, Or caught my hand and pressed it like a hand!

There have been moments, if the sentinel Lowering his halbert to salute the queen,

Had flung it brutally and clasped my knees, I would have stooped and kissed him with my soul.

Constance. Who could have comprehended?

Queen. Ay, who — who?

Why, no one, Constance, but this one who did.

¹ Dancer's.

Not they, not you, not I. Even now perhaps

It comes too late — would you but tell the truth.

Constance. I wait to tell it.

Queen. Well, you see, he came, Outfaced the others, did a work this year

Exceeds in value all was ever done, You know — it is not I who say it — all

Say it. And so (a second pang and worse) I grew aware not only of what he did,

But why so wondrously. Oh, never work Like his was done for work's ignoble sake — Souls need a finer aim to light and lure!

I felt, I saw, he loved — loved somebody. 50 And Constance, my dear Constance, do you know,

I did believe this while 'twas you he loved. Constance. Me, madam?

Queen. It did seem to me, your face Met him where'er he looked: and whom but you Was such a man to love? It seemed to me,

You saw he loved you, and approved his love,

And both of you were in intelligence. You could not loiter in that garden, step

Into this balcony, but I straight was stung And forced to understand. It seemed so 60 true,

So right, so beautiful, so like you both, That all this work should have been done by him Not for the vulgar hope of recompense, But that at last — suppose, some night like this Borne on to claim his due reward of me, He might say "Give her hand and pay me so." And I (O Constance, you shall love me now!)

I thought, surmounting all the bitterness, "And he shall have it. I will make her blest, "My flower of youth, my woman's self 70 that was,

"My happiest woman's self that might have been!

"These two shall have their joy and leave me here."

Yes — yes! Constance. Thanks!

Queen. And the word was on my lips

When he burst in upon me. I looked to hear

A mere calm statement of his just desire For payment of his labour. When — O heaven, How can I tell you? lightning on my eyes

And thunder in my ears proved that first word

Which told 'twas love of me, of me, did all —

He loved me — from the first step to the last,

Loved me!

Constance. You hardly saw, scarce heard him speak

Of love: what if you should mistake?

Queen. No, no — No mistake! Ha, there shall be no mistake!

He had not dared to hint the love he felt — You were my reflex — (how I understood!) He said you were the ribbon I had worn, He kissed my hand, he looked into my eyes,

And love, love came at end of every phrase.

Love is begun; this much is come to pass: The rest is easy. Constance, I am yours! I will learn, I will place my life on you, Teach me but how to keep what I have won!

Am I so old? This hair was early grey; But joy ere now has brought hair brown again,

And joy will bring the cheek's red back, I feel.

I could sing once too; that was in my youth. Still, when men paint me, they declare me . . . yes,

Beautiful — for the last French painter did!

I know they flatter somewhat; you are frank —

I trust you. How I loved you from the first!

Some queens would hardly seek a cousin out

And set her by their side to take the eye: I must have felt that good would come from you.

I am not generous — like him — like you! But he is not your lover after all:

It was not you he looked at. Saw you him?

You have not been mistaking words or looks?

He said you were the reflex of myself.

And yet he is not such a paragon To you, to younger women who may choose

Among a thousand Norberts. Speak the truth!

You know you never named his name to me:

You know, I cannot give him up — ah God,

Not up now, even to you!

Constance. Then calm yourself. Queen. See, I am old — look here, you happy girl!

I will not play the fool, deceive — ah, whom?

'Tis all gone: put your cheek beside my cheek

And what a contrast does the moon behold! But then I set my life upon one chance, The last chance and the best — am I not left,

My soul, myself? All women love great men

If young or old; it is in all the tales: Young beauties love old poets who can love —

Why should not he, the poems in my soul, The passionate faith, the pride of sacrifice, Life-long, death-long? I throw them at his feet.

Who cares to see the fountain's very shape, Whether it be a Triton's or a Nymph's That pours the foam, makes rainbows all around?

You could not praise indeed the empty conch;

But I'll pour floods of love and hide myself. How I will love him! Cannot men love love?

Who was a queen and loved a poet once Humpbacked, a dwarf? ah, women can do that!

Well, but men too; at least, they tell you so.

They love so many women in their youth, And even in age they all love whom they please;

And yet the best of them confide to friends That 'tis not beauty makes the lasting love —

They spend a day with such and tire the next:

They like soul — well then, they like phantasy,

Novelty even. Let us confess the truth, Horrible though it be, that prejudice, Prescription . . . curses! they will love a queen.

They will, they do: and will not, does not — he?

Constance. How can he? You are wedded: 'tis a name

We know, but still a bond. Your rank remains,

His rank remains. How can he, nobly souled

As you believe and I incline to think, Aspire to be your favourite, shame and all?

Queen. Hear her! There, there now — could she love like me?

What did I say of smooth-checked youth and grace?

See all it does or could do! so youth loves! Oh, tell him, Constance, you could never do

What I will — you, it was not born in! I Will drive these difficulties far and fast As yonder mists curdling before the moon. I'll use my light too, gloriously retrieve

My youth from its enforced calamity, Dissolve that hateful marriage, and be his.

His own in the eyes alike of God and man.

Constance. You will do — dare do . . .
pause on what you say!

Queen. Hear her! I thank you, sweet, for that surprise.

You have the fair face: for the soul, see
mine!

I have the strong soul: let me teach you,
here.

I think I have borne enough and long
enough,

And patiently enough, the world remarks,
To have my own way now, unblamed by
all.

It does so happen (I rejoice for it)

10 This most unhopèd-for issue cuts the knot.
There's not a better way of settling claims Than this; God sends the accident express:

And were it for my subjects' good, no more,
'Twere best thus ordered. I am thankful
now,

Mute, passive, acquiescent. I receive,
And bless God simply, or should almost
fear

To walk so smoothly to my ends at last.

Why, how I baffle obstacles, spurn fate!
How strong I am! Could Norbert see me now!

20 Constance. Let me consider. It is all too strange.

Queen. You, Constance, learn of me;
do you, like me!

You are young, beautiful: my own, best girl,

You will have many lovers, and love one — Light hair, not hair like Norbert's, to suit
yours:

Taller than he is, since yourself are tall.
Love him, like me! Give all away to him;
Think never of yourself; throw by your
pride,

Hope, fear, — your own good as you saw it once,

And love him simply for his very self.

30 Remember, I (and what am I to you?) Would give up all for one, leave throne, lose life,

Do all but just unlove him! He loves
me.

Constance. He shall.

Queen. You, step inside my inmost heart!

Give me your own heart: let us have one
heart!

I'll come to you for counsel; "this he says,
"This he does; what should this amount to, pray?

"Beseech you, change it into current coin!

"Is that worth kisses? Shall I please him
there?"

And then we'll speak in turn of you —
what else?

Your love, according to your beauty's 40
worth,

For you shall have some noble love, all
gold:

Whom choose you? we will get him at your choice.

— Constance, I leave you. Just a minute
since,

I felt as I must die or be alone

Breathing my soul into an ear like yours:

Now, I would face the world with my new
life,

Wear my new crown. I'll walk around the rooms,

And then come back and tell you how it feels.

How soon a smile of God can change the
world!

How we are made for happiness — how 50
work

Grows play, adversity a winning fight!

True, I have lost so many years: what
then!

Many remain: God has been very good.
You, stay here! 'Tis as different from
dreams,

From the mind's cold calm estimate of
bliss,

As these stone statues from the flesh and
blood.

The comfort thou hast caused mankind,
God's moon!

[She goes out, leaving CONSTANCE.
Dance-music from within.

NORBERT enters.

Norbert. Well? we have but one minute and one word!

Constance. I am yours, Norbert!

Norbert. Yes, mine.

Constance. Not till now!

You were mine. Now I give myself to you. 60

Norbert. Constance?

Constance. Your own! I know the thriftier way

Of giving — haply, 'tis the wiser way.

Meaning to give a treasure, I might dole

Coin after coin out (each, as that were all,

With a new largess still at each despair)

And force you keep in sight the deed, preserve

Exhaustless till the end my part and yours,

My giving and your taking; both our joys

Dying together. Is it the wiser way?

I choose the simpler; I give all at once.

Know what you have to trust to, trade
upon!

Use it, abuse it, — anything but think

Hereafter, "Had I known she loved me so,

"And what my means, I might have thriven with it."

This is your means. I give you all myself.

Norbert. I take you and thank God.

Constance. Look on through years!
We cannot kiss, a second day like this;
Else were this earth no earth.

Norbert. With this day's heat
We shall go on through years of cold.

Constance. So, best!
— I try to see those years — I think I see.
You walk quick and new warmth comes;
you look back

And lay all to the first glow — not sit down
For ever brooding on a day like this While seeing embers whiten and love die.
Yes, love lives best in its effect; and mine,
Full in its own life, yearns to live in yours.

Norbert. Just so. I take and know you all at once.

Your soul is disengaged so easily,
Your face is there, I know you; give me
time,
Let me be proud and think you shall know
me.

My soul is slower: in a life I roll
The minute out whereto you condense
yours —

The whole slow circle round you I must move,

To be just you. I look to a long life 20 To decompose this minute, prove its
worth.

'Tis the sparks' long succession one by one Shall show you, in the end, what fire was crammed

In that mere stone you struck: how could you know,

If it lay ever unproved in your sight,
As now my heart lies? your own warmth would hide

Its coldness, were it cold.

Constance. Put how prove, how?

Norbert. Prove in my life, you ask?

Constance. Quick, Norbert —
how?

Norbert. That's easy told. I count life just a stuff

To try the soul's strength on, educe the
man.

30 Who keeps one end in view makes all things
serve.

As with the body — he who hurls a lance Or heaps up stone on stone, shows strength
alike:

So must I seize and task all means to prove
And show this soul of mine, you crown as yours,

And justify us both.

Constance. Could you write books,
Paint pictures! One sits down in poverty
And writes or paints, with pity for the rich.

Norbert. And loves one's painting and one's writing, then,

And not one's mistress! All is best, believe,

40 And we best as no other than we are.
We live, and they experiment on life —

Those poets, painters, all who stand aloof
To overlook the farther. Let us be The thing they look at! I might take your
face

And write of it and paint it — to what end?
For whom? what pale dictatress in the air Feeds, smiling sadly, her fine ghost-like form

With earth's real blood and breath, the beauteous life

She makes despised for ever? You are
mine,

Made for me, not for others in the world, 50
Nor yet for that which I should call my art,
The cold calm power to see how fair you
look.

I come to you; I leave you not, to write Or paint. You are, I am: let Rubens
there

Paint us!

Constance. So, best!

Norbert. I understand your soul.

You live, and rightly sympathise with life,
With action, power, success. This way is straight;

And time were short beside, to let me
change

The craft my childhood learnt: my craft shall serve.

Men set me here to subjugate, enclose, 60 Manure their barren lives, and force thence fruit

First for themselves, and afterward for me
In the due tithe; the task of some one soul, Through ways of work appointed by the
world.

I am not bid create — men see no star
Transfiguring my brow to warrant that — But find and bind and bring to bear their wills.

So I began: to-night sees how I end.
What if it see, too, power's first outbreak
here

Amid the warmth, surprise and sympathy, 70
And instincts of the heart that teach the
head?

What if the people have discerned at length
The dawn of the next nature, novel brain Whose will they venture in the place of theirs,

Whose work, they trust, shall find them as novel ways

To untried heights which yet he only sees?
I felt it when you kissed me. See this

Queen,
This people — in our phrase, this mass of
men —

See how the mass lies passive to my hand
Now that my hand is plastic, with you by 80
To make the muscles iron! Oh, an end Shall crown this issue as this crowns the
first!

My will be on this people! then, the strain,
The grappling of the potter with his clay,

The long uncertain struggle, — the success
And consummation of the spirit-work,
Some vase shaped to the curl of the god's
lip,

While rounded fair for human sense to see
The Graces in a dance men recognise With turbulent applause and laughs of
heart!

So triumph ever shall renew itself;
Ever shall end in efforts higher yet,
Ever begin . . .

Constance. I ever helping?

Norbert.

Thus!
[As he embraces her, the QUEEN enters.]

10 Constance. Hist, madam! So have I performed my part.

You see your gratitude's true decency,
Norbert? A little slow in seeing it!

Begin, to end the sooner! What's a kiss?

Norbert. Constance?

Constance. Why, must I teach it you again?

You want a witness to your dulness, sir?
What was I saying these ten minutes long?
Then I repeat — when some young handsome man

Like you has acted out a part like yours,
Is pleased to fall in love with one beyond,

20 So very far beyond him, as he says —
So hopelessly in love that but to speak
Would prove him mad, — he thinks judiciously,

And makes some insignificant good soul,
Like me, his friend, adviser, confidant,
And very stalking-horse to cover him
In following after what he dares not face.
When his end's gained — (sir, do you understand?)

When she, he dares not face, has loved him
first,

— May I not say so, madam? — tops his
hope,

30 And overpasses so his wildest dream,
With glad consent of all, and most of her
The confidant who brought the same
about —

Why, in the moment when such joy explodes,

I do hold that the merest gentleman
Will not start rudely from the stalking-horse,

Dismiss it with a "There, enough of you!"
Forget it, show his back unmannerly:

But like a liberal heart will rather turn

And say, "A tingling time of hope was
ours;

40 "Betwixt the fears and falterings, we two lived

"A chanceful time in waiting for the prize:
"The confidant, the Constance, served not ill.

"And though I shall forget her in due time,

"Her use being answered now, as reason
bids.

"Nay as herself bids from her heart of hearts, —

"Still, she has rights, the first thanks go to
her,

"The first good praise goes to the prosperous tool,

"And the first — which is the last — rewarding kiss."

Norbert. Constance, it is a dream —
ah, see, you smile!

Constance. So, now his part being properly performed,

Madam, I turn to you and finish mine

As duly; I do justice in my turn.

Yes, madam, he has loved you — long and
well;

He could not hope to tell you so — 'twas I
Who served to prove your soul accessible,
I led his thoughts on, drew them to their
place

When they had wandered else into despair,
And kept love constant toward its natural
aim.

Enough, my part is played; you stoop half-
way

And meet us royally and spare our fears: 60

'Tis like yourself. He thanks you, so do
I.

Take him — with my full heart! my work is praised

By what comes of it. Be you happy, both!
Yourself — the only one on earth who can — Do all for him, much more than a mere
heart

Which though warm is not useful in its warmth

As the silk vesture of a queen! fold that Around him gently, tenderly. For him —
For him, — he knows his own part!

Norbert. Have you done?

I take the jest at last. Should I speak 70
now?

Was yours the wager, Constance, foolish
child,

Or did you but accept it? Well — at least

You lose by it.

Constance. Nay, madam, 'tis your
turn!

Restrain him still from speech a little more,
And make him happier as more confident!

Pity him, madam, he is timid yet!

Mark, Norbert! Do not shrink now!
Here I yield

My whole right in you to the Queen, observe!

With her go put in practice the great schemes

You teem with, follow the career else 84
closed —

Be all you cannot be except by her!

Behold her! — Madam, say for pity's sake
Anything — frankly say you love him!

Else

He'll not believe it: there's more earnest in His fear than you conceive: I know the man!

Norbert. I know the woman somewhat, and confess

I thought she had jested better: she begins To overcharge her part. I gravely wait Your pleasure, madam: where is my reward?

Queen. Norbert, this wild girl (whom I recognise

Scarce more than you do, in her fancy-fit, Eccentric speech and variable mirth,

Not very wise perhaps and somewhat bold, Yet suitable, the whole night's work being strange)

— May still be right: I may do well to speak

And make authentic what appears a dream To even myself. For, what she says, is true:

Yes, Norbert — what you spoke just now of love,

Devotion, stirred no novel sense in me, But justified a warmth felt long before.

Yes, from the first — I loved you, I shall say:

Strange! but I do grow stronger, now 'tis said.

Your courage helps mine: you did well to speak

To-night, the night that crowns your twelve-months' toil:

But still I had not waited to discern

Your heart so long, believe me! From the first

The source of so much zeal was almost plain,

In absence even of your own words just now

Which hazarded the truth. 'Tis very strange,

But takes a happy ending — in your love Which mine meets: be it so! as you chose me,

So I choose you.

Norbert. And worthily you choose.

I will not be unworthy your esteem, No, madam. I do love you; I will meet

Your nature, now I know it. This was well.

I see, — you dare and you are justified:

But none had ventured such experiment, Less versed than you in nobleness of heart,

Less confident of finding such in me. I joy that thus you test me ere you grant

The dearest richest beauteousest and best Of women to my arms: 'tis like yourself.

So — back again into my part's set words — Devotion to the uttermost is yours,

But no, you cannot, madam, even you, Create in me the love our Constance does.

Or — something truer to the tragic phrase —

Not yon magnolia-bell superb with scent Invites a certain insect — that's myself — But the small eye-flower nearer to the ground.

I take this lady.

Constance. Stay — not hers, the trap —

Stay, Norbert — that mistake were worst of all!

He is too cunning, madam! It was I, I, Norbert, who . . .

Norbert. You, was it, Constance?

Then,

But for the grace of this divinest hour Which gives me you, I might not pardon here!

I am the Queen's; she only knows my brain:

She may experiment upon my heart And I instruct her too by the result.

But you, sweet, you who know me, who so long

Have told my heart-beats over, held my life

In those white hands of yours, — it is not well!

Constance. Tush! I have said it, did I 60 not say it all?

The life, for her — the heart-beats, for her sake!

Norbert. Enough! my cheek grows red, I think. Your test?

There's not the meanest woman in the world,

Not she I least could love in all the world, Whom, did she love me, had love proved itself, I dare insult as you insult me now.

Constance. I could say, if it must be said, "Take back the soul you offer, I keep mine!" But — "Take the soul still quivering on your hand, "The soul so offered, which I cannot use, 70

"And, please you, give it to some playful friend,

"For — what's the trifle he requites me with?"

I, tempt a woman, to amuse a man, That two may mock her heart if it succumb? No: fearing God and standing 'neath his heaven, I would not dare insult a woman so,

Were she the meanest woman in the world, And he, I cared to please, ten emperors!

Constance. Norbert!

Norbert. I love once as I live but once.

What case is this to think or talk about? 80 I love you. Would it mend the case at all If such a step as this killed love in me?

Your part were done: account to God for it!

But mine — could murdered love get up again,

And kneel to whom you please to designate,
And make you mirth? It is too horrible.
You did not know this, Constance? now
you know

That body and soul have each one life,
but one:

And here's my love, here, living, at your feet.

Constance. See the Queen! Norbert
— this one more last word —

If thus you have taken jest for earnest —
thus

Loved me in earnest . . .

Norbert. Ah, no jest holds here!

10 Where is the laughter in which jests break
up,

And what this horror that grows palpable?

Madam — why grasp you thus the balcony?

Have I done ill? Have I not spoken
truth?

How could I other? Was it not your test,
To try me, what my love for Constance
meant?

Madam, your royal soul itself approves,
The first, that I should choose thus! so
one takes

A beggar, — asks him, what would buy his child?

And then approves the expected laugh of scorn

20 Returned as something noble from the rags.
Speak, Constance, I'm the beggar! Ha, what's this?

You two glare each at each like panthers
now.

Constance, the world fades; only you stand there!

You did not, in to-night's wild whirl of
things,

Sell me — your soul of souls, for any price?
No — no — 'tis easy to believe in you!

Was it your love's mad trial to o'ertop
Mine by this vain self-sacrifice? well,
still —

Though I might curse, I love you. I am
love

And cannot change: love's self is at your feet! [The QUEEN goes out.]

Constance. Feel my heart; let it die against your own!

Norbert. Against my own. Explain not; let this be!

This is life's height.

Constance. Yours, yours, yours!

Norbert. You and I —

Why care by what meanders we are here
I' the centre of the labyrinth? Men have died

Trying to find this place, which we have
found

Constance. Found, found!

Norbert. Sweet, never fear what she can do!

We are past harm now.

Constance. On the breast of
God.

I thought of men — as if you were a man.
Tempting him with a crown!

Norbert. This must end here:

It is too perfect.

Constance. There's the music stopped.
What measured heavy tread? It is one blaze

About me and within me.

Norbert. Oh, some death
Will run its sudden finger round this spark

And sever us from the rest!

Constance. And so do well.

Now the doors open.

Norbert. 'Tis the guard comes.

Constance. Kiss!

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

1864.

JAMES LEE'S WIFE.

I. — JAMES LEE'S WIFE SPEAKS AT THE WINDOW.

I.

AH, Love, but a day
And the world has changed!
The sun's away,
And the bird estranged;
The wind has dropped,
And the sky's deranged:
Summer has stopped.

II.

Look in my eyes!
Wilt thou change too?
Should I fear surprise?
Shall I find aught new
In the old and dear,
In the good and true,
With the changing year?

III.

Thou art a man,
But I am thy love.
For the lake, its swan;
For the dell, its dove;
And for thee — (oh, haste!)
Me, to bend above,
Me, to hold embraced.

II. — BY THE FIRESIDE.

I.

Is all our fire of shipwreck wood,
Oak and pine?
Oh, for the ills half-understood,
The dim dead woe
Long ago
Befallen this bitter coast of France!
Well, poor sailors took their chance;
I take mine.

II.

30 A ruddy shaft our fire must shoot
O'er the sea:
Do sailors eye the casement — mute,
Drenched and stark,
From their bark —
And envy, gnash their teeth for hate
O' the warm safe house and happy freight — Thee and me?

III.

God help you, sailors, at your need!
Spare the curse!
For some ships, safe in port indeed, 40
Rot and rust,
Run to dust,
All through worms i' the wood, which crept,
Gnawed our hearts out while we slept:
That is worse.

IV.

Who lived here before us two?
Old-world pairs.
Did a woman ever — would I knew! — Watch the man
With whom began 50
Love's voyage full-sail, — (now, gnash your teeth!)
When planks start, open hell beneath Unawares?

III. — IN THE DOORWAY.

I.

THE swallow has set her six young on the rail,
And looks sea-ward:
The water's in stripes like a snake, olive-pale
To the leeward, —
On the weather-side, black, spotted white with the wind.
"Good fortune departs, and disaster's behind," — Hark, the wind with its wants and its 60 infinite wail!

II.

Our fig-tree, that leaned for the saltness, has furled
Her five fingers,
Each leaf like a hand opened wide to the
world
Where there lingers
No glint of the gold, Summer sent for her
sake:
How the vines writhe in rows, each impaled on its stake!
My heart shrivels up and my spirit shrinks
curled.

III.

Yet here are we two; we have love, house
enough,
With the field there,

This house of four rooms, that field red and rough,

Though it yield there,
For the rabbit that robs, scarce a blade or a bent;
If a magpie alight now, it seems an event;
And they both will be gone at November's rebuff.

IV.

But why must cold spread? but wherefore bring change

To the spirit,
God meant should mate his with an infinite range,

And inherit

His power to put life in the darkness and cold?

Oh, live and love worthily, bear and be bold!

Whom Summer made friends of, let Winter estrangle!

IV. — ALONG THE BEACH.

I.

I WILL be quiet and talk with you,
And reason why you are wrong.
You wanted my love — is that much true?
And so I did love, so I do:
What has come of it all along?

II.

I took you — how could I otherwise?
For a world to me, and more;
For all, love greatens and glorifies
Till God's a-glow, to the loving eyes,
In what was mere earth before.

III.

Yes, earth — yes, mere ignoble earth!
Now do I mis-state, mistake?
Do I wrong your weakness and call it
worth?
Expect all harvest, dread no dearth,
Seal my sense up for your sake?

IV.

Oh, Love, Love, no, Love! not so, indeed!
You were just weak earth, I knew:
With much in you waste, with many a
weed,
And plenty of passions run to seed,
But a little good grain too.

V.

And such as you were, I took you for mine:
Did not you find me yours,
To watch the olive and wait the vine,
And wonder when rivers of oil and wine
Would flow, as the Book assures?

VI.

Well, and if none of these good things
came,

What did the failure prove?

The man was my whole world, all the same, 41
With his flowers to praise or his weeds to
blame,

And, either or both, to love.

VII.

Yet this turns now to a fault — there!
there!

That I do love, watch too long,
And wait too well, and weary and wear;
And 'tis all an old story, and my despair
Fit subject for some new song:

VIII.

"How the light, light love, he has wings to fly

"At suspicion of a bond:

"My wisdom has bidden your pleasure 50
good-bye,

"Which will turn up next in a laughing eye,
"And why should you look beyond?"

V. — ON THE CLIFF.

I.

I LEANED on the turf,
I looked at a rock
Left dry by the surf;
For the turf, to call it grass were to mock:
Dead to the roots, so deep was done
The work of the summer sun.

II.

And the rock lay flat
As an anvil's face:
No iron like that!
Baked dry; of a weed, of a shell, no trace:
Sunshine outside, but ice at the core,
Death's altar by the lone shore.

III.

On the turf, sprang gay
With his films of blue,
No cricket, I'll say,
But a warhorse, barded and chanfroned
too,
The gift of a quixote-mage to his knight,
Real fairy, with wings all right. 70

IV.

On the rock, they scorch
Like a drop of fire
From a brandished torch,
Fall two red fans of a butterfly:
No turf, no rock: in their ugly stead,
See, wonderful blue and red!

V.

Is it not so
 With the minds of men?
 The level and low,
 The burnt and bare, in themselves; but
 then
 With such a blue and red grace, not theirs, —
 Love settling unawares!

VI. — READING A BOOK, UNDER THE CLIFF.

I.

"STILL ailing, Wind? Wilt be appeased
 or no?
 "Which needs the other's office, thou or I?
 "Dost want to be disburthened of a woe,
 "And can, in truth, my voice untie
 "Its links, and let it go?"

II.

"Art thou a dumb wronged thing that would be righted,
 "Entrusting thus thy cause to me?
 Forbear!
 "No tongue can mend such pleadings;
 faith, requited
 "With falsehood, — love, at last aware "Of scorn, — hopes, early blighted, —

III.

"We have them; but I know not any tone
 "So fit as thine to falter forth a sorrow:
 "Dost think men would go mad without a moan,
 "If they knew any way to borrow
 "A pathos like thy own?"

IV.

"Which sigh wouldst mock, of all the sighs? The one
 "So long escaping from lips starved and
 blue,
 "That lasts while on her pallet-bed the nun
 "Stretches her length; her foot comes
 through
 "The straw she shivers on;

V.

"You had not thought she was so tall:
 and spent,
 "Her shrunk lids open, her lean fingers
 shut
 "Close, close, their sharp and livid nails indent
 "The clammy palm; then all is mute:
 "That way, the spirit went.

VI.

"Or wouldst thou rather that I understand "Thy will to help me? — like the dog I
 found
 "Once, pacing sad this solitary strand,
 "Who would not take my food, poor hound,
 "But whined and licked my hand."

VII.

All this, and more, comes from some young man's pride
 Of power to see, — in failure and mis-
 take,
 Relinquishment, disgrace, on every side, —
 Merely examples for his sake, 40
 Helps to his path untried:

VIII.

Instances he must — simply recognise?
 Oh, more than so! — must, with a learner's zeal,
 Make doubly prominent, twice emphasise,
 By added touches that reveal
 The god in babe's disguise.

IX.

Oh, he knows what defeat means, and the
 rest!
 Himself the undefeated that shall be:
 Failure, disgrace, he flings them you to test, —
 His triumph, in eternity 50
 Too plainly manifest!

X.

Whence, judge if he learn forthwith what
 the wind
 Means in its moaning — by the happy
 prompt
 Instinctive way of youth, I mean; for kind Calm years, exacting their accompt
 Of pain, mature the mind:

XI.

And some midsummer morning, at the lull
 Just about daybreak, as he looks across
 A sparkling foreign country, wonderful
 To the sea's edge for gloom and gloss, 60
 Next minute must annul, —

XII.

Then, when the wind begins among the
 vines,
 So low, so low, what shall it say but
 this?
 "Here is the change beginning, here the lines
 "Circumscribe beauty, set to bliss
 "The limit time assigns."

XIII.

Nothing can be as it has been before;
 Better, so call it, only not the same.
 To draw one beauty into our hearts' core,
 And keep it changeless! such our claim;
 So answered, — Never more!

XIV.

Simple? Why this is the old woe o' the
 world;
 Tune, to whose rise and fall we live and
 die.
 Rise with it, then! Rejoice that man is hurled
 From change to change unceasingly,
 10 His soul's wings never furled!

XV.

That's a new question; still replies the fact,
 Nothing endures: the wind moans,
 saying so;
 We moan in acquiescence: there's life's
 pact,
 Perhaps probation — do I know?
 God does: endure his act!

XVI.

Only, for man, how bitter not to grave
 On his soul's hands' palms one fair good wise thing
 Just as he grasped it! For himself, death's wave;
 While time first washes — ah, the sting! —
 20 O'er all he'd sink to save.

VII. — AMONG THE ROCKS.

I.

Oh, good gigantic smile o' the brown old
 earth,
 This autumn morning! How he sets his bones
 To bask i' the sun, and thrusts out knees and feet
 For the ripple to run over in its mirth;
 Listening the while, where on the heap of stones
 The white breast of the sea-lark twitters
 sweet.

II.

That is the doctrine, simple, ancient, true;
 Such is life's trial, as old earth smiles and knows.
 If you loved only what were worth your
 love,
 30 Love were clear gain, and wholly well for
 you:
 Make the low nature better by your throes!
 Give earth yourself, go up for gain above!

VIII. — BESIDE THE DRAWING BOARD.

I.

"As like as a Hand to another Hand!"
 Whoever said that foolish thing,
 Could not have studied to understand
 The counsels of God in fashioning,
 Out of the infinite love of his heart,
 This Hand, whose beauty I praise, apart
 From the world of wonder left to praise,
 If I tried to learn the other ways
 Of love in its skill, or love in its power,
 "As like as a Hand to another Hand":
 Who said that, never took his stand,
 Found and followed, like me, an hour,
 The beauty in this, — how free, how fine
 To fear, almost, — of the limit-line!
 As I looked at this, and learned and drew,
 Drew and learned, and looked again,
 While fast the happy minutes flew,
 Its beauty mounted into my brain,
 50 And a fancy seized me; I was fain
 To efface my work, begin anew,
 Kiss what before I only drew;
 Ay, laying the red chalk 'twixt my lips,
 With soul to help if the mere lips failed,
 I kissed all right where the drawing ailed,
 Kissed fast the grace that somehow slips
 Still from one's soulless finger-tips.

II.

'Tis a clay cast the perfect thing,
 From Hand live once, dead long ago: 60
 Princess-like it wears the ring
 To fancy's eye, by which we know
 That here at length a master found
 His match, a proud lone soul its mate,
 As soaring genius sank to ground,
 And pencil could not emulate
 The beauty in this, — how free, how fine
 To fear almost! — of the limit-line.
 Long ago the god, like me
 The worm, learned, each in our degree: 70
 Looked and loved, learned and drew,
 Drew and learned and loved again,
 While fast the happy minutes flew,
 Till beauty mounted into his brain
 And on the finger which outvied
 His art he placed the ring that's there,
 Still by fancy's eye descried,
 In token of a marriage rare:
 For him on earth, his art's despair,
 80 For him in heaven, his soul's fit bride.

III.

Little girl with the poor coarse hand
 I turned from to a cold clay cast —
 I have my lesson, understand
 The worth of flesh and blood at last.
 Nothing but beauty in a Hand?
 Because he could not change the hue,
 Mend the lines and make them true

To this which met his soul's demand,
 Would Da Vinci turn from you?
 I hear him laugh my woes to scorn —
 "The fool forsooth is all forlorn
 "Because the beauty, she thinks best,
 "Lived long ago or was never born,
 "Because no beauty bears the test
 "In this rough peasant Hand! Confessed!

"Art is null and study void!"
 "So sayest thou? So said not I,
 "Who threw the faulty pencil by,
 "And years instead of hours employed,
 "Learning the veritable use
 "Of flesh and bone and nerve beneath
 "Lines and hues of the outer sheath,
 "If haply I might reproduce
 "One motive of the powers profuse,
 "Flesh and bone and nerve that make
 "The poorest coarsest human hand
 "An object worthy to be scanned
 "A whole life long for their sole sake.
 "Shall earth and the cramped moment
 space
 "Yield the heavenly crowning grace?
 "Now the parts and then the whole!
 "Who art thou, with stunted soul
 "And stunted body, thus to cry
 "I love, — shall that be life's strait dote?
 "I must live beloved or die!"
 "This peasant hand that spins the wool
 "And bakes the bread, why lives it on,
 "Poor and coarse with beauty gone,
 "What use survives the beauty?" Fool!

Go, little girl with the poor coarse hand!
 I have my lesson, shall understand.

IX. — ON DECK.

I.

THERE is nothing to remember in me,
 Nothing I ever said with a grace,
 Nothing I did that you care to see,
 Nothing I was that deserves a place
 In your mind, now I leave you, set you free.

II.

Conceded! In turn, concede to me,
 Such things have been as a mutual flame.
 Your soul's locked fast, but, love for a key,
 You might let it loose, till I grew the
 same
 In your eyes, as in mine you stand:
 strange plea!

III.

For then, then, what would it matter to me
 That I was the harsh ill-favoured one?
 We both should be like as pen and pen;
 It was ever so since the world begun:
 So, let me proceed with my reverie.

IV.

How strange it were if you had all me, 50
 As I have all you in my heart and brain,
 You, whose least word brought gloom or
 glee,
 Who never lifted the hand in vain
 Will hold mine yet, from over the sea!

V.

Strange, if a face, when you thought of
 me,
 Rose like your own face present now,
 With eyes as dear in their due degree,
 Much such a mouth, and as bright a
 brow,
 Till you saw yourself, while you cried "Tis She!"

VI.

Well, you may, you must, set down to me 60
 Love that was life, life that was love;
 A tenure of breath at your lips' decree,
 A passion to stand as your thoughts approve,
 A rapture to fall where your foot might be.

VII.

But did one touch of such love for me
 Come in a word or a look of yours,
 Whose words and looks will, circling, flee Round me and round while life endures,
 Could I fancy "As I feel, thus feels he";

VIII.

Why, fade you might to a thing like me, 70
 And your hair grow these coarse hanks of
 hair,
 Your skin, this bark of a gnarled tree, —
 You might turn myself! — should I know or care
 When I should be dead of joy, James Lee?

GOLD HAIR:

A STORY OF PORNIC.

I.

Oh, the beautiful girl, too white,
 Who lived at Pornic, down by the sea,
 Just where the sea and the Loire unite!
 And a boasted name in Brittany
 She bore, which I will not write.

II.

Too white, for the flower of life is red; 80
 Her flesh was the soft seraphic screen
 Of a soul that is meant (her parents
 said)
 To just see earth, and hardly be seen,
 And blossom in heaven instead.

III.

Yet earth saw one thing, one how fair!

One grace that grew to its full on earth:
Smiles might be sparse on her cheek so sparse,

And her waist want half a girdle's girth,
But she had her great gold hair.

IV.

Hair, such a wonder of flix and floss,
Freshness and fragrance — floods of it,
 too!

Gold, did I say? Nay, gold's mere dross:
Here, Life smiled, "Think what I meant
 to do!"

10 And Love sighed, "Fancy my loss!"

V.

So, when she died, it was scarce more
 strange

'Than that, when delicate evening dies,
And you follow its spent sun's pallid range,
'There's a shoot of colour startles the skies

With sudden, violent change, —

VI.

That, while the breath was nearly to seek,

As they put the little cross to her lips,
She changed; a spot came out on her
 cheek,

A spark from her eye in mid-eclipse,
20 And she broke forth, "I must speak!"

VII.

'Not my hair!' made the girl her moan —

"All the rest is gone or to go;

"But the last, last grace, my all, my own,
"Let it stay in the grave, that the ghosts may know!

"Leave my poor gold hair alone!"

VIII.

The passion thus vented, dead lay she;

Her parents sobbed their worst on that;
All friends joined in, nor observed degree:
For indeed the hair was to wonder at,

30 As it spread — not flowing free,

IX.

But curled around her brow, like a crown,

And coiled beside her cheeks, like a cap,
And calmed about her neck — ay, down
To her breast, pressed flat, without a gap
1' the gold, it reached her gown.

X.

All kissed that face, like a silver wedge

'Mid the yellow wealth, nor disturbed its
 hair:

E'en the priest allowed death's privilege,

As he planted the crucifix with care
40 On her breast, 'twixt edge and edge.

XI.

And thus was she buried, inviolate

Of body and soul, in the very space
By the altar; keeping saintly state

In Pornic church, for her pride of race,
Pure life and piteous fate.

XII.

And in after-time would your fresh tear fall,

Though your mouth might twitch with a dubious smile,

As they told you of gold, both robe and
 pall,

How she prayed them leave it alone
 awhile,

So it never was touched at all.

XIII.

Years flew; this legend grew at last

The life of the lady; all she had done,
All been, in the memories fading fast

Of lover and friend, was summed in one Sentence survivors passed:

XIV.

To wit, she was meant for heaven, not
 earth;

Had turned an angel before the time:

Yet, since she was mortal, in such dearth
Of frailty, all you could count a crime

Was — she knew her gold hair's worth.

XV.

At little pleasant Pornic church,

It chanced, the pavement wanted repair,
Was taken to pieces: left in the lurch,

A certain sacred space lay bare,
And the boys began research.

XVI.

'Twas the space where our sires would lay
 a saint,

A benefactor, — a bishop, suppose,

A baron with armour-adornments quaint,
Dame with chased ring and jewelled
 rose,

Things sanctity saves from taint;

XVII.

So we come to find them in after-days

When the corpse is presumed to have done with gauds

Of use to the living, in many ways:

For the boys get pelf, and the town
 applauds,

And the church deserves the praise.

XVIII.

They grubbed with a will: and at length —

O cor

*Humanum, pectora cæca, and the
 rest! —*

They found — no gaud they were prying
for,
No ring, no rose, but — who would have guessed? —
A double Louis-d'or!

XIX.

Here was a case for the priest: he heard,
Marked, inwardly digested, laid Finger on nose, smiled, "There's a bird "Chirps in my ear": then, "Bring a spade,
"Dig deeper!" — he gave the word.

XX.

And lo, when they came to the coffin-lid,
Or rotten planks which composed it
once,
Why, there lay the girl's skull wedged amid
A mint of money, it served for the nonce
To hold in its hair-heaps hid!

XXI.

Hid there? Why? Could the girl be wont
(She the stainless soul) to treasure up
Money, earth's trash and heaven's affront?
Had a spider found out the communion-
cup,
Was a toad in the christening-font?

XXII.

Truth is truth: too true it was.
Gold! She hoarded and hugged it first,
Longed for it, leaned o'er it, loved it —
alas —
Till the humour grew to a head and
burst,
And she cried, at the final pass, —

XXIII.

"Talk not of God, my heart is stone!
"Nor lover nor friend — be gold for
both!
"Gold I lack; and, my all, my own,
"It shall hide in my hair. I scarce die loth
"If they let my hair alone!"

XXIV.

Louis-d'or, some six times five,
And duly double, every piece.
Now do you see? With the priest to shrive,
With parents preventing her soul's release
By kisses that kept alive, —

XXV.

With heaven's gold gates about to ope,
With friends' praise, gold-like, lingering
still,
An instinct had bidden the girl's hand grope For gold, the true sort — "Gold in heaven, if you will;
"But I keep earth's too, I hope."

XXVI.

Enough! The priest took the grave's grim
yield:
The parents, they eyed that price of sin 46
As if thirty pieces lay revealed
On the place to bury strangers in,
The hideous Potter's Field.

XXVII.

But the priest bethought him: "'Milk
that's spilt'
"— You know the adage! Watch and pray!
"Saints tumble to earth with so slight a tilt!
"It would build a new altar; that, we may!"
And the altar therewith was built.

XXVIII.

Why I deliver this horrible verse?
As the text of a sermon, which now I 50 preach:
Evil or good may be better or worse
In the human heart, but the mixture of
each
Is a marvel and a curse.

XXIX.

The candid incline to surmise of late
That the Christian faith proves false, I
find;
For our Essays-and-Reviews' debate
Begins to tell on the public mind,
And Colenso's words have weight:

XXX.

I still, to suppose it true, for my part,
See reasons and reasons; this, to begin. 60
'Tis the faith that launched point-blank her dart
At the head of a lie — taught Original Sin,
The Corruption of Man's Heart.

THE WORST OF IT.

I.

WOULD it were I had been false, not you!
I that am nothing, not you that are all:
I, never the worse for a touch or two On my speckled hide; not you, the
pride
Of the day, my swan, that a first fleck's fall
On her wonder of white must unswan, undo!

II.

I had dipped in life's struggle and, out 70
again,
Bore specks of it here, there, easy to see,
When I found my swan and the cure was
plain;

The dull turned bright as I caught your white

On my bosom: you saved me — saved in vain

If you ruined yourself, and all through me!

III.

Yes, all through the speckled beast that I
am,

Who taught you to stoop; you gave me
yourself,

And bound your soul by the vows that damn:

Since on better thought you break, as you ought,

Vows — words, no angel set down, some elf

Mistook, — for an oath, an epigram!

IV.

10 Yes, might I judge you, here were my
heart,

And a hundred its like, to treat as you pleased!

I choose to be yours, for my proper part,
Yours, leave or take, or mar me or make;

If I acquiesce, why should you be teased With the conscience-prick and the memory-smart?

V.

But what will God say? Oh, my sweet,
Think, and be sorry you did this thing Though earth were unworthy to feel your feet,

There's a heaven above may deserve your love:

20 Should you forfeit heaven for a snapt gold ring

And a promise broke, were it just or meet?

VI.

And I to have tempted you! I, who tired Your soul, no doubt, till it sank! Unwise,

I loved and was lowly, loved and aspired,
Loved, grieving or glad, till I made you
mad,

And you meant to have hated and despised —

Whereas, you deceived me nor inquired!

VII.

She, ruined? How? No heaven for
her?

Crowns to give, and none for the brow

30 That looked like marble and smelt like myrrh?

Shall the robe be worn, and the palm-branch borne,

And she go graceless, she graced now
Beyond all saints, as themselves aver?

VIII.

Hardly! That must be understood!

The earth is your place of penance,
then;

And what will it prove? I desire your
good,

But, plot as I may, I can find no way

How a blow should fall, such as falls on
men,

Nor prove too much for your womanhood.

IX.

It will come, I suspect, at the end of life, 4
When you walk alone, and review the
past;

And I, who so long shall have done with strife,

And journeyed my stage and earned my wage

And retired as was right, — I am called at
last

When the devil stabs you, to lend the knife.

X.

He stabs for the minute of trivial wrong,
Nor the other hours are able to save,

The happy, that lasted my whole life long:
For a promise broke, not for first words

spoke,

The true, the only, that turn my grave 5
To a blaze of joy and a crash of song.

XI.

Witness beforehand! Off I trip

On a safe path gay through the flowers
you flung:

My very name made great by your lip,
And my heart a-glow with the good I

know

Of a perfect year when we both were young,
And I tasted the angels' fellowship.

XII.

And witness, moreover . . . Ah, but wait!
I spy the loop whence an arrow shoots!

It may be for yourself, when you meditate, 6
That you grieve — for slain ruth, murdered truth.

"Though falsehood escape in the end,
what boots?

"How truth would have triumphed!" —
you sigh too late.

XIII.

Ay, who would have triumphed like you, I
say!

Well, it is lost now; well, you must bear,
Abide and grow fit for a better day:

You should hardly grudge, could I be your judge!

But hush! For you, can be no despair:
'There's amends: 'tis a secret: hope and pray!

XIV.

For I was true at least — oh, true enough!
 And, Dear, truth is not as good as it
 seems!
 Commend me to conscience! Idle stuff!
 Much help is in mine, as I mope and pine,
 And skulk through day, and scowl in my dreams
 At my swan's obtaining the crow's rebuff.

XV.

Men tell me of truth now. — "False!" I
 cry:
 Of beauty — "A mask, friend! Look
 beneath!"
 We take our own method, the devil and I,
 With pleasant and fair and wise and rare:
 And the best we wish to what lives, is —
 death;
 Which even in wishing, perhaps we lie!

XVI.

Far better commit a fault and have
 done —
 As you, Dear! — for ever; and choose the pure,
 And look where the healing waters run,
 And strive and strain to be good again,
 And a place in the other world ensure,
 All glass and gold, with God for its sun.

XVII.

Misery! What shall I say or do?
 I cannot advise, or, at least, persuade:
 Most like, you are glad you deceived me — rue
 No whit of the wrong: you endured too
 long,
 Have done no evil and want no aid,
 Will live the old life out and chance the new.

XVIII.

And your sentence is written all the same,
 And I can do nothing, — pray, perhaps:
 But somehow the world pursues its
 game, —
 If I pray, if I curse, — for better or
 worse:
 And my faith is torn to a thousand scraps,
 And my heart feels ice while my words breathe flame.

XIX.

Dear, I look from my hiding-place.
 Are you still so fair? Have you still the
 eyes?
 Be happy! Add but the other grace,
 Be good! Why want what the angels
 vaunt?
 I knew you once: but in Paradise,
 If we meet, I will pass nor turn my face.

DIS ALITER VISUM; OR, LE BYRON DE NOS JOURS.

I.

STOP, let me have the truth of that!
 Is that all true? I say, the day
 Ten years ago when both of us
 Met on a morning, friends — as thus 40
 We meet this evening, friends or what? —

II.

Did you — because I took your arm
 And sillily smiled, "A mass of brass
 "That sea looks, blazing underneath!"
 While up the cliff-road edged with heath,
 We took the turns nor came to harm —

III.

Did you consider "Now makes twice "That I have seen her, walked and talked
 "With this poor pretty thoughtful thing,
 "Whose worth I weigh: she tries to 50 sing;
 "Draws, hopes in time the eye grows nice;

IV.

"Reads verse and thinks she understands;
 "Loves all, at any rate, that's great,
 "Good, beautiful; but much as we
 "Down at the bath-house love the sea,
 "Who breathe its salt and bruise its sands:

V.

"While . . . do but follow the fishing-gull "That flaps and floats from wave to cave!
 "There's the sea-lover, fair my friend!
 "What then? Be patient, mark and 60
 mend!
 "Had you the making of your skull?"

VI.

And did you, when we faced the church
 With spire and sad slate roof, aloof
 From human fellowship so far,
 Where a few graveyard crosses are,
 And garlands for the swallows' perch, —

VII.

Did you determine, as we stepped O'er the lone stone fence, "Let me get "Her for myself, and what's the earth
 "With all its art, verse, music, worth — 70
 "Compared with love, found, gained, and kept?

VIII.

"Schumann's our music-maker now;
 "Has his march-movement youth and
 mouth?

"Ingres's the modern man that paints;
 "Which will lean on me, of his saints?
 "Heine for songs; for kisses, how?"

IX.

And did you, when we entered, reached
 The votive frigate, soft aloft
 Riding on air this hundred years,
 Safe-smiling at old hopes and fears,
 Did you draw profit while she preached?

X.

Resolving, "Fools we wise men grow!
 "Yes, I could easily blurt out curt
 "Some question that might find reply
 "As prompt in her stopped lips, dropped
 "And rush of red to cheek and brow:

XI.

"Thus were a match made, sure and fast,
 "'Mid the blue weed-flowers round the mound
 "Where, issuing, we shall stand and stay
 "For one more look at baths and bay,
 "Sand, sea-gulls, and the old church last

XII.

"A match 'twixt me, bent, wigged and lamed,
 "Famous, however, for verse and worse,
 "Sure of the Fortieth spare Arm-chair
 "When gout and glory seat me there,
 "So, one whose love-freaks pass un-blamed, —

XIII.

"And this young beauty, round and sound
 "As a mountain-apple, youth and truth
 "With loves and doves, at all events
 "With money in the Three per Cents;
 "Whose choice of me would seem profound: —

XIV.

"She might take me as I take her,
 "Perfect the hour would pass, alas!
 "Climb high, love high, what matter?
 Still,
 "Feet, feelings, must descend the hill:
 "An hour's perfection can't recur.

XV.

"Then follows Paris and full time
 "For both to reason: 'Thus with us!'
 "She'll sigh, 'Thus girls give body and
 soul
 "At first word, think they gain the goal,
 "When 'tis the starting-place they climb!

XVI.

"My friend makes verse and gets renown;
 "Have they all fifty years, his peers?

"He knows the world, firm, quiet and
 gay;
 "Boys will become as much one day:
 "They're fools; he cheats, with beard less brown.

XVII.

"For boys say, Love me or I die!
 "He did not say, The truth is, youth
 "I want, who am old and know too much;
 "I'd catch youth: lend me sight and
 touch!
 "Drop heart's blood where life's wheels grate dry!"

XVIII.

"While I should make rejoinder" — (then
 It was, no doubt, You ceased that least 50 Light pressure of my arm in yours)
 "I can conceive of cheaper cures
 "For a yawning-fit o'er books and men.

XIX.

"What? All I am, was, and might be,
 "All, books taught, art brought, life's whole strife,
 "Painful results since precious, just
 "Were fitly exchanged, in wise disgust,
 "For two cheeks freshened by youth and sea?

XX.

"All for a nosegay! — what came first;
 "With fields on flower, untried each 60
 side;
 "I rally, need my books and men,
 "And find a nosegay: drop it, then,
 "No match yet made for best or worst!"

XXI.

That ended me. You judged the porch
 We left by, Norman; took our look
 At sea and sky; wondered so few
 Find out the place for air and view;
 Remarked the sun began to scorch:

XXII.

Descended, soon regained the baths,
 And then, good-bye! Years ten since 70
 then:
 Ten years! We meet: you tell me, now,
 By a window-seat for that cliff-brow,
 On carpet-stripes for those sand-paths.

XXIII.

Now I may speak: you fool, for all Your lore! Who made things plain in vain?
 What was the sea for? What, the grey Sad church, that solitary day,
 Crosses and graves and swallows' call?

XXIV.

Was there nought better than to enjoy?
 No feat which, done, would make time 80
 break,

And let us pent-up creatures through
 Into eternity, our due?
 No forcing earth teach heaven's employ?

XXV.

No wise beginning, here and now,
 What cannot grow complete (earth's feat)

And heaven must finish, there and then?
 No tasting earth's true food for men,
 Its sweet in sad, its sad in sweet?

XXVI.

No grasping at love, gaining a share
 O' the sole spark from God's life at strife
 With death, so, sure of range above
 The limits here? For us and love,
 Failure; but, when God fails, despair.

XXVII.

This you call wisdom? Thus you add
 Good unto good again, in vain?
 You loved, with body worn and weak;
 I loved, with faculties to seek:
 Were both loves worthless since ill-clad?

XXVIII.

Let the mere star-fish in his vault
 Crawl in a wash of weed, indeed,
 Rose-jacynth to the finger-tips:
 He, whole in body and soul, outstrips
 Man, found with either in default.

XXIX.

But what's whole, can increase no more,
 Is dwarfed and dies, since here's its
 sphere
 The devil laughed at you in his sleeve!
 You knew not? That I well believe;
 Or you had saved two souls: nay, four.

XXX.

For Stephanie sprained last night her wrist,
 Ankle or something. "Pooh," cry you?
 At any rate she danced, all say,
 Vilely; her vogue has had its day.
 Here comes my husband from his whist.

TOO LATE.

I.

HERE was I with my arm and heart
 And brain, all yours for a word, a want
 Put into a look — just a look, your part, — While mine, to repay it . . . vainest
 vaunt,
 Were the woman, that's dead, alive to hear,
 Had her lover, that's lost, love's proof to show!
 But I cannot show it; you cannot speak
 From the churchyard neither, miles
 removed,
 Though I feel by a pulse within my check,

Which stabs and stops, that the woman I loved
 Needs help in her grave and finds none
 near,
 Wants warmth from the heart which sends it — so!

II.

Did I speak once angrily, all the drear days
 You lived, you woman I loved so well,
 Who married the other? Blame or praise, Where was the use then? Time would
 tell,
 And the end declare what man for you, 50
 What woman for me, was the choice of
 God.
 But, Edith dead! no doubting more!
 I used to sit and look at my life
 As it rippled and ran till, right before,
 A great stone stopped it: oh, the strife
 Of waves at the stone some devil threw
 In my life's midcurrent, thwarting God!

III.

But either I thought, "They may churn and chide
 "Awhile, my waves which came for their
 joy
 "And found this horrible stone full-tide: 60
 "Yet I see just a thread escape, deploy
 "Through the evening-country, silent and
 safe,
 "And it suffers no more till it finds the
 sea."
 Or else I would think, "Perhaps some
 night
 "When new things happen, a meteor-
 ball
 "May slip through the sky in a line of
 light,
 "And earth breathe hard, and landmarks fall,
 "And my waves no longer champ nor
 chafe,
 "Since a stone will have rolled from its place: let be!"

IV.

But, dead! All's done with: wait who 70
 may,
 Watch and wear and wonder who will.
 Oh, my whole life that ends to-day!
 Oh, my soul's sentence, sounding still,
 "The woman is dead that was none of his,
 "And the man that was none of hers may go!"
 There's only the past left: worry that!
 Wreak, like a bull, on the empty coat,
 Rage, its late wearer is laughing at!
 Tear the collar to rags, having missed his throat;
 Strike stupidly on — "This, this and this, 80
 "Where I would that a bosom received the blow!"

V.

I ought to have done more: once my speech,
And once your answer, and there, the
end,

And Edith was henceforth out of reach!
Why, men do more to deserve a friend,
Be rid of a foe, get rich, grow wise, Nor, losing their arms, stare fate in the
face.

Why, better even have burst like a thief
And borne you away to a rock for us two,
In a moment's horror, bright, bloody and
brief:

10 Then changed to myself again — "I slew

"Myself in that moment; a ruffian lies "Somewhere: your slave, see, born in his place!"

VI.

What did the other do? You be judge!
Look at us, Edith! Here are we both!
Give him his six whole years: I grudge
None of the life with you, nay, loathe
Myself that I grudged his start in advance
Of me who could overtake and pass.

20 But, as if he loved you! No, not he,
Nor anyone else in the world, 'tis plain:
Who ever heard that another, free
As I, young, prosperous, sound and sane, Poured life out, proffered it — "Half a glance

"Of those eyes of yours and I drop the glass!"

VII.

Handsome, were you? 'Tis more than they held,
More than they said; I was 'ware and watched:

I was the scapegrace, this rat belled
The cat, this fool got his whiskers scratched:

'The others? No head that was turned, no
heart

30 Broken, my lady, assure yourself!
Each soon made his mind up; so and so Married a dancer, such and such Stole his friend's wife, stagnated slow,
Or maundered, unable to do as much,
And muttered of peace where he had no
part:

While, hid in the closet, laid on the shelf, —

VIII.

On the whole, you were let alone, I think!
So, you looked to the other, who acquiesced;

My rival, the proud man, — prize your pink

40 Of poets! A poet he was! I've guessed:
He rhymed you his rubbish nobody read,
Loved you and doved you — did not I
laugh!

There was a prize! But we both were tried.

Oh, heart of mine, marked broad with her mark,

Tekel, found wanting, set aside, Scorned! See, I bleed these tears in the dark

Till comfort come and the last be bled:
He? He is tagging your epitaph.

IX.

If it would only come over again!

Time to be patient with me, and probe 50

This heart till you punctured the proper
vein,

Just to learn what blood is: twitch the robe

From that blank lay-figure your fancy draped,

Prick the leathern heart till the -- verses
spirt!

And late it was easy; late, you walked Where a friend might meet you; Edith's
name

Arose to one's lip if one laughed or talked;
If I heard good news, you heard the
same;

When I woke, I knew that your breath
escaped;

I could hide my time, keep alive, alert. 60

X.

And alive I shall keep and long, you will
see!

I knew a man, was kicked like a dog
From gutter to cesspool; what cared he So long as he picked from the filth his prog?

He saw youth, beauty and genius die,
And jollily lived to his hundredth year.

But I will live otherwise: none of such
life!

At once I begin as I mean to end.
Go on with the world, get gold in its
strife,

Give your spouse the slip and betray 7
your friend!

There are two who decline, a woman and I,
And enjoy our death in the darkness
here.

XI.

I liked that way you had with your curls
Wound to a ball in a net behind:

Your cheek was chaste as a quaker-girl's And your mouth — there was never, to my mind,

Such a funny mouth, for it would not shut;
And the dented chin too — what a chin!

There were certain ways when you spoke,
some words

That you knew you never could pronounce:

You were thin, however; like a bird's

Your hand seemed — some would say, the pounce!
Of a scaly-footed hawk — all but!
The world was right when it called you thin.

XII.

But I turn my back on the world: I
take

Your hand, and kneel, and lay to my lips.
Bid me live, Edith! Let me slake

Thirst at your presence! Fear no slips:
'Tis your slave shall pay, while his soul endures.

Full due, love's whole debt, summum jus.
My queen shall have high observance, planned

Courtship made perfect, no least line Crossed without warrant. There you
stand,

Warm too, and white too: would this wine

Had washed all over that body of yours,
Ere I drank it, and you down with it,
thus!

ABT VOGLER.

(AFTER HE HAS BEEN EXTEMPORISING UPON THE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT OF HIS INVENTION.)

[The Abbé Vogler, born 1749. Court Chaplain at Mannheim. Improved the organ. Visited London, 1790. Died at Darmstadt, 1814.]

I.

Would that the structure brave, the manifold music I build,

Bidding my organ obey, calling its keys
to their work,

Claiming each slave of the sound, at a touch, as when Solomon willed

Armies of angels that soar, legions of demons that lurk,

Man, brute, reptile, fly, — alien of end and of aim,

Adverse, each from the other heaven-high, hell-deep removed, —

Should rush into sight at once as he named the ineffable Name,

And pile him a palace straight, to pleasure the princess he loved!

II.

Would it might tarry like his, the beautiful building of mine,

This which my keys in a crowd pressed and importuned to raise!

Ah, one and all, how they helped, would dispart now and now combine,

* Taken

Zealous to hasten the work, heighten their master his praise!

And one would bury his brow with a blind
plunge down to hell,

Burrow awhile and build, broad on the roots of things,

Then up again swim into sight, having based me my palace well,

Founded it, fearless of flame, flat on the nether springs.

III.

And another would mount and march, like the excellent minion he was,

Ay, another and yet another, one crowd
but with many a crest,

Raising my rampired walls of gold as transparent as glass,

Eager to do and die, yield each his place
to the rest:

For higher still and higher (as a runner tips with fire,

When a great illumination surprises a festal night —

Outlining round and round Rome's dome from space to spire)

Up, the pinnacled glory reached, and the pride of my soul was in sight.

IV.

In sight? Not half! for it seemed, it was certain, to match man's birth,

Nature in turn conceived, obeying an impulse as I;

And the emulous heaven yearned down,
made effort to reach the earth,

As the earth had done her best, in my passion, to scale the sky:

Novel splendours burst forth, grew familiar and dwelt with mine,

Not a point nor peak but found and fixed its wandering star;

Meteor-moons, balls of blaze: and they did not pale nor pine,

For earth had attained to heaven, there was no more near nor far.

V.

Nay more; for there wanted not who walked in the glare and glow,

Presences plain in the place; or, fresh from the Protoplast,

Furnished for ages to come, when a kindlier wind should blow,

Lured now to begin and live, in a house to their liking at last;

Or else the wonderful Dead who have passed through the body and gone,

But were back once more to breathe in an old world worth their new:

What never had been, was now; what was,
as it shall be anon;

And what is, — shall I say, matched both? for I was made perfect too.

VI.

All through my keys that gave their sounds to a wish of my soul,
All through my soul that praised as its wish flowed visibly forth,
All through music and me! For think,
had I painted the whole,
Why, there it had stood, to see, nor the process so wonder-worth:
Had I written the same, made verse — still, effect proceeds from cause, Ye know why the forms are fair, ye hear how the tale is told;
It is all triumphant art, but art in obedience to laws,
Painter and poet are proud in the artist-list enrolled: —

VII.

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can,
10 Existent behind all laws, that made them and, lo, they are!
And I know not if, save in this, such gift be allowed to man,
That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star.
Consider it well: each tone of our scale in itself is nought;
It is everywhere in the world — loud,
soft, and all is said:
Give it to me to use! I mix it with two in my thought:
And, there! Ye have heard and seen:
consider and bow the head!

VIII.

Well, it is gone at last, the palace of music I reared;
Gone! and the good tears start, the praises that come too slow;
For one is assured at first, one scarce can say that he feared, 20 That he even gave it a thought, the gone thing was to go.
Never to be again! But many more of the kind
As good, nay, better perchance: is this your comfort to me?
To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind
To the same, same self, same love, same
God: ay, what was, shall be.

IX.

Therefore to whom turn I but to thee, the ineffable Name?
Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!
What, have fear of change from thee who art ever the same?
Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;
The evil is null, is nought, is silence 30
implying sound;
What was good shall be good, with, for evil,
so much good more;
On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

X.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;
Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty,
nor good, nor power
Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist
When eternity affirms the conception of an hour.
The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,
The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
Are music sent up to God by the lover and
the bard;
Enough that he heard it once: we shall 40 hear it by-and-by.

XI.

And what is our failure here but a tri-umph's evidence For the fulness of the days? Have we withered or agonised?
Why else was the pause prolonged but that singing might issue thence?
Why rushed the discords in but that harmony should be prized?
Sorrow is hard to bear, and doubt is slow to clear,
Each sufferer says his say, his scheme of the weal and woe:
But God has a few of us whom he whispers
in the ear;
The rest may reason and welcome: 'tis we musicians know.

XII.

Well, it is earth with me; silence resumes her reign:
I will be patient and proud, and soberly 50
acquiesce.
Give me the keys. I feel for the common chord again,
Sliding by semitones, till I sink to the minor, — yes,
And I blunt it into a ninth, and I stand on alien ground,
Surveying awhile the heights I rolled from into the deep;
Which, hark, I have dared and done, for my resting-place is found,
The C Major of this life: so, now I will try to sleep.

RABBI BEN EZRA.

I.

GROW old along with me!
 The best is yet to be,
 The last of life, for which the first was
 made:
 Our times are in His hand
 Who saith "A whole I planned,
 "Youth shows but half; trust God: see all nor be afraid!"

II.

Not that, amassing flowers,
 Youth sighed "Which rose make
 ours,
 "Which lily leave and then as best recall?"
 Not that, admiring stars,
 It yearned "Nor Jove, nor Mars;
 "Mine be some figured flame which blends, transcends them all!"

III.

Not for such hopes and fears
 Annulling youth's brief years,
 Do I remonstrate: folly wide the mark!
 Rather I prize the doubt
 Low kinds exist without,
 Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

IV.

Poor vaunt of life indeed,
 Were man but formed to feed
 On joy, to solely seek and find and feast:
 Such feasting ended, then
 As sure an end to men;
 Irks care the crop-full bird? Frets doubt the maw-crammed beast?

V.

Rejoice we are allied
 To That which doth provide
 And not partake, effect and not receive!
 A spark disturbs our clod;
 Nearer we hold of God
 Who gives, than of His tribes that take, I must believe.

VI.

Then, welcome each rebuff
 That turns earth's smoothness rough,
 Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but
 go!
 Be our joys three-parts pain!
 Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
 Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!

VII.

For thence, — a paradox
 Which comforts while it mocks, —
 Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:

What I aspired to be,
 And was not, comforts me:
 A brute I might have been, but would not sink i' the scale.

VIII.

What is he but a brute
 Whose flesh has soul to suit,
 Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want play?
 To man, propose this test —
 Thy body at its best,
 How far can that project thy soul on its lone way?

IX.

Yet gifts should prove their use:
 I own the Past profuse
 Of power each side, perfection every
 turn:
 Eyes, ears took in their dole,
 Brain treasured up the whole;
 Should not the heart beat once "How good to live and learn?"

X.

Not once beat "Praise be Thine!
 "I see the whole design,
 "I, who saw power, see now love perfect
 too:
 "Perfect I call Thy plan:
 "Thanks that I was a man!
 "Maker, remake, complete, — I trust what Thou shalt do!"

XI.

For pleasant is this flesh;
 Our soul, in its rose-mesh Pulled ever to the earth, still yearns for
 rest:
 Would we some prize might hold
 To match those manifold Possessions of the brute, — gain most, as we did best!

XII.

Let us not always say
 "Spite of this flesh to-day
 "I strove, made head, gained ground upon
 the whole!"
 As the bird wings and sings,
 Let us cry "All good things
 "Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"

XIII.

Therefore I, summon age
 To grant youth's heritage, Life's struggle having so far reached its
 term:
 Thence shall I pass, approved
 A man, for aye removed From the developed brute; a god though in the germ.

XIV.

And I shall thereupon
Take rest, ere I be gone Once more on my adventure brave and
new:
Fearless and unperplexed,
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armour to indue.

XV.

Youth ended, I shall try
My gain or loss thereby;
Leave the fire ashes, what survives is gold:
And I shall weigh the same,
Give life its praise or blame:
Young, all lay in dispute; I shall know, being old.

XVI.

For note, when evening shuts,
A certain moment cuts
The deed off, calls the glory from the grey:
A whisper from the west
Shoots — "Add this to the rest,
"Take it and try its worth: here dies another day."

XVII.

So, still within this life,
Though lifted o'er its strife,
Let me discern, compare, pronounce at
last,
"This rage was right i' the main,
"That acquiescence vain:
"The Future I may face now I have proved
the Past."

XVIII.

For more is not reserved
To man, with soul just nerved
To act to-morrow what he learns to-day:
Here, work enough to watch
The Master work, and catch Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tool's true play.

XIX.

As it was better, youth
Should strive, through acts uncouth, Toward making, than repose on aught found made:
So, better, age, exempt
From strife, should know, than tempt Further. Thou waitedest age: wait death nor be afraid!

XX.

Enough now, if the Right
And Good and Infinite
Be named here, as thou callest thy hand thine own,
With knowledge absolute,
Subject to no dispute
From fools that crowded youth, nor let thee feel alone.

XXI.

Be there, for once and all,
Severed great minds from small,
Announced to each his station in the Past!
Was I, the world arraigned,
Were they, my soul disdained, Right? Let age speak the truth and give us peace at last!

XXII.

Now, who shall arbitrate?
Ten men love what I hate,
Shun what I follow, slight what I receive;
Ten, who in ears and eyes
Match me: we all surmise,
They this thing, and I that: whom shall my soul believe?

XXIII.

Not on the vulgar mass
Called "work," must sentence pass, Things done, that took the eye and had the price;
O'er which, from level stand,
The low world laid its hand,
Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice:

XXIV.

But all, the world's coarse thumb
And finger failed to plumb,
So passed in making up the main account;
All instincts immature,
All purposes unsure,
That weighed not as his work, yet swelled
the man's amount:

XXV.

Thoughts hardly to be packed
Into a narrow act,
Fancies that broke through language and
escaped;
All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me,
This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.

XXVI.

Ay, note that Potter's wheel,
That metaphor! and feel Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay,
Thou, to whom fools propound,
When the wine makes its round,
"Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, 'seize to-day!'"

XXVII.

Fool! All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall;
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure:

What entered into thee,
That was, is, and shall be:
 Time's wheel runs back or stops: Potter and clay endure.

XXVIII.

He fixed thee mid this dance
 Of plastic circumstance,
 This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest:
 Machinery just meant
 To give thy soul its bent,
 Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

XXIX.

What though the earlier grooves
 Which ran the laughing loves Around thy base, no longer pause and press?
 What though, about thy rim,
 Skull-things in order grim Grow out, in graver mood, obey the sterner stress?

XXX.

Look not thou down but up!
 To uses of a cup,
 The festal board, lamp's flash and trum-pet's peal,
 The new wine's foaming flow,
 The Master's lips aglow!
 Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what need'st thou with earth's wheel?

XXXI.

But I need, now as then,
 Thee, God, who moulded men;
 And since, not even while the whirl was
 worst,
 Did I, — to the wheel of life
 With shapes and colours rife,
 Round dizzily, — mistake my end, to slake Thy thirst:

XXXII.

So, take and use Thy work:
 Amend what flaws may lurk,
 What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past the aim!
 My times be in Thy hand!
 Perfect the cup as planned!
 Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!

A DEATH IN THE DESERT.

[SUSPOSED of Pamphylax the Antiochene:
 It is a parchment, of my rolls the fifth,
 Hath three skins glued together, is all Greek
 And goeth from Epsilon down to Mu:
 Lies second in the surnamed Chosen Chest,

Stained and conserved with juice of terebinth,
 Covered with cloth of hair, and lettered Xi,
 From Xanthus, my wife's uncle, now at
 peace:

Mu and Epsilon stand for my own name.
 I may not write it, but I make a cross
 To show I wait His coming, with the rest,
 And leave off here: beginneth Pamphylax.]

I said, "If one should wet his lips with wine,

"And slip the broadest plantain-leaf we
 find,

"Or else the lappet of a linen robe,

"Into the water-vessel, lay it right,

"And cool his forehead just above the eyes,

"The while a brother, kneeling either side,

"Should chafe each hand and try to make it warm, —

"He is not so far gone but he might
 speak."

This did not happen in the outer cave,
 Nor in the secret chamber of the rock
 Where, sixty days since the decree was out,
 We had him, bedded on a camel-skin,
 And waited for his dying all the while;
 But in the midmost grotto: since noon's
 light

Reached there a little, and we would not lose

The last of what might happen on his face.

I at the head, and Xanthus at the feet,
 With Valens and the Boy, had lifted him,
 And brought him from the chamber in the depths,

And laid him in the light where we might
 see:

For certain smiles began about his mouth,
 And his lids moved, presageful of the end.
 Beyond, and half way up the mouth o' the cave,

The Bactrian convert, having his desire,
 Kept watch, and made pretence to graze a goat

That gave us milk, on rags of various herb, Plantain and quitch, the rocks' shade keeps
 alive:

So that if any thief or soldier passed,
 (Because the persecution was aware)
 Yielding the goat up promptly with his life,
 Such man might pass on, joyful at a prize,
 Nor care to pry into the cool o' the cave.
 Outside was all noon and the burning blue.

"Here is wine," answered Xanthus, — dropped a drop;

I stooped and placed the lap of cloth aright,
 Then chafed his right hand, and the Boy
 his left:

But Valens had bethought him, and produced

And broke a ball of nard, and made perfume.

Only, he did — not so much wake, as — turn

And smile a little, as a sleeper does

If any dear one call him, touch his face —
And smiles and loves, but will not be disturbed.

Then Xanthus said a prayer, but still he slept:

It is the Xanthus that escaped to Rome,
Was burned, and could not write the chronicle.

Then the Boy sprang up from his knees,
and ran,

10 Stung by the splendour of a sudden thought,

And fetched the seventh plate of graven lead

Out of the secret chamber, found a place,
Pressing with finger on the deeper dints,
And spoke, as 'twere his mouth proclaiming first,

"I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Whereat he opened his eyes wide at once,
And sat up of himself, and looked at us;
And thenceforth nobody pronounced a word:

Only, outside, the Bactrian cried his cry
20 Like the lone desert-bird that wears the ruff,

As signal we were safe, from time to time.

First he said, "If a friend declared to me,
"This my son Valens, this my other son,
"Were James and Peter, — nay, declared as well

"This lad was very John, — I could believe!

"— Could, for a moment, doubtlessly believe:

"So is myself withdrawn into my depths,
"The soul retreated from the perished brain

"Whence it was wont to feel and use the world

30 "Through these dull members, done with long ago.

"Yet I myself remain; I feel myself:

"And there is nothing lost. Let be, awhile!"

[This is the doctrine he was wont to teach,
How divers persons witness in each man,
Three souls which make up one soul:
first, to wit,

A soul of each and all the bodily parts,
Seated therein, which works, and is what Does,

And has the use of earth, and ends the man
Downward: but, tending upward for advice,

Grows into, and again is grown into 40
By the next soul, which, seated in the brain,
Useth the first with its collected use,
And feeleth, thinketh, willeth, — is what Knows:

Which, duly tending upward in its turn,
Grows into, and again is grown into
By the last soul, that uses both the first,
Subsisting whether they assist or no,
And, constituting man's self, is what Is —
And leans upon the former, makes it play,

As that played off the first: and, tending 50
up,

Holds, is upheld by, God, and ends the man

Upward in that dread point of intercourse,
Nor needs a place, for it returns to Him.
What Does, what Knows, what Is; three souls, one man.

I give the glossa of Theotypas.]

And then, "A stick, once fire from end to end;

"Now, ashes save the tip that holds a spark!

"Yet, blow the spark, it runs back, spreads itself

"A little where the fire was: thus I urge "The soul that served me, till it task once 60
more

"What ashes of my brain have kept their shape,

"And these make effort on the last o' the flesh,

"Trying to taste again the truth of things —"

(He smiled) — "their very superficial truth;

"As that ye are my sons, that it is long

"Since James and Peter had release by death,

"And I am only he, your brother John,
"Who saw and heard, and could remember all.

"Remember all! It is not much to say.
"What if the truth broke on me from above 70

"As once and oft-times? Such might happen again:

"Doubtlessly He might stand in presence here,

"With head wool-white, eyes flame, and feet like brass,

"The sword and the seven stars, as I have seen —

"I who now shudder only and surmise
"How did your brother bear that sight and live?"

"If I live yet, it is for good, more love
"Through me to men: be nought but ashes here

"That keep awhile my semblance, who was John, —

- "Still, when they scatter, there is left on earth
 "No one alive who knew (consider this!)
 "— Saw with his eyes and handled with his hands
 "That which was from the first, the Word of Life.
 "How will it be when none more saith 'I saw'?
- "Such ever was love's way: to rise, it stoops.
 "Since I, whom Christ's mouth taught, was bidden teach,
 "I went, for many years, about the world,
 "Saying 'It was so; so I heard and saw,'
 10 "Speaking as the case asked: and men believed.
 "Afterward came the message to myself
 "In Patmos isle; I was not bidden teach,
 "But simply listen, take a book and write,
 "Nor set down other than the given word,
 "With nothing left to my arbitrament
 "To choose or change: I wrote, and men believed.
 "Then, for my time grew brief, no message more,
 "No call to write again, I found a way,
 "And, reasoning from my knowledge, merely taught 20 "Men should, for love's sake, in love's strength believe;
 "Or I would pen a letter to a friend
 "And urge the same as friend, nor less nor more:
 "Friends said I reasoned rightly, and believed.
 "But at the last, why, I seemed left alive
 "Like a sea-jelly weak on Patmos strand,
 "To tell dry sea-beach gazers how I fared
 "When there was mid-sea, and the mighty things;
 "Left to repeat, 'I saw, I heard, I knew,'
 "And go all over the old ground again, 30 "With Antichrist already in the world,
 "And many Antichrists, who answered prompt
 "Am I not Jasper as thyself art John?
 "Nay, young, whereas through age thou mayest forget:
 "Wherefore, explain, or how shall we believe?
 "I never thought to call down fire on such,
 "Or, as in wonderful and early days,
 "Pick up the scorpion, tread the serpent dumb;
 "But patient stated much of the Lord's life
 "Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it work: 40 "Since much that at the first, in deed and word,
 "Lay simply and sufficiently exposed,
 "Had grown (or else my soul was grown to match,
- "Fed through such years, familiar with such light,
 "Guarded and guided still to see and speak)
 "Of new significance and fresh result;
 "What first were guessed as points, I now knew stars,
 "And named them in the Gospel I have writ.
 "For men said, 'It is getting long ago:
 "Where is the promise of His coming?' — asked
 "These young ones in their strength, as so loth to wait,
 "Of me who, when their sires were born, was old.
 "I, for I loved them, answered, joyfully,
 "Since I was there, and helpful in my age;
 "And, in the main, I think such men believed.
 "Finally, thus endeavouring, I fell sick,
 "Ye brought me here, and I supposed the end,
 "And went to sleep with one thought that, at least,
 "Though the whole earth should lie in wickedness,
 "We had the truth, might leave the rest to God.
 "Yet now I wake in such decrepitude 60
 "As I had slidden down and fallen afar,
 "Past even the presence of my former self,
 "Grasping the while for stay at facts which snap,
 "Till I am found away from my own world,
 "Feeling for foot-hold through a blank profound,
 "Along with unborn people in strange lands,
 "Who say — I hear said or conceive they say —
 "Was John at all, and did he say he saw?
 "Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!
 "And how shall I assure them? Can they 70 share
 "— They, who have flesh, a veil of youth and strength
 "About each spirit, that needs must bide its time,
 "Living and learning still as years assist
 "Which wear the thickness thin, and let man see —
 "With me who hardly am withheld at all,
 "But shudderingly, scarce a shred between,
 "Lie bare to the universal prick of light?
 "Is it for nothing we grow old and weak,
 "We whom God loves? When pain ends gain ends too.
 "To me, that story — ay, that Life and 80
 Death
 "Of which I wrote 'it was' — to me, it is;

- Is, here and now: I apprehend
 nought else.
 "Is not God now i' the world His power
 first made?
 "Is not His love at issue still with sin,
 "Visibly when a wrong is done on earth?
 "Love, wrong, and pain, what see I else
 around?
 "Yea, and the Resurrection and Uprise
 "To the right hand of the throne — what is it beside,
 "When such truth, breaking bounds, o'er-floods my soul,
 "And, as I saw the sin and death, even so 10 "See I the need yet transiency of both,
 "The good and glory consummated
 thence?
 "I saw the power; I see the Love, once
 weak,
 "Resume the Power: and in this word 'I sec,'
 "Lo, there is recognised the Spirit of both
 "That moving o'er the spirit of man, unblinks
 "His eye and bids him look. These are, I
 see;
 "But ye, the children, His beloved ones
 too,
 "Ye need, — as I should use an optic glass
 "I wondered at erewhile, somewhere i' the
 world,
 20 "It had been given a crafty smith to make;
 "A tube, he turned on objects brought too
 close,
 "Lying confusedly insubordinate
 "For the unassisted eye to master once:
 "Look through his tube, at distance now they lay,
 "Become succinct, distinct, so small, so clear!
 "Just thus, ye needs must apprehend what
 truth
 "I see, reduced to plain historic fact,
 "Diminished into clearness, proved a point
 "And far away: ye would withdraw your sense
 30 "From out eternity, strain it upon time,
 "Then stand before that fact, that Life and Death,
 "Stay there at gaze, till it dispart, dispread,
 "As though a star should open out, all
 sides,
 "Grow the world on you, as it is my world.
 "For life, with all it yields of joy and woe,
 "And hope and fear, — believe the aged
 friend, —
 "Is just our chance o' the prize of learning
 love,
 "How love might be, hath been indeed,
 and is;
 "And that we hold thenceforth to the utter-
 most 40 "Such prize despite the envy of the world,
 "And, having gained truth, keep truth:
 that is all.
 "But see the double way wherein we are led,
 "How the soul learns diversely from the flesh!
 "With flesh, that hath so little time to
 stay,
 "And yields mere basement for the soul's
 emprise,
 "Expect prompt teaching. Helpful was the light,
 "And warmth was cherishing and food was choice
 "To every man's flesh, thousand years ago,
 "As now to yours and mine; the body
 sprang
 "At once to the height, and stayed: but 50
 the soul, — no!
 "Since sages who, this noontide, meditate
 "In Rome or Athens, may descry some point
 "Of the eternal power, hid yestereve;
 "And, as thereby the power's whole mass extends,
 "So much extends the æther floating o'er,
 "The love that tops the might, the Christ in God.
 "Then, as new lessons shall be learned in
 these
 "Till earth's work stop and useless time run out,
 "So duly, daily, needs provision be
 "For keeping the soul's prowess possible, 60
 "Building new barriers as the old decay,
 "Saving us from evasion of life's proof,
 "Putting the question ever, 'Does God
 love,
 "And will ye hold that truth against the
 world?'
 "Ye know there needs no second proof with
 good
 "Gained for our flesh from any earthly
 source:
 "We might go freezing, ages, — give us
 fire,
 "Thereafter we judge fire at its full worth,
 "And guard it safe through every chance,
 ye know!
 "That fable of Prometheus and his theft, 70
 "How mortals gained Jove's fiery flower, grows old
 "('I have been used to hear the pagans
 own)
 "And out of mind; but fire, howe'er its birth,
 "Here is it, precious to the sophist now
 "Who laughs the myth of Æschylus to scorn,
 "As precious to those satyrs of his play,
 "Who touched it in gay wonder at the
 thing.
 "While were it so with the soul, — this gift of truth

- "Once grasped, were this our soul's gain safe, and sure
"To prosper as the body's gain is wont, —
"Why, man's probation would conclude, his earth
"Crumble; for he both reasons and decides,
"Weighs first, then chooses: will he give up fire
"For gold or purple once he knows its
worth?
"Could he give Christ up were His worth as plain?
"Therefore, I say, to test man, the proofs
shift,
"Nor may he grasp that fact like other fact, 10 "And straightway in his life acknowledge
it,
"As, say, the indubitable bliss of fire.
"Sigh ye, 'It had been easier once than
now?'
"To give you answer I am left alive;
"Look at me who was present from the
first!
"Ye know what things I saw; then came a test,
"My first, befitting me who so had seen:
"Forsake the Christ thou sawest transfigured, Him
"Who trod the sea and brought the dead
to life?
"What should wring this from thee! —
ye laugh and ask.
20 "What wrung it? Even a torchlight and a noise,
"The sudden Roman faces, violent hands,
"And fear of what the Jews might do!
Just that,
"And it is written, 'I forsook and fled.'
"There was my trial, and it ended thus.
"Ay, but my soul had gained its truth,
could grow:
"Another year or two, — what little child,
"What tender woman that had seen no
least
"Of all my sights, but barely heard them
told,
"Who did not clasp the cross with a light
laugh,
30 "Or wrap the burning robe round, thanking God?
"Well, was truth safe for ever, then?
Not so.
"Already had begun the silent work
"Whereby truth, deadened of its absolute blaze,
"Might need love's eye to pierce the o'er-stretched doubt.
"Teachers were busy, whispering 'All is
true
"As the aged ones report; but youth can reach
"Where age gropes dimly, weak with stir and strain,
- "And the full doctrine slumbers till to-
day.'
"Thus, what the Roman's lowered spear was found,
"A bar to me who touched and handled 40
truth,
"Now proved the glozing of some new shrewd tongue,
"This Ebion, this Cerinthus or their mates,
"Till imminent was the outcry 'Save our Christ!'
"Whereon I stated much of the Lord's life
"Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it
work.
"Such work done, as it will be, what comes next?
"What do I hear say, or conceive men
say,
"Was John at all, and did he say he saw?
"Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!
"Is this indeed a burthen for late days, 50
"And may I help to bear it with you all,
"Using my weakness which becomes your
strength?
"For if a babe were born inside this grot,
"Grew to a boy here, heard us praise the
sun,
"Yet had but yon sole glimmer in light's
place, —
"One loving him and wishful he should learn,
"Would much rejoice himself was blinded
first.
"Month by month here, so made to understand
"How eyes, born darkling, apprehend amiss:
"I think I could explain to such a child 60
"There was more glow outside than gleams
he caught,
"Ay, nor need urge 'I saw it, so believe!'
"It is a heavy burthen you shall bear
"In latter days, new lands, or old grown
strange,
"Left without me, which must be very
soon.
"What is the doubt, my brothers? Quick with it!
"I see you stand conversing, each new face,
"Either in fields, of yellow summer eves,
"On islets yet unnamed amid the sea;
"Or pace for shelter 'neath a portico 70
"Out of the crowd in some enormous town
"Where now the larks sing in a solitude;
"Or muse upon blank heaps of stone and sand
"Idly conjectured to be Ephesus:
"And no one asks his fellow any more
"Where is the promise of His coming?'
but
"Was he revealed in any of His lives,
"As Power, as Love, as Influencing
Soul?"

- "Quick, for time presses, tell the whole mind out,
 "And let us ask and answer and be saved!
 "My book speaks on, because it cannot pass;
 "One listens quietly, nor scoffs but pleads
 "Here is a tale of things done ages since;
 "What truth was ever told the second day?
 "Wonders, that would prove doctrine, go for nought.
 "Remains the doctrine, love; well, we must love.
 "And what we love most, power and love in one, 10 "Let us acknowledge on the record here,
 "Accepting these in Christ: must Christ then be?
 "Has He been? Did not we ourselves make Him?
 "Our mind receives but what it holds, no more.
 "First of the love, then; we acknowledge Christ —
 "A proof we comprehend His love, a proof
 "We had such love already in ourselves,
 "Knew first what else we should not recognise.
 "Tis mere projection from man's inmost mind,
 "And, what he loves, thus falls reflected back, 20 "Becomes accounted somewhat out of him;
 "He throws it up in air, it drops down earth's,
 "With shape, name, story added, man's old way.
 "How prove you Christ came otherwise at least?
 "Next try the power: He made and rules the world:
 "Certes there is a world once made, now ruled,
 "Unless things have been ever as we see.
 "Our sires declared a charioteer's yoked steeds
 "Brought the sun up the east and down the west,
 "Which only of itself now rises, sets, 30 "As if a hand impelled it and a will, —
 "Thus they long thought, they who had will and hands:
 "But the new question's whisper is distinct,
 "Wherefore must all force needs be like ourselves?
 "We have the hands, the will; what made and drives
 "The sun is force, is law, is named, not known,
 "While will and love we do know; marks of these,
- "Eye-witnesses attest, so books declare —
 "As that, to punish or reward our race,
 "The sun at undue times arose or set
 "Or else stood still: what do not men 41 affirm?
 "But earth requires as urgently reward
 "Or punishment to-day as years ago,
 "And none expects the sun will interpose:
 "Therefore it was mere passion and mistake,
 "Or erring zeal for right, which changed the truth.
 "Go back, far, farther, to the birth of things;
 "Ever the will, the intelligence, the love,
 "Man's! — which he gives, supposing he but finds,
 "As late he gave head, body, hands and feet,
 "To help these in what forms he called his 51 gods.
 "First, Jove's brow, Juno's eyes were swept away,
 "But Jove's wrath, Juno's pride continued long;
 "As last, will, power, and love discarded these,
 "So law in turn discards power, love, and will.
 "What proveth God is otherwise at least?
 "All else, projection from the mind of man!
 "Nay, do not give me wine, for I am strong
 "But place my gospel where I put my hands.
 "I say that man was made to grow, not stop;
 "That help, he needed once, and needs no 64 more,
 "Having grown but an inch by, is withdrawn:
 "For he hath new needs, and new helps to these.
 "This imports solely, man should mount on each "New height in view; the help whereby he mounts,
 "The ladder-rung his foot has left, may fall,
 "Since all things suffer change save God the Truth.
 "Man apprehends Him newly at each stage
 "Whereat earth's ladder drops, its service done;
 "And nothing shall prove twice what once was proved.
 "You stick a garden-plot with ordered 74 twigs
 "To show inside lie germs of herbs unborn,
 "And check the careless step would spoil their birth;

- "But when herbs wave, the guardian twigs may go,
 "Since should ye doubt of virtues, question kinds,
 "It is no longer for old twigs ye look,
 "Which proved once underneath lay store
 of seed,
 "But to the hero's self by what light ye
 boast,
 "For what fruit's signs are. This book's fruit is plain,
 "Nor miracles need prove it any more.
 "Doth the fruit show? Then miracles bade 'ware
 "At first of root and stem, saved both till
 now 10 "From trampling ox, rough boar and wanton goat.
 "What? Was man made a wheelwork to wind up,
 "And be discharged, and straight wound up anew?
 "No! — grown, his growth lasts; taught,
 he ne'er forgets:
 "May learn a thousand things, not twice
 the same.
 "This might be pagan teaching: now hear
 mine.
 "I say, that as the babe, you feed awhile,
 "Becomes a boy and fit to feed himself,
 "So, minds at first must be spoon-fed with
 truth:
 "When they can eat, babe's-nurture is withdrawn.
 20 "I fed the babe whether it would or no:
 "I bid the boy or feed himself or starve.
 "I cried once, 'That ye may believe in Christ,
 "Behold this blind man shall receive his sight!'
 "I cry now, 'Urgest thou, for I am
shrewd
 "And smile at stories how John's word could cure —
 "Repeat that miracle and take my faith?'
 "I say, that miracle was duly wrought
 "When, save for it, no faith was possible.
 "Whether a change were wrought i' the shows o' the world, 30 "Whether the change came from our minds which see
 "Of shows o' the world so much as and no
 more
 "Than God wills for His purpose, — (what do I
 "See now, suppose you, there where you see rock
 "Round us?) — I know not; such was the effect,
 "So faith grew, making void more miracles
 "Because too much: they would compel,
 not help.
- "I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ
 "Accepted by thy reason, solves for
 thee
 "All questions in the earth and out of it,
 "And has so far advanced thee to be wise. 40
 "Wouldst thou unprove this to re-prove the proved?
 "In life's mere minute, with power to use that proof,
 "Leave knowledge and revert to how it sprung?
 "Thou hast it; use it and forthwith, or die!
 "For I say, this is death and the sole death,
 "When a man's loss comes to him from his gain,
 "Darkness from light, from knowledge
 ignorance,
 "And lack of love from love made manifest;
 "A lamp's death when, replete with oil, it
 chokes;
 "A stomach's when, surcharged with food, 50
 it starves.
 "With ignorance was surety of a cure.
 "When man, appalled at nature, questioned first
 "What if there lurk a might behind this might?
 "He needed satisfaction God could give,
 "And did give, as ye have the written
 word:
 "But when he finds might still redouble
 might,
 "Yet asks, 'Since all is might, what use of
 will?'
 "— Will, the one source of might, — he being man
 "With a man's will and a man's might, to teach
 "In little how the two combine in large, — 60
 "That man has turned round on himself and stands,
 "Which in the course of nature is, to die.
 "And when man questioned, 'What if there be love
 "Behind the will and might, as real as
 they?' —
 "He needed satisfaction God could give,
 "And did give, as ye have the written word:
 "But when, beholding that love everywhere,
 "He reasons, 'Since such love is everywhere,
 "And since ourselves can love and would be loved,
 "We ourselves make the love, and Christ 70 was not,' —
 "How shall ye help this man who knows
 himself,
 "That he must love and would be loved
 again,

- 'Yet, owning his own love that proveth Christ,
 "Rejecteth Christ through very need of Him?
 "The lamp o'erswims with oil, the stomach flags
 "Loaded with nurture, and that man's soul dies.
 "If he rejoins, 'But this was all the while "'A trick; the fault was, first of all, in thee,
 "'Thy story of the places, names and dates,
 "'Where, when and how the ultimate truth had rise,
 "'— Thy prior truth, at last discovered none, 10 "Whence now the second suffers detriment.
 "'What good of giving knowledge if, because
 "'O' the manner of the gift, its profit fail?
 "'And why refuse what modicum of help
 "'Had stopped the after-doubt, impossible
 "'I' the face of truth — truth absolute, uniform?
 "'Why must I hit of this and miss of that,
 "'Distinguish just as I be weak or strong,
 "'And not ask of thee and have answer prompt,
 "'Was this once, was it not once? — then and now 20 "'And evermore, plain truth from man to man.
 "'Is John's procedure just the heathen bard's?
 "'Put question of his famous play again
 "'How for the ephemerals' sake Jove's fire was filched,
 "'And carried in a cane and brought to earth:
 "'The fact is in the fable, cry the wise,
 "'Mortals obtained the boon, so much is fact,
 "'Though fire be spirit and produced on earth.
 "'As with the Titan's, so now with thy tale:
 "'Why breed in us perplexity, mistake,
 30 "Nor tell the whole truth in the proper words?"
 "I answer, Have ye yet to argue out
 "The very primal thesis, plainest law,
 "— Man is not God but hath God's end to serve,
 "A master to obey, a course to take,
 "Somewhat to cast off, somewhat to become?
 "Grant this, then man must pass from old to new,
 "From vain to real, from mistake to fact,
- "From what once seemed good, to what now proves best.
 "How could man have progression otherwise?
 "Before the point was mooted 'What is God?'
 "No savage man inquired 'What am myself?'
 "Much less replied, 'First, last, and best of things.'
 "Man takes that title now if he believes
 "Might can exist with neither will nor love,
 "In God's case — what he names now Nature's Law —
 "While in himself he recognises love
 "No less than might and will: and rightly takes.
 "Since if man prove the sole existent thing
 "Where these combine, whatever their degree,
 "However weak the might or will or love, 50
 "So they be found there, put in evidence, —
 "He is as surely higher in the scale
 "Than any might with neither love nor will,
 "As life, apparent in the poorest midge,
 "(When the faint dust-speck flits, ye guess its wing)
 "Is marvellous beyond dead Atlas' self —
 "Given to the nobler midge for resting-place!
 "Thus, man proves best and highest — God, in fine,
 "And thus the victory leads but to defeat,
 "The gain to loss, best rise to the worst 60
 fall,
 "His life becomes impossible, which is death.
 "But if, appealing thence, he cower, avouch
 "He is mere man, and in humility
 "Neither may know God nor mistake himself;
 "I point to the immediate consequence
 "And say, by such confession straight he falls
 "Into man's place, a thing nor God nor beast,
 "Made to know that he can know and not more:
 "Lower than God who knows all and can all,
 "Higher than beasts which know and can 70
 so far
 "As each beast's limit, perfect to an end,
 "Nor conscious that they know, nor craving more;
 "While man knows partly but conceives beside,
 "Creeps ever on from fancies to the fact,
 "And in this striving, this converting air
 "Into a solid he may grasp and use,
 "Finds progress, man's distinctive mark alone,

"Not God's, and not the beasts': God is, they are,

"Man partly is and wholly hopes to be.

"Such progress could no more attend his soul

"Were all it struggles after found at first

"And guesses changed to knowledge absolute,

"Than motion wait his body, were all else

"Than it the solid earth on every side,

"Where now through space he moves from rest to rest.

"Man, therefore, thus conditioned, must expect

"He could not, what he knows now, know at first;

"What he considers that he knows to-day,

"Come but to-morrow, he will find mis-known;

"Getting increase of knowledge, since he learns

"Because he lives, which is to be a man,

"Set to instruct himself by his past self:

"First, like the brute, obliged by facts to learn,

"Next, as man may, obliged by his own mind,

"Bent, habit, nature, knowledge turned to law.

"God's gift was that man should conceive of truth

20 "And yearn to gain it, catching at mistake,

"As midway help till he reach fact indeed.

"The statuary ere he mould a shape

"Boasts a like gift, the shape's idea, and next

"The aspiration to produce the same;

"So, taking clay, he calls his shape there-out,

"Cries ever 'Now I have the thing I see':

"Yet all the while goes changing what was wrought,

"From falsehood like the truth, to truth itself.

"How were it had he cried 'I see no face,

30 "No breast, no feet i' the ineffectual clay'?

"Rather commend him that he clapped his hands,

"And laughed 'It is my shape and lives again!'

"Enjoyed the falsehood, touched it on to truth,

"Until yourselves applaud the flesh indeed

"In what is still flesh-imitating clay.

"Right in you, right in him, such way be man's!

"God only makes the live shape at a jet.

"Will ye renounce this pact of creature-ship?

"The pattern on the Mount subsists no more.

40 "Seemed awhile, then returned to nothingness;

"But copies, Moses strove to make thereby,

"Serve still and are replaced as time requires:

"By these, make newest vessels, reach the type!

"If ye demur, this judgment on your head,

"Never to reach the ultimate, angels' law,

"Indulging every instinct of the soul

"There where law, life, joy, impulse are one thing!

"Such is the burthen of the latest time.

"I have survived to hear it with my ears,

"Answer it with my lips: does this suffice? 50

"For if there be a further woe than such,

"Wherein my brothers struggling need a hand,

"So long as any pulse is left in mine,

"May I be absent even longer yet,

"Plucking the blind ones back from the abyss,

"Though I should tarry a new hundred years!"

But he was dead; 'twas about noon, the day

Somewhat declining: we five buried him

That eve, and then, dividing, went five ways,

And I, disguised, returned to Ephesus. 60

By this, the cave's mouth must be filled with sand.

Valens is lost, I know not of his trace;

The Bactrian was but a wild childish man,

And could not write nor speak, but only loved:

So, lest the memory of this go quite,

Seeing that I to-morrow fight the beasts,

I tell the same to Phœbas, whom believe!

For many look again to find that face,

Beloved John's to whom I ministered,

Somewhere in life about the world; they 70

err:

Either mistaking what was darkly spoke

At ending of his book, as he relates,

Or misconceiving somewhat of this speech

Scattered from mouth to mouth, as I suppose.

Believe ye will not see him any more

About the world with his divine regard!

For all was as I say, and now the man

Lies as he lay once, breast to breast with God.

[Cerinthus read and mused; one added this:

"If Christ, as thou affirmest, be of men, 80

"Mere man, the first and best but nothing more, —

"Account Him, for reward of what He was,

"Now and for ever, wretchedest of all.
 "For see; Himself conceived of life as love,
 "Conceived of love, as what must enter in,
 "Fill up, make one with His each soul He loved:

"Thus much for man's joy, all men's joy for Him.

"Well, He is gone, thou sayest, to fit reward.

"But by this time are many souls set free,
 "And very many still retained alive:

"Nay, should His coming be delayed awhile

10 "Say, ten years longer (twelve years, some compute)

"See if, for every finger of thy hands,

"There be not found, that day the world shall end,

"Hundreds of souls, each holding by Christ's word

"That He will grow incorporate with all,

"With me as Pamphylax, with him as John,

"Groom for each bride! Can a mere man do this?

"Yet Christ saith, this He lived and died to do.

"Call Christ, then, the illimitable God,
 "Or lost!"

But 'twas Cerinthus that is lost.]

CALIBAN UPON SETEBOS; OR, NATURAL THEOLOGY IN THE ISLAND.

"Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thyself."

20 "WILL sprawl, now that the heat of day is best,

Flat on his belly in the pit's much mire,
 With elbows wide, fists clenched to prop his chin.

And, while he kicks both feet in the cool slush,

And feels about his spine small eft-things course,

Run in and cut each arm, and make him laugh:

And while above his head a pompion-plant,
 Coating the cave-top as a brow its eye,

Creeps down to touch and tickle hair and beard,

30 And now a flower drops with a bee inside,
 And now a fruit to snap at, catch and crunch, —

He looks out o'er yon sea which sunbeams cross

And recross till they weave a spider-web
 (Meshes of fire, some great fish breaks at times)

And talks to his own self, howe'er he please,
 Touching that other, whom his dam called

God.

Because to talk about Him, vexes — ha,
 Could He but know! and time to vex is now,

When talk is safer than in winter-time.

Moreover Prosper and Miranda sleep

In confidence he drudges at their task, 40

And it is good to cheat the pair, and gibe,

Letting the rank tongue blossom into speech.]

Setebos, Setebos, and Setebos!

'Thinketh, He dwelleth i' the cold o' the moon.

'Thinketh He made it, with the sun to match,

But not the stars; the stars came otherwise;
 Only made clouds, winds, meteors, such as that:

Also this isle, what lives and grows thereon,

And snaky sea which rounds and ends the same.

'Thinketh, it came of being ill at ease: 50

He hated that He cannot change His cold,
 Nor cure its ache. 'Hath spied an icy fish

That longed to 'scape the rock-stream where she lived,

And thaw herself within the lukewarm brine

O' the lazy sea her stream thrusts far amid,
 A crystal spike 'twixt two warm walls of

wave;

Only, she ever sickened; found repulse
 At the other kind of water, not her life,

(Green-dense and dim-delicious, bred o' the sun)

Flounced back from bliss she was not born 60

to breathe,
 And in her old bounds buried her despair,

Hating and loving warmth alike: so He.

'Thinketh, He made thereat the sun, this isle,

Trees and the fowls here, beast and creeping thing.

Yon otter, sleek-wet, black, lithe as a leech;

Yon auk, one fire-eye in a ball of foam,
 That floats and feeds; a certain badger

brown

He hath watched hunt with that slant white-wedge eye

By moonlight; and the pie with the long tongue

That pricks deep into oakwarts for a 70

worm,
 And says a plain word when she finds her prize,

But will not eat the ants; the ants themselves

That build a wall of seeds and settled stalks
 About their hole — He made all these and

more,

Made all we see, and us, in spite: how else?
 He could not, Himself, make a second self
 To be His mate; as well have made Himself:
 He would not make what he mislikes or slights,
 An eyeseore to Him, or not worth His pains:
 But did, in envy, listlessness or sport,
 Make what Himself would fain, in a manner, be — Weaker in most points, stronger in a few,
 Worthy, and yet mere playthings all the while,
 Things He admires and mocks too, — that is it.
 Because, so brave, so better though they be,
 It nothing skills if He begin to plague.
 Look now, I melt a gourd-fruit into mash,
 And honey-comb and pods, I have perceived,
 Which bite like finches when they bill and kiss, —
 Then, when froth rises bladdery, drink up all,
 Quick, quick, till maggots scamper through my brain;
 Last, throw me on my back i' the seeded thyme,
 And wanton, wishing I were born a bird.
 Put case, unable to be what I wish,
 I yet could make a live bird out of clay:
 Would not I take clay, pinch my Caliban
 Able to fly? — for, there, see, he hath wings,
 And great comb like the hoopoe's to admire,
 And there, a sting to do his foes offence,
 There, and I will that he begin to live,
 Fly to yon rock-top, nip me off the horns
 Of grigs high up that make the merry din, Saucy through their veined wings, and mind me not.
 In which feat, if his leg snapped, brittle clay,
 And he lay stupid-like, — why, I should laugh;
 And if he, spying me, should fall to weep,
 Beseech me to be good, repair his wrong,
 Bid his poor leg smart less or grow again, —
 Well, as the chance were, this might take or else
 Not take my fancy: I might hear his cry,
 And give the mankin three sound legs for one,
 Or pluck the other off, leave him like an egg,
 And lessoned he was mine and merely clay.
 Were this no pleasure, lying in the thyme,
 Drinking the mash, with brain become alive, Making and marring clay at will? So He.

'Thinketh, such shows nor right nor wrong in Him,
 Nor kind, nor cruel: He is strong and Lord,
 'Am strong myself compared to yonder crabs
 That march now from the mountain to the sea;
 'Let twenty pass, and stone the twenty-first,
 Loving not, hating not, just choosing so.
 'Say, the first straggler that boasts purple spots Shall join the file. one pincer twisted off; 50
 'Say, this bruised fellow shall receive a worm,
 And two worms he whose nippers end in red;
 As it likes me each time, I do: so He.
 Well then, 'supposeth He is good i' the main,
 Placable if His mind and ways were guessed,
 But rougher than His handiwork, be sure!
 Oh, He hath made things worthier than Himself,
 And envieth that, so helped, such things do more Than He who made them! What consoles but this?
 That they, unless through Him, do nought 60 at all,
 And must submit: what other use in things?
 'Hath cut a pipe of pithless elder-joint
 That, blown through, gives exact the scream o' the jay
 When from her wing you twitch the feathers blue:
 Sound this, and little birds that hate the jay Flock within stone's throw, glad their foe is hurt:
 Put case such pipe could prattle and boast forsooth
 "I catch the birds, I am the crafty thing,
 "I make the cry my maker cannot make
 "With his great round mouth; he must 70 blow through mine!"
 Would not I smash it with my foot? So He.
 But wherefore rough, why cold and ill at ease?
 Aha, that is a question! Ask, for that,
 What knows, — the something over Setebos
 That made Him, or He, may be, found and fought.
 Worsted, drove off and did to nothing, perchance.
 There may be something quiet o'er His head,

Out of His reach, that feels nor joy nor grief,
Since both derive from weakness in some way.

I joy because the quails come; would not joy

Could I bring quails here when I have a mind:

This Quiet, all it hath a mind to, doth.

'Esteemeth stars the outposts of its couch,
But never spends much thought nor care that way.

It may look up, work up, — the worse for those

It works on! 'Careth but for Setebos

10 The many-handed as a cuttle-fish,
Who, making Himself feared through what He does,

Looks up, first, and perceives he cannot soar

To what is quiet and hath happy life;
Next looks down here, and out of very spite

Makes this a bauble-world to ape yon real,
These good things to match those as hips do grapes.

'Tis solace making baubles, ay, and sport.

Himself peeped late, eyed Prosper at his books.

Careless and lofty, lord now of the isle:

20 Vexed, 'stitched a book of broad leaves, arrow-shaped,

Wrote thereon, he knows what, prodigious words;

Has peeled a wand and called it by a name;

Weareth at whiles for an enchanter's robe
The eyed skin of a supple opcelot;

And hath an ounce sleeker than youngling mole,

A four-legged serpent he makes cower and couch,

Now snarl, now hold its breath and mind his eye,

And saith she is Miranda and my wife:
'Keeps for his Ariel a tall pouch-bill crane

30 He bids go wade for fish and straight disgorge;

Also a sea-beast, lumpish, which he snared,
Blinded the eyes of, and brought somewhat tame,

And split its toe-webs, and now pens the drudge

In a hole o' the rock and calls him Caliban;
A bitter heart that bides its time and bites.

'Plays thus at being Prosper in a way,
Taket his mirth with make-believes:

so He.

His dam held that the Quiet made all things
Which Setebos vexed only: 'holds not so.

40 Who made them weak, meant weakness
He might vex.

Had He meant other, while His hand was in,

Why not make horny eyes no thorn could prick,

Or plate my scalp with bone against the snow,

Or overscale my flesh 'neath joint and joint,

Like an orc's armour? Ay, — so spoil His sport!

He is the One now: only He doth all.

'Saith, He may like, perchance, what profits Him.

Ay, himself loves what does him good; but why?

'Gets good no otherwise. This blinded beast

Loves whoso places flesh-meat on his nose,

But, had he eyes, would want no help, but hate

Or love, just as it liked him: He hath eyes.

Also it pleaseth Setebos to work,
Use all His hands, and exercise much craft,

By no means for the love of what is worked.

'Tasteth, himself, no finer good i' the world

When all goes right, in this safe summer-time,

And he wants little, hungers, aches not much,

Than trying what to do with wit and strength.

'Falls to make something: 'piled yon 6 pile of turfs,

And squared and stuck there squares of soft white chalk,

And, with a fish-tooth, scratched a moon on each,

And set up endwise certain spikes of tree,
And crowned the whole with a sloth's skull a-top,

Found dead i' the woods, too hard for one to kill.

No use at all i' the work, for work's sole sake;

'Shall some day knock it down again: so He.

'Saith He is terrible: watch His feats in proof!

One hurricane will spoil six good months' hope.

He hath a spite against me, that I know. 70

Just as He favours Prosper, who knows why?

So it is, all the same, as well I find.

'Wove wattles half the winter, fenced them firm

With stone and stake to stop she-tortoises
Crawling to lay their eggs here: well, one wave,

Feeling the foot of Him upon its neck,

Gaped as a snake does, lolled out its large
tongue,
And licked the whole labour flat: so much for spite.

Saw a ball flame down late (yonder it lies) Where, half an hour before, I slept i' the shade:

Often they scatter sparkles: there is force!
'Dug up a newt He may have envied once
And turned to stone, shut up inside a stone.
Please Him and hinder this? — What Prosper does?

Aha, if He would tell me how! Not He!
'There is the sport: discover how or 'die!
All need not die, for of the things o' the isle

Some flee afar, some dive, some run up
trees;

Those at His mercy, — why, they please Him most

When . . . when . . . well, never try the same way twice!

Repeat what act has pleased, He may grow wroth.

You must not know His ways, and play
Him off,

Sure of the issue. 'Doth the like himself:
'Spareth a squirrel that it nothing fears

But steals the nut from underneath my
thumb,

And when I threat, bites stoutly in defence:

'Spareth an urchin that contrariwise,
Curls up into a ball, pretending death
For fright at my approach: the two ways
please.

But what would move my choler more than this,

That either creature counted on its life
To-morrow and next day and all days to
come,

Saying, forsooth, in the inmost of its heart,
"Because he did so yesterday with me,

"And otherwise with such another brute,
"So must he do henceforth and always." —

Ay?

Would teach the reasoning couple what
"must" means!

'Doth as he likes, or wherefore Lord?
So He.

'Conceiveth all things will continue thus,
And we shall have to live in fear of Him

So long as He lives, keeps His strength:
no change,

If He have done His best, make no new
world

To please Him more, so leave off watching
this, —

If He surprise not even the Quiet's self
Some strange day, — or, suppose, grow into it

As Grubs grow butterflies: else, here are we,
And there is He, and nowhere help at all.

'Believeth with the life, the pain shall stop.
His dam held different, that after death
He both plagued enemies and feasted
friends:

Idly! He doth His worst in this our life, Giving just respite lest we die through
pain,

Saving last pain for worst, — with which,
an end.

Meanwhile, the best way to escape His ire
Is, not to seem too happy. 'Sees, himself,

Yonder two flies, with purple films and 50
pink,

Bask on the pompion-bell above: kills
both.

'Sees two black painful beetles roll their
ball

On head and tail as if to save their lives:
Moves them the stick away they strive to clear.

Even so, 'would have Him misconceive,
suppose

This Caliban strives hard and ails no less
And always, above all else, envies Him;

Wherefore he mainly dances on dark
nights,

Moans in the sun, gets under holes to
laugh,

And never speaks his mind save housed 60
as now:

Outside, 'groans, curses. If He caught me here,

O'erheard this speech, and asked "What chucklest at?"

'Would, to appease Him, cut a finger off,
Or of my three kid yearlings burn the best,

Or let the toothsome apples rot on tree,
Or push my tame beast for the orc to taste:

While myself lit a fire, and made a song
And sung it, "What I hate, be consecrate

"To celebrate Thee and Thy state, no mate
"For Thee; what see for envy in poor me?" 70

Hoping the while, since evils sometimes
mend,

Warts rub away and sores are cured with slime,

That some strange day, will either the Quiet catch

And conquer Setebos, or likelier He Decrepit may doze, doze, as good as die.

[What, what? A curtain o'er the world
at once!

Crickets stop hissing; not a bird — or, yes,
There scuds His raven that has told Him

all!

It was fool's play, this prattling! Ha!
The wind

Shoulders the pillared dust, death's house 80
o' the move,

And fast invading fires begin! White
blaze —

A tree's head snaps — and there, there,
 there, there, there,
 His thunder follows! Fool to gibe at Him!
 Lo! 'Lieth flat and loveth Setebos!
 'Maketh his teeth meet through his upper
 lip,
 Will let those quails fly, will not eat this month
 One little mess of whelks, so he may 'scape !]

CONFESSIONS.

I.

WHAT is he buzzing in my ears?
 "Now that I come to die,
 "Do I view the world as a vale of tears?"
 10 Ah, reverend sir, not I!

II.

What I viewed there once, what I view
 again
 Where the physic bottles stand
 On the table's edge, — is a suburb lane,
 With a wall to my bedside hand.

III.

That lane sloped, much as the bottles do,
 From a house you could descry
 O'er the garden-wall: is the curtain blue
 Or green to a healthy eye?

IV.

To mine, it serves for the old June weather
 20 Blue above lane and wall;
 And that farthest bottle labelled "Ether"
 Is the house o'ertopping all.

V.

At a terrace, somewhere near the stopper,
 There watched for me, one June,
 A girl: I know, sir, it's improper,
 My poor mind's out of tune.

VI.

Only, there was a way . . . you crept
 Close by the side, to dodge Eyes in the house, two eyes except:
 30 They styled their house "The Lodge."

VII.

What right had a loungeur up their lane?
 But, by creeping very close,
 With the good wall's help, — their eyes might strain
 And stretch themselves to Oes,

VIII.

Yet never catch her and me together,
 As she left the attic, there,
 By the rim of the bottle labelled "Ether,"
 And stole from stair to stair,

IX.

And stood by the rose-wreathed gate.
 Alas,
 We loved, sir — used to meet:
 How sad and bad and mad it was —
 But then, how it was sweet!

MAY AND DEATH.

I.

I WISH that when you died last May,
 Charles, there had died along with you
 Three parts of spring's delightful things;
 Ay, and, for me, the fourth part too.

II.

A foolish thought, and worse, perhaps!
 There must be many a pair of friends
 Who, arm in arm, deserve the warm
 Moon-births and the long evening-ends.

III.

So, for their sake, be May still May!
 Let their new time, as mine of old,
 Do all it did for me: I bid Sweet sights and sounds throng manifold.

IV.

Only, one little sight, one plant,
 Woods have in May, that starts up green
 Save a sole streak which, so to speak,
 Is spring's blood, spilt its leaves between, —

V.

That, they might spare; a certain wood Might miss the plant; their loss were small:
 But I, — whene'er the leaf grows there,
 Its drop comes from my heart, that's all.

DEAF AND DUMB.

A GROUP BY WOOLNER.

ONLY the prism's obstruction shows aright
 The secret of a sunbeam, breaks its light
 Into the jewelled bow from blankest white;
 So may a glory from defect arise:
 Only by Deafness may the vexed Love wreak
 Its insuppressive sense on brow and cheek,
 Only by Dumbness adequately speak
 As favoured mouth could never, through the eyes.

PROSPICE.

FEAR death? — to feel the fog in my
 throat,
 The mist in my face,

When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
 I am nearing the place,
 The power of the night, the press of the storm,
 The post of the foe;
 Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
 Yet the strong man must go:
 For the journey is done and the summit attained,
 And the barriers fall,
 Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
 The reward of it all.
 I was ever a fighter, so — one fight more,
 The best and the last!
 I would hate that death bandaged my eyes and forbore,
 And bade me creep past.
 No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers
 The heroes of old,
 Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
 Of pain, darkness and cold.
 For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
 The black minute's at end,
 And the elements' rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
 Shall dwindle, shall blend,
 Shall change, shall become first a peace out of pain,
 Then a light, then thy breast,
 O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again,
 And with God be the rest!

EURYDICE TO ORPHEUS.

A PICTURE BY LEIGHTON.

BUT give them me, the mouth, the eyes,
 the brow!
 Let them once more absorb me! One look now
 Will lap me round for ever, not to pass
 Out of its light, though darkness lie beyond:
 Hold me but safe again within the bond
 Of one immortal look! All woe that was,
 Forgotten, and all terror that may be,
 Denied, — no past is mine, no future: look at me!

YOUTH AND ART.

I.

It once might have been, once only:
 We lodged in a street together,
 You, a sparrow on the housetop lonely,
 I' a lone she-bird of his feather.

II.

Your trade was with sticks and clay,
 You thumbed, thrust, patted and 40
 polished,
 Then laughed "They will see some day
 "Smith made, and Gibson demolished."

III.

My business was song, song, song;
 I chirped, cheeped, trilled and twittered,
 "Kate Brown's on the boards ere long,
 "And Grisi's existence embittered!"

IV.

I earned no more by a warble
 Than you by a sketch in plaster;
 You wanted a piece of marble,
 I needed a music-master. 50

V.

We studied hard in our styles,
 Chipped each at a crust like Hindoos,
 For air looked out on the tiles,
 For fun watched each other's windows.

VI.

You lounged, like a boy of the South,
 Cap and blouse — nay, a bit of beard too;
 Or you got it, rubbing your mouth
 With fingers the clay adhered to.

VII.

And I — soon managed to find
 Weak points in the flower-fence facing, 60
 Was forced to put up a blind
 And be safe in my corset-lacing.

VIII.

No harm! It was not my fault
 If you never turned your eye's tail up
 As I shook upon E in alt.,
 Or ran the chromatic scale up:

IX.

For spring bade the sparrows pair,
 And the boys and girls gave guesses,
 And stalls in our street looked rare
 With bulrush and watercresses. 70

X.

Why did not you pinch a flower
 In a pellet of clay and fling it?
 Why did not I put a power
 Of thanks in a look, or sing it?

XI.

I did look, sharp as a lynx,
 (And yet the memory rankles)
 When models arrived, some minx
 Tripped up-stairs, she and her ankles,

XII.

But I think I gave you as good!
 "That foreign fellow, — who can know
 "How she pays, in a playful mood,
 "For his tuning her that piano?"

XIII.

Could you say so, and never say
 "Suppose we join hands and fortunes,
 "And I fetch her from over the way,
 "Her piano, and long tunes and short tunes?"

XIV.

No, no; you would not be rash,
 10 Nor I rasher and something over:
 You've to settle yet Gibson's hash,
 And Grisi yet lives in clover.

XV.

But you meet the Prince at the Board,
 I'm queen myself at bals-paré,
 I've married a rich old lord,
 And you're dubbed knight and an R.A.

XVI.

Each life unfulfilled, you see;
 It hangs still, patchy and scrappy:
 We have not sighed deep, laughed free, 20 Starved, feasted, despaired, — been happy.

XVII.

And nobody calls you a dunce,
 And people suppose me clever:
 This could but have happened once,
 And we missed it, lost it for ever.

A FACE.

If one could have that little head of hers
 Painted upon a background of pale gold,
 Such as the Tuscan's early art prefers!
 No shade encroaching on the matchless
 mould
 Of those two lips, which should be opening soft 30 In the pure profile; not as when she laughs,
 For that spoils all: but rather as if aloft Yon hyacinth, she loves so, leaned its staff's
 Burthen of honey-coloured buds to kiss
 And capture 'twixt the lips apart for this.
 Then her lithe neck, three fingers might surround,
 How it should waver on the pale gold
 ground
 Up to the fruit-shaped, perfect chin it lifts!
 I know, Correggio loves to mass, in rifts
 Of heaven, his angel faces, orb on orb 40 Breaking its outline, burning shades absorb:

But these are only massed there, I should
 think,
 Waiting to see some wonder momentarily Grow out, stand full, fade slow against
 the sky
 (That's the pale ground you'd see this sweet face by),
 All heaven, meanwhile, condensed into one eye
 Which fears to lose the wonder, should it wink.

A LIKENESS.

SOME people hang portraits up
 In a room where they dine or sup:
 And the wife clinks tea-things under,
 And her cousin, he stirs his cup,
 Asks, "Who was the lady, I wonder?"
 "Tis a daub John bought at a sale," Quoth the wife, — looks black as thunder:
 "What a shade beneath her nose!
 "Snuff-taking, I suppose, —"
 Adds the cousin, while John's corns ail.
 Or else, there's no wife in the case,
 But the portrait's queen of the place,
 Alone 'mid the other spoils
 Of youth, — masks, gloves and foils,
 And pipe-sticks, rose, cherry-tree, jasmine,
 And the long whip, the tandem-lasher,
 And the cast from a fist ("not, alas! mine,
 "But my master's, the Tipton Slasher"),
 And the cards where pistol-balls mark ace,
 And a satin shoe used for cigar-case,
 And the chammois-horns ("shot in the Chablais")
 And prints — Rarey drumming on Cruiser,
 And Sayers, our champion, the bruiser,
 And the little edition of Rabelais:
 Where a friend, with both hands in his pockets,
 May saunter up close to examine it,
 And remark a good deal of Jane Lamb
 in it,
 "But the eyes are half out of their sockets;
 "That hair's not so bad, where the gloss is,
 "But they've made the girl's nose a pro-boscis:
 "Jane Lamb, that we danced with at Vichy!
 "What, is not she Jane? Then, who is
 she?"
 All that I own is a print,
 An etching, a mezzotint;
 'Tis a study, a fancy, a fiction,
 Yet a fact (take my conviction)
 Because it has more than a hint
 Of a certain face, I never Saw elsewhere touch or trace of
 In women I've seen the face of:
 Just an etching, and, so far, clever.

I keep my prints, an imbroglio,
 Fifty in one portfolio.
 When somebody tries my claret,
 We turn round chairs to the fire,
 Chirp over days in a garret,
 Chuckle o'er increase of salary,
 Taste the good fruits of our leisure,
 Talk about pencil and lyre,
 And the National Portrait Gallery:
 Then I exhibit my treasure.
 After we've turned over twenty,
 And the debt of wonder my crony owes
 Is paid to my Marc Antonios,¹
 He stops me — "Festina lentè!"
 "What's that sweet thing there, the etch-
 ing?"
 How my waistcoat-strings want stretch-
 ing,
 How my cheeks grow red as tomatoes, How my heart leaps! But hearts, after leaps, ache.
 "By the by, you must take, for a keepsake,
 "That other, you praised, of Volpato's."'
 The fool! would he try a flight further and
 say —
 He never saw, never before to-day,
 What was able to take his breath away,
 A face to lose youth for, to occupy age
 With the dream of, meet death with, — why, I'll not engage
 But that, half in a rapture and half in a
 rage,
 I should toss him the thing's self — "'Tis only a duplicate,
 "A thing of no value! Take it, I supplicate!"

MR. SLUDGE, "THE MEDIUM."

Now, don't, sir! Don't expose me! Just this once!
 This was the first and only time, I'll swear, —
 Look at me, — see, I kneel, — the only
 time,
 I swear, I ever cheated, — yes, by the soul
 Of Her who hears — (your sainted mother,
 sir!)
 All, except this last accident, was truth —
 This little kind of slip! — and even this,
 It was your own wine, sir, the good champagne,
 (I took it for Catawba, you're so kind)
 Which put the folly in my head!

"Get up?"

You still inflict on me that terrible face?
 You show no mercy? — Not for Her dear
 sake,
 The sainted spirit's, whose soft breath even
 now
 : Engravers, held in repute by collectors.

Blows on my cheek — (don't you feel something, sir?)
 You'll tell?

Go tell, then! Who the devil cares
 What such a rowdy chooses to . . .
 Aie — aie — aie!
 Please, sir! your thumbs are through my windpipe, sir!
 Ch — ch!

Well, sir, I hope you've done it now!
 Oh Lord! I little thought, sir, yesterday,
 When your departed mother spoke those
 words
 Of peace through me, and moved you, sir,
 so much,
 You gave me — (very kind it was of you) 50
 These shirt-studs — (better take them back again,
 Please, sir) — yes, little did I think so
 soon
 A trifle of trick, all through a glass too
 much
 Of his own champagne, would change my best of friends
 Into an angry gentleman!

Though, 'twas wrong.
 I don't contest the point; your anger's just:
 Whatever put such folly in my head,
 I know 'twas wicked of me. There's a thick
 Dusk undeveloped spirit (I've observed)
 Owes me a grudge — a negro's, I should 60
 say,
 Or else an Irish emigrant's; yourself
 Explained the case so well last Sunday, sir,
 When we had summoned Franklin to clear
 up
 A point about those shares i' the telegraph:
 Ay, and he swore . . . or might it be Tom Paine? . . .
 Thumping the table close by where I crouched,
 He'd do me soon a mischief: that's come
 true!
 Why, now your face clears! I was sure it would!
 Then, this one time . . . don't take your hand away,
 Through yours I surely kiss your mother's 70
 hand . . .
 You'll promise to forgive me? — or, at
 least,
 Tell nobody of this? Consider, sir!
 What harm can mercy do? Would but the shade
 Of the venerable dead-one just vouchsafe
 A rap or tip! What bit of paper's here?
 Suppose we take a pencil, let her write,
 Make the least sign, she urges on her child Forgiveness? There now! Eh? Oh!
 'Twas your foot,
 And not a natural creak, sir?

Answer, then!

Once, twice, thrice . . . see, I'm waiting to say "thrice!"

All to no use? No sort of hope for me? It's all to post to Greeley's newspaper?

What? If I told you all about the tricks? Upon my soul! — the whole truth, and nought else,

And how there's been some falsehood — for your part,

Will you engage to pay my passage out, And hold your tongue until I'm safe on board?

10 England's the place, not Boston — no offence!

I see what makes you hesitate: don't fear! I mean to change my trade and cheat no more,

Yes, this time really it's upon my soul! Be my salvation! — under Heaven, of course.

I'll tell some queer things. Sixty V's must do.

A trifle, though, to start with! We'll refer The question to this table?

How you're changed!

Then split the difference; thirty more, we'll say.

Ay, but you leave my presents! Else I'll swear

20 'Twas all through those: you wanted yours again,

So, picked a quarrel with me, to get them back!

Tread on a worm, it turns, sir! If I turn, Your fault! 'Tis you'll have forced me!

Who's obliged

To give up life yet try no self-defence?

At all events, I'll run the risk. Eh?

Done!

May I sit, sir? This dear old table, now! Please, sir, a parting egg-nogg and cigar! I've been so happy with you! Nice stuffed chairs,

And sympathetic sideboards; what an end 30 To all the instructive evenings! (It's alright.)

Well, nothing lasts, as Bacon came and said.

Here goes, — but keep your temper, or I'll scream!

Fol-lol-the-rido-liddle-liddle-ol!

You see, sir, it's your own fault more than mine;

It's all your fault, you curious gentlefolk! You're prigs, — excuse me, — like to look so sly,

So clever, while you cling by half a claw To the perch whereon you puff yourselves at roost,

Such piece of self-conceit as serves for perch

Because you chose it, so it must be safe. 44 Oh, otherwise you're sharp enough! You spy

Who slips, who slides, who holds by help of wing,

Wanting real foothold, — who can't keep upright

On the other perch, your neighbour chose, not you:

There's no outwitting you respecting him! For instance, men love money — that, you know

And what men do to gain it: well, suppose A poor lad, say a help's son in your house,

Listening at keyholes, hears the company Talk grand of dollars, V-notes, and so 50

forth,

How hard they are to get, how good to hold,

How much they buy, — if, suddenly, in pops he —

"I've got a V-note!" — what do you say to him?

What's your first word which follows your last kick?

"Where did you steal it, rascal?" That's because

He finds you, fain would fool you, off your perch,

Not on the special piece of nonsense, sir, Elected your parade-ground: let him try

Lies to the end of the list, — "He picked it up,

"His cousin died and left it him by will, 60 "The president flung it to him, riding by,

"An actress trucked it for a curl of his hair, "He dreamed of luck and found his shoe enriched, "He dug up clay, and out of clay made gold" —

How would you treat such possibilities? Would not you, prompt, investigate the case

With cow-hide? "Lies, lies, lies," you'd shout: and why?

Which of the stories might not prove mere truth?

This last, perhaps, that clay was turned to coin!

Let's see, now, give him me to speak for 70 him!

How many of your rare philosophers, In plaguy books I've had to dip into,

Believed gold could be made thus, saw it made

And made it? Oh, with such philosophers You're on your best behaviour! While the lad —

With him, in a trice, you settle likelihoods, Nor doubt a moment how he got his

prize:

In his case, you hear, judge and execute, All in a breath: so would most men of sense.

But let the same lad hear you talk as grand

At the same keyhole, you and company,
Of signs and wonders, the invisible world;
How wisdom scouts our vulgar unbelief
More than our vulgarest credulity;
How good men have desired to see a ghost,
What Johnson used to say, what Wesley
did,

Mother Goose thought, and fiddle-diddle-dee:—

If he break in with, "Sir, I saw a ghost!"

o Ah, the ways change! He finds you perched and prim;

It's a conceit of yours that ghosts may be:
There's no talk now of cow-hide. "Tell it out!

"Don't fear us! Take your time and recollect!

"Sit down first: try a glass of wine, my boy!

"And, David, (is not that your Christian
name?)

"Of all things, should this happen twice —
it may —

"Be sure, while fresh in mind, you let us
know!"

Does the boy blunder, blurt out this, blab
that,

Break down in the other, as beginners will?

20 All's candour, all's considerateness —
"No haste!

"Pause and collect yourself! We understand!

"That's the bad memory, or the natural
shock,

"Or the unexplained phenomena!"

Egad,

The boy takes heart of grace; finds, never
fear,

The readiest way to ope your own heart
wide,

Show — what I call your peacock-perch, pet post

To strut, and spread the tail, and squawk
upon!

"Just as you thought, much as you might expect!

"There be more things in heaven and earth, Horatio," . . .

30 And so on. Shall not David take the hint, Grow bolder, stroke you down at quickened rate?

If he ruffle a feather, it's "Gently, patiently!"
"Manifestations are so weak at first!

"Doubting, moreover, kills them, cuts all
short,

"Cures with a vengeance!"

There, sir, that's your style!

You and your boy — such pains bestowed
on him,

Or any headpiece of the average worth,

To teach, say, Greek, would perfect him
apace,

Make him a Person ("Porson?" thank you, sir!)

Much more, proficient in the art of lies. 4:

You never leave the lesson! Fire alight, Catch you permitting it to die! You've

friends;
There's no withholding knowledge, — least from those

Apt to look elsewhere for their souls'
supply:

Why should not you parade your lawful
prize?

Who finds a picture, digs a medal up,
Hits on a first edition, — he henceforth

Gives it his name, grows notable: how much more,

Who ferrets out a "medium"? David's
yours,

"You highly-favoured man? Then, pity 5c
souls

"Less privileged! Allow us share your luck!"

So, David holds the circle, rules the roast, Narrates the vision, peeps in the glass

ball,
Sets to the spirit-writing, hears the raps,
As the case may be.

Now mark! To be precise —

Though I say, "lies" all these, at this first stage,

'Tis just for science' sake: I call such grubs

By the name of what they'll turn to, dragonflies.

Strictly, it's what good people style untruth;
But yet, so far, not quite the full-grown 6a

thing:
It's fancying, fable-making, nonsense-
work —

What never meant to be so very bad —
The knack of story-telling, brightening up

Each dull old bit of fact that drops its shine.

One does see somewhat when one shuts one's eyes,

If only spots and streaks; tables do tip
In the oddest way of themselves: and pens,

good Lord,
Who knows if you drive them or they drive
you?

'Tis but a foot in the water and out again;
Not that duck-under which decides your 7i dive.

Note this, for it's important: listen why.

I'll prove, you push on David till he dives And ends the shivering. Here's your circle, now:

Two-thirds of them, with heads like you

their host,
Turn up their eyes, and cry, as you expect,

- "Lord, who'd have thought it!" But there's always one Looks wise, compassionately smiles, submits
"Of your veracity no kind of doubt,
"But—do you feel so certain of that boy's?
"Really, I wonder! I confess myself
"More chary of my faith!" That's galling, sir!
What, he the investigator, he the sage,
When all's done? Then, you just have shut your eyes,
Opened your mouth, and gulped down
David whole,
10 You! Terrible were such catastrophe!
So, evidence is redoubled, doubled again,
And doubled besides; once more, "He heard, we heard,
"You and they heard, your mother and your wife,
"Your children and the stranger in your gates:
"Did they or did they not?" So much for
him,
The black sheep, guest without the wedding-garb,
The doubting Thomas! Now's your turn to crow:
"He's kind to think you such a fool:
Sludge cheats?
"Leave you alone to take precautions!"
Straight
20 The rest join chorus. Thomas stands abashed,
Sips silent some such beverage as this,
Considers if it be harder, shutting eyes
And gulping David in good fellowship,
Than going elsewhere, getting, in exchange,
With no egg-nogg to lubricate the food,
Some just as tough a morsel. Over the
way,
Holds Captain Sparks his court: is it better there?
Have not you hunting-stories, scalping-scenes,
And Mexican War exploits to swallow plump
30 If you'd be free o' the stove-side, rockingchair,
And trio of affable daughters?
Doubt succumbs!
Victory! All your circle's yours again!
Out of the clubbing of submissive wits, David's performance rounds, each chink gets patched,
Every protrusion of a point's filed fine,
All's fit to set a-rolling round the world,
And then return to David finally,
Lies seven-feet thick about his first half-
inch.
Here's a choice birth o' the supernatural, 40 Poor David's pledged to! You've employed no tool.
- That laws exclaim at, save the devil's
own,
Yet screwed him into henceforth gulling
you
To the top o' your bent, — all out of one half-lie!
You hold, if there's one half or a hundredth
part
Of a lie, that's his fault, — his be the penalty!
I dare say! You'd prove firmer in his
place?
You'd find the courage, — that first flurry
over,
That mild bit of romancing-work at end, —
To interpose with "It gets serious, this;
"Must stop here. Sir, I saw no ghost at 50
all.
"Inform your friends I made . . . well,
fools of them,
"And found you ready-made. I've lived in clover
"These three weeks: take it out in kicks
of me!"
I doubt it. Ask your conscience! Let me
know,
Twelve months hence, with how few em-bellishments
You've told almighty Boston of this passage
Of arms between us, your first taste o' the foil
From Sludge who could not fence, sir!
Sludge, your boy!
I lied, sir, — there! I got up from my gorge
On offal in the gutter, and preferred 60
Your canvas-backs: I took their carver's size,
Measured his modicum of intelligence,
Tickled him on the cockles of his heart
With a raven feather, and next week found
myself
Sweet and clean, dining daintily, dizened smart,
Set on a stool buttressed by ladies' knees,
Every soft smiler calling me her pet,
Encouraging my story to uncoil
And creep out from its hole, inch after inch,
"How last night, I no sooner snug in bed, 70
"Tucked up, just as they left me, — than came raps!
"While a light whisked" . . . "Shaped somewhat like a star?"
"Well, like some sort of stars, ma'am." —
"So we thought!
"And any voice? Not yet? Try hard,
next time,
"If you can't hear a voice; we think you
may:
"At least, the Pennsylvanian 'mediums'
did."

Oh, next time comes the voice! "Just as we hoped!"
Are not the hoppers proud now, pleased, profuse
O' the natural acknowledgment?

Of course!

So, off we push, illy-oh yo, trim the boat,
On we sweep with a cataract ahead, We're midway to the Horseshoe: stop, who can,
The dance of bubbles gay about our prow!
Experiences become worth waiting for,
Spirits now speak up, tell their inmost
mind,

And compliment the "medium" properly,
Concern themselves about his Sunday coat, See rings on his hand with pleasure. Ask yourself

How you'd receive a course of treats like
these!

Why, take the quietest hack and stall him
up,

Cram him with corn a month, then out with
him

Among his mates on a bright April morn,
With the turf to tread; see if you find or no
A caper in him, if he bucks or bolts!

Much more a youth whose fancies sprout
as rank

As toadstool-clump from melon-bed. 'Tis
soon,

"Sirrah, you spirit, come, go, fetch and carry,

"Read, write, rap, rub-a-dub, and hang yourself!"

I'm spared all further trouble; all's arranged;

Your circle does my business; I may rave
Like an epileptic dervish in the books, Foam, fling myself flat, rend my clothes to shreds;

No matter: lovers, friends and countrymen
Will lay down spiritual laws, read wrong things right

By the rule o' reverse. If Francis Verulam so Styles himself Bacon, spells the name
beside

With a y and a k, says he drew breath in York,

Gave up the ghost in Wales when Cromwell reigned,

(As, sir, we somewhat fear he was apt to
say,

Before I found the useful book that knows) Why, what harm's done? The circle smiles apace,

"It was not Bacon, after all, you see!

"We understand; the trick's but natural:

"Such spirits' individuality

"Is hard to put in evidence: they incline

To gibe and jeer, these undeveloped sorts.

"You see, their world's much like a jail broke loose,

"While this of ours remains shut, bolted,
barred,

"With a single window to it. Sludge, our
friend,

"Serves as this window, whether thin or thick,

"Or stained or stainless; he's the medium-pane

"Through which, to see us and be seen,
they peep:

"They crowd each other, hustle for a
chance,

"Tread on their neighbour's kibes, play tricks enough!

"Does Bacon, tired of waiting, swerve
aside?

"Up in his place jumps Barnum — 'I'm 54
your man,

"I'll answer you for Bacon! Try once
more!"

Or else it's — "What's a 'medium'?
He's a means,

"Good, bad, indifferent, still the only means

"Spirits can speak by; he may misconceive,

"Stutter and stammer, — he's their Sludge and drudge,

"Take him or leave him; they must hold their peace,

"Or else, put up with having knowledge strained

"To half-expression through his ignorance.

"Suppose, the spirit Beethoven wants to shed

"New music he's brimful of; why, he 6 turns

"The handle of this organ, grinds with Sludge,

"And what he poured in at the mouth o'
the mill

"As a Thirty-third Sonata, (fancy now!)

"Comes from the hopper as bran-new Sludge, nought else,

"The Shakers' Hymn in G, with a natural F,

"Or the 'Stars and Stripes' set to consecutive fourths."

Sir, where's the scrape you did not help me
through,

You that are wise? And for the fools, the folk

Who came to see, — the guests, (observe that word!)

Pray do you find guests criticise your wine, 70
Your furniture, your grammar, or your nose?

Then, why your "medium"? What's the difference?

Prove your madeira red-ink and gam-boge, —

Your Sludge, a cheat — then, somebody's a goose

For vaunting both as genuine. "Guests!"
 Don't fear!
 They'll make a wry face, nor too much of
 that,
 And leave you in your glory.

"No, sometimes
 "They doubt and say as much!" Ay, doubt they do!
 And what's the consequence? "Of course they doubt" —

(You triumph) "that explains the hitch at
 once!"

"Doubt posed our 'medium,' puddled his pure mind;

"He gave them back their rubbish: pitch chaff in,

"Could flour come out o' the honest mill?" So, prompt

30 Applaud the faithful: cases flock in point,
 "How, when a mocker willed a 'medium'
 once

"Should name a spirit James whose name was George,

"James" cried the 'medium,' — 'twas the test of truth!"

In short, a hit proves much, a miss proves
 more.

Does this convince? The better: does it fail?

Time for the double-shotted broadside,
 then —

The grand means, last resource. Look black and big!

"You style us idiots, therefore — why stop short?

"Accomplices in rascality: this we hear 20 "In our own house, from our invited guest

"Found brave enough to outrage a poor
 boy

"Exposed by our good faith! Have you been heard?

"Now, then, hear us; one man's not quite worth twelve.

"You see a cheat? Here's some twelve see an ass:

"Excuse me if I calculate: good day!"
 Out slinks the sceptic, all the laughs explode.

Sludge waves his hat in triumph!

Or — he don't.

There's something in real truth (explain who can!)

One casts a wistful eye at, like the horse 30 Who mopes beneath stuffed hay-racks and won't munch

Because he spies a corn-bag: hang that
 truth,

It spoils me if I proffered in its place!
 I've felt at times when, cockered, cosseted
 And coddled by the aforesaid company,
 Bidden enjoy their bullying, — never fear,

But o'er their shoulders spit at the flying
 man, —

I've felt a child; only, a fractious child
 That, dandled soft by nurse, aunt, grandmother,

Who keep him from the kennel, sun and
 wind,

Good fun and wholesome mud, — en- 40
 joined be sweet,

And comely and superior, — eyes askance
 The ragged sons o' the gutter at their
 game,

Fain would be down with them i' the thick
 o' the filth,

Making dirt-pies, laughing free, speaking
 plain,

And calling granny the grey old cat she is.
 I've felt a spite, I say, at you, at them, Huggings and humbug — gnashed my teeth to mark

A decent dog pass! It's too bad, I say,
 Ruining a soul so!

But what's "so," what's fixed,
 Where may one stop? Nowhere! The 50 cheating's nursed

Out of the lying, softly and surely spun
 To just your length, sir! I'd stop soon
 enough:

But you're for progress. "All old, nothing new?"

"Only the usual talking through the
 mouth,

"Or writing by the hand? I own, I
 thought

"This would develop, grow demonstrable,
 "Make doubt absurd, give figures we might
 see,

"Flowers we might touch. 'There's no one doubts you, Sludge!"

"You dream the dreams, you see the spiritual sights,

"The speeches come in your head, beyond 60
 dispute.

"Still, for the sceptics' sake, to stop all
 mouths,

"We want some outward manifestation! —
 well,

"The Pennsylvanians gained such; why not Sludge?"

"He may improve with time!"

Ay, that he may!

He sees his lot: there's no avoiding fate.
 'Tis a trifle at first. "Eh, David? Did you hear?"

"You jogged the table, your foot caused the squeak,

"This time you're . . . joking, are you not, my boy?"

"N-n-no!" — and I'm done for, bought and sold henceforth.

The old good easy jog-trot way, the . . . 70
 eh?

The . . . not so very false, as falsehood goes,
 The spinning out and drawing fine, you know, —
 Really mere novel-writing of a sort,
 Acting, or improvising, make-believe,
 Surely not downright cheater, — any how,
 'Tis done with and my lot cast; Cheat's my name:
 The fatal dash of brandy in your tea
 Has settled what you'll have the souchong's smack:
 The caddy gives way to the dram-bottle.

Then, it's so cruel easy! Oh, those tricks
 That can't be tricks, those feats by sleight of hand,
 Clearly no common conjurer's! — no indeed!
 A conjurer? Choose me any craft i' the world
 A inan puts hand to; and with six months' pains
 I'll play you twenty tricks miraculous
 To people untaught the trade: have you seen glass blown.
 Pipes pierced? Why, just this biscuit that I chip,
 Did you ever watch a baker toss one flat
 To the oven? Try and do it! Take my word, Practise but half as much, while limbs are lithe,
 To turn, shove, tilt a table, crack your joints,
 Manage your feet, dispose your hands aright,
 Work wires that twitch the curtains, play the glove
 At end o' your slipper, — then put out the lights
 And . . . there, there, all you want you'll get, I hope!
 I found it slip, easy as an old shoe.

Now, lights on table again! I've done my part,
 You take my place while I give thanks and rest.
 "Well, Judge Humgruffin, what's your verdict, sir?
 "You, hardest head in the United States, —
 "Did you detect a cheat here? Wait! Let's see!
 "Just an experiment first, for candour's sake!
 "I'll try and cheat you, Judge! The table tilts:
 "Is it I that move it? Write! I'll press your hand:
 "Cry when I push, or guide your pencil, Judge!"
 Sludge still triumphant! "That a rap, indeed?

"That, the real writing? Very like a whale!
 "Then, if, sir, you — a most distinguished man,
 "And, were the Judge not here, I'd say, . . . no matter!
 "Well, sir, if you fail, you can't take us 40 in, —
 "There's little fear that Sludge will!"

Won't he, ma'am?
 But what if our distinguished host, like Sludge,
 Bade God bear witness that he played no trick,
 While you believed that what produced the raps
 Was just a certain child who died, you know,
 And whose last breath you thought your lips had felt?
 Eh? That's a capital point, ma'am: Sludge begins
 At your entreaty with your dearest dead,
 The little voice set lisping once again,
 The tiny hand made feel for yours once 50 more,
 The poor lost image brought back, plain as dreams,
 Which image, if a word had chanced recall,
 The customary cloud would cross your eyes,
 Your heart return the old tick, pay its pang!
 A right mood for investigation, this!
 One's at one's ease with Saul and Jonathan,
 Pompey and Cæsar: but one's own lost child
 I wonder, when you heard the first clod drop
 From the spadeful at the grave-side, felt you free
 To investigate who twitched your funeral 60 scarf
 Or brushed your flounces? Then, it came of course
 You should be stunned and stupid; then, (how else?)
 Your breath stopped with your blood, your brain struck work.
 But now, such causes fail of such effects,
 All's changed, — the little voice begins afresh,
 Yet you, calm, consequent, can test and try
 And touch the truth. "Tests? Didn't the creature tell
 "Its nurse's name, and say it lived six years,
 "And rode a rocking-horse? Enough of tests!
 "Sludge never could learn that!" 70

He could not, eh?
 You compliment him. "Could not?"
 Speak for yourself!

I'd like to know the man I ever saw Once, — never mind where, how, why, when, — once saw,
 Of whom I do not keep some matter in
 mind
 He'd swear I "could not" know, sagacious
 soul!
 What? Do you live in this world's blow of blacks,
 Palaver, gossipry, a single hour
 Nor find one smut has settled on your nose,
 Of a smut's worth, no more, no less? — one fact
 Out of the drift of facts, whereby you learn 10 What someone was, somewhere, somewhen, somehow?
 You don't tell folk — "See what has stuck
 to me!
 "Judge Humgruffin, our most distinguished man,
 "Your uncle was a tailor, and your wife
 "Thought to have married Miggs, missed him, hit you!" —
 Do you, sir, though you see him twice a-
 week?
 "No," you reply, "what use retailing it?
 "Why should I?" But, you see, one day you should,
 Because one day there's much use, — when this fact Brings you the Judge upon both gouty
 knees
 20 Before the supernatural; proves that
 Sludge
 Knows, as you say, a thing he "could not"
 know:
 Will not Sludge thenceforth keep an outstretched face
 The way the wind drives?
 "Could not!" Look you now, I'll tell you a story! There's a whiskered chap,
 A foreigner, that teaches music here
 And gets his bread, — knowing no better
 way:
 He says, the fellow who informed of him
 And made him fly his country and fall West
 Was a hunchback cobbler, sat, stitched soles and sang,
 30 In some outlandish place, the city Rome,
 In a cellar by their Broadway, all day long;
 Never asked questions, stopped to listen or
 look,
 Nor lifted nose from lapstone; let the
 world
 Roll round his three-legged stool, and news run in
 The ears he hardly seemed to keep pricked
 up.
 Well, that man went on Sundays, touched his pay,
 And took his praise from government, you
 see;

For something like two dollars every week,
 He'd engage tell you some one little thing
 Of some one man, which led to many more, 40 (Because one truth leads right to the world's end)
 And make you that man's master —
 when he dined
 And on what dish, where walked to keep his health
 And to what street. His trade was, throwing thus
 His sense out, like an ant-eater's long
 tongue,
 Soft, innocent, warm, moist, impassible,
 And when 'twas crusted o'er with creature's
 — slick,
 Their juice enriched his palate. "Could not Sludge!"
 I'll go yet a step further, and maintain,
 Once the imposture plunged its proper 50 depth
 I' the rotten of your natures, all of you, — (If one's not mad nor drunk, and hardly
 then)
 It's impossible to cheat — that's, be found
 out!
 Go tell your brotherhood this first slip of
 mine,
 All to-day's tale, how you detected Sludge, Behaved unpleasantly, till he was fain
 confess,
 And so has come to grief! You'll find, I
 think,
 Why Sludge still snaps his fingers in your
 face.
 There now, you've told them! What's their prompt reply?
 "Sir, did that youth confess he had cheated 60
 me,
 "I'd disbelieve him. He may cheat at
 times;
 "That's in the 'medium'-nature, thus they're made,
 "Vain and vindictive, cowards, prone to scratch.
 "And so all cats are; still, a cat's the beast
 "You coax the strange electric sparks from out,
 "By rubbing back its fur; not so a dog,
 "Nor lion, nor lamb: 'tis the cat's nature,
 sir!
 "Why not the dog's? Ask God, who made them beasts!
 "D'ye think the sound, the nicely-balanced
 man
 "(Like me" — aside) — "like you your- 7 self," — (aloud)
 "He's stuff to make a 'medium'? Bless your soul,
 "'Tis these hysteric, hybrid half-and-halves,
 "Equivocal, worthless vermin yield the fire!

"We take such as we find them, 'ware their tricks,
 "Wanting their service. Sir, Sludge took in you —
 "How, I can't say, not being there to watch:
 "He was tried, was tempted by your easiness, —
 "He did not take in me!"

Thank you for Sludge!

I'm to be grateful to such patrons, eh,
 When what you hear's my best word?
 'Tis a challenge

"Snap at all strangers, half-tamed prairie-dog,

"So you cower duly at your keeper's beck!

10 "Cat, show what claws were made for, muffling them

"Only to me! Cheat others if you can,
 "Me, if you dare!" And, my wise sir, I dared —

Did cheat you first, made you cheat others next,

And had the help o' your vaunted manliness

To bully the incredulous. You used me?
 Have not I used you, taken full revenge,
 Persuaded folk they knew not their own name,

And straight they'd own the error! Who was the fool

When, to an awe-struck wide-eyed open-mouthed

20 Circle of sages, Sludge would introduce Milton composing baby-rhymes, and Locke

Reasoning in gibberish, Homer writing Greek

In noughts and crosses, Asaph setting psalms

To crotchet and quaver? I've made a spirit squeak

In sham voice for a minute, then outbroke Bold in my own, defying the imbeciles —
 Have copied some ghost's pothooks, half a page,

Then ended with my own scrawl undisguised.

"All right! The ghost was merely using Sludge,

30 "Suiting itself from his imperfect stock!" Don't talk of gratitude to me! For what?

For being treated as a showman's ape,
 Encouraged to be wicked and make sport,
 Fret or sulk, grin or whimper, any mood
 So long as the ape be in it and no man —
 Because a nut pays every mood alike.

Curse your superior, superintending sort,
 Who, since you hate smoke, send up boys that climb

To cure your chimney, bid a "medium" lie

To sweep you truth down! Curse your 40 women too,

Your insolent wives and daughters, that fire

Or faint away if a male hand squeeze theirs,
 Yet, to encourage Sludge, may play with Sludge

As only a "medium," only the kind of thing

They must humour, fondle . . . oh, to misconceive

Were too preposterous! But I've paid them out!

They've had their wish — called for the naked truth,

And in she tripped, sat down and bade them stare:

They had to blush a little and forgive!

"The fact is, children talk so; in next 50 world

"All our conventions are reversed, — perhaps

"Made light of: something like old prints, my dear!

"The Judge has one, he brought from Italy,

"A metropolis in the background, — o'er a bridge,

"A team of trotting roadsters, — cheerful groups

"Of wayside travellers, peasants at their work,

"And, full in front, quite unconcerned, why not?

"Three nymphs conversing with a cavalier,
 "And never a rag among them: 'fine,' folk cry —

"And heavenly manners seem not much 60 unlike!

"Let Sludge go on; we'll fancy it's in print!"

If such as came for wool, sir, went home shorn,

Where is the wrong I did them? 'Twas their choice;

They tried the adventure, ran the risk, tossed up

And lost, as some one's sure to do in games;

They fancied I was made to lose, — smoked glass

Useful to spy the sun through, spare their eyes:

And had I proved a red-hot iron plate

They thought to pierce, and, for their pains, grew blind,

Whose were the fault but theirs? While, 70 as things go,

Their loss amounts to gain, the more's the shame!

They've had their peep into the spirit-world,

And all this world may know it! They've fed fat

Their self-conceit which else had starved:
what chance

Save this, of cackling o'er a golden egg
And compassing distinction from the flock, Friends of a feather? Well, they paid for
it,

And not prodigiously; the price o' the
play,

Not counting certain pleasant interludes,
Was scarce a vulgar play's worth. When you buy

The actor's talent, do you dare propose
For his soul beside? Whereas my soul
you buy!

10 Sludge acts Macbeth, obliged to be Macbeth,

Or you'll not hear his first word! Just go
through

That slight formality, swear himself's the Thane,

And thenceforth he may strut and fret his
hour,

Spout, sprawl, or spin his target, no one
cares!

Why hadn't I leave to play tricks, Sludge as Sludge?

Enough of it all! I've wiped out scores
with you —

Vented your fustian, let myself be streaked Like tom-fool with your ochre and carmine,

Worn patchwork your respectable fingers sewed

20 To metamorphose somebody, — yes, I've earned

My wages, swallowed down my bread of
shame,

And shake the crumbs off — where but in your face?

As for religion — why, I served it, sir!
I'll stick to that! With my phenomena
I laid the atheist sprawling on his back,
Propped up Saint Paul, or, at least,
Swedenborg!

In fact, it's just the proper way to baulk
These troublesome fellows — liars, one
and all,

Are not these sceptics? Well, to baffle
them,

30 No use in being squeamish: lie yourself!
Erect your buttress just as wide o' the line,
Your side, as they build up the wall on
theirs;

Where both meet, midway in a point, is
truth

High overhead: so, take your room, pile bricks,

Lie! Oh, there's titillation in all shame!
What snow may lose in white, snow gains in rose!

Miss Stokes turns — Rahab, — nor a bad exchange!

Glory be on her, for the good she wrought,

Breeding belief anew 'neath ribs of death,
Frowbeating now the unabashed before, 40
Ridding us of their whole life's gathered straws

By a live coal from the altar! Why, of old, Great men spent years and years in writing
books

To prove we've souls, and hardly proved it then:

Miss Stokes with her live coal, for you and
me!

Surely, to this good issue, all was fair —
Not only fondling Sludge, but, even suppose

He let escape some spice of knavery, —
well,

In wisely being blind to it! Don't you
praise

Nelson for setting spy-glass to blind eye 50
And saying . . . what was it — that he could not see

The signal he was bothered with? Ay,
indeed!

I'll go beyond: there's a real love of a lie,
Liars find ready-made for lies they make,
As hand for glove, or tongue for sugarplum.

At best, 'tis never pure and full belief;
Those furthest in the quagmire, — don't suppose

They strayed there with no warning, got no
chance

Of a filth-speck in their face, which they
clenched teeth,

Bent brow against! Be sure they had their 60
doubts,

And fears, and fairest challenges to try The floor o' the seeming solid sand! But no!

Their faith was pledged, acquaintance too
apprised,

All but the last step ventured, kerchiefs waved,

And Sludge called "pet": 'twas easier marching on

To the promised land; join those who,
Thursday next,

Meant to meet Shakespeare; better follow
Sludge —

Prudent, oh sure! — on the alert, how
else? —

But making for the mid-bog, all the same!
To hear your outcries, one would think I 70
caught

Miss Stokes by the scruff o' the neck, and pitched her flat,

Foolish-face-foremost! Hear these simpletons,

That's all I beg, before my work's begun,
Before I've touched them with my fingertip!

Thus they await me (do but listen, now!
It's reasoning, this is, — I can't imitate

The baby voice, though) "In so many tales
 'Must be some truth, truth though a pinpoint big,
 "Yet, some: a single man's deceived,
 perhaps —
 "Hardly, a thousand: to suppose one cheat
 "Can gull all these, were more miraculous
 far
 "Than aught we should confess a miracle"
 And so on. Then the Judge sums up — (it's rare)
 Bids you respect the authorities that leap
 To the judgment-seat at once, — why don't you note
 10 The limpid nature, the unblemished life,
 The spotless honour, indisputable sense Of the first upstart with his story? What — Outrage a boy on whom you ne'er till now Set eyes, because he finds raps trouble
 him?
 Fools, these are: ay, and how of their opposites
 Who never did, at bottom of their hearts, Believe for a moment? — Men emasculate,
 Blank of belief, who played, as eunuchs
 use,
 With superstition safely, — cold of blood, 20 Who saw what made for them i' the mystery,
 Took their occasion, and supported Sludge — As proselytes? No, thank you, far too shrewd!
 — But promisers of fair play, encouragers
 O' the claimant; who in candour needs must hoist
 Sludge up on Mars' Hill, get speech out of Sludge
 To carry off, criticise, and cant about!
 Didn't Athens treat Saint Paul so? — at any rate,
 It's "a new thing" philosophy fumbles at.
 Then there's the other picker-out of pearl 30 From dung-heaps, — ay, your literary man,
 Who draws on his kid gloves to deal with
 Sludge
 Daintily and discreetly, — shakes a dust
 O' the doctrine, flavours thence, he well knows how,
 The narrative or the novel, — half-believes,
 All for the book's sake, and the public's stare,
 And the cash that's God's sole solid in this
 world!
 Look at him! Try to be too bold, too gross
 For the master! Not you! He's the man for muck;
 Shovel it forth, full-splash, he'll smooth your brown
 40 Into artistic richness, never fear!

Find him the crude stuff; when you recognise

Your lie again, you'll doff your hat to it, Dressed out for company! "For company,"

I say, since there's the relish of success:
 Let all pay due respect, call the lie truth,
 Save the soft silent smirking gentleman Who ushered in the stranger: you must sigh

"How melancholy, he, the only one
 "Fails to perceive the bearing of the truth
 "Himself gave birth to!" — There's the 5
 triumph's smack!

That man would choose to see the whole world roll

I' the slime o' the slough, so he might touch the tip

Of his brush with what I call the best of browns —

Tint ghost-tales, spirit-stories, past the
 power

Of the outworn umber and bistre!

Yet I think

There's a more hateful form of foolery —
 The social sage's, Solomon of saloons

And philosophic diner-out, the fribble
 Who wants a doctrine for a chopping-block

To try the edge of his faculty upon, 6c Prove how much common sense he'll hack

and hew
 I' the critical minute 'twixt the soup and fish!

 These were my patrons: these, and the like of them

Who, rising in my soul now, sicken it, —
 These I have injured! Gratitude to these?

The gratitude, forsooth, of a prostitute
 To the greenhorn and the bully — friends of hers,

 From the wag that wants the queer jokes

for his club,
 To the snuff-box-decorator, honest man,

Who just was at his wits' end where to 70
 find

So genial a Pasiphae! All and each
 Pay, compliment, protect from the police:

And how she hates them for their pains,
 like me!

So much for my remorse at thanklessness
 Toward a deserving public!

But, for God?

Ay, that's a question! Well, sir, since you press —

(How you do tease the whole thing out of
 me!

I don't mean you, you know, when I say
 "them":

Hate you, indeed! But that Miss Stokes, that Judge!

Enough, enough — with sugar: thank 8c
 you, sir!)

Now for it, then! Will you believe me,
though?
You've heard what I confess; I don't unsay
A single word: I cheated when I could, Rapped with my toe-joints, set sham hands
at work,
Wrote down names weak in sympathetic ink,
Rubbed odic lights with ends of phosphor-
match,
And all the rest; believe that: believe this,
By the same token, though it seem to set
The crooked straight again, unsay the said, 10 Stick up what I've knocked down; I can't help that
It's truth! I somehow vomit truth to-day.
This trade of mine — I don't know, can't be sure
But there was something in it, tricks and
all!
Really, I want to light up my own mind.
They were tricks, — true, but what I mean to add
Is also true. First, — don't it strike you,
sir?
Go back to the beginning, — the first fact We're taught is, there's a world beside this
world,
With spirits, not mankind, for tenantry;
20 That much within that world once so-journd here,
That all upon this world will visit there,
And therefore that we, bodily here below,
Must have exactly such an interest In learning what may be the ways o' the
world
Above us, as the disembodied folk Have (by all analogic likelihood)
In watching how things go in the old home
With us, their sons, successors, and what
not.
Oh yes, with added powers probably,
30 Fit for the novel state, — old loves grown
pure,
Old interests understood aright, — they
watch!
Eyes to see, ears to hear, and hands to help, Proportionate to advancement: they're ahead,
That's all — do what we do, but noblier
done —
Use plate, whereas we eat our meals off
delf,
(To use a figure).

Concede that, and I ask
Next what may be the mode of intercourse Between us men here, and those once-men
there?

First comes the Bible's speech; then,
history

40 With the supernatural element, — you
know —

All that we sucked in with our mothers'
milk,
Grew up with, got inside of us at last,
Till it's found bone of bone and flesh of
flesh.

See now, we start with the miraculous,
And know it used to be, at all events:
What's the first step we take, and can't but
take,

In arguing from the known to the obscure?
Why this: "What was before, may be
to-day.

"Since Samuel's ghost appeared to Saul,
of course

"My brother's spirit may appear to me?" 50 Go tell your teacher that! What's his reply?

What brings a shade of doubt for the first
time

O'er his brow late so luminous with faith?"

"Such things have been," says he, "and there's no doubt

"Such things may be: but I advise mis-
trust

"Of eyes, ears, stomach, and, more than all, your brain,

"Unless it be of your great-grandmother,
"Whenever they propose a ghost to you!"

The end is, there's a composition struck;
'Tis settled, we've some way of intercourse 60

Just as in Saul's time; only, different:
How, when and where, precisely, — find it
out!

I want to know, then, what's so natural
As that a person born into this world

And seized on by such teaching, should begin

With firm expectancy and a frank look-out
For his own allotment, his especial share
I' the secret, — his particular ghost, in fine?

I mean, a person born to look that way,
Since natures differ: take the painter-sort. 70

One man lives fifty years in ignorance Whether grass be green or red, — "No kind of eye

"For colour," say you; while another picks

And puts away even pebbles, when a
child,

Because of bluish spots and pinky veins —
"Give him forthwith a paint-box!" Just

the same
Was I born . . . "medium," you won't let me say, —

Well, seer of the supernatural
Everywhen, everyhow and everywhere, —
Will that do? 80

I and all such boys of course
Started with the same stock of Bible-truth;
Only, — what in the rest you style their sense,
Instinct, blind reasoning but imperative,

This, betimes, taught them the old world had one law
 And ours another: "New world, new laws," cried they:
 "None but old laws, seen everywhere at
 work,"
 Cried I, and by their help explained my life
 The Jews' way, still a working way to me.
 Ghosts made the noises, fairies waved the
 lights,
 Or Santa Claus slid down on New Year's
 Eve
 And stuffed with cakes the stocking at my bed,
 Changed the worn shoes, rubbed clean the fingered slate
 O' the sum that came to grief the day
 before.
 This could not last long: soon enough I
 found
 Who had worked wonders thus, and to what end:
 But did I find all easy, like my mates?
 Henceforth no supernatural any more?
 Not a whit: what projects the billiard-balls?
 "A cue," you answer: "Yes, a cue,"
 said I;
 "But what hand, off the cushion, moved
 the cue?"
 "What unseen agency, outside the world,
 Prompted its puppets to do this and that,
 Put cakes and shoes and slates into their
 mind,
 "These mothers and aunts, nay even schoolmasters?"
 Thus high I sprang, and there have settled
 since.
 Just so I reason, in sober earnest still,
 About the greater godsend, what you call
 The serious gains and losses of my life.
 What do I know or care about your world
 Which either is or seems to be? This snap
 O' my fingers, sir! My care is for myself;
 Myself am whole and sole reality
 Inside a raree-show and a market-mob Gathered about it: that's the use of things.
 'Tis easy saying they serve vast purposes, Advantage their grand selves: be it true or
 false,
 Each thing may have two uses. What's a
 star?
 A world, or a world's sun: doesn't it serve
 As taper also, time-piece, weather-glass,
 And almanac? Are stars not set for signs
 When we should shear our sheep, sow corn, prune trees?
 The Bible says so.
 Well, I add one use
 To all the acknowledged uses, and declare
 If I spy Charles's Wain at twelve to-night,
 It warns me, "Go, nor lose another day,"
 "And have your hair cut, Sludge!" You laugh: and why?
 Were such a sign too hard for God to give?
 No: but Sludge seems too little for such
 grace:
 Thank you, sir! So you think, so does not Sludge!
 When you and good men gape at Providence,
 Go into history and bid us mark
 Not merely powder-plots prevented, crowns
 Kept on kings' heads by miracle enough, 50
 But private mercies — oh, you've told me,
 sir,
 Of such interpositions! How yourself
 Once, missing on a memorable day
 Your handkerchief — just setting out, you
 know, —
 You must return to fetch it, lost the train,
 And saved your precious self from what befell
 The thirty-three whom Providence forgot.
 You tell, and ask me what I think of this?
 Well, sir, I think them, since you needs must know,
 What matter had you and Boston city to 60
 boot
 Sailed skyward, like burnt onion-peelings?
 Much
 To you, no doubt: for me — undoubtedly
 The cutting of my hair concerns me more,
 Because, however sad the truth may seem,
 Sludge is of all-importance to himself.
 You set apart that day in every year
 For special thanksgiving, were a heathen
 else:
 Well, I who cannot boast the like escape,
 Suppose I said "I don't thank Providence
 "For my part, owing it no gratitude"? 70
 "Nay, but you owe as much" — you'd tutor me,
 "You, every man alive, for blessings gained
 "In every hour o' the day, could you but
 know!
 "I saw my crowning mercy: all have such,
 "Could they but see!" Well, sir, why don't they see?
 "Because they won't look, — or perhaps, they can't."
 Then, sir, suppose I can, and will, and do
 Look, microscopically as is right,
 Into each hour with its infinitude
 Of influences at work to profit Sludge? 80
 For that's the case: I've sharpened up my sight
 To spy a providence in the fire's going out,
 The kettle's boiling, the dime's sticking fast Despite the hole i' the pocket. Call such facts
 Fancies, too petty a work for Providence,
 And those same thanks which you exact
 from me
 Prove too prodigious payment: thanks for
 what,

- If nothing guards and guides us little men?
 No, no, sir! You must put away your
 pride,
 Resolve to let Sludge into partnership!
 I live by signs and omens: looked at the roof
 Where the pigeons settle — "If the further
 bird,
 "The white, takes wing first, I'll confess when thrashed;
 "Not, if the blue does" — so I said to
 myself
 Last week, lest you should take me by surprise:
 Off flapped the white, — and I'm confessing, sir!
- 10 Perhaps 'tis Providence's whim and way
 With only me, i' the world: how can you tell?
 "Because unlikely!" Was it likelier, now,
 That this our one out of all worlds beside,
 The what-d'you-call-'em millions, should be just Precisely chosen to make Adam for,
 And the rest o' the tale? Yet the tale's true, you know:
 Such undeserving clod was graced so once;
 Why not graced likewise undeserving
 Sludge?
 Are we merit-mongers, flaunt we filthy
 rags?
- 20 All you can bring against my privilege
 Is, that another way was taken with
 you, —
 Which I don't question. It's pure grace, my luck:
 I'm broken to the way of nods and winks,
 And need no formal summoning. You've a help;
 Holloa his name or whistle, clap your
 hands,
 Stamp with your foot or pull the bell:
 all's one,
 He understands you want him, here he comes.
 Just so, I come at the knocking: you, sir,
 wait
 The tongue o' the bell, nor stir before you catch
- 30 Reason's clear tingle, nature's clapper
 brisk,
 Or that traditional peal was wont to cheer
 Your mother's face turned heavenward:
 short of these
 There's no authentic intimation, eh?
 Well, when you hear, you'll answer them,
 start up
 And stride into the presence, top of toe,
 And there find Sludge beforehand, Sludge that sprang
 At noise o' the knuckle on the partition-
 wall!
 ; think myself the more religious man.
 Religion's all or nothing; it's no mere smile
- O' contentment, sigh of aspiration, sir — 40
 No quality o' the finelier-tempered clay
 Like its whiteness or its lightness; rather,
 stuff
 O' the very stuff, life of life, and self of self.
 I tell you, men won't notice; when they do,
 They'll understand. I notice nothing else:
 I'm eyes, ears, mouth of me, one gaze and gape,
 Nothing eludes me, everything's a hint,
 Handle and help. It's all absurd, and yet There's something in it all, I know: how
 much?
 No answer! What does that prove? 50
 Man's still man,
 Still meant for a poor blundering piece of
 work
 When all's done; but, if somewhat's done, like this,
 Or not done, is the case the same? Suppose
 I blunder in my guess at the true sense
 O' the knuckle-summons, nine times out of ten, —
 What if the tenth guess happen to be
 right?
 If the tenth shovel-load of powdered quartz
 Yield me the nugget? I gather, crush, sift all,
 Pass o'er the failure, pounce on the success.
 To give you a notion, now — (let who wins, 60
 laugh!)
 When first I see a man, what do I first?
 Why, count the letters which make up his
 name,
 And as their number chances, even or odd,
 Arrive at my conclusion, trim my course:
 Hiram H. Horsefall is your honoured
 name,
 And haven't I found a patron, sir, in you?
 "Shall I cheat this stranger?" I take apple-pips,
 Stick one in either canthus of my eye,
 And if the left drops first — (your left, sir, stuck)
 I'm warned, I let the trick alone this time. 70
 You, sir, who smile, superior to such trash,
 You judge of character by other rules:
 Don't your rules sometimes fail you?
 Pray, what rule
 Have you judged Sludge by hitherto?
- Oh, be sure,
 You, everybody blunders, just as I,
 In simpler things than these by far! For
 see:
 I knew two farmers, — one, a wiseacre
 Who studied seasons, rummaged almanacs,
 Quoted the dew-point, registered the frost,
 And then declared, for outcome of his pains, 80
 Next summer must be dampish: 'twas a drought.

His neighbour prophesied such drought would fall,
Saved hay and corn, made cent. per cent.
thereby,
And proved a sage indeed: how came his lore?

Because one brindled heifer, late in March, Stiffened her tail of evenings, and somehow

He got into his head that drought was meant!

I don't expect all men can do as much:
Such kissing goes by favour. You must
take

A certain turn of mind for this, — a twist
10 I' the flesh, as well. Be lazily alive, Open-mouthed, like my friend the anteater,

Letting all nature's loosely-guarded notes Settle and, slick, be swallowed! Think
yourself

The one i' the world, the one for whom the
world

Was made, expect it tickling at your mouth!
Then will the swarm of busy buzzing flies,
Clouds of coincidence, break egg-shell,
thrive,

Breed, multiply, and bring you food
enough.

I can't pretend to mind your smiling, sir!

20 Oh, what you mean is this! Such intimate
way,

Close converse, frank exchange of offices,
Strict sympathy of the immeasurably great
With the infinitely small, betokened here
By a course of signs and omens, raps and sparks, —

How does it suit the dread traditional text
O' the "Great and Terrible Name"?

Shall the Heaven of Heavens
Stoop to such child's play?

Please, sir, go with me
A moment, and I'll try to answer you.

The "Magnum, et terribile" (is that right?)

30 Well, folk began with this in the early day;
And all the acts they recognised in proof
Were thunders, lightnings, earthquakes, whirlwinds, dealt

Indisputably on men whose death they caused.

There, and there only, folk saw Providence
At work, — and seeing it, 'twas right
enough

All heads should tremble, hands wring hands amain,

And knees knock hard together at the breath

O' the Name's first letter; why, the Jews,
I'm told,

Won't write it down, no, to this very hour

40 Nor speak aloud: you know best if't be so.

Each ague-fit of fear at end, they crept

(Because somehow people once born must live)

Out of the sound, sight, swing and sway o'
the Name,

Into a corner, the dark rest of the world,
And safe space where as yet no fear had
reached;

'Twas there they looked about them,
breathed again,

And felt indeed at home, as we might say.
The current o' common things, the daily
life,

This had their due contempt; no Name
pursued

Man from the mountain-top where fires 50 abide,

To his particular mouse-hole at its foot
Where he ate, drank, digested, lived in short:

Such was man's vulgar business, far too small

To be worth thunder: "small," folk kept on, "small,"

With much complacency in those great
days!

A mote of sand, you know, a blade of grass —

What was so despicable as mere grass,
Except perhaps the life o' the worm or fly Which fed there? These were "small" and men were great.

Well, sir, the old way's altered somewhat 60
since,

And the world wears another aspect now:
Somebody turns our spyglass round, or else Puts a new lens in it: grass, worm, fly grow big:

We find great things are made of little
things,

And little things go lessening till at last Comes God behind them. Talk of mountains now?

We talk of mould that heaps the mountain, mites

That throng the mould, and God that makes the mites.

The Name comes close behind a stomach-
cyst,

The simplest of creations, just a sac 70
That's mouth, heart, legs and belly at once, yet lives

And feels, and could do neither, we conclude,

If simplified still further one degree:
The small becomes the dreadful and immense!

Lightning, forsooth? No word more upon
that!

A tin-foil bottle, a strip of greasy silk,
With a bit of wire and knob of brass, and there's

Your dollar's-worth of lightning! But the cyst

The life of the least of the little things?

No, no!
 Preachers and teachers try another tack, Come near the truth this time: they put aside Thunder and lightning: "That's mistake," they cry,
 "Thunderbolts fall for neither fright nor
 sport,
 "But do appreciable good, like tides,
 "Changes o' the wind, and other natural facts —
 "Good" meaning good to man, his body or soul.
 "Mediate, immediate, all things minister 10 "To man, — that's settled: be our future
 text
 "We are His children!" So, they now
 harangue
 About the intention, the contrivance, all
 That keeps up an incessant play of love, —
 See the Bridgewater book.

Amen to it!
 Well, sir, I put this question: I'm a child?
 I lose no time, but take you at your word:
 How shall I act a child's part properly?
 Your sainted mother, sir, — used you to
 live
 With such a thought as this a-worrying
 you?
 20 "She has it in her power to throttle me,
 "Or stab or poison: she may turn me out,
 "Or lock me in, — nor stop at this to-day,
 "But cut me off to-morrow from the estate
 "I look for" — (long may you enjoy it,
 sir!)
 "In brief, she may unchild the child I am."
 You never had such crotchets? Nor have
 I!
 Who, frank confessing childship from the
 first,
 Cannot both fear and take my ease at once,
 So, don't fear, — know what might be,
 well enough,
 30 But know too, child-like, that it will not be,
 At least in my case, mine, the son and heir O' the kingdom, as yourself proclaim my style.
 But do you fancy I stop short at this?
 Wonder if suit and service, son and heir
 Needs must expect, I dare pretend to find?
 If, looking for signs proper to such an one,
 I straight perceive them irresistible?
 Concede that homage is a son's plain right,
 And, never mind the nods and raps and winks,
 40 'Tis the pure obvious supernatural Steps forward, does its duty: why, of
 course!
 I have presentiments; my dreams come
 true:
 I fancy a friend stands whistling all in white
 Blithe as a bobolink, and he's dead I learn.
 I take dislike to a dog my favourite long,

And sell him; he goes mad next week and snaps.
 I guess that stranger will turn up to-day
 I have not seen these three years; there's his knock
 I wager "sixty peaches on that tree!" —
 That I pick up a dollar in my walk, 50
 That your wife's brother's cousin's name
 was George —
 And win on all points. Oh, you wince at
 this?
 You'd fain distinguish between gift and
 gift,
 Washington's oracle and Sludge's itch
 O' the elbow when at whist he ought to trump?
 With Sludge it's too absurd? Fine, draw the line
*Somewhere, but, sir, your somewhere is not
 mine!*

Bless us, I'm turning poet! It's time to
 end.
 How you have drawn me out, sir! All I ask
 Is — am I heir or not heir? If I'm he, 60
 Then, sir, remember, that same personage (To judge by what we read i' the newspaper)
 Requires, beside one nobleman in gold
 To carry up and down his coronet,
 Another servant, probably a duke,
 To hold egg-nogg in readiness: why want Attendance, sir, when helps in his father's house
 Aboard, I'd like to know?

Enough of talk!
 My fault is that I tell too plain a truth.
 Why, which of those who say they disbe- 70
 lieve,
 Your clever, people, but has dreamed his
 dream,
 Caught his coincidence, stumbled on his fact
 He can't explain, (he'll tell you smilingly)
 Which he's too much of a philosopher
 To count as supernatural, indeed,
 So calls a puzzle and problem, proud of it:
 Bidding you still be on your guard, you
 know,
 Because one fact don't make a system
 stand,
 Nor prove this an occasional escape
 Of spirit beneath the matter: that's the 80
 way!
 Just so wild Indians picked up, piece by piece,
 The fact in California, the fine gold
 That underlay the gravel — hoarded these,
 But never made a system stand, nor dug!
 So wise men hold out in each hollowed
 palm
 A handful of experience, sparkling fact

They can't explain; and since their rest of life

Is all explainable, what proof in this?
Whereas I take the fact, the grain of gold,
And fling away the dirty rest of life,
And add this grain to the grain each fool has found

O' the million other such philosophers, —
Till I see gold, all gold and only gold,
Truth unquestionless though unexplainable,
And the miraculous proved the common-
place!

10 The other fools believed in mud, no
doubt —

Failed to know gold they saw: was that so strange?

Are all men born to play Bach's fiddle-fugues,

"Time" with the foil in carte, jump their own height,

Cut the mutton with the broadsword, skate
a five,

Make the red hazard with the cue, clip nails

While swimming, in five minutes row a mile,

Pull themselves three feet up with the left
arm,

Do sums of fifty figures in their head,
And so on, by the scores of instances?

20 The Sludge with luck, who sees the spiritual facts

His fellows strive and fail to see, may rank
With these, and share the advantage.

Ay, but share

The drawback! Think it over by your-
self;

I have not heart, sir, and the fire's gone
grey.

Defect somewhere compensates for success,

Everyone knows that. Oh, we're equals,
sir!

The big-legged fellow has a little arm
And a less brain, though big legs win the race:

Do you suppose I 'scape the common lot?

30 Say, I was born with flesh so sensitive,
Soul so alert, that, practice helping both,

I guess what's going on outside the veil,
Just as a prisoned crane feels pairing-time

In the islands where his kind are, so must
fall

To capering by himself some shiny night,
As if your back-yard were a plot of spice —

Thus am I 'ware o' the spirit-world: while
you,

Blind as a beetle that way, — for amends,
Why, you can double fist and floor me, sir!

40 Ride that hot hardmouthed horrid horse of
yours,

Laugh while it lightens, play with the great
dog,

Speak your mind though it vex some friend
to hear,

Never brag, never bluster, never blush, —
In short, you've pluck, when I'm a coward
— there!

I know it, I can't help it, — folly or no,
I'm paralysed, my hand's no more a hand,
Nor my head a head, in danger: you can
smile

And change the pipe in your cheek. Your gift's not mine.

Would you swap for mine? No! but you'd add my gift

To yours: I dare say! I too sigh at 50
times,

Wish I were stouter, could tell truth nor
flinch,

Kept cool when threatened, did not mind
so much

Being dressed gaily, making strangers stare, Eating nice things; when I'd amuse my-
self,

I shut my eyes and fancy in my brain
I'm — now the President, now Jenny Lind,

Now Emerson, now the Benicia Boy —
With all the civilised world a-wondering

And worshipping. I know it's folly and
worse;

I feel such tricks sap, honeycomb the soul, 60
But I can't cure myself: despond, despair,

And then, hey, presto, there's a turn o' the wheel,

Under comes uppermost, fate makes full
amends;

Sludge knows and sees and hears a hundred
things

You all are blind to, — I've my taste of
truth,

Likewise my touch of falsehood, — vice
no doubt,

But you've your vices also: I'm content.

What, sir? You won't shake hands?
"Because I cheat!"

"You've found me out in cheating!"
That's enough

To make an apostle swear! Why, when I 70
cheat,

Mean to cheat, do cheat, and am caught in the act,

Are you, or, rather, am I sure o' the fact?
(There's verse again, but I'm inspired somehow.)

Well then I'm not sure! I may be, perhaps, Free as a babe from cheating: how it began,

My gift, — no matter; what 'tis got to be In the end now, that's the question; answer that!

Had I seen, perhaps, what hand was holding mine,

Leading me whither, I had died of fright:
So, I was made believe I led myself.

80 If I should lay a six-inch plank from roof

To roof, you would not cross the street,
 one step,
 Even at your mother's summons: but,
 being shrewd,
 If I paste paper on each side the plank
 And swear 'tis solid pavement, why, you'll cross
 Humming a tune the while, in ignorance Beacon Street stretches a hundred feet
 below:
 I walked thus, took the paper-cheat for
 stone.
 Some impulse made me set a thing, o' the move
 Which, started once, ran really by itself; 10 Beer flows thus, suck the siphon; toss the kite,
 It takes the wind and floats of its own
 force.
 Don't let truth's lump rot stagnant for the lack
 Of a timely helpful lie to leaven it!
 Put a chalk-egg beneath the clucking hen,
 She'll lay a real one, laudably deceived,
 Daily for weeks to come. I've told my lie,
 And seen truth follow, marvels none of
 mine;
 All was not cheating, sir, I'm positive!
 I don't know if I move your hand sometimes
 20 When the spontaneous writing spreads so
 far,
 If my knee lifts the table all that height,
 Why the instand don't fall off the desk
 a-tilt,
 Why the accordion plays a prettier waltz
 Than I can pick out on the piano-forte,
 Why I speak so much more than I intend,
 Describe so many things I never saw.
 I tell you, sir, in one sense, I believe Nothing at all, — that everybody can,
 Will, and does cheat: but in another sense 30 I'm ready to believe my very self —
 That every cheat's inspired, and every lie
 Quick with a germ of truth.

You ask perhaps

Why I should condescend to trick at all
 If I know a way without it? This is why!
 There's a strange secret sweet self-sacrifice
 In any desecration of one's soul
 To a worthy end, — isn't it Herodotus
 (I wish I could read Latin!) who describes
 The single gift o' the land's virginity,
 40 Demanded in those old Egyptian rites,
 (I've but a hazy notion — help me, sir!)
 For one purpose in the world, one day in a life,
 One hour in a day — thereafter, purity,
 And a veil thrown o'er the past for ever-
 more!
 Well, now, they understood a many things Down by Nile city, or wherever it was!
 I've always vowed, after the minute's lie,

And the end's gain, — truth should be mine henceforth.

This goes to the root o' the matter, sir,
 — this plain

Plump fact: accept it and unlock with it 50
 The wards of many a puzzle!

Or, finally,

Why should I set so fine a gloss on things?
 What need I care? I cheat in self-defence,
 And there's my answer to a world of cheats!
 Cheat? To be sure, sir! What's the world worth else?

Who takes it as he finds, and thanks his stars?

Don't it want trimming, turning, furbishing
 up

And polishing over? Your so-styled great men,

Do they accept one truth as truth is found,
 Or try their skill at tinkering? What's 60 your world?

Here are you born, who are, I'll say at once,
 Of the luckiest kind, whether in head and
 heart,

Body and soul, or all that helps them both.
 Well, now, look back: what faculty of
 yours,

Came to its full, had ample justice done
 By growing when rain fell, biding its time,
 Solidifying growth when earth was dead,
 Spiring up, broadening wide, in seasons
 due?

Never! You shot up and frost nipped
 you off,

Settled to sleep when sunshine bade you 70
 sprout;

One faculty thwarted its fellow: at the end,
 All you boast is "I had proved a topping
 tree

"In other climes" — yet this was the right clime

Had you foreknown the seasons. Young, you've force

Wasted like well-streams: old — oh, then
 indeed,

Behold a labyrinth of hydraulic pipes
 Through which you'd play off wondrous waterwork;

Only, no water's left to feed their play.
 Young, — you've a hope, an aim, a love:
 it's tossed

And crossed and lost: you struggle on, 80 some spark

Shut in your heart against the puffs around,
 Through cold and pain; these in due time
 subside,

Now then for age's triumph, the hoarded
 light

You mean to loose on the altered face of
 things, —

Up with it on the tripod! It's extinct.
 Spend your life's remnant asking, which was best,

- Light smothered up that never peeped forth once,
Or the cold cresset with full leave to shine?
Well, accept this too, — seek the fruit of it Not in enjoyment, proved a dream on
earth,
But knowledge, useful for a second chance,
Another life, — you've lost this world — you've gained
Its knowledge for the next. What knowledge, sir,
Except that you know nothing? Nay, you doubt Whether 'twere better have made you man or brute,
10 If aught be true, if good and evil clash.
No foul, no fair, no inside, no outside,
There's your world!
- Give it me! I slap it brisk With harlequin's pasteboard sceptre:
what's it now?
Changed like a rock-flat, rough with rusty
weed,
At first wash-over o' the returning wave!
All the dry dead impracticable stuff
Starts into life and light again; this world
Pervaded by the influx from the next.
I cheat, and what's the happy consequence?
20 You find full justice straightway dealt you
out,
Each want supplied, each ignorance set at ease,
Each folly fooled. No life-long labour
now
As the price of worse than nothing! No mere film
Holding you chained in iron, as it seems,
Against the outstretch of your very arms
And legs i' the sunshine moralists forbid!
What would you have? Just speak and,
there, you see!
You're supplemented, made a whole at
last,
Bacon advises, Shakespeare writes you
songs,
30 And Mary Queen of Scots embraces you.
Thus it goes on, not quite like life perhaps,
But so near, that the very difference
piques,
Shows that e'en better than this best will
be —
This passing entertainment in a hut
Whose bare walls take your taste since,
one stage more,
And you arrive at the palace: all half real,
And you, to suit it, less than real beside,
In a dream, lethargic kind of death in life,
That helps the interchange of natures,
flesh
40 Transfused by souls, and such souls!
Oh, 'tis choice!
And if at whiles the bubble, blown too
thin,
- Seem nigh on bursting, — if you nearly see
The real world through the false, — what do you see?
Is the old so ruined? You find you're in a flock
O' the youthful, earnest, passionate — genius, beauty,
Rank and wealth also, if you care for
these:
And all depose their natural rights,
hail you,
(That's me, sir) as their mate and yoke-
fellow,
Participate in Sludgehood — nay, grow
mine,
I veritably possess them — banish doubt, 50
And reticence and modesty alike!
Why, here's the Golden Age, old Paradise
Or new Eutopia! Here's true life indeed, And the world well won now, mine for the first time!
- And all this might be, may be, and with good help
Of a little lying shall be: so, Sludge lies!
Why, he's at worst your poet who sings
how Greeks
That never were, in Troy which never was,
Did this or the other impossible great thing!
He's Lowell — it's a world (you smile 60
applause),
Of his own invention — wondrous Long-
fellow,
Surprising Hawthorne! Sludge does more than they,
And acts the books they write: the more his praise!
- But why do I mount to poets? Take plain prose —
Dealers in common sense, set these at
work,
What can they do without their helpful
lies?
Each states the law and fact and face o'
the thing
Just as he'd have them, finds what he thinks fit,
Is blind to what missuits him, just records
What makes his case out, quite ignores the 70
rest.
It's a History of the World, the Lizard Age,
The Early Indians, the Old Country War,
Jerome Napoleon, whatsoever you please,
All as the author wants it. Such a scribe
You pay and praise for putting life in stones,
Fire into fog, making the past your world.
There's plenty of "How did you contrive to grasp
"The thread which led you through this labyrinth?
"How build such solid fabric out of air?
"How on so slight foundation found this tale, 80

"Biography, narrative?" or, in other words,

"How many lies did it require to make "The portly truth you here present us with?"

"Oh," quoth the penman, purring at your praise,

"Tis fancy all; no particle of fact:

"I was poor and threadbare when I wrote that book

"Bliss in the Golden City.' I, at Thebes?

"We writers paint out of our heads, you see!"

10 "Ah, the more wonderful the gift in you,
"The more creativeness and godlike craft!"

But I, do I present you with my piece, It's "What, Sludge? When my sainted mother spoke

"The verses Lady Jane Grey last composed
"About the rosy bower in the seventh heaven

"Where she and Queen Elizabeth keep house,—

"You made the raps? 'Twas your invention that?

"Cur, slave and devil!" — eight fingers and two thumbs
Stuck in my throat!

Well, if the marks seem gone,
'Tis because stiffish cock-tail, taken in time,

20 Is better for a bruise than arnica.
There, sir! I bear no malice: 'tish't in me.
I know I acted wrongly: still, I've tried
What I could say in my excuse, — to show
The devil's not all devil . . . I don't pretend,

He's angel, much less such a gentleman
As you, sir! And I've lost you, lost myself, Lost all-l-l-l- . . .

No — are you in earnest, sir?
O yours, sir, is an angel's part! I know
What prejudice prompts, and what's the common course

30 Men take to soothe their ruffled self-conceit:

Only you rise superior to it all!
No, sir, it don't hurt much; it's speaking long

That makes me choke a little: the marks will go!

What? Twenty V-notes more, and outfit too,

And not a word to Greeley? One — one kiss

O' the hand that saves me! You'll not let me speak,

I well know, and I've lost the right, too true!

But I must say, sir, if She hears (she does)

Your sainted . . . Well, sir, — be it so!

That's, I think,
My bed-room candle. Good-night! 40
Bl-l-less you, sir!

R-r-r, you brute-beast and blackguard!
Cowardly scamp!

I only wish I dared burn down the house
And spoil your sniggering! Oh what, you're the man?

You're satisfied at last? You've found out Sludge?

We'll see that presently: my turn, sir, next!

I too can tell my story: brute, — do you hear? —

You throttled your sainted mother, that old hag,

In just such a fit of passion: no, it was . . .
To get this house of hers, and many a note

Like these . . . I'll pocket them, however 50
. . . five,

Ten, fifteen . . . ay, you gave her throat the twist,

Or else you poisoned her! Confound the cuss!

Where was my head? I ought to have prophesied

He'll die in a year and join her: that's the way.

I don't know where my head is: what had I done?

How did it all go? I said he poisoned her,
And hoped he'd have grace given him to repent,

Whereon he picked this quarrel, bullied me

And called me cheat: I thrashed him, — who could help?

He howled for mercy, prayed me on his 60
knees

Tocut and run and save him from disgrace:
I do so, and once off, he slanders me.

An end of him! Begin elsewhere anew!
Boston's a hole, the herring-pond is wide,

V-notes are something, liberty still more.
Beside, is he the only fool in the world?

APPARENT FAILURE.

"We shall soon lose a celebrated building." — Paris Newspaper.

I.

No, for I'll save it! Seven years since,
I passed through Paris, stopped a day

To see the baptism of your Prince;
Saw, made my bow, and went my way: 70

Walking the heat and headache off,
I took the Seine side, you surmise,

Thought of the Congress, Gortschakoff,
Cavour's appeal and Buol's replies,

So sauntered till — what met my eyes?

II.

Only the Doric little Morgue!
 The dead-house where you show your drowned:
 Petrarch's Vaucluse makes proud the Sargue,
 Your Morgue has made the Seine renowned.
 One pays one's debt in such a case;
 I plucked up heart and entered, — stalked,
 Keeping a tolerable face Compared with some whose cheeks were chalked:
 Let them! No Briton's to be baulked!

III.

10 First came the silent gazers; next,
 A screen of glass, we're thankful for;
 Last, the sight's self, the sermon's text,
 The three men who did most abhor
 Their life in Paris yesterday,
 So killed themselves: and now, enthroned
 Each on his copper couch, they lay Fronting me, waiting to be owned.
 I thought, and think, their sin's atoned.

IV.

20 Poor men, God made, and all for that!
 The reverence struck me; o'er each head
 Religiously was hung its hat,
 Each coat dripped by the owner's bed
 Sacred from touch: each had his berth,
 His bounds, his proper place of rest,
 Who last night tenanted on earth
 Some arch, where twelve such slept abreast, —
 Unless the plain asphalte seemed best.

V.

30 How did it happen, my poor boy?
 You wanted to be Buonaparte
 And have the Tuileries for toy,
 And could not, so it broke your heart?
 You, old one by his side, I judge,
 Were, red as blood, a socialist,
 A leveller! Does the Empire grudge You've gained what no Republic
 missed?
 Be quiet, and unclench your fist!

VI.

40 And this — why, he was red in vain,
 Or black, — poor fellow that is blue!
 What fancy was it turned your brain?
 Oh, women were the prize for you!
 Money gets women, cards and dice Get money, and ill-luck gets just
 The copper couch and one clear nice
 Cool squirt of water o'er your bust,
 The right thing to extinguish lust!

VII.

It's wiser being good than bad;
 It's safer being meek than fierce:
 It's fitter being sane than mad.
 My own hope is, a sun will pierce
 The thickest cloud earth ever stretched; 50
 That, after Last, returns the First,
 Though a wide compass round be fetched;
 That what began best, can't end worst,
 Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst.

EPILOGUE.

FIRST SPEAKER, as David.

I.

ON the first of the Feast of Feasts,
 The Dedication Day,
 When the Levites joined the Priests
 At the Altar in robed array,
 Gave signal to sound and say, —

II.

When the thousands, rear and van, 60
 Swarming with one accord
 Became as a single man
 (Look, gesture, thought and word)
 In praising and thanking the Lord, —

III.

When the singers lift up their voice,
 And the trumpets made endeavour,
 Sounding, "In God rejoice!" Saying, "In Him rejoice
 "Whose mercy endureth for ever!" —

IV.

Then the Temple filled with a cloud, 70
 Even the House of the Lord;
 Porch bent and pillar bowed:
 For the presence of the Lord,
 In the glory of His cloud,
 Had filled the House of the Lord.

SECOND SPEAKER, as Renan.

Gone now! All gone across the dark so
 far,
 Sharpening fast, shuddering ever, shutting still,
 Dwindling into the distance, dies that star Which came, stood, opened once! We gazed our fill
 With upturned faces on as real a Face 80
 That, stooping from grave music and mild fire,
 Took in our homage, made a visible place Through many a depth of glory; gyre on gyre,
 For the dim human tribute. Was this true?
 Could man indeed avail, mere praise of his,
 To help by rapture God's own rapture too, Thrill with a heart's red tinge that pure pale bliss?

Why did it end? Who failed to beat the
 breast,
 And shriek, and throw the arms protesting wide,
 When a first shadow showed the star addressed
 Itself to motion, and on either side
 The rims contracted as the rays retired;
 The music, like a fountain's sickening
 pulse,
 Subsided on itself; awhile transpired
 Some vestige of a Face no pangs convulse,
 No prayers retard; then even this was
 gone,
 10 Lost in the night at last. We, lone and
 left
 Silent through centuries, ever and anon
 Venture to probe again the vault best Of all now save the lesser lights, a mist
 Of multitudinous points, yet suns, men
 say —
 And this leaps ruby, this lurks amethyst, But where may hide what came and loved our clay?
 How shall the sage detect in yon expanse
 The star which chose to stoop and stay
 for us?
 Unroll the records! Hailed ye such advance
 20 Indeed, and did your hope vanish thus?
 Watchers of twilight, is the worst averred?
 We shall not look up, know ourselves are
 seen,
 Speak, and be sure that we again are heard,
 Acting or suffering, have the disk's serene
 Reflect our life, absorb an earthly flame, Nor doubt that, were mankind inert and numb,
 Its core had never crimsoned all the same,
 Nor, missing ours, its music fallen dumb?
 Oh, dread succession to a dizzy post, 30 Sad sway of sceptre whose mere touch
 appals,
 Ghastly dethronement, cursed by those the most
 On whose repugnant brow the crown next falls!

THIRD SPEAKER.

I.

Witless alike of will and way divine,
 How heaven's high with earth's low should intertwine!
 Friends, I have seen through your eyes:
 now use mine!

II.

Take the least man of all mankind, as I;
 Look at his head and heart, find how and
 why
 He differs from his fellows utterly:

III.

Then, like me, watch when nature by degrees
 Grows alive round him, as in Arctic seas 40
 (They said of old) the instinctive water flees

IV.

Toward some elected point of central rock,
 As though, for its sake only, roamed the flock
 Of waves about the waste: awhile they mock

V.

With radiance caught for the occasion, —
 hues
 Of blackest hell now, now such reds and blues
 As only heaven could fitly interfuse, —

VI.

The mimic monarch of the whirlpool, king
 O' the current for a minute: then they wring
 Up by the roots and oversweep the thing, 50

VII.

And hasten off, to play again elsewhere
 The same part, choose another peak as
 bare,
 They find and flatter, feast and finish there.

VIII.

When you see what I tell you, — nature
 dance
 About each man of us, retire, advance,
 As though the pageant's end were to enhance

IX.

His worth, and — once the life, his product,
 gained —
 Roll away elsewhere, keep the strife sustained,
 And show thus real, a thing the North but feigned —

X.

When you acknowledge that one world 60 could do
 All the diverse work, old yet ever new,
 Divide us, each from other, me from you, —

XI.

Why, where's the need of Temple, when the walls
 O' the world are that? What use of swells and falls
 From Levites' choir, Priests' cries, and trumpet-calls?

XII.

That one Face, far from vanish, rather
 grows,
 Or decomposes but to recompose,
 Become my universe that feels and knows.

BALAUSTION'S ADVENTURE;

INCLUDING

A TRANSCRIPT FROM EURIPIDES.

1871.

[After the ill starred expedition under Nikias against Sicily, and the crowning disaster of Syracuse had become known to the inhabitants of Rhodes, a great reaction against the supremacy of Athens set in, and a general determination to side with Sparta was expressed. Against this the girl Balaustion (Wild pomegranate flower) vehemently protested, and calling together those whom she could muster, they took ship for Athens. Encountering storms and pursued by pirates, they were driven upon Syracuse Harbour, where, however, they were at first refused admission and thrust back upon the pirates. At the last moment, however, curiosity was expressed as to Euripides, and Balaustion came forward and offered to recite the Alkestis, which she did before the whole listening city.]

TO THE COUNTESS COWPER.

If I mention the simple truth: that this poem absolutely owes its existence to you, — who not only suggested, but imposed on me as a task, what has proved the most delightful of May-month amusements — I shall seem honest, indeed, but hardly prudent; for, how good and beautiful ought such a poem to be!

Euripides might fear little; but I, also, have an interest in the performance; and what wonder if I beg you to suffer that it make, in another and far easier sense, its nearest possible approach to those Greek qualities of goodness and beauty, by laying itself gratefully at your feet? R. B.

LONDON: July 23, 1871.

BALAUSTION'S ADVENTURE.

Our Euripides, the human,
With his droppings of warm tears,
And his touches of things common
Till they rose to touch the spheres.

ABOUT that strangest, saddest, sweetest song

I, when a girl, heard in Kameiros once,
And, after, saved my life by? Oh, so glad
To tell you the adventure!

Petalé,
Phullis, Charopé, Chrusion! You must know,

This "after" fell in that unhappy time
When poor reluctant Nikias, pushed by fate,

Went falteringly against Syracuse;
And there shamed Athens, lost her ships and men,

And gained a grave, or death without a grave.

I was at Rhodes — the isle, not Rhodes the town,

Mine was Kameiros — when the news arrived:

Our people rose in tumult, cried "No more

Duty to Athens, let us join the League And side with Sparta, share the spoil, — at worst,

Abjure a headship that will ruin Greece!"
And so, they sent to Knidos for a fleet

To come and help revolters. Ere help came, —

Girl as I was, and never out of Rhodes

The whole of my first fourteen years of life, ²⁰
But nourished with Ilissian¹ mother's-milk, —

I passionately cried to who would hear
And those who loved me at Kameiros —
"No!

Never throw Athens off for Sparta's sake —

Never disloyal to the life and light
Of the whole world worth calling world
at all!

Rather go die at Athens, lie outstretched
For feet to trample on, before the gate

Of Diomedes or the Hippadai,
Before the temples and among the tombs, ³⁰
Than tolerate the grim felicity

Of harsh Lakonia! Ours the fasts and feasts,

Choës and Chutroi;² ours the sacred grove,
Agora, Dikasteria, Poikilé,
Pnux, Keramikos; Salamis in sight,
Psuttalia, Marathon itself, not far!

¹ Athenian.

² Feasts of the god.

- Ours the great Dionusiæc theatre,
And tragic triad of immortal fames,
Aischulos, Sophokles, Euripides!
To Athens, all of us that have a soul, Follow me!" And I wrought so with my
prayer,
That certain of my kinsfolk crossed the strait
And found a ship at Kaunos; well-disposed
Because the Captain — where did he draw
breath
First but within Psuttalia? Thither fled 10 A few like-minded as ourselves. We turned
The glad prow westward, soon were out at
sea,
Pushing, brave ship with the vermilion
cheek,
Proud for our heart's true harbour. But a wind
Lay ambushed by Point Malea of bad
fame,
And leapt out, bent us from our course.
Next day
Broke stormless, so broke next blue day
and next.
"But whither bound in this white waste?"
we plagued
The pilot's old experience: "Cos or Crete?"
Because he promised us the land ahead.
20 While we strained eyes to share in what he saw,
The Captain's shout startled us; round we rushed:
What hung behind us but a pirate-ship Panting for the good prize! "Row! harder row!
Row for dear life!" the Captain cried:
"'tis Crete,
Friendly Crete looming large there! Beat this craft
That's but a keles, one-benched pirate-
bark,
Lokrain, or that bad breed off Thessaly!
Only, so cruel are such water-thieves,
No man of you, no woman, child, or slave, 30 But falls their prey, once let them board our boat!"
So, furiously our oarsmen rowed and rowed;
And when the oars flagged somewhat,
dash and dip,
As we approached the coast and safety, so That we could hear behind us plain the threats
And curses of the pirate panting up
In one more throe and passion of pursuit, —
Seeing our oars flag in the rise and fall,
I sprang upon the altar by the mast
And sang aloft, — some genius prompting
me, —
40 That song of ours which saved at Salamis:
- "O sons of Greeks, go, set your country
free,
Free your wives, free your children, free
the fanes
O' the Gods, your fathers founded, — sepulchres
They sleep in! Or save all, or all be lost!"
Then, in a frenzy, so the noble oars Churned the black water white, that well
away
We drew, soon saw land rise, saw hills grow
up,
Saw spread itself a sea-wide town with towers,
Not fifty stadia distant; and, betwixt
A large bay and a small, the islet-bar, Even Ortugia's self — oh, luckless we!
50 For here was Sicily and Syracuse:
We ran upon the lion from the wolf.
Ere we drew breath, took counsel, out there came
A galley, hailed us. "Who asks entry here In war-time? Are you Sparta's friend or foe?"
"Kaunians" — our Captain judged his best reply,
"The mainland-seaport that belongs to Rhodes;
Rhodes that casts in her lot now with the League,
Forsaking Athens, — you have heard 60
belike!"
"Ay, but we heard all Athens in one ode just now! we heard her in that Aischulos!
You bring a boatful of Athenians here,
Kaunians although you be: and prudence
bids
For Kaunos' sake, why, carry them unhurt
To Kaunos, if you will: for Athens' sake, Back must you, though ten pirates blocked the bay!
We want no colony from Athens here,
With memories of Salamis, forsooth,
70 To spirit up our captives, that pale crowd
I' the quarry, whom the daily pint of corn Keeps in good order and submissiveness."
Then the grey Captain prayed them by the Gods,
And by their own knees, and their fathers'
beards,
They should not wickedly thrust suppliants
back,
But save the innocent on traffic bound —
Or, may be, some Athenian family
Perishing of desire to die at home, —
From that vile foe still lying on its oars, Waiting the issue in the distance. Vain! 80 Words to the wind! And we were just about
To turn and face the foe, as some tired
bird
Barbarians pelt at, drive with shouts away
From shelter in what rocks, however rude,
She makes for, to escape the kindled eye,

Split beak, crook'd claw o' the creature, cormorant

Or ossifrage,¹ that, hardly baffled, hangs Afloat i' the foam, to take her if she turn.
So were we at destruction's very edge,
When those o' the galley, as they had discussed

A point, a question raised by somebody,
A matter mooted in a moment, — "Wait!" Cried they (and wait we did, you may be sure).

"That song was veritable Aischulos,
10 Familiar to the mouth of man and boy,
Old glory: how about Euripides?
The newer and not yet so famous bard,
He that was born upon the battle-day While that song and the salpinx² sounded
him

Into the world, first sound, at Salamis — Might you know any of his verses too?"

Now, some one of the Gods inspired this
speech:

Since ourselves knew what happened but last year —

How, when Gulippos gained his victory
20 Over poor Nikias, poor Demosthenes, And Syracuse condemned the conquered
force

To dig and starve i' the quarry, branded
them

Freeborn Athenians, brute-like in the front
With horse-head brands, — ah, "Region of the Steed"!³ —

Of all these men immersed in misery,
It was found none had been advantaged so
By aught in the past life he used to prize
And pride himself concerning, — no rich
man

By riches, no wise man by wisdom, no 30 Wiser man still (as who loved more the Muse)

By storing, at brain's edge and tip of
tongue,

Old glory, great plays that had long ago Made themselves wings to fly about the
world, —

Not one such man was helped so at his need
As certain few that (wisest they of all)
Had, at first summons, oped heart, flung door wide

At the new knocking of Euripides, Nor drawn the bolt with who cried "Decadence!

And, after Sophokles, be nature dumb!"
40 Such, — and I see in it God Bacchos' boon
To souls that recognised his latest child,
He who himself, born latest of the Gods,
Was stoutly held impostor by mankind, —
Such were in safety: any who could speak
A chorus to the end, or prologise,

Roll out a rhesis,⁴ wield some golden length
Stiffened by wisdom out into a line,
Or thrust and parry in bright monostich,⁵
Teaching Euripides to Syracuse —
Any such happy man had prompt reward: 50
If he lay bleeding on the battle-field
They stanch'd his wounds and gave him drink and food;

If he were slave i' the house, for reverence
They rose up, bowed to who proved master
now,

And bade him go free, thank Euripides!
Ay, and such did so: many such, he said,
Returning home to Athens, sought him out,
The old bard in the solitary house,
And thanked him ere they went to sacrifice.
I say, we knew that story of last year! 60

Therefore, at mention of Euripides,
The Captain crow'd out "Euoi, praise the
God!

Oôp, boys, bring our owl-shield to the fore!
Out with our Sacred Anchor! Here she
stands,

Balaustion! Strangers, greet the lyric girl!

Euripides? Babai! what a word there
'scaped

Your teeth's enclosure, quoth my grand-sire's song!

Why, fast as snow in Thrace, the voyage
through,

Has she been falling thick in flakes of him!
Frequent as figs at Kaunos, Kaunians 70
said.

Balaustion, stand forth and confirm my
speech!

Now it was some whole passion of a play;
Now, peradventure, but a honey-drop
That slipt its comb i' the chorus. If there rose

A star, before I could determine steer Southward or northward — if a cloud surprised

Heaven, ere I fairly holla'd 'Furl the sail! —'

She had at fingers' end both cloud and
star;

Some thought that perched there, tame
and tuneable,

Fitted with wings; and still, as off it flew, 80
'So sang Euripides,' she said, 'so sang

The meteoric poet of air and sea,
Planets and the pale populace of heaven,
The mind of man, and all that's made to soar!'

And so, although she has some other name,
We only call her Wild-pomegranate-flower, Balaustion; since, where'er the red bloom burns

² A trumpet.

³ Attica was famous for horses.

⁴ A speech in a play.

⁵ A dialogue in which each speaker speaks a single line in turn.

I' the dull dark verdure of the bounteous tree,

Dethroning, in the Rosy Isle,¹ the rose,
You shall find food, drink, odour, all at once;

Cool leaves to bind about an aching brow,
And, never much away, the nightingale.
Sing them a strophe, with the turn-again,
Down to the verse that ends all, proverb-like,

And save us, thou Balaustion, bless the name!"

But I cried "Brother Greek! better than so, —

10 Save us, and I have courage to recite
The main of a whole play from first to last;
That strangest, saddest, sweetest song of his,

ALKESTIS; which was taught, long years ago

At Athens, in Glaukinos' archonship,
But only this year reached our Isle o' the Rose.

I saw it, at Kameiros, played the same,
They say, as for the right Lenean feast
In Athens; and beside the perfect piece —
Its beauty and the way it makes you weep, —

20 There is much honour done your own loved God

Herakles, whom you house i' the city here
Nobly, the Temple wide Greece talks about!

I come a suppliant to your Herakles!
Take me and put me on his temple-steps
To tell you his achievement as I may,
And, that told, he shall bid you set us free!"

Then, because Greeks are Greeks, and hearts are hearts,

And poetry is power, — they all outbroke
In a great joyous laughter with much love:

30 "Thank Herakles for the good holiday!
Make for the harbour! Row, and let voice ring,

"In we row, bringing more Euripides!"
All the crowd, as they lined the harbour now,

"More of Euripides!" — took up the cry.
We landed; the whole city, soon astir,
Came rushing out of gates in common joy
To the suburb temple; there they stationed me

O' the topmost step: and plain I told the play,

Just as I saw it; what the actors said, 40 And what I saw, or thought I saw the while,
At our Kameiros theatre, clean-scooped
Out of a hill-side, with the sky above

And sea before our seats in marble row:
Told it, and, two days more, repeated it,

¹ Rhodes.

Until they sent us on our way again
With good words and great wishes.

Oh, for me —

A wealthy Syracusan brought a whole
Talent and bade me take it for myself:

I left it on the tripod in the fane,
— For had not Herakles a second time Wrestled with Death and saved devoted
ones? —

Thank-offering to the hero. And a band
Of captives, whom their lords grew kinder to Because they called the poet countryman,
Sent me a crown of wild-pomegranate-flower:

So, I shall live and die Balaustion now.
But one — one man — one youth, — three days, each day, —

(If, ere I lifted up my voice to speak,
I gave a downward glance by accident) Was found at foot o' the temple. When we sailed,

There, in the ship too, was he found as well,

Having a hunger to see Athens too.
We reached Peiraieus; when I landed —
lo,

He was beside me. Anthesterion-month
Is just commencing: when its moon rounds full,

We are to marry. O Euripides!

I saw the master: when we found ourselves
(Because the young man needs must follow me)

Firm on Peiraieus, I demanded first Whither to go and find him. Would you
think?

The story how he saved us made some smile:

They wondered strangers were exorbitant
In estimation of Euripides.

He was not Aischulos nor Sophokles:
— "Then, of our younger bards who boast
the bay,

Had I sought Agathon, or Iophon,
Or, what now had it been Kephisophon?
A man that never kept good company,

The most unsociable of poet-kind,
All beard that was not freckle in his face!" 80

I soon was at the tragic house, and saw
The master, held the sacred hand of him
And laid it to my lips. Men love him not:
How should they? Nor do they much love his friend

Sokrates: but those two have fellowship:
Sokrates often comes to hear him read,
And never misses if he teach a piece.

Both, being old, will soon have company,
Sit with their peers above the talk. Mean-
time,

He lives as should a statue in its niche;
Cold walls enclose him, mostly darkness
there. 90

Alone, unless some foreigner uncouth Breaks in, sits, stares an hour, and so departs,
Brain-stuffed with something to sustain his
life,
Dry to the marrow 'mid much merchandise.

How should such know and love the man?
Why, mark!

Even when I told the play and got the
praise,

There spoke up a brisk little somebody,
Critic and whippersnapper, in a rage
To set things right: "The gir. departs from
truth!

10 Pretends she saw what was not to be seen, Making the mask of the actor move, forsooth!

'Then a fear flitted o'er the wife's white
face,' —

'Then frowned the father,' — 'then the husband shóok,' —

'Then from the festal forehead slipt each
spray,

'And the heroic mouth's gay grace was
gone;' —

As she had seen each naked fleshly face,
And not the merely-painted mask it wore!"

Well, is the explanation difficult?
What's poetry except a power that makes?

10 And, speaking to one sense, inspires the
rest,

Pressing them all into its service; so That who sees painting, seems to hear as
well

The speech that's proper for the painted
mouth;

And who hears music, feels his solitude Peopled at once — for how count heartbeats plain

Unless a company, with hearts which beat,
Come close to the musician, seen or no?

And who receives true verse at eye or ear, Takes in (with verse) time, place, and person too,

10 So, links each sense on to its sister-sense, Grace-like: and what if but one sense of three

Front you at once? The sidelong pair
conceive

Thro' faintest touch of finest finger-tips, —
Hear, see and feel, in faith's simplicity,

Alike, what one was sole recipient of:
Who hears the poem, therefore, sees the
play.

Enough and too much! Hear the play
itself!

Under the grape-vines, by the streamlet-
side,

Close to Baccheion; till the cool increase,
10 And other stars steal on the evening-star,

And so, we homeward flock i' the dust, we
live!

You will expect, no one of all the words
O' the play but is grown part now of my
soul,

Since the adventure. 'Tis the poet speaks:
But if I, too, should try and speak at times,

Leading your love to where my love, per-
chance,

Climbed earlier, found a nest before you knew —

Why, bear with the poor climber, for love's
sake!

Look at Baccheion's beauty opposite,
The temple with the pillars at the porch! 50

See you not something beside masonry?
What if my words wind in and out the stone

As yonder ivy, the God's parasite?
Though they leap all the way the pillar

leads,
Festoon about the marble, foot to frieze,

And serpentiningly enrich the roof,
Toy with some few bees and a bird or two, —

What then? The column holds the cornice up.

There slept a silent palace in the sun,
With plains adjacent and Thessalian 60
peace —

Pheral, where King Admetos ruled the
land.

Out from the portico there gleamed a God,
Apollon: for the bow was in his hand,

The quiver at his shoulder, all his shape
One dreadful beauty. And he hailed the

house
As if he knew it well and loved it much:

"O Admeteian domes, where I endured,
Even the God I am, to drudge awhile,

Do righteous penance for a reckless deed,
Accepting the slaves' table thankfully!" 70

Then told how Zeus had been the cause of
all,

Raising the wrath in him which took revenge

And slew those forgers of the thunderbolt Wherewith Zeus blazed the life from out the breast

Of Phoibos' son Asklepios (I surmise,

Because he brought the dead to life again)
And so, for punishment, must needs go

slave,
God as he was, with a mere mortal lord:

— Told how he came to King Admetos'
land,

And played the ministrant, was herdsman 80
there,

Warding all harm away from him and his Till now; "For, holy as I am," said he,

"The lord I chanced upon was holy too:
Whence I deceived the Moirai, drew from

death
My master, this same son of Pheres, — ay,

The Goddesses conceded him escape

From Hades, when the fated day should
 fall,
 Could he exchange lives, find some friendly one
 Ready, for his sake, to content the grave.
 But trying all in turn, the friendly list,
 Why, he found no one, none who loved so
 much,
 Nor father, nor the aged mother's self
 That bore him, no, not any save his wife,
 Willing to die instead of him and watch
 Never a sunrise nor a sunset more:
 10 And she is even now within the house,
 Uphorne by pitying hands, the feeble frame
 Gasping its last of life out; since to-day
 Destiny is accomplished, and she dies,
 And I, lest here pollution light on me,
 Leave, as ye witness, all my wonted joy
 In this dear dwelling. Ay, — for here comes Death
 Close on us of a sudden! who, pale priest
 Of the mute people, means to bear his prey
 To the house of Hades. The symmetric
 step!
 20 How he treads true to time and place and
 thing,
 Dogging day, hour and minute, for death's-
 due!"

And we observed another Deity, Half in, half out the portal, — watch and
 ward,
 Eyeing his fellow: formidably fixed,
 Yet faltering too at who affronted him,
 As somehow disadvantaged, should they strive.
 Like some dread heapy blackness, ruffled wing,
 Convulsed and cowering head that is all
 eye,
 Which proves a ruined eagle who, too blind 30 Swooping in quest o' the quarry, fawn or kid, Descried deep down the chasm 'twixt rock and rock,
 Has wedged and mortised, into either wall O' the mountain, the pent earthquake of his power;
 So lies, half hurtless yet still terrible,
 Just when — who stalks up, who stands
 front to front,
 But the great lion-guarder of the gorge,
 Lord of the ground, a stationed glory
 there?
 Yet he too praises ere he try the worst
 O' the frightful unfamiliar nature, new 40 To the chasm, indeed, but elsewhere known enough,
 Among the shadows and the silences
 Above 't the sky: so each antagonist
 Silently faced his fellow and forbore.
 Till Death shrilled, hard and quick, in spite and fear:

"Ha ha, and what mayst thou do at the domes,
 Why hauntest here, thou Phoibos? Here
 again
 At the old injustice, limiting our rights, Baulking of honour due us Gods o' the grave?
 Was't not enough for thee to have delayed
 Death from Admetos, — with thy crafty art Cheating the very Fates, — but thou must
 arm
 The bow-hand and take station, press
 'twixt me
 And Pelias' daughter, who then saved her spouse,
 Did just that, now thou comest to undo, —
 'Taking his place to die, Alkestis here?" But the God sighed "Have courage! All my arms,
 This time, are simple justice and fair
 words."
 Then each plied each with rapid inter-
 change:
 "What need of bow, were justice arms
 enough?"
 "Ever it is my wont to bear the bow." 6
 "Ay, and with bow, not justice, help this house!"
 "I help it, since a friend's woe weighs me
 too."
 "And now, — wilt force from me this second corpse?"
 "By force I took no corpse at first from
 thee."
 "How then is he above ground, not beneath?"
 "He gave his wife instead of him, thy prey."
 "And prey, this time at least, I bear below!"
 "Go take her! — for I doubt persuading
 thee . . ."
 "To kill the doomed one? What my function else?"
 "No! Rather, to dispatch the true 7 mature."
 "Truly I take thy meaning, see thy drift!"
 "Is there a way then she may reach old
 age?"

"No way! I glad me in my honours too!"

"But, young or old, thou tak'st one life, no more!"

"Younger they die, greater my praise re-counds!"

"If she die old, — the sumptuous funeral!"

"Thou layest down a law the rich would like."

"How so? Did wit lurk there and 'scape thy sense?"

"Who could buy substitutes would die old
men."

"It seems thou wilt not grant me, then, this
grace?"

"This grace I will not grant: thou know'st my ways."

10 "Ways harsh to men, hateful to Gods, at least!"

"All things thou canst not have: my rights
for me!"

And then Apollon prophesied, — I think,
More to himself than to impatient Death,
Who did not hear or would not heed the
while, —

For he went on to say "Yet even so,
Cruel above the measure, thou shalt clutch
No life here! Such a man do I perceive Advancing to the house of Phereas now,
Sent by Eurustheus to bring out of Thrace, 20 The winter world, a chariot with its steeds!"

He indeed, when Admetos proves the host,
And he the guest, at the house here, — he
it is

Shall bring to bear such force, and from thy hands

Rescue this woman. Grace no whit to me
Will that prove, since thou dost thy deed
the same,

And earnest too my hate, and all for
nought!"

But how should Death or stay or understand?

Doubtless, he only felt the hour was come,
And the sword free; for he but flung some taunt —

30 "Having talked much, thou wilt not gain the more!

This woman, then, descends to Hades'
hall

Now that I rush on her, begin the rites
Of the sword; for sacred, to us Gods below,
That head whose hair this sword shall sanctify!"

And, in the fire-flash of the appalling
sword,

The uprush and the outburst, the onslaught
Of Death's portentous passage through the
door,

Apollon stood a pitying moment-space:
I caught one last gold gaze upon the night
Nearing the world now: and the God was 40
gone,

And mortals left to deal with misery,
As in came stealing slow, now this, now
that

Old sojourner throughout the country-side, Servants grown friends to those unhappy
here:

And, cloudlike in their increase, all these griefs

Broke and began the over-brimming wail,
Out of a common impulse, word by word.

"What now may mean the silence at the door?"

Why is Admetos' mansion stricken dumb?
Not one friend near, to say if we should 50 mourn

Our mistress dead, or if Alkestis lives
And sees the light still, Pelias' child — to
me

To all, conspicuously the best of wives
That ever was toward husband in this world!

Hears anyone or wail beneath the roof,
Or hands that strike each other, or the groan

Announcing all is done and nought to dread?

Still not a servant stationed at the gates!
O Paian, that thou wouldst dispart the wave

O' the woe, be present! Yet, had woe 60 o'erwhelmed

The housemates, they were hardly silent
thus:

It cannot be, the dead is forth and gone.
Whence comes thy gleam of hope? I dare not hope:

What is the circumstance that heartens
thee?

How could Admetos have dismissed a wife
So worthy, unescorted to the grave?

Before the gates I see no hallowed vase
Of fountain-water, such as suits death's
door;

Nor any clipt locks strew the vestibule,
Though surely these drop when we grieve 70
the dead,

Nor hand sounds smitten against youthful
hand,

The women's way. And yet — the appointed time —

How speak the word? — this day is even the day

Ordained her for departing from its light.
O touch calamitous to heart and soul!

Needs must one, when the good are tortured so,
Sorrow, — one reckoned faithful from the first."

Then their souls rose together, and one sigh

Went up in cadence from the common mouth:

How "Vainly — anywhither in the world
Directing or land-labour or sea-search —
To Lukia or the sand-waste, Ammon's seat —

Might you set free their hapless lady's soul
From the abrupt Fate's footstep instant now.

10 Not a sheep-sacrificer at the hearths
Of Gods had they to go to: one there was
Who, if his eyes saw light still, — Phoibos' son, —

Had wrought so she might leave the shadowy place

And Hades' portal; for he propped up Death's

Subdued ones till the Zeus-flung thunder-flame

Struck him; and now what hope of life were hailed

With open arms? For, all the king could do
Is done already, — not one God whereof

20 The altar fails to reek with sacrifice:
And for assuagement of these evils — nought!"

But here they broke off, for a matron moved Forth from the house: and, as her tears flowed fast,

They gathered round. "What fortune shall we hear?

For mourning thus, if aught affect thy lord,
We pardon thee: but lives the lady yet
Or has she perished? — that we fain would know!"

"Call her dead, call her living, each style serves,"

The matron said: "though grave-ward bowed, she breathed;

Nor knew her husband what the misery meant

30 Before he felt it: hope of life was none:
The appointed day pressed hard; the funeral pomp

He had prepared too."

When the friends broke out:
"Let her in dying know herself at least

Sole wife, of all the wives 'neath the sun wide,

For glory and for goodness!" — "Ah, how else

Than best? who controverts the claim?" — quoth she:

"What kind of creature should the woman prove

That has surpassed Alkestis? — surelier shown

Preference for her husband to herself
Than by determining to die for him?

But so much all our city knows indeed:

Hear what she did indoors and wonder then!

For, when she felt the crowning day was come,

She washed with river-waters her white skin,

And, taking from the cedar closets forth
Vesture and ornament, bedecked herself

Nobly, and stood before the hearth, and prayed:

'Mistress, because I now depart the world,
Falling before thee the last time, I ask —

Be mother to my orphans! wed the one 50
To a kind wife, and make the other's mate

Some princely person: nor, as I who bore
My children perish, suffer that they too

Die all untimely, but live, happy pair,
Their full glad life out in the fatherland!'

And every altar through Admetos' house
She visited and crowned and prayed

before,
Stripping the myrtle-foliage from the boughs,

Without a tear, without a groan, — no change

At all to that skin's nature, fair to see, 60 Caused by the imminent evil. But this

done —
Reaching her chamber, falling on her bed,

There, truly, burst she into tears and spoke:

'O bride-bed, where I loosened from my life

Virginity for that same husband's sake
Because of whom I die now — fare thee

well!
Since nowise do I hate thee: me alone

Hast thou destroyed; for, shrinking to betray

Thee and my spouse, I die: but thee, O bed,

Some other woman shall possess as wife — 70
Truer, no! but of better fortune, say!'

— So falls on, kisses it till all the couch
Is moistened with the eyes' sad overflow.

But, when of many tears she had her fill,
She flings from off the couch, goes headlong

forth,
Yet, — forth the chamber, — still keeps turning back

And casts her on the couch again once more.
Her children, clinging to their mother's

robe,
Wept meanwhile: but she took them in her

arms,
And, as a dying woman might, embraced 80
Now one and now the other: 'neath the

roof,

All of the household servants wept as well

Moved to compassion for their mistress;
she

Extended her right hand to all and each,
And there was no one of such low degree
She spoke not to nor had an answer from.
Such are the evils in Admetos' house.

Dying,—why, he had died; but, living,
gains

Such grief as this he never will forget!"

And when they questioned of Admetos,
"Well—

Holding his dear wife in his hands, he
weeps;

Entreats her not to give him up, and seeks
The impossible, in fine: for there she wastes

And withers by disease, abandoned now,
A mere dead weight upon her husband's arm.

Yet, none the less, although she breathe
so faint,

Her will is to behold the beams o' the sun:
Since never more again, but this last once,
Shall she see sun, its circlet or its ray.

But I will go, announce your presence, —
friends

Indeed; since 'tis not all so love their lords
As seek them in misfortune, kind the same:
But you are the old friends I recognise."

And at the word she turned again to go
The while they waited, taking up the plaint
To Zeus again: "What passage from this strait?

What loosing of the heavy fortune fast
About the palace? Will such help appear,
Or must we clip the locks and cast around
Each form already the black peplos' fold?
Clearly the black robe, clearly! All the
same,

o Pray to the Gods! — like Gods' no power so great!

O thou king Paian, find some way to save!
Reveal it, yea, reveal it! Since of old Thou found'st a cure, why, now again become

Releaser from the bonds of Death, we beg,
And give the sanguinary Hades pause!"
So the song dwindled into a mere moan,
How dear the wife, and what her husband's woe;

When suddenly —

"Behold, behold!" breaks forth:
"Here is she coming from the house indeed!

o Her husband comes, too! Cry aloud, lament, Pheraïan land, this best of women,
bound —

So is she withered by disease away —
For realms below and their infernal king!
Never will we affirm there's more of joy
Than grief in marriage; making estimate
Both from old sorrows anciently observed,

And this misfortune of the king we see —
Admetos who, of bravest spouse bereaved,
Will live life's remnant out, no life at all!"

So wailed they, while a sad procession 50
wound

Slow from the innermost o' the palace,
stopped

At the extreme verge of the platform-front:
There opened, and disclosed Alkestis' self,
The consecrated lady, borne to look Her last — and let the living look their
last —

She at the sun, we at Alkestis.

We!

For would you note a memorable thing?
We grew to see in that severe regard, —

Hear in that hard dry pressure to the point,
Word slow pursuing word in monotone, — 60

What Death meant when he called her
